An adequate appreciation of the situation must establish the conviction that stolid and unyielding heathenism and idolatry can not in the very nature of things remain long in contact with Christianity and enlightenment without engendering a condition of antagonism which must, sooner or later, shake the very foundations of society. The most casual idea of the situation must inevitably lead to the conclusion that the presence of the Mongolian in this country can be productive of no good result. He comes instinct with no purpose of assisting in the permanent growth and prosperity of our country.

The pecuniary fruits of his labor, instead of becoming a factor in the wealth statistics of this country, are wholly removed from the arteries of trade and commerce to enhance the commercial importance of China. Much that he consumes he imports from the home country. His consumption of the products of this country may be put at the minimum. His half-civilized habits of life, his meager and unenviable style of living, enable him to underbid white labor to such an extent as to occasion absolute suffering, in addition to stigmatizing labor and reducing it in physical tone and stamina. His vices are of the most loathsome and repulsive character, while his virtues are few and unmarked. His only redeeming quality is his industry; but even that fails to compensate for his presence, since it is simply a means of depleting the country of its circulating medium.

Mr. Speaker, the time has come for meeting this issue face to face. For Congress to hesitate in the face of the widespread and overwhelming sentiment all over the Pacific coast against the further infliction of this Mongolian curse upon free white labor will be a crime against the peace and good order of society.

The adoption of the proposed amendment will by no means solve the problem. It will only serve to render somewhat more effective a wholly inadequate law. There is but one solution of this great economic problem, and that is to strike directly at the root of the evil.

I am confident that the future will justify my assertion that the only adequate method of dealing with this great question is to so legislate as to absolutely prohibit Chinese immigration into this country and to abrogate all treaty stipulations in relation thereto. Until this shall have been done no surprise need be expressed at the oft-recurring demonstrations of the violent and ineradicable opposition to the presence of Chinese slave labor in competition with free white labor.

I speak for the maintenance of law and order; for the integrity and protection of free white labor; for the elevation of the civilization of the Pacific coast; for the expulsion of a debasing and totally uncongenial race when I insist upon such legislation as will fully recognize the dignity and importance of white labor, and, by such recognition, entirely rid the Pacific coast of the elements which are endangering the security of the entire social fabric.

Among the generous people of the Pacific Northwest I have cast my fortunes. My home shall be with them always, and upon this, as upon every other occasion, my voice shall be raised in their behalf for free labor, free soil, and free homes. [Applause.]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. VOORHEES, it was rejected.

The Clerk read, as follows:

For printing and binding for Congress, including the proceedings and debates, $910,000; and printing and binding for Congress chargeable to this appropriation, when recommended to be done by the Committee on Printing, shall be so recommended in a report containing an estimate of the cost thereof, together with a statement from the Public Printer of the amount and cost of work previously ordered by Congress within the fiscal year for which this appropriation is made and the heads of the Executive Departments, before transmitting their annual reports to Congress the printing of which is chargeable to this appropriation, shall cause the same to be carefully examined, and shall exclude therefrom all matter including engravings, maps, drawings, and illustrations except such as they shall certify in their letters transmitting such reports to be necessary and to relate entirely to the transaction of public business; for the State Department, $15,000; for the Treasury Department, $275,000; for the War Department, $150,000 (of which sum $12,000 shall be for the catalogue of the library of the Surgeon-General's Office); for the Navy Department, $60,000; for the Interior Department, $350,000 (of which sum $10,000 is appropriated for rebinding tract-books for the General Land Office); for the Department of Justice, $7,000; for the Post-Office Department, $180,000; for the Agricultural Department, $18,000; for the Supreme Court of the United States, $5,000; for the supreme court of the District of Columbia, $1,000; for the Court of Claims, $14,000; for the Library of Congress, $12,000; and for the Executive Office, $3,000. And no more than an allotment of one-half of the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended in the two first quarters of the fiscal year, and no more than one-fourth thereof may be expended in either of the two last quarters of the fiscal year, except that, in addition thereto, in either of said last quarters, the unexpended balances of allotments for preceding quarters may be expended.

Before the reading of the paragraph was concluded,

Mr. FARQUHAR said: I desire to raise a point of order——

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. REID] has some amendments which he proposes to offer to perfect the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The reading of the paragraph must be finished.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the paragraph.

Mr. BARKSDALE obtained the floor.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I make a point of order against this section that it embraces new legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. Then I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. REAGAN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9478) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

NORTHERN JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. SINGLETON. I ask unanimous consent to have taken from the House Calendar and passed at this time Senate bill No. 2152. This bill proposes only to transfer a single county in my State from the western to the eastern division of the northern judicial district. A railroad having been completed, the eastern division is more convenient to the county in question than the western.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Does the delegation from the gentleman's State consent to the bill?

Mr. SINGLETON. It has the approval of the whole delegation.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 2152) to amend chapter 218 of the acts of the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, approved June 15, 1882.

Be it enacted &c., That the county of Attala, in the northern judicial district of the State of Mississippi, is hereby transferred from the western to the eastern division of said district. All crimes and offenses heretofore committed within said western division shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to the consideration of the bill; which was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SINGLETON moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

RETIREMENT OF NAVAL OFFICERS.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I ask unanimous consent that the House at this time consider and pass Senate bill No. 830 for the retirement of certain officers of the Navy of the United States. This bill, which has been passed in the Senate and favorably reported in this House by the Naval Committee, proposes to permit the retirement of Vice-Admiral Rowan and Rear-Admiral Worden at their own volition, upon the full pay of their respective grades. These are the only two officers of the Navy now living who have received the thanks of Congress; and it is eminently proper to grant them the privilege which the bill contemplates. I will add that the office of Vice-Admiral becomes vacant upon the retirement of the present incumbent.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the bill to which the gentleman refers was only reported in the House to-day, and it has gone to the Government Printing Office.

J. M. HIATT.

Mr. HALL. I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of Senate bill No. 1942, and put the same on its passage now.

The bill was read, as follows:

A bill (S. 1942) for the relief of J. M. Hiatt, only surviving partner of Hiatt & Co.

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to J. M. Hiatt, only surviving partner of Hiatt & Co., late traders for the Osage tribe of Indians, out of any money in the Treasury accruing to the Osage tribe of Indians by act of Congress approved June 16, 1880, the sum of $16,759.99, or so much thereof as may be found actually due the claimant after an investigation of the facts by the Secretary of the Interior, which sum shall be in full satisfaction of the claim of the said Hiatt & Co. against the Osage tribe of Indians for goods sold them on an extended credit.

Mr. HALL. I desire merely to explain——

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman occupies time by explaining the arrival of the hour of adjournment will prevent the consideration of the bill.

Mr. HALL. Then I waive any explanation.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole Honse on the Private Calendar was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, which was thereupon ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. HALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 6 o'clock having arrived, the House stands adjourned until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BRADY: Petition and resolutions from District Assembly No. 84, Knights of Labor, of Richmond, Va., requesting action on the eight-hour law for letter-carriers—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. BLANCHARD: Petition of certain citizens of Rapides Parish, Louisiana, asking Federal aid to relieve destitution caused by floods—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. COX: Petition of Joseph C. Hogan, and of Mrs. Minerva Tilley, of Orange County, and of Nelson F. Thompson, of Wake County, North Carolina, asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. DARGAN: Petition of T. C. Smith, administrator of Herbert Smith; of Lucy Breeden; of Joel L. Easterling; of Mrs. Julia C. Watson; of Mrs. Susan Brigman, widow of Thomas Brigman; of Thoroughgood P. Stubbs; of John C. Townsend, executor of Jabeth N. Townsend; of J. L. Grant, administrator of John S. Grant; and of Mrs. Sarah A. Odan, heir of Mrs. Mary Welsh, deceased, of Marlborough County; of Richard Jordan and of R. P. Harmer and others, executors of R. C. Harmer, of Marion County; and of W. T. Goldfinch, son and heir of Daniel Goldfinch, deceased, of Georgetown County, South Carolina, asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Memorial of Charles A. Ashburner, requesting provision be made in sundry civil bill for triangulation points for State surveys—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. FORD: Petition of citizens of Elkhart County, Indiana, asking for allowance to third and fourth class postmasters for rent, lighting, and heating post-offices—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

By Mr. HARMER: Petition of William Fitzgerald, to enact a law to place him under the provisions of section 4756 of the Revised Statutes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. D. B. HENDERSON: Resolutions of the soldiers and sailors of Dakota, favoring the passage of Senate bill 1886, and the admission of Dakota as a State—to the same committee.

By Mr. HEPBURN: Petition of W. H. Waller and 48 others, citizens of Wirt, Iowa, and of soldiers and sailors of Mitchell, Dak., praying for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the same committee.

By Mr. LANHAM: Paper relating to the claim of Benjamin Martin—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. McCOMAS: Petition of Jacob Keller, of Frederick County, Maryland, for payment of war claim—to the same committee.

By Mr. MATSON: Petition of members of Harrison Post, No. 125, Department of Missouri, Grand Army of the Republic; of Mansfield Post, No. 53, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Connecticut; of Hazlett Post, No. 81, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio; of F. M. Roberts and others, of Newport, Me.; and of C. S. Gilbert and others, of Owasso, Mich., favoring the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PRICE: Petition of C. Chafry and 60 others, of Melrose, Wis., for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the same committee.

By Mr. T. B. REED: Petition of Abba E. Jackson, for a pension—to the same committee.

By Mr. VAN EATON: Petition of Mrs. M. L. Poll, widow of Miguel Poll, deceased, of Jackson County, Mississippi, asking that her war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WILLIS: Petition of wholesale liquor dealers of the District of Columbia against the passage of the high-license bill (Senate bill 1380)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The following petitions, asking for the passage of House bill 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts; of House bill 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants; of bill forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with; of House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma; of Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement; of bill prohibiting aliens from holding land in the United States; of bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays and punishing bribery; and of bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired, were severally referred to the Committee on the Public Lands:

By Mr. J. J. ADAMS: Petition of John A. Martin and 13 others, of John P. Shafer and 14 others, of Meyer J. Davidson and 27 others, of Samuel Swartzman and 19 others, of Edward Riley and 113 others, of Lewis Berhrand and 475 others, of William Kamuler and 45 others, and of Felix Herr and 65 others, of New York.

By Mr. BRADY: Petition of James Allen, John Brewer, P. B. Ramsey, George Fayerman, S. P. Lee, Philip Robertson and others, citizens of Petersburg, Va.

By Mr. BUCK: Petition of John H. Chapman and 237 others, of Charles Harris and 171 others, of Frank C. Allen and 37 others, of W. A. Flynn and 37 others, of Thomas Deneky and 859 others, and of James F. Duffy and 27 others, citizens of the first Congressional district of Connecticut.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: Petition of Michael Watts and 82 others, of John J. Tierney and 172 others, of Patrick McGuire and 101 others, of Charles A. Sprout and 282 others, and of Frank S. Kraft and 33 others, citizens of the eighteenth Congressional district of New York.

By Mr. COMPTON: Petition of Andrew Main and 28 others, of John Knox and 211 others, of Lewis Young and 101 others, of Frederick Wolf and 24 others, of J. H. Haslan and 48 others, and of Samuel Wright and 53 others, citizens of the fifth Congressional district of Maryland.

By Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL: Petition of Clement Smith and 171 others, of Daniel J. Mahoney and 101 others, of Robert O. Sullivan and 87 others, of John G. Turner and 109 others, of James O'Brien and 119 others, of James A. Nelson and 225 others, of C. R. White and 158 others, of R. H. Gray and 74 others, of Michael R. Laney and 79 others, of Alexander Morris and 47 others, of J. A. Nelson and 225 others, and of James J. McElroy and 29 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of New York.

By Mr. DANIEL: Petition of Dennis Kenney and 82 others, of R. M. Leftwich and 41 others, of William H. White and 151 others, of William H. Stewart and 55 others, and of Amos Kelso and 55 others, citizens of Virginia.

By Mr. LINDSLEY: Petition of Michael Hyde and 147 others, of Thomas J. Fallon and 140 others, and of George Pirman and 49 others, citizens of New York.

By Mr. MAHONEY: Petition of John B. Firth and 80 others, of Patrick Dunn and 60 others, and of Charles Doherty and 221 others, citizens of New York.

By Mr. MILLARD: Petition of John Ryan and 205 others, of A. Fisher and 169 others, of George D. Johnson and 65 others, and of William H. Dodge and 23 others, citizens of the twenty-sixth Congressional district of New York.

By Mr. SEYMOUR: Petition of Joseph Connell and 75 others, of Fred A. Ayers and 116 others, and of James B. Stevens and 127 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Connecticut.

By Mr. SWINBURNE: Petition of Michael Dillon and 83 others, citizens of the nineteenth Congressional district of New York.

By Mr. WAIT: Petition of Joseph Murphy and 320 others, of Frank Benoit and 96 others, of John Madden and 20 others, of George D. Bradley and 84 others, of Nathan W. Shaffer and 128 others, and of James Fitzpatrick and 351 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of Connecticut.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, July 1, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate of the United States Fish Commissioner for $7,500 for fitting out the Albatross, with a view of investigating the fisheries of the Pacific coast; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LOUISVILLE AND PORTLAND CANAL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in answer to a resolution of June 23, 1886, a report of the Chief of Engineers in relation to the use by the Kentucky and Indiana Bridge Company of a portion of the lands of the Louisville and Portland Canal; which was read.

Mr. FRYE. I desire to say just one word in reference to the communication from the Secretary of War, which is in answer to a resolution which I introduced.

I understand from good authority that this bridge company was building a railroad south from the Ohio River; that the railroad was built down to a private individual's land, and then up to his land on the lower side, a distance of about 100 feet; that he demanded for his land more than the company thought it ought to pay; that thereupon the company brought action for the condemnation of the land, and pending that action obtained leave from somebody to divert the road exactly the width of 50 feet and run it the length of a hundred feet on the land of the Portland and Louisville Canal, which is United States property. To do that the road must at a right angle almost step out to the west, pursue its line on the United States land for fifty feet or a hundred feet, and then go back again to its original position and pursue its way.

It seemed to me that it only was done for the purpose of compelling this citizen to sell his land for a price less than he believed it to be worth; in fact, that it was almost a black-mailing operation upon him, and was entirely without excuse. Hence the resolution which I introduced, and I fail to see now any excuse on the part of the authorities of the United States for giving any such permission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The communication and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Commerce and printed, if there be no objection.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented petitions of citizens of Ohio and Pennsylvania, praying for the passage at the present session of Congress of the following measures:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding lands in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays and punishing bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000, Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

A petition of T. Opermoon and 31 others, citizens of the twenty-first Congressional district of Ohio;

A petition of John Werner and 105 others, citizens of the twelfth Congressional district of Ohio;

A petition of E. H. Kroger and 80 others, citizens of the sixteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania;

A petition of R. H. Thompson and 34 others, of the thirteenth Congressional district of Ohio;

A petition of John J. Burkert and 123 others, citizens of the fifteenth Congressional district of Ohio;

A petition of Henry Gavey and 41 others, citizens of the fourteenth Congressional district of Ohio;

A petition of John G. Riley and 73 others, citizens of the fourteenth Congressional district of Ohio;

A petition of Bernard Fishter and 48 others, citizens of the fourteenth Congressional district of Ohio;

A petition of Benjamin Vintree and 124 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Ohio;

A petition of John Barr and 183 others, citizens of the Third Congressional district of Ohio;

A petition of Elmer Allen and 200 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Ohio;

A petition of Michael Kerwick and 73 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Ohio;

A petition of F. Wyrick and 99 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Ohio;

A petition of George Roeder and 142 others, citizens of the first Congressional district of Ohio;

A petition of James E. Shoenberger and 169 others, citizens of the first Congressional district of Ohio; and

A petition of John Williams and others, citizens of the eighteenth Congressional district of Ohio.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of 110 citizens of Ohio, praying for the passage of the bill to tax oleomargarine; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented the petition of T. J. Denison, of Clarion, Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation for the protection of the dairy interests of the country; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. EVARTS. I present a petition of 23 citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., praying for the continuance of the National Board of Health. The petitioners are eminent physicians of that city and State. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Epidemic Diseases.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EVARTS presented a petition of 12 citizens of Potter Hill, New York, praying for the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. CULLOM presented a memorial of the Ford River Lumber Company and 20 other business firms of Chicago, Ill.; a memorial of 422 citizens of Chicago, Ill.; a memorial of William G. Wilson and 216 other citizens of Cook County, Illinois; and a memorial of J. H. Christoph, banker, and 228 other citizens of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I present a petition of farmers of Windom, Cottonwood County, Minnesota, praying for the passage of the oleomargarine bill, and a resolution adopted by the Farmers' Alliance, of Windom, Cottonwood County, Minnesota, on the same subject to the same effect. These papers are addressed informally to myself, but were intended for the consideration of the Senate. I ask that they be received and move their reference to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SAWYER presented resolutions adopted by Pomona Grange, No. 9, Patrons of Husbandry, Fond du Lac, Wis., in favor of the passage of the House bill taxing oleomargarine and butterine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. BLAIR. I present a resolution adopted at a mass meeting of farmers of New Hampshire, advocating the passage of the oleomargarine bill now before the Senate, and urging its support by the Senators and Representatives from that State. I move the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I present a memorial of the Board of Trade of Fernandina, Fla., stating that it has come to the attention of that board that the Senate Committee on Commerce has recommended a reduction in the appropriation for the improvement of Cumberland Sound from $150,000 to $100,000, and they protest against any such reduction, and respectfully draw the attention of the committee to the argument of a committee of the Fernandina Board of Trade, made before the Committee on Commerce of the House of Representatives, and attached to this communication, as fully showing the urgent necessity for larger appropriations in order to complete the important jetty-work at the entrance of that harbor. They also invite attention to the supplementary report of General Q. A. Gillmore, especially the map of Cumberland Harbor, prepared under his direction in November, 1885, as showing the very favorable condition of the work; also to the twenty-third clause, page 19 of the late report (January 16, 1886) of the board of fortifications appointed under the act of Congress of March 3, 1885, as also to other documents referring to that bar and harbor, now on file with the House committee. General Gillmore's report, they say, shows that the success of the system of jetties designed by him is assured, and that the small amount of money heretofore appropriated and expended for this special purpose has materially increased the depth of water on the bar and narrowed the extent of the shoal to a small area, which shoal will doubtless entirely disappear with the completion of the system, giving an unobstructed depth of water of at least 24 feet. They further state that the importance of this harbor to the commerce of the United States and the Atlantic coast is not to be overrated. I move that the memorial be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. HARRIS. It had better lie on the table, as the bill has been reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The memorial will lie on the table.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I present the petition of Charles D. Maxwell and Mirim K. Maxwell, of this city, who are the owners of certain property in square 80, fronting on F street northwest, which they claim has been greatly damaged in the grading rendered necessary to adjust it to the grade of the State, War, and Navy Department building, for which they were compelled to pay the sum of $1,376.08 for special-improvement taxes, the certificates of which were held in the city of New York, and consequently they got no benefit from the legislation of Congress appertaining to the subject of special assessments for improvements. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MILLER. I am instructed by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry to report back to the Senate favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine.

I ask that the bill be placed on the Calendar, and I desire to give notice to the Senate that at an early day, as soon as the river and harbor bill is disposed of, which the chairman of the Committee on Commerce has given notice he will move to take up after the present appropriation bill is concluded, I shall ask the Senate to take up this bill and consider it until it is finished.

Mr. HARRIS. Is the bill reported without amendment?

Mr. MILLER. Without amendment.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. On behalf of the minority of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, I think it fair to state that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. FAIR], and myself, dissent from the report of the majority of the committee on the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2686) granting a pension to Morris T. Mantor, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HALE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1659) for the relief of the survivors of the exploring steamer Jeannette and the widows and children of those who perished in the retreat from the wreck of that vessel in the arctic seas, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2047) authorizing the Mississippi and Louisiana Bridge and Railroad Company of Natchez, Mississippi, to construct a bridge over the Mississippi River at or near Natchez, Mississippi, reported it with amendments.

NEWBURG CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION REPORT.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the report of the Joint Select Committee of Congress on the Newburg monument and centennial celebration of 1883, instruct me to report a concurrent resolution, and I ask immediate action thereon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the report of the joint select committee of Congress on the Newburg (N. Y.) monument and centennial celebration of 1883, submitted on the 26th of June, 1886, be printed, and that 6,000 additional copies be printed and bound in cloth; of which 1,500 shall be for the use of the Senate, 3,000 for the use of the House, and 1,500 for the use of the joint select committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. MILLER. Let that go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will go to the Calendar under objection.

MANHATTAN PICKETT.

Mr. BLAIR submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7165) to increase the pension of Manhattan Pickett having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments providing for an increase from $36 per month to $50 per month, leaving the bill as it passed the House.

H. W. BLAIR,
PHILETUS SAWYER,
W. C. WHITTHORNE,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.
JNO. A. SWOPE,
H. B. LOVERING.
E. N. MORRILL,
Conferees on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 1942) for the relief of J. M. Hiatt, only surviving partner of Hiatt & Co.; and

A bill (S. 2152) to amend chapter 218 of the acts of the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, approved June 15, 1882.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conferenee on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 6397) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. BLACKBURN introduced a bill (S. 2786) for the relief of William Enders, administrator of Henry Enders; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WALTHALL introduced a bill (S. 2787) to require the New Orleans, Mobile and Texas Railroad Company to construct and maintain a suitable draw in said company's bridge across the West Pascagoula River, in the State of Mississippi; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I desire to introduce a bill, and I ask the unanimous consent of the Senate, inasmuch as it is very short, to have it read at length, and also to allow me not exceeding two minutes to explain now, out of order as I know it is, the purpose of introducing the bill at this time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On the question of reference the Senator has a right to explain his bill.

The bill (S. 2788) to fix the salaries of Cabinet officers, Senators, and Members of Congress of the United States was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Whereas it is asserted and attempted to be maintained that the revenues of the Government of the United States are so inadequate that it becomes necessary to economize in public expenditures; and

Whereas it is also asserted and attempted to be maintained that it is the duty of Congress to further reduce the revenues by "reform" and "reduction" of the duties on imports, better known as tariff duties; and

Whereas in the opinion of that branch of the Congress of the United States in which appropriation bills can alone originate practical economy should begin with curtailing the salaries of the poorest-paid clerks, employés, and laborers in the service of the Government, by withholding pensions from widows of deceased soldiers, by insulting the living and reflecting upon the memory of the dead by paying the pittance of $2 a month in the name of pension; and

Whereas the financial policy adopted and pursued by the Government for the past year has been to destroy the one and two dollar currency notes without issuing others of the same denomination in their stead as the law requires, and at the same time discouraging the issue and circulation of silver in lieu thereof, thereby diminishing the circulating medium to the great advantage of capitalists and corresponding diminution in value of the products of labor for which money is exchangable: Therefore,

Be it enacted, &c., That the salaries of Cabinet officers, of the Senators, and Members of the House of Representatives respectively be reduced 25 per cent., beginning from March 4, 1887.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. The preamble to the bill sets forth sufficiently the reasons upon which it is based. Therefore I do not propose to enter into any detailed statement in respect to it.

I desire to state, however, that the object in fixing the time when this proposed reduction of salaries shall begin on the 4th of March, 1887, is because that will be the termination of this Congress, and at that time the salaries of Senators and Members in the next Congress begins.

I offer the bill with no purpose of discussing it at this session. I have no idea that that can be done. The time when this reduction shall begin being the 4th of March next, and we having a continuing salary, the next session will be ample time to discuss all that is set forth in the preamble as well as what I consider to be the right and justice of the bill itself.

The debates which have ensued here upon $1,200 clerkships, upon the application of heads of Departments for additional clerks to promote the efficiency of the service, are almost sufficient within themselves to justify the hope that the bill will at the next session of Congress become a law.

If we must reduce salaries in order to bring our expenditures within the revenues of the Government, and if we have commenced at the $1,200 clerks and concluded with the per diem laborers, it does seem to me that we should go back now and begin at the head.

The only reason why I do not include the President of the United States is because by the Constitution it is provided that his salary shall neither be increased nor diminished during his term of service.

I have this to say, sir, in conclusion, that I hope the committee to which the President of the Senate shall deem it appropriate to send the bill will report it back if possible at this session, either favorably or adversely, I care not which, so that it may be upon the Calendar when Congress shall reconvene in December.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Finance.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. FRYE and Mr. MAXEY submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CALL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency bill; which was ordered to be printed, and, with the accompanying paper, referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ALDRICH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 4833) relating to the taxation of fractional parts of a gallon of distilled spirits; which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

VENTILATION OF SENATE CHAMBER.

Mr. HALE. I offer the following resolution and ask for its adoption:

Resolved, That the Committee on Rules be, and is hereby, directed to examine into the ventilation of the Senate Chamber, and see if some method can be devised for improving the unusually impure air of the room.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution.

Mr. HALE. Upon the resolution I wish to say that I seek no reopening of the old general question of the ventilation of this Chamber. That has been essayed in times past, and is a pretty hopeless task.

But I with other Senators have observed and felt that the air here is unusually bad and vitiated this year. Some Senators have felt it in unusual prostration and in illness which has followed their prostration, and there seemed to be nobody who could tell how it is that this had come about.

The other day in a committee hearing before the Committee on Fisheries, in a little dark room on the western side of the Capitol, the sessions of the committee and the testimony of parties giving evidence there were very much interrupted and disturbed by loud noise outside. On inquiry I was told that whereas formerly the air which we breathe here was pumped in from the outer space, under the open heavens upon the western side of the Capitol, where all the winds that blow conspire to change it and make it pure and sweet, since the work has begun on the grounds beyond all that has been interrupted, and that the air which we are breathing here day and night is pumped in from the dark, close recess just beyond the room of the Committee on Fisheries, where there is no wind that blows, where there is no change, where it is beat upon by the afternoon sun, and where it becomes heated and vitiated long before it is introduced into this Chamber. If that is so, it is a wicked and cruel performance on the part of somebody, and will result in a great deal worse and more numerous cases of illness than what we have already experienced.

I hope that the Committee on Rules will look into this subject forthwith, and if what has been stated to me is true, that some way will be devised for bringing in to us, under the processes that we have, at least the best air that can be found upon this hill. Under all the processes it will be bad enough any way, and we suffer enough in these late days of the long session; but the nuisance to which we are submitted now, if it is a fact that we are so submitted, ought to be abated.

Mr. FRYE. I doubt if the Committee on Rules can provide much of a remedy for that. There is a necessary closing of the air ducts while the repairs are going on.

Mr. HALE. Then open them rather than imperil our life and health here.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

JOSEPH FRANCIS.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I beg to ask the attention of the Senate, in pursuance of the notice I gave yesterday, to the subject of the recognition by this Government of the services of Joseph Francis.

House joint resolution No. 125, which stands as No. 1134 on the Calendar, was reached during the time of my necessary absence from the city when the Calendar was taken up, and by the request of my friend the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] it was laid over on account of my absence. I regret extremely that at this stage of the occupations of the Senate it shall be necessary for me to consume any time, and I shall confine my own observations to very narrow limits.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (H. Res. 125) in recognition of the services of Joseph Francis.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope it will be understood that this is not to occupy any considerable time. If it is, I shall have to ask that it be laid aside.

Mr. EVARTS. I do not expect to occupy time myself at any length.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the joint resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask that it be read at length, so that we may know what it contains.

Mr. COCKRELL. It is called up by the Senator from New York, as I understand, simply for the purpose of submitting some remarks.

Mr. EVARTS. I should be glad to have a vote taken on it, as it would have been taken when the resolution was reached on the Calendar, but it was passed over because of my absence.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection to the Senator's submitting remarks, but I do not want to have the joint resolution taken up by unanimous consent for action. I shall have to object to its consideration with that view this morning. I do not object to its being taken up for the purpose of submitting remarks.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the joint resolution be read, so that we may know what it is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

A joint resolution (H. Res. 125) in recognition of the services of Joseph Francis.

Resolved, That in view of the life-long services to humanity and to his country of the now venerable Joseph Francis, in the construction and perfection of life-saving appliances, by which many thousands of lives have been saved, the thanks of Congress be, and are hereby, tendered to Joseph Francis; and that the President of the United States is hereby authorized to cause to be prepared a gold medal, with a suitable inscription, to be presented to Mr. Francis, in recognition of his eminent services.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New York to proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to inquire whether it is to be taken up for discussion and for final action; because it will take some time, perhaps, to dispose of it.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall object to the consideration of the joint resolution, and ask for the yeas and nays upon the motion to proceed to its consideration if the effect of its being taken up is to occupy time. I understood this morning and yesterday when the Senator from New York gave the notice that this is a measure which will take no time for consideration, and if it will take no time——

Mr. EVARTS. That certainly is my hope and expectation.

Mr. FRYE. There is a regular fight over it.

Mr. PLATT. I have no objection to its being taken up in order that the Senator from New York may address the Senate. I do not know anything particularly about the joint resolution; but another gentleman whom I know nothing about, Captain Ottinger, called to see me, and claims to be the inventor of the device for which it is now proposed to thank Mr. Francis. I know nothing about it. I know there is a claim of that kind, and I think we ought to have time to investigate into the matter.

Mr. VEST. I wish to say to the Senator from New York——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must remind Senators that debate is out of order.

Mr. VEST. I only wish to make a single observation. I have nothing but the kindest feeling toward Mr. Francis, and I voted for the resolution in committee. It came from the Commerce Committee. Since the committee acted upon it a gentleman called upon me with papers containing substantially the assertion that Mr. Francis was not entitled to any recognition on the part of Congress, and that, to use plain language, he had robbed this Captain Ottinger of his patent, and was now asking credit for services in the interest of humanity which he had never rendered.

He submitted to me papers which go to prove these assertions I do not pretend to say whether they are true or false; but although I voted for the measure in committee, with my present impression after reading these papers I would certainly be unwilling to cast my vote here as a Senator in the same direction. There must be some debate, and considerable debate, upon the proposition before the Senate can be prepared, in view of these statements, to act upon it. That is all I want to say.

Mr. MCPHERSON. I ask unanimous consent that I may be heard one moment.

Mr. Francis is a resident of my State, an old man now, eighty-five years of age. Mr. Douglas Ottinger has sent a communication to each of the Senators, charging Mr. Francis with trying to deprive him of his rights and his inventions. Instead of that, the fact can be made apparent to every Senator, and in a very short time, that Mr. Douglas Ottinger is the fraud. He has undertaken to deprive, and has by a vote of Congress deprived, Joseph Francis of the rights that belong to him. He received $10,000 from the Government on a fraudulent representation, as can be made to appear by the papers here in my possession to the satisfaction of every Senator.

Mr. Francis is now an old man, with more than one foot in the grave, and unless this Congress shall take action to give him back the rights which Mr. Ottinger has stolen from him with the consent of Congress on a former occasion, it will do Mr. Francis a great injustice.

I do not think the consideration of the joint resolution will take one hour. Certainly I believe that with the evidence I have in my possession, documents from the Departments, I shall be able to show every Senator in less than half an hour that it is the duty of the Senate to pass the joint resolution, it having come here from the other House.

Mr. ALLISON. I shall be constrained to ask for the yeas and nays on the question of the consideration of this resolution. I am now satisfied it will take considerable time.

Mr. COCKRELL. All day.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from New York wishes to submit a few remarks on it, that is another question.

Mr. EVARTS. I believe that I may have an opportunity to express my views on this case now.

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. EVARTS. Objection is made, or at least a desire is expressed to take a division of the House on taking up and passing the resolution. Now, I would beg to ask when I may have an opportunity to have this measure disposed of, however members of the Senate may wish to vote upon it? If I can not have it done either now or in some way that will enable me to occupy to a certain extent the time of the Senate I do not wish to insist upon indulgence; but I was desirous that I might be put on the footing that I would have been if I had been present when the Calendar was under consideration and when this resolution was reached, and when my necessary absence led to its being laid over until an opportunity of hearing could be had. I waited for various opportunities, and now it is quite necessary that one way or the other, it seems to me, this matter should be disposed of. If there is any other hour of the day's consideration that shall be better, it is not for me to interfere with that arrangement.

Mr. ALLISON. I suggest to the Senator from New York that I think it is understood on both sides of the Chamber that after these appropriation bills which are pressing shall be out of the way a day shall be set apart for the Calendar, and some of these matters that are on the Calendar can be disposed of. I think that has been understood, and at that time I suppose it will be proper to take this up.

Mr. EVARTS. But I may be permitted to repeat to-day what I said yesterday, that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] may be under obligations, and in fact is under obligations of necessity to leave and be absent for a considerable time, for reasons which Senators are aware of.

Now, if I can take this matter up and have it disposed of when the appropriation bill reaches some other stage, it will suit my convenience and my duty as well; but I should feel very unpleasantly in regard to my obligations to my constituents, who are greatly interested in this matter and have been petitioners here and who presented the matter to my attention, to find that any serious mischief in the consideration of the case had occurred from the casual absence on my part concurring with the two days that were already fixed upon as the particular days on which the Calendar was to be taken up.

Mr. ALLISON. I am sure an opportunity will be given.

Mr. BECK. The 1st of July is here, and every Department is closed to-day by law, because it can make no contracts, pay no money, do nothing; and I think this gentleman can wait a few days for his gold medal, as he has waited so long, rather than allow the Government to stop. I shall object to anything being taken up except the appropriation bills.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is made.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Chair now to lay before the Senate the oint resolution of the House which was received yesterday.

Mr. EVARTS. Well, Mr. President, I waive the question of taking up the resolution to which I referred and passing it now, and will myself retire from expressing any views disconnected with the consideration of the bill.

TEMPORARY APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks that House joint resolution No. 196 be laid before the Senate. Its title will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (H. Res. 196) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the joint resolution be now considered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The question is on reading it a second time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The first question is whether the Senate will proceed to the consideration of it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I rather thought the Chair had a right to lay it before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has laid it before the Senate, and the question is on ordering the resolution to a second reading.

The joint resolution was ordered to a second reading, and was read the second time by its title.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now read it at length.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk read the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution is now before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I want to call the attention of the Senate to this way of doing business and this state of affairs.

It has been generally supposed until quite a recent date that the two Houses of Congress really had some independent and practical functions in regard to appropriating money out of the Treasury, and I suppose that is the constitutional law yet; but practically for some years off and on the appropriation bills which, as a practice, have originated in the House of Representatives although they need not do so, have come to this body so late that it has been impracticable for the committees and especially for Senators after the committees have reported to understand their contents and vote intelligently in respect of the appropriation of very large sums of money, because we do not have the time left us to consider them as they ought to be considered; and when they have been finally passed and sent to the President of the United States (who still by the Constitution I suppose has a practical and independent and important function to perform in respect of signing or refusing to sign, approving or refusing to approve, these appropriation bills) he has been left in a condition where he must take them blindly or must veto them blindly, one way or the other, because it is impossible for him to have the time to consider them at all.

I have had prepared, to show how this thing has been going on and with a view of inquiring when we are going to have a reform about this business, a little statement covering several past sessions, and my friend from Iowa will state how it is at this session about these bills.

In the first session of the Forty-sixth Congress, which was a called session in the spring of 1879, the legislative, &c., appropriation bill was received on the 10th of June, and it passed both Houses and was signed by the two presiding officers on the 20th of June, in order to get it around, I suppose, by the 1st of July—only ten days from the time it appeared in this body until the time it was sent to the President—appropriating in round numbers twenty or twenty-one million dollars. I suppose we should find on turning to the statutes that that bill was approved by the President of the United States within forty-eight hours after and perhaps on the same day that it was sent to him, the 20th of June. The Army bill—I have not the others, for I think they passed at the regular session—the Army bill was received on the 12th of June and passed both Houses on the 21st, in nine days.

At the second session of that Congress, being the long session like this, commencing in December, 1879, the legislative bill was not received until the 17th of May, 1880. That was doing very well indeed, comparatively. It was signed by the presiding officers of both Houses on the 15th of June, and we had nearly a month at that time to give to that particular bill. The sundry civil bill was received on the 1st of June and passed both Houses on the 16th. The other bills were received somewhat earlier. That was a remarkably good instance of doing things.

At the third session of that Congress, which was the short session, commencing in December, 1880, the legislative bill was not received until the 10th day of February, 1881, less than three weeks before the end of the session, and it did not get through both Houses out of conference and so on until the 2d day of March, the last day but one of the session.

The consular and diplomatic bill was received on the 20th of December, 1880, from the House, and passed both Houses completely on the 19th of February, 1881.

The Army bill was received on the 6th of January, 1881, and passed both Houses finally on the 22d of February.

The Navy bill was received on the 21st of January, and passed both Houses on the 19th of February.

The sundry civil bill, one of the most important and difficult of all the bills, requiring the greatest care in the examination, was not received in this House until the 28th day of February, four days before that Congress terminated by law, so that there could be no extension of the session and no further time for deliberation, and of course it passed and was signed on the 3d of March, 1881.

At the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, being the long session again, the legislative bill was not received in the Senate until the 15th of June, 1882, more than six months after the Congress had met, and it was passed through both Houses on the 4th of August.

The consular and diplomatic bill was received on the 6th of March, and finished in both Houses on the 28th of June.

The Army bill was received on the 6th of April, and passed both Houses finally on the 26th of June.

The Navy bill was not received until the 6th day of July, six days after the appropriations for the previous year had run out, and it was completed on the 5th of August.

The sundry civil bill was not received until the middle of July, two weeks after the previous fiscal year had expired, and more than seven months after the Houses of Congress had met for the administration of public business and the performance of their public duties, among the chief and most important of which is the careful and economical protection of the people's money in the Treasury and the wise and scrutinized appropriation of it for necessary public objects. Something else occupied the time of the two Houses—and that is all I have a right to refer to—from the first Monday of December until the 14th of July before both of them, each in its turn, could have an opportunity to get hold of this enormous branch of the public service embraced in the sundry civil bill.

At the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress, ending March 4, 1883, the legislative bill again was not received until the 16th of February, only two weeks before the expiration of the Congress, and did not finally get through until the 2d of March. The consular and diplomatic bill was received on the 11th of December—that was very prompt—and it was concluded in February. The Army bill was received on the 5th of January and was concluded on the 3d of March. The Navy bill was received on the 26th of January and was concluded on the 2d of March. The sundry civil bill, again this most important one, did not come to this body until the 24th of February, just about a week before the end of the session, and it was not disposed of until the 3d day of March, 1883.

At the last Congress, the first session of the Forty-eighth, the legislative bill did not come to this body until the 3d of June, 1884, and it was passed through both Houses finally on the 5th of July, 1884.

The consular and diplomatic bill was received on the 19th of May, and was passed very soon afterward, I believe; I have not the exact date.

The sundry civil bill again was not received until the 24th of June, just six days before the termination of that fiscal year, and it was not until the 5th of July that by the utmost exertion the bill could be got into shape to be sent to the President to be signed.

The Army bill was received on the 20th of May, and on account of difficulties, between the two Houses I suppose as to the amendments, it was not completed until the 2d of July, two days after the termination of the fiscal year.

Then at the session ending on the 3d of March, 1885, you may remember, Mr. President, that some of the heaviest of these bills did not get completed in conferences between the two Houses until after daylight of the morning of the 4th day of March, and that the then presiding officer sat here as it might be said solitary and alone with the faithful clerks and Reporter to receive solitary and alone a messenger from the House of Representatives stating that it had agreed to conference reports, shutting our eyes to the fact that nobody was here but the presiding officer. The bills were sent to the President, of course leaving him not a single moment of time to examine several of those that passed in that way.

Now, Mr. President, I am bound to say that it appears to me that this is not a credit to the Congress of the United States, and that a Congress of the United States that can not administer the public business in the most important of its aspects is not deserving of the confidence of the people of the United States. I think therefore that, as far as this branch of Congress is concerned, the Senate ought to take some step in some lawful and constitutional and respectful way to see if we can not get on with this important public business in a reasonable, a respectable, and a satisfactory manner not only so far as our own duties are concerned, but so as to give the President of the United States an ample and reasonable opportunity to perform his important function in reference to it; and for one, if we can not in some way bring ourselves into better fashions about this business, I should rather let the wheels of government stop, as far as they would stop by refusing to pass a resolution of this kind at all, until the two Houses can be got to such a state of accord and diligence as will enable us to pass proper appropriation bills in the proper way and at a proper time.

The confusion, supposing it were a good practice otherwise, of this lapping of the appropriation acts of one year over into another which are different, some objects being dropped and new ones being taken up, and then saying that they shall be charged over to the new items of appropriation many of which do not attach themselves or relate themselves at all to the old ones, is a very confusing and mischievous practice.

Mr. President, I have said with great respect to the members of this body, and with all possible respect to our co-ordinate branch of the legislative power, what I have felt it to be a duty to say in putting in my protest against this sort of business.

I should like to have my friend from Iowa tell us about the state of these bills now and whether an extension for ten days is going to do any good.

Mr. BECK. I should like so much of the resolution read again as indicates the length of time for which the extension is to be.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Only ten days, which will do no good at all.

Mr. BECK. That is absurd. You might as well not do it at all. The RECORD of this morning shows that the sundry civil bill has been reported by the Committee of the Whole to the House with the statement that the committee had come to "no resolution thereon." When that bill is even coming to the Senate no one can tell, and this is the 1st day of July. That bill can not be read over and examined with any care at all in ten days. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE], and myself generally take charge of that as a subcommittee; and both those Senators know that it is absolutely impossible for us to answer any question about it intelligently in ten days. Therefore if we are going to extend the appropriations at all we might as well make the time twenty days, because that bill alone will take nearly three weeks to have it completed. I am very glad that attention is called sharply to this practice. It is not confined to the last few years. It has been going on more or less ever since I have been a member of either House, and that is now nearly twenty years. To-day there is a law which provides that—

> No Department of the Government shall expend, in any one fiscal year, any sum in excess of appropriations made by Congress for that fiscal year, or involve the Government in any contract for the future payment of money in excess of such appropriations.

That provision would to-day close every Department of this Government, and it is well to call attention to it sharply.

I think the rules of the Senate ought to be amended so that if appropriation bills do not come over from the House at the long session before the 1st of May the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate should be ordered to introduce their own bills and have them passed, and at the short session if they are not over by the 1st day of February the same order ought to be had; because it is a physical impossibility for any Senator to do the work necessary to give those bills intelligent consideration in the way we are doing now; and I do not know that it would do any harm—if throwing gravel will not do any good then begin to throw stones—to let the Government Departments close for a week.

The Government is rich enough, nobody doubts our credit. There are but $135,000,000 of our debt that we can pay before 1892, and we have $205,000,000 now lying idle in the Treasury. So $70,000,000 will be left after paying it all off to-day. That would withdraw $123,000,000 of the bonds now used as security for the circulation of the national banks. We have so much money that we are breaking ourselves down. So there is no danger of the credit of the country suffering. I move to amend the joint resolution in line 7 by striking out the word "ten" and inserting "twenty."

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I understand that the practice of delaying the appropriation bills has existed for a great many years. My remembrance is that Mr. Buchanan during his administration positively refused, and so announced, to sign any bill involving large amounts of money that did not reach him ten days before the expiration of Congress. It had therefore been the practice prior to the administration of President Buchanan, because as I have been informed, and that is my remembrance, he refused to attach his name to bills appropriating large amounts of money unless he had ample time to examine them.

Mr. DAWES. I suggest to the Senator that the first of these resolutions was in 1876. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON], and myself served upon the Committee on Appropriations in the House of Representatives, and there never were any of these resolutions then. The first of them was in 1876.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not wish to detain the Senate, but I wish to say that I should be very glad if the two Houses could act together; but I do not believe we can by mere criticism of the other House effect anything. We ought to have some arrangement with the House.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, I do not for one admit, and I think the Senate never has admitted, that to the House of Representatives belongs exclusively the right to originate appropriation bills; and I believe that four or five years ago the Judiciary Committee of the House made an elaborate report on that subject, in which that committee took the ground that either House, under the Constitution, could originate appropriation bills; but it has been the habit or custom, I believe, since the foundation of the Government, or nearly so, for these general appropriation bills to be originated in the House of Representatives.

Mr. INGALLS. It is the unwritten law.

Mr. ALLISON. It is, as the Senator from Kansas says, the unwritten law. Now the difficulty is that if we originate and pass these bills and send them over to the House they will simply be thrown aside, and the House will originate its own bills and send them to us. This is an evil that I think should be cured, but it is not within the power or the control of the Senate to cure it as these two Houses are organized.

Take these bills at this session of the Senate. We are now considering the legislative bill, which passed the House on the 16th day of June. It came here late on that day. It was immediately sent to the Printer, and it was not printed until the next day, so as to be in the possession of the Committee on Appropriations, which was the 17th day of June. The committee took up this bill with as much dispatch as was possible, who considered it section by section and item by item and reported it here some days ago. I think the Senate has with due diligence, so far as this particular bill is concerned, endeavored to pass it through the Senate.

The sundry civil bill, as truly stated by the Senator from Vermont, is the most important appropriation bill that comes before the two bodies of Congress. It is the bill that gathers in all the miscellaneous items of the Government. It covers a vast range of subjects and topics. That bill has not yet reached us. It probably will not reach us before to-morrow, or possibly very late to-day. I notify the Senate that it will take the Committee on Appropriations and the Senate at least ten days to intelligently consider that bill. We ought to have two weeks to consider it, and especially as I have seen from the papers the course that it has passed through in the other House. I think the bill will require very careful consideration.

Mr. BECK. It is not perhaps out of order to say that we have every reason to believe that the sundry civil bill will come over to us with propositions remodeling and changing the whole system of the currency of the country.

Mr. ALLISON. That I suppose will occur.

So these bills do not come to us in time for us to consider them before the expiration of the fiscal year.

I have a statement of these bills as they have reached the Senate. The first appropriation bill passed by the House of Representatives at this session passed on the 4th day of March—no appropriation bill passed the other branch of Congress until March 4, and that was the pension bill, a small bill requiring but little time for its consideration. The next bill was the Post-Office bill, which passed the House April 6 and which has now passed through both Houses and I presume has been signed by the President. The Agricultural bill passed the House on the 14th of April; the District of Columbia bill on the 12th of April. The Indian bill passed the House on March 24, and was reported to the Senate some time ago and has been a law for a few weeks. The consular and diplomatic bill passed the House on the 13th of May; the Army bill on the 12th of May; the naval bill on the 21st of June, only a few days ago; and the legislative bill, as I have already stated, on the 16th day of June.

The deficiency bill has not yet been taken up in the House. The fortification bill, an important bill although not involving very large amounts, has not yet been reported from the Committee on Appropriations in the House. The condition of the river and harbor bill is well known.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator for information how many of these bills that are so far behind have been reported by the regular Appropriations Committee of the House?

Mr. ALLISON. The legislative bill, the sundry civil bill, the deficiency bill, and the fortification bill, four of the six bills that are reported by the Committee on Appropriations of the House, are not yet disposed of there.

Mr. BUTLER. Most of the other bills I understand that have been referred to appropriate committees, Indian Affairs for instance, have been reported and agreed to promptly.

Mr. ALLISON. I see the point the Senator makes. I have been unable to discover any great reform through the practice to which he calls attention. The Navy bill, which was passed on the 21st of June, came from the House Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. BUTLER. That is the only bill which has not been acted on by the House Appropriations Committee that has been delayed, as I understand.

Mr. ALLISON. The Army bill did not reach us until the 12th of May. However, I do not wish to go into that question.

Now, whatever may be the condition, it is necessary that this resolution should pass or the operations of this Government must stop, including every Department of it and all the service connected with it.

Mr. INGALLS. Not every Department, because some of the bills have become laws; and yet, as I understand the terms of this joint resolution, it extends to all appropriations. It is irrespective of the fact that some of the bills have already become laws.

Mr. ALLISON. No; the resolution is carefully guarded, and it is a resolution that has passed Congress three times. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Delaware to the fact that in 1876 the first resolution of this character was passed. Before that time, in the history of the Government so far as I know, no such resolution was required.

Mr. BECK. Now, will the Senator allow me to say a word on the subject, showing the reasons for that?

Mr. ALLISON. It is perfectly fair that I should state that until 1870 the law which now requires that these appropriations shall be made for the fiscal year and for that only was not in existence. Prior to 1870 there was no prohibition on the part of the Departments, so that if the appropriation bills were not passed by the end of the fiscal year the employés of the Government and those having charge of the affairs of the Government could go on and the appropriations would relate back to the beginning of the fiscal year.

Mr. BUTLER. Now, in point of fact have not a good many of these appropriation bills been delayed to a later period than this in past Congresses?

Mr. ALLISON. In the olden time?

Mr. BUTLER. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. I have no doubt of it.

Mr. BUTLER. I certainly have so understood. Very many of the sessions have been extended into August in order to get through the appropriation bills. So this is not singular, as I understand the history of the appropriation bills. I do not mean to apologize for this delay, however.

Mr. ALLISON. I think the only cure for this delay is to have the appropriation bills in the Senate at a reasonable time, and I believe there is a rule of the other House, certainly there was a rule of the House when I was a member of it, that all general appropriation bills should be reported within thirty days of the beginning of the session. I do not know whether or not that is the existing rule of the House.

Mr. BUTLER. Then the Senator will allow me to suggest, after we get the bills into the Senate, that we agree among ourselves to do less talking on them than we do on most subjects.

Mr. ALLISON. I quite concur with the Senator in reference to the talking. We might perhaps do less of it, and perhaps it might be useful sometimes to do more of it. These bills ought to be considered and discussed by the Senate unless we are to allow the bills to be considered by one branch of Congress instead of two.

Mr. MAXEY. Will the Senator from Iowa indulge me for a moment?

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MAXEY. The criticism has been made and very strongly expressed by the Senator from Iowa and others that prior to 1876 there had never been a necessity for a joint resolution extending over the appropriations of a previous year. The answer of the Senator from Iowa conclusively shows that that is not a well-considered criticism, because prior to 1870 the old laws went over and carried with them the right of the Government to continue until the necessary appropriation bills were passed, and then they related back to the beginning of the fiscal year. Therefore the whole time back of 1870 is cut out and has no application. In point of fact I apprehend that the appropriation bills prior to 1870 and up to 1872 reached the Senate as late as they have reached it since that time. Now, the honor of the Government makes it much more important to consider the pending resolution than to indulge in criticism upon the action of the other House.

Mr. ALLISON. I endeavored to state that prior to the act of 1870 the appropriations if made after the 1st of July related back to the 1st of July. Of course I do not state it with the clearness and distinctness of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa, with his permission, to explain to the Senate why on page 2, in lines 22 and 23, where the resolution provides for carrying on the work of public printing "and for all other miscellaneous objects embodied in the sundry civil and naval appropriation acts in advance of appropriations," it is confined to the naval and sundry civil bills. Is that the way it ought to be?

Mr. ALLISON. That is the way it ought to be, and I will give the reason for that. The agricultural bill has become a law, and so have the Army bill, the consular and diplomatic bill, the District of Columbia bill, the Indian bill, the Military Academy bill, the pension bill, and the Post-Office bill, so that this resolution in its terms will only apply to appropriations embraced within the sundry civil bill, the naval bill, and the legislative bill which we are now considering.

Mr. EDMUNDS. You have not got that in; that is the trouble.

Mr. ALLISON. There are no miscellaneous objects in this bill; and the naval bill and the sundry civil bill are the only bills in which there are miscellaneous objects. The deficiency bill of course relates to expenditures already made, and the fortification bill is not likely to be miscellaneous in its character, and the river and harbor appropriations are continuous appropriations. They do not come within the scope of the law of 1870; they do not lapse into the Treasury by expiration of time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand the Senator to mean then that as it respects the subjects named of the legislative bill that we have now in hand it is not necessary to have in that proviso which applies in terms to the naval and sundry civil bill, because all the objects provided for in this bill may go on under the first clause while they could not go on under the first clause as to the naval and sundry civil bill.

Mr. ALLISON. That is true.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is very queer.

Mr. ALLISON. It is so. This joint resolution then will apply to the expenditures that are provided for in the legislative bill and in the naval bill and the sundry civil bill. So I submit to the Senate that it is important that this resolution should pass to-day.

The Senator from Vermont alludes to the question of public printing. The Public Printer can not continue the public printing without absolute violation of law unless this resolution shall pass to-day.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why, if the work is ordered?

Mr. ALLISON. I suppose he might volunteer to go on, but I think the Public Printer would be in great danger of violating the law if he executed the work of public printing on the Sabbath day, if this may be so called.

Mr. BECK. The case being as stated by the Senator from Iowa, I will not ask to extend the time. If the resolution passes for ten days it can be extended if necessity arises; but I want it distinctly understood, and the House may as well understand it, that ten days' extension now does not mean by any possibility that we can get away then.

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to extend the time. I move to insert fifteen days instead of ten.

Mr. BECK. We may as well pass it for ten now and go back to the House and then it can be extended again.

Mr. ALLISON. We shall be obliged to extend it again. I think we had better amend it and make the time fifteen days.

Mr. BECK. Very well.

Mr. ALLISON. Then it can go back to the House in time to be passed to-day.

Mr. INGALLS. There seems to be a difference of opinion between members of the committee about this language. I give notice I shall object to the third reading of the resolution to-day.

Mr. ALLISON. There is no difference of opinion that I know of.

Mr. BECK. Not a particle.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to insert "fifteen" instead of "ten."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves to amend the joint resolution. The amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to amend in line 7, before the word "days," by striking out "ten" and inserting "fifteen;" and in line 18, after the word "as," to strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen;" so as to read:

That all appropriations for the necessary operations of the Government under existing laws which shall remain unprovided for on the 30th day of June, 1886, be, and they are hereby, continued and made available for a period of fifteen days from and after that date, unless the regular appropriations therefor provided for in bills now pending in Congress shall have been previously made for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887; and in case the appropriations, or any of them, hereby continued, are or is insufficient to carry on the said necessary operations, a sufficient amount is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to carry on the same: Provided, That no greater amount shall be expended therefor than will be in the same proportion to the appropriations of the fiscal year 1886 as fifteen days' time bears to the whole of said fiscal year.

Mr. BECK. I agree to the amendment, but it would be well to explain what I have said by reading section 3690 of the Revised Statutes, which was substantially stated by the Senator from Iowa. Before 1870 the Government could run on beyond the fiscal year without the passage of the appropriation bills, but this section enacted in 1870 provides that all balances of appropriations contained in the annual appropriation bills and made specifically for the service of any fiscal year, and remaining unexpended at the expiration of such fiscal year, shall only be applied to the payment of expenses properly incurred during that year, or to the fulfillment of contracts properly made within that year; and balances not needed for such purposes shall be carried to the surplus fund. This section, however, shall not apply to appropriations known as permanent or indefinite appropriations. (See section 3685.)

So that we are at the end of our rope unless this resolution is passed. It only emphasizes the importance of either changing the rules of the Senate so as to originate the appropriation bills ourselves at the proper time; or, as we have no power over the House, we should use every means we can to have the bills sent here in proper time, so that this condition of things may not again occur.

Mr. CALL. I wish to say that I do not concur in the arraignment that has been made of the House of Representatives here. They have a perfect right to take their own time for the consideration of appropriation bills as much as the Senate has, and they may reply to us very well that the whole year is here for the consideration of these great appropriation bills, and the Government can just as well be carried on by a joint resolution. If there be any public necessity demanding that Congress shall have time for the consideration of these appropriations let us take the time rather than insist that our convenience will be subserved by adjourning and going home.

Admit the fact that the Senate should have ample time, it does not follow that the House is to blame for not sending the bills here at some particular time. The proper remedy is by an agreement at the beginning of the session; but six months have passed away without such an agreement or attempt at such an agreement on the part of this body with the other House.

I wish to say that for one I recognize the full right of the House to consider, deliberate, and determine in its own time the great appropriations which are to be made for the Government; and if the Senate desires time, it has a right to take it from now until the commencement of the next Congress.

Mr. ALLISON. But the Senator will bear in mind that the law provides that these appropriations must be passed before the beginning of the fiscal year in order to enable the Government to go on.

Mr. CALL. You can do that by a joint resolution. Such a law as the Senator referred to is a very improper one, that the Government must stop because the fiscal year runs out. The old law was a much better one, and I see no great impropriety in the appropriation bills relating back to the beginning of the year, and I do not believe that a reason can be given why they should not.

Mr. BECK. The Congress itself expires on the 4th of March, and the appropriation bills must all be in by that time. Is not that a reason for hurrying up?

Mr. CALL. It is some time before the 4th of March.

Mr. BECK. At the next short session we must appropriate for the fiscal year 1888, and do it all in ninety days.

Mr. CALL. There are more than ninety days between now and the 4th of March.

Mr. BECK. But then there will be another year to provide for before then.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendments proposed by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8970) for the relief of the trustees of the Judson Female College, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move to proceed to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed, beginning at line 1803. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriation was, under the head of "Navy Department," in the clause making appropriations for compensation of the Secretary of the Navy, and the clerks and employés in his office, after the word "dollars," in line 1814, to insert:

One carpenter, $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1821, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for compensation of the Secretary of the Navy, and the clerks and employés in his office, from $58,630 to $59,630.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Nautical Almanac Office," in line 1850, after the word "each," to insert "one copyist and type-writer, $900;" in line 1851, after the word "messenger," to strike out "and one copyist at $720;" and in line 1853, after the word "thousand," to strike out "three hundred" and insert "four hundred and eighty;" so as to make the clause read:

Nautical Almanac Office: For the following assistants, namely: Three at $1,600 each; two at $1,400 each; three at $1,200 each; two at $1,000 each; one copyist and type-writer, $900; one assistant messenger; one laborer; in all, $15,480.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was continued to line 1862.

Mr. CALL. I will move, if there be no objection on the part of the chairman of the committee, to increase——

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Senator from Florida to allow the Secretary to read through the committee amendments, and then we can go back to the item which he has in view.

Mr. CALL. Very well.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "Hydrographic Office," in line 1888, after the word "thousand," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" so as to make the clause read:

For rent of building for printing-presses, draughtsmen and engravers, storage of copper-plates and materials used in the construction and printing of charts, and for repairs and heating of the same, and for gas, water, and telephone rates, $1,300.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Bureau of Construction and Repair," in line 1927, after the word "dollars," to insert "one assistant draughtsman, $1,600;" and in line 1932, after the word "all," to strike out "twelve thousand three" and insert "thirteen thousand nine;" so as to make the clause read:

Bureau of Construction and Repair: For chief clerk, $1,800; draughtsman, $1,800; one assistant draughtsman, $1,600; one assistant draughtsman, $1,400; one clerk of class 4; one clerk of class 3; one clerk of class 2; one clerk of class 1; one assistant messenger; and one laborer; in all, $13,980.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriation for the "Bureau of Steam-Engineering," in line 1936, after the word "dollars," to insert "one assistant draughtsman, at $1,800;" and in line 1941, after the word "all," to strike out "twelve thousand four" and insert "fourteen thousand two;" so as to make the clause read:

Bureau of Steam-Engineering: For chief clerk, $1,800; one chief draughtsman, at $2,250; one assistant draughtsman, at $1,800; one assistant draughtsman, at $1,400; two clerks of class 2; one clerk of class 1; one assistant draughtsman, at $1,000; one assistant messenger; and two laborers; in all, $14,290.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "Department of the Interior," in line 1978, after the word "each," to insert:

Six additional persons to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior to aid him in determining appeals from the Commissioner of Pensions, and from whom he may constitute two additional boards of pension appeals, whose term of service shall expire at the close of the fiscal year 1887, at $2,000 each; two special inspectors connected with the administration of the public-land service, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior and to be subject to his direction, at $2,500 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1990, after the words "disbursing clerk," to strike out "for one stenographer" and insert "one private secretary to the Secretary of the Interior," so as to read;

One private secretary to the Secretary of the Interior, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 1993, after the words "class four," to insert:

One census clerk, $1,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2005, before the word "assistant," to strike out "seven" and insert "nine;" so as to read:

Nine assistant messengers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2019, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for compensation of the Secretary of the Interior, the assistant secretaries, and the clerks and employés in the office of the Secretary from "$158,190" to "$178,430."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 2020, to insert:

For per diem, in lieu of subsistence, of two special inspectors connected with the administration of the public-land service, while traveling on duty, at a rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, not exceeding $3 per day, and for actual necessary expenses of transportation, $5,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the General Land Office, after the word "thousand," in lines 2044 and 2045, to strike out "two hundred and fifty;" so as to read:

One assistant commissioner, to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, who shall be authorized to sign such letters, papers, and documents, and to perform such other duties as may be directed by the Commissioner, and shall act as Commissioner in the absence of hat officer or in case of a vacancy in the office of Commissioner, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the same clause, line 2047, before the word "inspectors," to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to read:

Two inspectors of surveyors-general and district land offices, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, at $2,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2050, before the word "principal," to strike out "ten" and insert "three;" and in the same line, after the word "at," to strike out "two thousand" and insert "one thousand eight hundred;" so as to read:

Three principal clerks, at $1,800 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2051, after the word "each," to strike out:

Two law-examiners, at $2,000 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, before the word "clerks," at the beginning of line 2053, to strike out "thirty-two" and insert "forty;" so as to read:

Forty clerks of class 4.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2058, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation for the compensation of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, assistant commissioner, and the clerks and employés in the office, from $489,300 to $484,850.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2066, before the word "thousand," to strike out "ten" and insert "nine;" so as to make the clause read:

For per diem in lieu of subsistence of inspectors and of clerks detailed to investigate fraudulent land entries, trespasses on the public lands, and cases of official misconduct, while traveling on duty, at a rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior, not exceeding $2.50 per day, and for actual necessary expenses of transportation, $9,000, to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of the Interior.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the "Indian Office," in line 2076, after the word "thousand," to insert "five hundred;" so as to read:

Assistant commissioner, who shall also perform the duties of chief clerk, $2,500.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to amend, in line 2076, by striking out "two" and inserting "three;" and then I shall ask the Senate to disagree to the amendment reported by the committee adding the $500; so as to make the salary of the assistant commissioner of Indian affairs $3,000.

I only desire to say that there is not in the service of this Government an assistant commissioner who receives less than $3,000 salary, even where the assistant commissioner performs no duties other than those of such assistant, while by the provisions of this bill this assistant commissioner, if the office shall be created, will not only perform the duties of assistant commissioner, but the duties of chief clerk also.

There are two assistant commissioners of pensions receiving $3,600. There is an assistant commissioner of public lands receiving $3,000, an assistant commissioner of pensions receiving $3,000; and in respect to each of those bureaus there are chief clerks receiving $2,250, whereas all of these duties will have to be performed by this officer if he is created.

Mr. ALLISON. This is a new office, and the Committee on Appropriations did not feel under the circumstances that it could strike out the entire provision. It makes the chief clerk of the Indian Office an assistant commissioner in addition to his present duties; and the committee were of opinion that if we added $500 to his salary it would be a fair compensation. I leave it to the Senate, however.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was rejected.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2077, before the word "division," to strike out "land;" so as to read:

Chief of division, at $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2078, after the word "dollars," to strike out:

Chief of accounts division, $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2080, before the word "clerks," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Five clerks of class 4.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senate will see that we simply transpose the chief of the accounts division to a clerk of class 4, which he is now.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2080, after the word "four," to insert "one of whom shall have charge of the educational division;" so as to read:

Five clerks of class 4, one of whom shall have charge of the educational division.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2089, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for compensation of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, assistant commissioner, and the clerks and employés in the office from $92,580 to $92,880.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Iowa to the necessity of changing the aggregate in consequence of this adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. ALLISON. Then that should be amended.

Mr. HARRIS. By adding $500.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That amount will be added by the Secretary unless there be objection.

Mr. BECK. Ninety-three thousand three hundred and eighty dollars is the proper amount.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the "Pension Office," in line 2092, before the word "thousand," to strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to read:

For compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions, $5,000.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that that be passed over, to come up with the other amendments of like character which were passed over last night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2096, to increase the appropriation for compensation of "chief clerk" of the Pension Office from $2,000 to $2,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2121, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for the compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions, deputy commissioners, and clerks and employés in the office from $1,807,500 to $1,808,750.

Mr. BECK. That will have to be passed over in consequence of passing over the item about the Commissioner's salary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "United States Patent Office," in line 2145, to increase the appropriation "for compensation of the Commissioner of the Patent Office" from $4,500 to $5,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This will be passed over, the Chair supposes, under the arrangement already made.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes, sir; that is to be passed over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2181, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for compensation of the Commissioner of the Patent Office, assistant commissioner, and the clerks and employés in the office from $649,070 to $649,570.

Mr. ALLISON. That item is to be passed over also.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, after line 2182, to insert:

For purchase of books for the scientific library of the Patent Office, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2185, before the word "expenses," to strike out "purchase of books and;" and in line 2187, after the word "governments," to strike out "four thousand" and insert "one thousand five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For expenses of transporting publications of patents issued by the Patent Office to foreign governments, $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "Bureau of Labor," in line 2239, after the word "four," to insert "both to be statistical experts;" so as to read:

Two clerks of class 4, both to be statistical experts.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2240, after the word "three," to insert "one of whom may be a stenographer;" so as to read:

Two clerks of class 3, one of whom may be a stenographer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2242, before the words "of whom," to strike out "two" and insert "one;" in line 2343, after the word "be," to strike out "stenographers" and insert "a stenographer;" so as to read:

Four clerks of class 1, one of whom may be a translator and one of whom may be a stenographer.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2248, after the word "dollars," to strike out "one charwomen, $300; one charwoman, $240," and insert "two charwomen, at $240 each."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2251, after the word "least," to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to read:

Eighteen special agents, at least two of whom shall be females, at $1,400 each.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2253, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation for compensation of the Commissioner of Labor and the clerks and employés in his office from $53,020 to $52,960.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out the clause from line 2255 to line 2260 inclusive, as follows:

For per diem of special agents when away from home on duty, in lieu of expenses for subsistence, the rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and not to exceed $3 per day, and for transportation and for traveling expenses of officers, $39,850.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For per diem of special agents when away from home on duty, in lieu of expenses for subsistence, the rate to be fixed by the Secretary of the Interior and not to exceed $3 per day, and for transportation and assistance, and for traveling expenses of officers, and for employment of experts, and for other necessary expenses, including the purchase of books and periodicals, $39,850.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Office of Commissioner of Railroads," in line 2273, after the word "book-keeper," to strike out "two thousand" and insert "one thousand eight hundred;" and in line 2275, before the word "hundred," to strike out "six" and insert "four;" so as to make the clause read:

Office of Commissioner of Railroads: For Commissioner, $4,500; book-keeper, $2,400; railroad engineer, $2,500; one assistant book-keeper, $1,800; one clerk of class 3; one copyist; and one assistant messenger; in all, $14,420.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2278, after the word "subsidized," to strike out "and land-grant;" so as to make the clause read:

For examination of books and accounts of certain subsidized railroad companies, and inspecting roads, shops, machinery, and equipments of same, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "Office of the Director of the Geological Survey," in line 2296, to reduce the appropriation for compensation of "Director" from $6,000 to $5,000.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This will be passed over.

Mr. PLATT. I should like to know whether the salary of the Director of the Geological Survey is fixed by any general statute, and whether the $6,000 recommended by the House is the usual salary or not.

Mr. ALLISON. I will read the statute. The salary of the Director of the Geological Survey was fixed when that survey was authorized in 1879, March 3:

For the salary of the Director of the Geological Survey, which office is hereby established, under the Interior Department, who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, $6,000.

Then describing his duties——

Mr. PLATT. What has been the appropriation since the statute?

Mr. ALLISON. Six thousand dollars.

Mr. PLATT. This does not differ, then, in its character from a recommendation in the appropriation bill that the salary of a judge of the Supreme Court of the United States should be less than that provided by statute, does it?

Mr. ALLISON. In the one case there is a constitutional provision and in the other case Congress may use its judgment with the approval of the President. A judge of the Supreme Court can not have his salary reduced during his term of office.

Mr. HALE. Suppose that this item go over with the other questions of salaries.

Mr. PLATT. Questions of the same description have gone over.

Mr. ALLISON. Let that and the next item go over.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. They will both go over.

Mr. ALLISON. And also the footings in line 2311.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those amendments will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations "for rent of buildings for the Interior Department," in line 2339, to reduce the appropriation for rent of building "for the Bureau of Education" from $6,000 to $4,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2340, to reduce the appropriation for rent of building for the "Geological Survey" from $20,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2342, to increase the appropriation for rent of building for "Bureau of Labor" from $1,776 to $2,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2346, to reduce the total amount of the appropriation "for rent of buildings for the Interior Department" from $35,436 to $24,060.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "surveyors-general and their clerks," after the word "Dakota," at the end of line 2373, to strike out "and State of Nebraska;" in line 2374, after the word "thousand," to insert "five hundred;" and in line 2376, after the word "thousand," to insert "five hundred;" so as to make the clause read:

For surveyor-general of the Territory of Dakota, $2,500; and for the clerks in his office, $9,000; in all, $11,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2416, after the words "for the," to strike out "clerk" and insert "clerks;" in line 2417, before the word "thousand," to strike out "one" and insert "two;" and in the same line, after the word "all," to strike out "two" and insert "three;" so as to read:

For surveyor-general of Nevada, $1,800; and for the clerks in his office, $2,000; in all, $3,800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2433, after the word "Oregon," to strike out "one thousand eight hundred" and insert "two thousand;" so as to read:

For surveyor-general of Oregon, $2,000.

Mr. DOLPH. I move to amend the amendment of the committee by adding after the words "two thousand" the words "five hundred," so as to restore the salary to the amount heretofore paid.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2434 it is proposed to add to the amendment of the committee "five hundred;" so as to read:

For surveyor-general of Oregon, $2,500.

Mr. DOLPH. The salary of that officer has heretofore been $2,500. I know of no reason why it should be decreased, and from the examination I have been able to give this bill I think that the reduction which was made in the salary of the surveyor-general of Oregon is not in keeping with salaries paid to other surveyors-general. I presented an amendment to meet the case and had it printed and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. I observe that they increase the amount in the bill as it came from the House from $1,800 to $2,000, and I now move to amend the amendment of the committee to make it as it stood heretofore.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Oregon to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2436, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for "surveyor-general of Oregon and for the clerks in his office" from $4,300 to $4,500.

Mr. ALLISON. The amount will have to be changed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection, the Secretary will be directed to change the total in this paragraph to correspond with the amendment already made. The Chair hears no objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "Post-Office Department," in line 2462, after the words "chief clerk," to strike out "to the Postmaster-General" and insert "of the Post-Office Department;" so as to read:

Chief clerk of the Post-Office Department, $2,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for the "dead letter office," after the word "for," to strike out "chief of division of dead letters" and insert "superintendent of dead-letter office;" so as to read:

For superintendent of dead-letter office, $2,250.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "office of topographer" of Post-Office Department, in line 2562, after the word "dollars," to insert

One assistant map-mounter, at $720.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to increase the total amount of the appropriation for the compensation of topographer of the Post-Office Department and the draughtsmen, clerks, and employés in his office, from $30,060 to $30,780.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations "for contingent expenses of the Department of Justice," in line 2651, after the word "repairs," to insert "including portraits of Attorneys-General;" and in line 2652, after the word "thousand," to insert "seven hundred;" so as to read:

For contingent expenses of the Department, namely: For furniture and repairs, including portraits of Attorneys-General, $1,700.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2654, to increase the appropriation "for law and miscellaneous books for library of the Department" from $1,500 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2656, after the word "telegraphing," to strike out "postage;" so as to read:

For miscellaneous expenditures, such as telegraphing, fuel, lights, labor, and other necessaries, including ordinary repairs of building and care of grounds, $7,160.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2659, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for contingent expenses of the Department of Justice from $11,160 to $12,360.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was after line 2660 to insert:

For postage required to prepay matter addressed to postal union countries, $100.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk continued the reading of the bill and the following clause from line 2665 to 2669 was read:

For the following force, necessary for the care and protection of the courthouse in the District of Columbia, who shall be under the direction of the United States marshal of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HALE. In line 2666 the word "who" should be "which."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made if there be no objection.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for "Office of the Solicitor of the Treasury," in line 2675, to increase the appropriation "for compensation of the Solicitor of the Treasury" from $4,000 to $4,500.

Mr. HALE. Let that go with the others of the same nature.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be passed over.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 2679, to increase the total amount of the appropriation for compensation of the Solicitor of the Treasury, assistant solicitor, and clerks and employés in the office from $27,580 to $28,080.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment in line 2679 will also go over.

Mr. HALE. Certainly.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was to strike out from line 2701 to line 2717, inclusive, as follows:

For salaries of the district judges of the United States for California, the northern district of Illinois, the eastern district of Louisiana, Massachusetts, Maryland, New York, New Jersey, the southern district of Ohio, and for Pennsylvania, twelve in all, at $4,000 each, $48,000.

For salaries of the district judges of the United States for Alabama, Arkansas, Connecticut, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Indiana, the southern district of Illinois, Iowa, Kentucky, Kansas, the western district of Louisiana, Maine, Missouri, Mississippi, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, North Carolina, the northern district of Ohio, Oregon, Rhode Island, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Vermont, Virginia, West Virginia, and Wisconsin, forty-four in all, at $3,500 each, $154,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

For salaries of the fifty-six district judges of the United States, $203,500.

Mr. ALLISON. The provision as it came from the House provided for a reduction of the salaries of the judges of the district court of California and one of the districts in Louisiana, the eastern district I believe. The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate recommend a restoration of those two salaries to the statutory compensation, not understanding how under the Constitution we can reduce the salaries of these officers. Therefore we have appropriated in a lump sum as has hitherto been appropriated the statutory amount for the fifty-six district judges.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GIBSON. I should like to know what the amendment is.

Mr. ALLISON. We restore the salaries of the judges to the amount fixed by statute.

Mr. GIBSON. Now I understand.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, in the appropriations for the "Court of Claims," in line 2732, after the word "dollars," to insert "one copyist, $900;" and in line 2733, after the word "all," to strike out "twenty-nine thousand eight" and insert "thirty thousand seven;" so as to make the clause read:

Court of Claims: For salaries of five judges of the Court of Claims, at $4,500 each; chief clerk, $3,000; one assistant clerk, $2,000; baliff, $1,500; one copyist, $900; and one messenger; in all, $30,740.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was concluded.

Mr. MANDERSON. Before proceeding with the amendments that may be proposed by the committee aside from those already acted on, and before any amendments are proposed by any other member of the Senate, I ask leave to return to page 97 of the bill, line 2374.

Mr. DAWES. Will the Senator wait a moment as to a matter in which the committee would like to correct itself?

Mr. MANDERSON. I think this will take but a moment. It is rather in the nature of an inquiry on page 97, line 2374.

The bill as reported to the House for the action of that body provided, as has been provided in appropriation bills for many years past, for the maintenance of the office of the surveyor-general of the State of Nebraska, appropriating a sufficient sum to pay his salary and his office force. I notice that in the House the bill was amended by consolidating the two surveyors-generals' offices of the Territory of Dakota and the State of Nebraska, and that the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate now propose to strike out entirely from the bill any reference to the State of Nebraska.

I understand that this action is based on the report of the Interior Department that, there being no public lands for survey in that State, the office is no longer needed; but I submit to the Senator from Iowa having charge of this bill that the office still exists, with its office force, with the books and papers incident to a surveyor-general's office, and I should like some explanation from him as to the necessity of striking out the words "and State of Nebraska," in line 2374.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee concurred with the House and the Land Office in the general view that a surveyor-general was no longer needed for Nebraska; but the effect of the provision in the bill as it came from the House would be to transfer all the records and documents and files from the present location of the office in Nebraska to some place in Dakota. The law heretofore has been that when a surveyor-general's office is no longer required the records of the office shall be cared for and preserved by the State authorities or the General Land Office. So we struck out the provision in reference to the State of Nebraska so that these records could be preserved under the control of the General Land Office.

Mr. MANDERSON. I ask the Senator whether under the general law, in order to abolish this office that is said to be unnecessary at this time, action by the Interior Department is not needed. Must not the office he abolished by an executive order of that Department?

Mr. ALLISON. I think very likely that is necessary. I do not think it will take a great while to abolish the office after we have withdrawn the salary. I think the Secretary of the Interior will be very likely to take the necessary steps to close the office.

Mr. HALE. There were two States joined together, Iowa and Nebraska.

Mr. ALLISON. Iowa has lost her interest in respect to public lands.

Mr. MANDERSON. It has not been really part of the district of Nebraska for years.

Mr. HALE. The appropriation last year was for Nebraska and Iowa.

Mr. ALLISON. All the archives in Iowa I believe have been deposited in the State capitol.

Mr. MANDERSON. Of course I wish to do nothing that is not needed. I think from the explanation offered by the Senator from Iowa having charge of the bill that the reason of this change will fully appear to my colleagues in another body.

Mr. ALLISON. I think it is better not to have all these records transferred to Dakota.

Mr. MANDERSON. I think so myself.

Mr. PLUMB. I call the attention of the Senator from Nebraska to section 2218 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. MANDERSON. That is the provision for abolishing the office and transferring the books. I suppose it does not need legislative action.

Mr. PLUMB. That section provides that—

The Secretary of the Interior shall take all the necessary measures for the completion of the surveys in the several surveying districts for which suveyors-general have been, or may be, appointed, at the earliest periods compatible with the purposes contemplated by law; and whenever the surveys and records of any such district are completed, the surveyor-general thereof shall be required to deliver over to the secretary of state of the respective States, including such surveys, or to such other officer as may be authorized to receive them, all the field-notes, maps, records, and other papers appertaining to land titles within the same; and the office of surveyor-general in every such district shall thereafter cease and be discontinued.

Mr. MANDERSON. That requires legislative action by the State itself.

Mr. PLUMB. That would only be necessary in case the secretary of state should decline to receive them. He becomes the custodian of the papers, and they may or not be public records. The construction of that is that the Secretary of the Interior shall direct the surveyor-general to turn them over to the State as fast as he completes the surveys and records in order that the State may have copies.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection, the amendments passed over will now be reported in their order.

Mr. PLUMB. I have not concluded my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. PLUMB. Section 2219 of the Revised Statutes provides that—

In all cases where, as provided in the preceding section, the field-notes, maps, records, and other papers appertaining to land titles in any State are turned over to the authorities of such State, the same authority, powers, and duties in relation to the survey, resurvey, or subdivision of the lands therein, and all matters and things connected therewith, as previously exercised by the surveyor-general, whose district included such State, shall be vested in, and devolved upon, the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

By striking out the words "and State of Nebraska" we accomplish two things. In the first place the records will be turned over to the secretary of state of the State of Nebraska according to the laws of that State for all the purposes they have in connection with the surveys. In the next place the Commissioner of the General Land Office would become thereby ex officio the surveyor-general of the State of Nebraska to look after all matters that might require attention; but in the event of a transfer to Dakota that would not occur. Neither the central authority here would have authority, nor could the records be deposited with the State of Nebraska.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President——

Mr. DAWES. Before we proceed to the amendments heretofore passed over, there is a little matter that we ought to settle.

Mr. MAXEY. I can get through with what I wish to say in a few moments. The bill having been gone through with fully, I think now is the proper time to dispose of the point of order which I made upon the words "in full compensation," in line 5, section 1, page 1, as being general legislation on an appropriation bill, and therefore in contravention of the rules of the Senate. I have already said all I care to say in support of my point of order, and I submit the question to the Chair.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts desire to say anything respecting the point of order?

Mr. DAWES. There is a single matter to be acted on first, that the chairman of the committee will state.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 2230 I desire to strike out "twenty-five hundred" and insert "three thousand."

Mr. MAXEY. That has no reference to the point of order I have made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No; it has not. What is the suggestion of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. ALLISON. In line 2230 I move to strike out "twenty-five hundred" and insert "three thousand," before the word "dollars."

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is in the appropriations for the Bureau of Education.

Mr. ALLISON. It is for the Bureau of Education.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2230 strike out "twenty-five hundred" and insert "three thousand;" so as to read:

For collecting statistics for special reports and circulars of information, $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 2163 I move to strike out "two" and insert "three," before the word "clerks;" so as to read:

Three clerks of class 4, one of whom shall act as application clerk.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is that for?

Mr. ALLISON. The Secretary of the Interior made a recommendation for this additional clerk in the Patent Office.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. Now I think we had better return to the items which have been passed over. I do not know but that it would be better to take them in reverse order, running back to the beginning of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY] raises a question of order.

Mr. MAXEY. I have made a point of order, and I beg to state that as it is now in order I desire to have it disposed of. It is in line 5 of section 1, page 1, and my point is against the words "in full compensation" as being general legislation on an appropriation bill. I submit it to the Chair without further argument.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would be glad to hear any observations of Senators having charge of the bill in respect to the amendment and the point of order raised by the Senator from Texas.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I was impressed with what the Senator from Texas said and the Chair suggested the other day, and was inclined to the opinion at first view that my friend from Texas was correct under our rules. But on further reflection, and on looking at the history of this kind of legislation, I have come to the conclusion that this provision of full compensation is only a limitation upon the expenditure of the money for this particular year, just as we might direct any other use of the money and the terms and conditions upon which the party to whom the money is to be paid shall receive it.

In that sense I came to the conclusion (being at first of the impression which the Senator from Texas and the Chair seemed to have, that it apparently changed existing law), that while it prevents an existing law from operating for this year it does not change that law, but only forces the man who holds the office, if he chooses to hold it, to take less than the original contract price as the condition on which he is to get anything at all. However hard or unjust that may be depends upon the merits of each particular case; but in respect of its being a violation of the rule which says that we shall not put general legislation on an appropriation bill, I am bound to say that I think now it is not a violation of that rule, but it is a condition upon which Congress says this money shall be paid out, and that is all. So I think that the amendment is in order.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then, if that be the fact, from year to year the statute is not enforced, and yet never has been changed. It strikes me that is a distinction without a difference. You never pay a man in the world the salary allowed him by the statute, and you avoid it simply by saying, year after year, that he shall take less.

Mr. HALE. Such cases have occurred repeatedly, where Congress has from year to year appropriated a sum of money smaller than that fixed by the fundamental statute. It is occurring constantly.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am perfectly well aware of it.

Mr. HALE. The statute falls into disuse, into desuetude.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am perfectly well aware of it; but if Congress fails to put in the words "in full compensation," so that the officer is obliged to take the sum appropriated and take it in full, he can recover the balance in the Court of Claims. I do not think it is a good way of legislating, to say the very least.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I had no intention of saying a word in addition to what I have already said on this question. The other afternoon when the question arose I did not have before me the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of The United States vs. John M. Langston, on appeal from the Court of Claims. I explained the nature and character of that case the other day, and it is upon the record, and I do not care to go through it. I have since examined the case and find that my recollection was correct.

It will be found by an examination of that case that the point as to the force and effect of the phrase "in full compensation" came before the court, and the court concluded that the words "in full compensation" suspended the general statute for the year to which the appropriation act applied containing those words and no longer; that it ought not to operate as a repeal but as a suspension pro tanto of the general law. This decision to which I have called the attention of the Chair was in the October term, 1885, after the various bills had been passed which have been spoken of. The court summed up the argument on both sides and discussed fully the expression "in full compensation." I read from the opinion of the court in that case:

From September 28, 1877, until July 24, 1885, the claimant, John M. Langston, held the office of minister resident and consul-general of the United States at the Republic of Hayti. At the time he entered upon the discharge of his duties it was provided by statute as follows: "There shall be a diplomatic representative of the United States to each of the Republics of Hayti and Liberia, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be accredited as minister resident and consul-general. The representative at Hayti shall be entitled to a salary of $7,500 a year, and the representative at Liberia to a salary not exceeding $4,000 a year." (Revised Statutes, section 1683.) The sum of $7,500 has been annually appropriated for the salary of the minister to Hayti, from the creation of the office until the year 1883.

Citing the various statutes—

In the act making appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, it is provided: "That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1879, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated for the objects hereinafter expressed, namely: For minister resident and consul-general to Hayti, $7,500. * * * And the salaries provided in this act for the officers within named, respectively, shall be in full for the annual salaries thereof from and after July 1, 1878; and all laws and parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed." (20 Stat., 91, 92, 98.) Similar provisions were in the diplomatic and consular appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880. (Id., 267, 274.) A like sum was appropriated for the fiscal years ending June 30, 1881, and June 30, 1882, but the appropriation acts for those years did not repeat the declaration contained in the acts for the fiscal years of 1879 and 1880, to the effect that "the salaries provided in this act for the officers within named, respectively, shall be in full for the annual salaries thereof," &c. (21 Stat., 133, 134, 339.)

In the diplomatic and consular appropriation act of July 1, 1882, certain sums were appropriated "for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1883, out of any money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, for the objects therein expressed," one of them being "for ministers resident and consuls-general to Liberia, Hayti, Switzerland, Denmark, and Portugal, at $5,000 each, $25,000."

* * * * * * *

In the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill of 1884, the Committee on Appropriations in the House of Representatives reported the following paragraph as part of the bill:

"And the foregoing appropriations for envoys extraordinary and ministers plenipotentiary, ministers-resident and chargés d'affaires, ministers resident and consuls-general, secretaries of legation, and interpreters, shall, after June 30, 1884, be the salary of each officer respectively, and all acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict therewith, or which allow a larger salary to any officer or employé herein named shall be, and are hereby, repealed."—Congressional Record, Forty-eighth Congress, first session, part 4, page 4194.

This paragraph was omitted from the act as passed.

The claimant was paid at the rate of $7,500 a year up to and including June 30, 1882, and for the balance of his term at the rate only of $5,000 a year. He brought this suit to recover the difference between those amounts for the period from June 30, 1882, to July 24, 1885. His claim was sustained in the court below, and judgment was rendered in his behalf for $7,666.66.

In conclusion the court say:

The case before us does not come within the principle that controlled the determination of the other cases. The salary of the minister to Hayti was originally fixed at the sum of $7,500. Neither of the acts appropriating $5,000 for his benefit, during the fiscal years in question, contains any language to the effect that such sum shall be "in full compensation" for those years; nor was there in either of them an appropriation of money "for additional pay," from which it might be inferred that Congress intended to repeal the act fixing his annual salary at $7,500. Repeals by implication are not favored. It can not be said that there is a positive repugnancy between the old and the new statutes in question. If by any reasonable construction they can be made to stand together our duty is to give effect to the provisions of each. (Chew Heong vs. United States, 112 U. S., 549; State vs. Stoll, 17 Wall., 425, 430; Ex parte Yerger, 8 id., 85 105; Ex parte Crow Dog, 109 U. S., 556, 570.) The suggestion of most weight in support of the view that Congress intended to reduce the salary of the diplomatic representative at Hayti is the improbability that that body would neglect in any year to appropriate the full sum to which that officer was entitled under the law as it then existed.

On the other hand, it is not probable that Congress, knowing, as we presume it did, that that officer had, in virtue of a statute—whose object was to fix his salary—received annually a salary of $7,500 from the date of the creation of his office, and after expressly declaring in the act of 1878 (20 Statutes, 91, 98) that he should receive that salary from and after July 1, 1878, and again, in 1879, that he should receive the same amount from and after July 1 1879, should, at a subsequent date, make a permanent reduction of his salary without indicating its purpose to do so, either by express words of repeal or by such provisions as would compel the courts to say that harmony between the old and the new statute was impossible. While the case is not free from difficulty, the court is of opinion that, according to the settled rules of interpretation, a statute fixing the annual salary of a public officer at a named sum, without limitation as to time, should not be deemed abrogated or suspended by subsequent enactments which merely appropriated a less amount for the services of that officer for particular fiscal years, and which contained no words that expressly or by clear implication modified or repealed the previous law.

I call the attention of the Chair to that opinion. It is unmistakable that the law fixing the salary remains in full force and effect unless the bill which attempts to suspend that contains, as the decision says, words that expressly or by clear implication modify or repeal the previous law. They do say that the words "in full compensation" do modify and repeal. If they do modify and repeal, not entirely but pro tanto for that year, it is general legislation on an appropriation bill, and no mortal man can make anything else of it, because it changes the existing law; and that is the point I make.

There is a doctrine of the law as clear as the noonday sun that every lawyer understands perfectly. As I stated the other afternoon, the law never favors repeals by implication, and where there are two statutes which may be seemingly in conflict and there is no repeal of the former by the later act, the courts will always carefully look at both statutes, and if they can be made to stand together and conform it is done. The repeal must be clearly and manifestly exhibited on the face of the subsequent statute before the previous statute is repealed by implication.

Now, can both statutes here stand together? The Supreme Court say yea in this very identical case, because this decision applies to the salary of Mr. Langston from September 28, 1877, to July 24, 1885, a period embracing the various acts which had the words "in full compensation" in them. If those words produce a change of existing law, whether for all time or for a limited period, their insertion is general legislation on an appropriation bill, and why? The general statute fixes the salary of the officer, as in the case of the Auditor which I called up the other afternoon as an example, at $4,000 per annum. When this bill appropriates the sum of $3,600 per annum and then declares that that shall be in full compensation, can any one say that that is not a change of existing law, that it is not general legislation on an appropriation bill?

To try it by another principle and rule of law, if the words "in full compensation" are not in the statute, then is there anything but the $3,600 as appropriated by this bill to prevent the officer from going before the Court of Claims and instituting his suit and getting his other $400? Every one admits that to be true. It has been tried. It is a case res adjudicata. Therefore, when he is inhibited by the insertion of the words "in full compensation" from doing that which he would have a lawful right to do without these words, unquestionably their insertion is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

To apply the doctrine of law ex uno disce omnes, if you can change the salary of an officer in one case on an appropriation bill you can change the salary of every officer of this Government on an appropriation bill, and what is the result?

One of the great principles of law is its permanency; that all men may know what they are doing. When a man accepts an office and looks to the statute-book and sees what the salary is, he feels an assurance that his country has promised to him, if he accepts the office, that he is to have that amount of money. He goes into the office with that understanding. He arranges his business and feels that he can afford to take the office; but here annually upon an appropriation bill, if this principle be true, you can change the salary of every officer of the Government, from the President of the United States down to a charwoman.

Is that the intention of this Government? Does that manifest stability? That is the result, inevitably. If you can say that the President of the United States on this same bill shall receive $25,000 in full compensation for his salary, unquestionably, while it does not repeal the general law which gives to him $50,000 annually, it does for the current fiscal year beginning to-day stop him from getting more than $25,000, and he could not go into the Court of Claims and get the other $25,000. Why? Because of those words "in full compensation." Therefore I say that if those words accomplished the result of changing existing legislation, manifestly and materially changing it, they are general legislation on an appropriation bill. Your salary, Mr. President, is fixed at a given amount to-day. Suppose we should say that you shall receive $4,000 in full compensation. There is a change, and so it runs all the way through.

I beg to add a word more. It is thought that the words in section 3, "that all acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed," have some great bearing on this question. That very clause is contained in the various acts that were treated of by the court, and they were simply regarded as applying to the annual law making appropriation, leaving the general law to stand in full force, and that the two acts could be made to conform.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Will the Senator allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. MAXEY. Yes. I wanted to finish the idea I have just advanced, but of course I will listen to the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I merely wish to ask my friend, with great deference, so as to test this, whether he would think it a violation of our rules if, in the case of the Secretary of State for instance, whose salary is fixed by regular law at $8,000 a year, the committee reported "for compensation of the Secretary of State, $10,000," would that be out of order?

Mr. MAXEY. I should say so in the same way. I carry it either up or down. It is a change of existing law, and the principle is exactly the same.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Congress could not appropriate out of the Treasury for an object that the law had before limited.

Mr. MAXEY. The principle is exactly the same, and I would argue it the same way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The two cases are exactly alike. There is no doubt about the principle.

Mr. MAXEY. It is said that section 3 has something to do with this case and controls it, which reads:

That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

If the construction is placed upon section 3 that has been sought to be given to it during the course of the argument to-day, there is not a salary of any officer in the United States in regard to which every act does not stand repealed which is in conflict with this bill, and we are without any law fixing any salary whatever, because this is a repealing act having no effect but for the present year.

But let us see if that is a correct way to do it. It is often a very good way of illustration in the examination of a case to strike out the referring words and insert that which is referred to. The third section reads:

That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Suppose you say:

That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and all acts inconsistent with this act for services for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, are hereby repealed.

That gives the idea. You repeal that which is inconsistent with this act, and you repeal nothing else. The Supreme Court in the case I have referred to, instead of speaking of it as a repeal pro tanto speaks of it as a suspension, a suspension during that year, and that is the only force and effect of it.

I admit that if the words "in full compensation" are left in the bill the salary of every officer affected by the bill is stricken down for the current year from the amount allowed in the statute, and it is because the clause does that that I insist it is general legislation and therefore is subject to the point of order.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The debate is really out of order, but the Chair will be very glad to hear Senators.

Mr. MAXEY. I beg pardon of the Chair; I supposed the Chair desired to hear the matter debated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair stated that he desired to have the opinion of Senators.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, I can not agree with the Senator from Texas in the belief that this is general legislation. What are we trying to do? What is the object of the Committee on Appropriations? It is to make appropriations to carry out existing law and to furnish means to pay the salaries of men who are employed by law in the service of the United States. We begin by saying, as every executive, legislative, and judicial appropriation providing for salaries has done from 1877 to the present time, "the following sums are appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated in full compensation for the service of the fiscal year." That is what we are directed to do. That is what we are appointed for. Section 3660 of the Revised Statutes provides that—

The heads of Departments, in communicating estimates of expenditures and appropriations to Congress, or to any of the committees thereof, shall specify, as nearly as may be convenient, the sources from which such estimates are derived, and the calculations upon which they are founded, and shall discriminate between such estimates as are conjectural in their character and such as are framed upon actual information and applications from disbursing officers.

Section 3662 provides that—

All estimates for the compensation of officers authorized by law to be employed shall be founded upon the express provisions of law, and not upon the authority of executive distribution.

That is assumed to be the duty of the executive officer, and the duty of the Committee on Appropriations is to carry out that law. We say that we have presented a bill which it is desired shall become a law, appropriating money out of the Treasury in full compensation for the services of these officers during the year for which the bill provides. Whether we have done it or not is another question. That is our duty; that is what we are appointed to do; that is what we profess to do. Suppose that I could turn to the law in the Revised Statutes and show that every salary appropriated for was laid down in the Revised Statutes and never had been changed and was exactly in accordance with this proposed law, would there be any legislation in this bill in the words saying it is done in full compensation when the language of the law fixing the salary is complied with in every regard? Nobody will say there would be.

If we have not given to the Auditors and others the amount of money to which they are by law entitled, then the Senator from Texas can point that out and show that they ought to have more and appeal to the Senate to give it to them because the law allows it; but that there can be any legislation——

Mr. MAXEY. I will state to the Senator from Kentucky that the bill gives $3,600 to the Auditor referred to, and the law gives $4,000.

Mr. BECK. When you come to the $3,600 item, then comes the argument of the Senator from Texas that the law fixes the salary at $4,000 and that we have departed from it, and that this is a change of legislation, and therefore we have not done our duty in failing to give $4,000.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator takes that position because putting those words in there does cut that man out of the $400 to which he is honestly entitled.

Mr. BECK. Then if the Senator is right the Senate of the United States and the House of Representatives have failed to do their duty. That is all the argument there is in that.

Mr. MAXEY. That simply amounts to an argumentum ad hominem. It has no strength in it as an argument.

Mr. BECK. Of course I do not claim to be as good a lawyer as the Senator from Texas is, and I beg his pardon if he thinks I am assuming any such prerogative; but when a bill is presented by the Committee on Appropriations it either complies with the law or it does not. It is either in full compensation or it is not. There are men who may think that when the act approved March 3, 1885, fixing the salaries made the salaries of the Auditors $3,600, and then said, "All acts and parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed," that meant what it said.

It is for the Senate to determine when they come to a provision authorizing a payment of $3,600, which is the amount under this bill where $4,000 was allowed by the Revised Statutes, which were simply a compilation, for they changed no law and corrected none, but took what was the salary then, it being $4,000, that is a question for argument, and if the Senate and the House do not agree with the Senator from Texas, then will be the time when the question of the violation of law arises. I agree with the Senator that the Auditors ought to have $4,000. The question of a violation of law does not arise in the preliminary words, which are the same that have been in every appropriation bill from 1878 down to the present time, "that the following sums of money in the Treasury, not otherwise appropriated, are appropriated in full compensation" for the services of the various officers provided for.

Now, when we come to the particular man, if we have not given him what the law allows him, the question can be readily made; and every one of those cases was passed over by consent of the Senate to see what is the law in that regard; and we are willing to comply with it.

Mr. FRYE. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. BECK. Certainly.

Mr. FRYE. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that twice since I have been in the Senate the presiding officer has ruled very distinctly that legislation of this kind is not general legislation, and twice the Senate has sustained the ruling. When I offered about two years ago an amendment to the Post-Office appropriation bill, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] being the presiding officer, that very question was raised, and one of the points made by the presiding officer was that legislation which died with the bill itself was not general legislation. The Senator from Kentucky appealed from the decision at that time, and the Senate sustained the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will be very much pleased to have a reference to the case referred to.

Mr. FRYE. I will furnish it to the Chair.

Mr. BECK. I hope the Senator from Maine will look it up.

But what I meant to say was that in the Langston case the bill itself contained no provision repealing all inconsistent laws. The Senator from Texas intimated that it did, or I understood him so in the statement he made. It contained no such provision, and the consular and diplomatic bill for many years did not. In the bill which was passed by both Houses and agreed to yesterday in conference committee the words "in full compensation" were inserted and are now to become part of the law; and no man objected.

Mr. HARRIS. May I inquire of the Senator from Kentucky if I understand that the first appropriation bill which appropriated less than the amount fixed by the Revised Statutes contained a provision repealing all laws inconsistent with that provision?

Mr. BECK. I am not sure whether the first one did or not, but the Revised Statutes took effect in 1873 or 1874, and from 1878 to the present time, as I have looked at most of the bills, and the chairman of the committee announced yesterday that he had examined them all, and each one of them contained that provision.

Mr. HARRIS. Repealing all laws inconsistent with the act?

Mr. BECK. Repealing all laws inconsistent with the act.

Mr. HARRIS. Then it seems to me the question is narrowed down to this: A statute once repealed, can it ever be revived, except by being re-enacted?

Mr. BECK. I suppose no one will contend that it can; but there is language in the Langston decision that, where the law did neither contain a repealing clause nor a provision in regard to full compensation that would indicate (and that far I think the Senator from Texas is right) the question is left open.

But what I mean is that this point of order does not arise upon these words. We ought to appropriate in full compensation. It would be madness, it would be most unwise legislation to make appropriations for the officers of this Government, running to the amount of several hundreds, perhaps several thousands, in accordance with law, and to say, "We know we are not giving you what the law allows you; go to the courts and sue the United States."

We ought not to pass any law encouraging, winking at, or countenancing suits between citizens of the United States and the United States in regard to the compensation that they ought to have, and therefore we ought to close the door against it and say this is full compensation; and then when Senators or Representatives are able to show on the floor of either House that the amount given by the committee is not the compensation allowed by law, the presumption is that members of the House and Senate will conform to the law, and will give to the officer the salary that the law allows him. But, as is now proposed by the Senator from Texas, if you strike out the words "in full compensation" and invite them all to sue, and make no question here as to what their salaries are or ought to be, but take what they get now and then sue the United States for the balance, that is disreputable legislation for us to indulge in.

If we have not in this bill given these gentlemen what they are entitled to, let them and their friends, or those who think they are aggrieved, make the question before Congress; but if these words are stricken out there are perhaps many cases where we may not have complied with the law either through ignorance or because there is some law that was not called to our attention. The officer may not desire and his friends may not desire to call the attention of Congress to it for fear that the law might be repealed, and the salary runs on for three, four, five, or six years, and then he brings his suit in the Court of Claims and recovers the money. Congress ought to legislate fairly and squarely and say "this is in full compensation." If it is not, let the attention of Congress be called to the fact that it is not and have it rectified now, but do not leave it for the purpose it may be of a suit hereafter to bring scandal on the United States in its dealings with the men who are doing its work.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, I have no wish to say anything further, because I think the argument I made has not been answered, and that section 3, properly construed as it will be by the Chair in connection with the words that I refer to, is simply an additional argument in favor of the force of the point which I make.

To what the Senator from Kentucky saw proper to say of me personally I have no reply to make. What the opinion of the Senator from Kentucky may be on this question is a matter which concerns himself more than it does me. Whether he is a better lawyer or I a better lawyer is a matter of very small concern to the Senate of the United States, and is certainly not a question which should be raised in a great debate on a point that I regard as one of very great importance.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, one word before the Chair decides the question. Can we not properly under our rules hold that this is not general legislation? I do not see how it can be held to be general legislation. It is special legislation regarding and affecting the matters in this bill.

I only desire to say that if this provision is not inserted the salaries of perhaps four or five hundred, certainly three hundred, officials provided for in the bill will be rendered doubtful, and the effect may be—I do not say it will be—to cause to be instituted as many lawsuits for the recovery of the difference between the amounts appropriated here and the amounts that will be claimed under the statutory salary.

That is one remedy that these people would have. Another remedy would be that at the next session we might in the deficiency bill be asked to appropriate for the salaries as the Revised Statutes provide, and in the mean time we have provided enough in this bill to enable these employés to receive the salary for six months that the law gives them.

Of course I do not wish to argue the question of law or the effect of the last section of the bill as the repealing section, and the effect of the repealing sections that have existed in every appropriation bill for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses since 1877. I have said all I desire to say.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, I have never been able to see why the discussions in the Senate on points of order like this, which are constantly being raised, run into the question whether the amendment proposed may change the operation of existing law. That is not the rule of the Senate. There is nothing whatever in the rule that touches the question of an amendment changing the operation of existing law. The rule of the Senate says that no amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to an appropriation bill. How it can be claimed that a provision in an appropriation bill running with the year for which the appropriations are made, expiring with the expiration of that year, and declaring that the sum appropriated shall be received by the person drawing the salary in full compensation only for that year, is general legislation, I fail to perceive.

I have never been able to understand how it is that such an amendment can be claimed to be general legislation, because if it is not special legislation, if it is not simply limiting legislation, if it is not legislation applicable to the one subject-matter and only for the year, then you can not make legislation that shall be special legislation and applicable to a particular subject and for the year; and everything proposed that would change the operation of law for a year or for six months or for one day to a single person would be general legislation.

Clearly nothing of that kind is intended here. It is simply as much as saying that for the year a given officer shall receive so much money in the exercise of the judgment of the two Houses, provided that he gives a receipt in full for it. It does not change the law; it does not obliterate it; it does not remove it from the statute-book, but simply declares that for the year Congress will pay no more than such a sum to such a person.

There is no law obliging Congress to appropriate. You may pass all the statutes in the world fixing salaries and there is no law that obliges Congress to appropriate; but it can say, as a matter not of general legislation but of limitation, that for the year coming the officer shall receive only so much and nothing more.

Mr. MAXEY. If the Senator will pardon me, notwithstanding the general law says he shall receive more, yet we say he shall not receive more.

Mr. HALE. The general law does not say that Congress shall appropriate. It simply fixes the general salary provided; it is in no way limited. I do not deny that Congress can limit it. It can; and it is not general legislation to limit it for a year by an act which limits the appropriations made in it for a year.

There must be some legislation beside general legislation. The framers of the rule in selecting the phrase "general legislation" must have realized that there was other legislation besides general legislation. There is legislation which is not general legislation.

Mr. MAXEY. If limiting to one year is not general legislation, for the same reason would it be for five years or ten years or twenty years? You thus destroy the whole force and effect of legislation by admitting that principle.

Mr. HALE. No, because the law declares that the appropriation shall be annual, from year to year. There is no power to make appropriations for more than one year, because the law is distinct upon that point, and with that goes the discretion that Congress has of limiting and controlling what shall be paid to the public servants for that year.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I am in favor of increasing the amount affected by the clause under consideration. I so voted in committee, and I think it ought to be done. These officers ought to have a reasonable compensation.

Upon the point now presented to the Senate it seems to me very clear that the first question is, is it competent to repeal a statute by a provision in a general appropriation bill? In regard to that there is no doubt. An appropriation bill is quite as much a law as any other.

If that be so, the only other question is as to the force and effect of the language used in the former acts. Is it clear that they were repealing statutes? Were they repugnant or inconsistent with the provisions of the previous statute cited by the Senator from Texas? The mere fact of inconsistency, the mere fact that a full compensation was provided for an existing office without any repealing clause, would be repugnancy that would do away with any previous statute. There is no question in regard to that.

The law cited from the Revised Statutes by the Senator from Texas made the salary of the Auditors $4,000. The subsequent laws for ten years each year made it $3,600, and provided that it should be in full compensation, and that all former statutes inconsistent with these several laws should be repealed. Is the payment of $3,600 in full compensation for the salaries of the Auditors inconsistent with their having a right to $4,000? If so, the former law is repealed, for such is the express language of the later laws.

The Supreme Court have only decided that where an appropriation was made for the payment of a salary to an officer the language used in that case did not import a repeal of the existing law; that there was not such a repugnancy or inconsistency between the particular language in that particular act and the former law.

The whole question depends upon whether the language in the acts to which we have referred is the same as in that statute. Certainly the words "in full compensation," and the terms "inconsistent with the statute," and providing for the repeal of previous laws inconsistent with it, as clearly as any language can, import a repeal of any existing law. Now the law repealed was the statute fixing the salary at $4,000, and the repeal was made by the first of the statutes subsequent to it which contained the language "full compensation," and the repealing words I have quoted. The repeal will not be made by this act, if it should become a law. Hence there is no existing law, and a provision in an appropriation bill providing for the salaries of officers can not be said to be general legislation in the sense of the rule, because it designates the salary at a different amount from the preceding appropriation bills.

In regard to the point of order, I do not know anything that is strictly germane to a bill that would be prohibited by the rule. There is no rule of this body which will require that an amendment making an appropriation required by the existing laws to be made annually shall be held to be out of order; and so a former law which has no existence because it has been repealed can not have any effect on the rule.

If this be true, there would be nothing out of order under the rule of the Senate in a provision of the appropriation bill reducing a salary. I do not see that there could be any point taken properly in that respect even if the former law had not been repealed. I think it is very clear that the language of the former acts, "in full compensation" and repealing all existing statutes, was clearly a repeal of any previous act upon the subject; and therefore even in the argument of the Senator from Texas there is no existing law for this bill to repeal. But I am in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Texas, because I think the public interest requires that officers to whom great pecuniary trusts are confided should not be placed on starvation wages. The people's safety depends on the people's servants being paid a reasonable compensation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has given the subject all the attention possible in the time allowed, and will state his conclusion. The third clause of the sixteenth rule reads as follows:

> No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

The Senator from Texas raises the point of order that the words "in full compensation" are in the nature of general legislation to this appropriation bill. In the judgment of the Chair, and in accordance also with the judgment of the Supreme Court, the words "in full compensation" do change the legal meaning and effect of the appropriation. The bill as it comes to us from the House of Representatives is simply an appropriation of money out of the Treasury for certain defined purposes, but the words inserted extend the purpose, and declare that whether the appropriations are sufficient to pay the amount required by law, yet if the money appropriated is taken by the person it must be in full compensation. In this respect it certainly does change the existing law.

The only doubt the Chair has had about it is whether it is general legislation in the sense in which the term "general legislation" is used in the rule. The mere fact that an amendment to an appropriation bill does propose to change a law even radically does not seem to be objected to by the rule.

What is general legislation? The Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE] refers the Chair to a decision made by a former presiding officer, that an additional item of appropriation for building ships, regulating the mode and manner of the appropriation, providing limits, &c., was not general legislation. It is clear to the mind of the Chair that it is not.

If the clause related only to a single item of appropriation, it might be held then to be special legislation relating to a particular item; but this provision relates to every item in the bill, and, according to the debate, as shown by many Senators, it does change in repeated cases, in dozens of cases perhaps, the salaries provided by law, in some cases appropriating a less sum of money than is provided by law and in other cases appropriating a greater sum of money than is authorized by law.

It seems to the Chair, therefore, that what is fairly to be called general legislation affecting every item in the bill would fall within the purview of the language of the rule; but as there has been some contrariety of position on this subject and as the Senate have several times passed bills with this phraseology in them, not treating it as general legislation, the Chair will, under the privilege granted by the rules, submit the matter to the Senate, so that it may be decided according to the judgment of the Senate without respect to the opinion of the Chair, although the Chair is clearly of the opinion, for the reason stated, that the clause is technically subject to the point made by the Senator from Texas that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. MAXEY. I ask that the question be taken by yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HALE. Will the Chair state the question exactly before the vote is taken?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair submits the question under the rule. The Secretary will read the second clause of the twentieth rule.

The CHIEF CLERK. Rule XX, second clause:

The presiding officer may submit any question of order for the decision of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will submit the question whether the words proposed to be inserted by the Committee on Appropriations as the first amendment to the bill are within the language and prohibition of the rules.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is, are they in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Are they in order?

Mr. HALE. Senators who believe that the amendment is in order will vote "yea?"

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be the proper vote for those who believe the amendment is in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the question; is it in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Is the amendment in order?

Mr. MAXEY. Let us understand it fully. Those who wish the clause to remain in the bill vote "yea?"

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Those who believe that the clause is in order should vote "yea," and those who believe it is not in order should vote "nay."

Mr. EDMUNDS. The question is, is it in order? Those who think it is will say yes, of course.

Mr. MAXEY. The nays will sustain the point of order, as I understand it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The nays will sustain the point of order. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 5, after the word "appropriated," the committee report to insert the words "in full compensation."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. I should vote "yea" if he were here.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Upon this question I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. BUTLER. I am paired with the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CAMERON]. If he were present, I should vote "nay." I do not know how he would vote, and therefore I withhold my vote.

Mr. FRYE. I am paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who is detained by sickness. I am paired on all political questions, but I have voted on this question.

Mr. COCKRELL (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. I do not know how he would vote on this question; but I shall let my vote remain, as I do not suppose there will be any difference of opinion between us in regard to it.

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], but I learn from the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON] that he has announced a pair with him, and I shall vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CULLOM. My colleague [Mr. LOGAN] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. I do not know how my colleague would vote.

Mr. RANSOM. As stated by his colleague, I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN]. I voted "yea," presuming that he would vote that way.

Mr. CULLOM. I am informed by a member of the Committee on Appropriations, of which my colleague is a member, that he would vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM. It was with that understanding that I voted.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 20; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Allison,	Dawes,	Hampton,	Ransom,
Beck,	Edmunds,	Harrison,	Sewell,
Berry,	Eustis,	McMillan,	Teller,
Blackburn,	Evarts,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Vance,
Call,	Frye,	Payne,	Vest,
Camden,	George,	Platt,	Voorhees,
Cockrell,	Gibson,	Plumb,	Walthall.
Colquitt,	Hale,	Pugh,

NAYS—20.

Blair,	Cullom,	Ingalls,	Palmer,
Brown,	Dolph,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sherman,
Chace,	Gray,	Manderson,	Spooner,
Coke,	Harris,	Maxey,	Whitthorne.
Conger,	Hawley,	Miller,	Wilson of Iowa.

ABSENT—25.

Aldrich,	Hoar,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sawyer,
Bowen,	Jones of Florida,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Butler,	Jones of Nevada,	Morrill,	Van Wyck,
Cameron,	Kenna,	Pike,	Wilson of Md.
Fair,	Logan,	Riddleberger,
Gorman,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Hearst,	Mahone,	Saulsbury,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is decided to be in order.

Mr. COKE. Are amendments to the bill now in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are some amendments which have been passed over, and which will be taken up in their order.

Mr. ALLISON. The amendment in line 5 has not yet been agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has not. The question is on the first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, which was passed over. It will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 5, after the word "appropriated," the committee report to insert "in full compensation;" so as to read:

That the following sums be, and the same are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, in full compensation for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, for the objects hereinafter expressed.

The amendment was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President of the United States had on the 30th ultimo approved and signed the following acts and joint resolution:

An act (S. 24) for the relief of Samuel B. Seat, administrator of Christian Kropp, deceased;

An act (S. 2222) to authorize the Cheyenne and Northern Railway Company to build its road across the Fort Russell and Fort Laramie military reservations;

An act (S. 2073) for the relief of the officers and crew of the light-house tender Lilly and the inspector of the fourteenth United States light-house district; and Joint resolution (S. R. 18) for the relief of the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railroad Company.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H. Res. 196) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

A bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; and Joint resolution (H. Res. 196) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.

PUBLIC-LAND SURVEYS.

Mr. PLUMB submitted the following resolution, which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be directed to inform the Senate as early as practicable the amount of money expended during the fiscal year 1886 for surveying public lands, and in what States and Territories expended, with the amount in each, and also how much of the sum of not exceeding $50,000 appropriated for occasional examinations of public surveys, &c., for the same period, has been expended.

Mr. PLUMB. That is information which the Committee on Appropriations ought to have before coming to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

AMENDMENT TO A BILL.

Mr. DAWES submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8474) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the Committee on Appropriations which have been passed over will be stated in their order.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1111, after the word "thousand," the committee report to insert "five hundred;" so as to read:

Office of assistant treasurer at Baltimore: For assistant treasurer, $4,500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that an increase?

Mr. PLUMB. It is an increase over last year.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the legal salary there?

Mr. ALLISON. The legal salary; that is, the salary as fixed by the statute some years ago by the Revised Statutes, is $5,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Why do you give him $4,500?

Mr. ALLISON. We gave him that last year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, in line 1121, to strike out the words "four thousand five hundred" and insert "five thousand;" so as to read:

Office of the assistant treasurer at Boston: For assistant treasurer, $5,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that an increase?

Mr. ALLISON. That is the exact salary.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the salary provided for by law?

Mr. ALLISON. It is.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, in line 1227, after the word "thousand," to insert the words "five hundred;" so as to read:

Office of assistant treasurer at Saint Louis: For assistant treasurer, $4,500.

Mr. HALE. That is the legal salary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The footings will also be considered as agreed to where the changes have been made in the items. The next amendment passed over will be read.

The amendment was, in line 1237, to strike out "four thousand five hundred" and insert "five thousand;" so as to read:

Office of assistant treasurer at San Francisco: For assistant treasurer, $5,000.

Mr. ALLISON. The salary there by law is $6,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment passed over will be read.

The amendment was to strike out, from line 1696 to 1707, as follows:

Office of Publication of Records of the Rebellion: For one agent, $2,000; three clerks of class 4, one of whom shall be employed on the general index; two clerks of class 3; one clerk of class 2; three clerks of class 1; three copyists, at $900 each; one foreman of printing, at $1,600; one compositor and pressman, $1,200; one compositor, $1,000; two copy-holders, at $900 each; two assistant messengers; two watchmen; and one laborer, at $600; in all, $27,380.

Mr. BECK. I do not think any of the committee wanted to strike out that paragraph altogether, but it was thought to need some explanation.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President, this amendment stops the publication of the most valuable book that has ever been published by the authority of Congress, and one that is the most sought after of all the publications since the foundation of the Government. It is the record of the war, in which are interested all the survivors of both armies, and all their children, and all their friends, and the public generally.

The Committee on Appropriations I think have not acted advisedly in this matter. In looking over their report I find that they merely say:

The committee recommend that all the force provided for under the head of "Office of Publication of Records of the Rebellion" be struck out. The committee believe some further and better regulation should be made for the preparation of these records before further appropriations are made for this force.

I have not heard of any other reason that the committee had for its action. The public press have charged that complaint was made to the committee that other than the official records of the war were published in this book. I have been an attentive reader of almost all the volumes as they have come out; I eagerly look for them when they are published; and I have yet to find in any of the volumes so far as published any other than official and proper papers to be inserted therein, and on no occasion, in my opinion, has the editor of the work injected in any sense any of his own ideas.

It has been said in the public press that the proceedings of the advisory board instituted by President Hayes in the case of Fitz-John Porter should not have obtained a place in this work.*

I do not wish to take the time of the Senate by going over the whole case, but I have correspondence here from Colonel Scott, who edits the work and from ex-Secretary Lincoln in relation to what should go into it. Secretary Lincoln determined that all official papers, but none which might be construed as unofficial, should be admitted. That determination arose from a controversy brought about by General Gordon as to some reports made in relation to the report of the first division of the Second Army Corps, and also in relation to the reports of General Grant criticising the action of General Lew. Wallace at Shiloh. General Wallace asked to have inserted in the record his explanation with his subsequent reports to correct what General Grant had said about him. The matter was settled by throwing out everything of that kind, and by the refusal to publish anything that was unofficial in its character or controversial in its nature for the setting of anything right that had been in the official reports. In the submission of a memorandum to the Secretary of War by Colonel Scott I find he says:

The Porter papers are in type, but can readily be excluded from the publication.

I asked Colonel Scott the direct question if Mr. Lincoln had agreed to the publication of those papers, and he said distinctly "yes," and that the papers are on file showing it at the present time. I ask to have a letter in this connection from Colonel Scott read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PALMER in the chair). The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
PUBLICATION OFFICE WAR RECORDS 1861-'65,
Washington, June 29, 1886.

DEAR SIR: In reply to telephonic message, I said Secretary Lincoln did agree to the publication of Schofield board findings. See pages 9 and 10 of pamphlet herewith. The draught of letter on page 10 was read to me, or I read it in Mr. Lincoln's room; it then did not have the word "unofficial" in next to last paragraph. After sending in my memorandum (page 9) the letter was next modified as suggested, and the letter-press copy was sent to me from War Department with the memorandum and all the other papers in the case. They are now in my possession.

Yours, truly,

ROBERT N. SCOTT.

Mr. SEWELL. I do not desire to say anything further on this question. I submit the letter. It is certainly good evidence that there were not papers of an improper character put in the book, and that those complained of were put there by competent authority under the order that nothing but official papers should be inserted. This was the official record of the board constituted by the President of the United States, and practically a part of the Army record. I trust the committee will not press their amendment.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations had their attention called to this general question of the Rebellion Record. Every Senator, I am sure, appreciates with the Senator from New Jersey the importance of the publication of this record. No member of the Committee on Appropriations had the slightest idea or suggestion in his mind that its publication should be stopped, but only that it should be detained for a few months until further investigation could be had with reference to the method of the publication.

In 1874 we find the first authority for this publication, and I believe the only authority except that contained in the appropriation acts, which were merely appropriations for the purpose of carrying on the work. We find in the eighteenth volume of the United States Statutes at Large, page 222, the provision which I shall read.

Mr. COCKRELL. In what act was that?

Mr. ALLISON. This was on the sundry civil appropriation act. The provision reads as follows:

To enable the Secretary of War to begin the publication of the official records of the war of the rebellion, both of the Union and of the confederate armies, the sum of $15,000. And the Secretary of War is hereby directed to have copied for the Public Printer all reports, letters, telegrams, and general orders not heretofore copied or printed, and properly arranged in chronological order.

The object of the statute was that the records of the war of the rebellion, both of the Union and of the confederate armies, should be published. So far as the latter clause of the appropriation is concerned, it is clearly indicated that this publication should consist of these records prepared in chronological order.

The attention of the committee was called to the particular instance stated by the Senator from New Jersey. While what he says may be true, and doubtless is true, as to the facts he states, yet there remains the singular fact in connection with the record to which he alludes, namely, that four or five pages of the twelfth volume of this record, which relates to the operations of the Army in 1862, show first the request of Fitz-John Porter, next the order organizing the court, next the charges and specifications, and then simply the approval of the sentence by President Abraham Lincoln.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator allow me just a moment? Does the Senator mean to have it understood that the publication contains only a partial report of the original proceedings of the first court-martial?

Mr. ALLISON. I mean to say that it contains not even a synopsis of the proceedings of the court-martial.

Mr. INGALLS. That is all omitted?

Mr. ALLISON. The charges and finding of the court and the approval of the sentence by President Lincoln are given.

Mr. INGALLS. They are followed by what?

Mr. ALLISON. They are followed by a letter of Fitz-John Porter asking for a review, which letter is dated March 9, 1878, which is followed again by the order of President Hayes detailing a board under the authority of the Adjutant-General, and then follow twenty-five pages of the report of the reviewing board giving in detail their findings; and then comes the message of President Hayes, which is brief, transmitting the testimony and the findings of the board to Congress, and then follows the pardon, so called, of President Arthur, which is dated on the 4th day of May, 1882.

The committee believe that this statute is violated in this regard in a double sense. In the first place so much of this record as relates to the subsequent proceedings is not in any sense a publication of the records of the war of the rebellion. Surely occurrences that took place between 1878 and 1882 ought not to find a place in what under the authority of law are authorized to be regarded as the transactions of the Union and rebellion armies for that period.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There are other instances, like Canby's report after 1866.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Vermont calls my attention to the fact that this is not the only case. I believe this is not the only case. There are some other cases where matters that occurred after the close of the war are inserted in other volumes of this record.

But what struck the committee with reference to this record when they examined it was that here were three or four or five pages devoted to actual occurrences during the war, which were followed by twenty-five or more pages of occurrences between 1878 and 1882, tending to show, if they did not show, that all the occurrences from the finding of the court-martial down to the approval of President Abraham Lincoln were wrong and unjust to Fitz-John Porter.

Mr. SEWELL. Will the Senator allow me to correct him right there?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. SEWELL. If the Senator had sat on courts-martial as often as I have, and had studied the law in relation to courts-martial, he would know that the practice is not to publish anything in relation to courts-martial, except the charges, the findings, and the sentence. That is the whole of a court-martial record which is made public.

Mr. ALLISON. That is probably the rule of courts-martial; but the Senator will not deny that all the proceedings are open to the public relating to the Fitz-John Porter court-martial and have been for many years.

Mr. HALE. Let me ask the Senator from New Jersey, if he takes the position here that in the original court nothing was published but the charges and results, how does he account for the fact that on page 766 in the same volume in a comparatively unimportant matter of the trial of General Julius White with reference to transactions at Martinsburg and other parts of Virginia, the compiler or person in charge of this matter has put in forty-eight pages of questions and answers, about the minutest details, of the witnesses before the court-martial? How does that agree with this proposition?

Mr. SEWELL. I have not seen that matter and am not prepared to answer just now why that should have been put in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was that a court-martial or a court of inquiry?

Mr. ALLISON. Merely a court of inquiry, I think.

But I was about to call attention to the matter alluded to by the Senator from Maine. In a further examination of this volume we find that a comparatively inconsequential matter occupies the attention of the twelfth volume to the extent of forty-eight pages.

My attention being called to this subject by the Fitz-John Porter case, I took occasion to examine other volumes of this Rebellion Record, and I found many things given with the most minute detail with reference to other general officers and with reference to other transactions of the Army, and perhaps some of them correctly given.

Now take the last volume for illustration. I do not remember the number of the volume, but it is the last volume wherein the record of the court of inquiry respecting the conduct of General Buell in Kentucky is given; and there are over six hundred pages of that volume devoted to the inquiry respecting the conduct of Don Carlos Buell in the State of Kentucky while he was managing the affairs of the army in that State.

So the committee, after looking at this Fitz-John Porter case, and looking at the Julius White case, which was referred to by the Senator from Maine, came to the conclusion that the Rebellion Record was not edited, if the word editing can be used in connection with it, in the way the statute says it ought to be.

I venture the statement that every single fact connected with the trial of Julius White by a proper compiler or editor could be included within ten pages of the volume, and I venture the statement that if you take up these volumes one by one you can comprehend within two or three volumes what is now contained in six or seven volumes. So the committee believed that in a matter of so much importance, affecting so many people living both in the North and South and those who are to come after them, this great work, which is to comprise more than one hundred volumes, ought to be edited with such care and intelligence and scrutiny as will leave no one in the Army or in any way related to it to find fault with the conduct of the work when it is completed.

Now, I leave it to any impartial Senator to say whether this is fair to those who lived in 1862 and who, whether wisely or unwisely, believed that the charges against Fitz-John Porter were true? When the statute required that the records of that period should be faithfully set forth in these volumes, were they not entitled, quite as much as Fitz-John Porter is, to have that record made up as of that time? That is the criticism. It is that this voluminous record containing the findings of the board of review which sat between 1878 and 1880 should be incorporated in a volume of 1862 when none of the transactions which occurred at that time, except the barest allusion to the transaction itself, can be found in that volume.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There was no authority of law for putting in transactions that occurred substantially after the war. I do not refer to matters that were a part of the war.

Mr. ALLISON. Not part of the regular transactions of the war, which would probably limit it to 1866, or about that period. In moving this amendment it was only the purpose of the committee to withhold appropriations for the further execution of this work until some proper committee of Congress could overhaul this question and see what should be and what should not be put in that history, and also to inquire whether it is not wise in a matter of such great moment and importance to appropriate a sufficient sum of money, say four or five or ten or even fifteen thousand dollars per annum to three or four or two or three gentlemen who will take up these records and put them in chronological order, as they should be in these volumes, so that when this publication is made and completed it will contain everything that occurred during the war of the rebellion with reference to the armies on both sides of the conflict, and that public opinion will rest in the belief, not only in this generation but in generations to come, that these records are authentic.

The method of conducting this business is simply this: Under the statute this matter is in the charge of the Secretary of War. Every person here knows, and the Senator from New Jersey knows, perfectly well that it is impossible with the multifarious duties of the Secretary of War that he shall be able to examine minutely these volumes, that he can look over them and see whether this thing is put in or that thing is omitted, whether there is an abbreviation here which works to the benefit of one general and the injury of another general. No Secretary of War can do that. The whole matter, therefore, I believe has been devolved by the Secretary of War upon a single Army officer. I have nothing to say against that officer. I have no doubt he is an intelligent officer, and so far, perhaps, as he has been able to do he has with fidelity discharged this duty. But I submit that an examination of these volumes will show that, so far as they have been published, they do not record with fidelity what has occurred during the years of the publication of the volumes which have already appeared; and that was all the committee had in view. They do not wish, of course, to hinder or delay this publication beyond such necessary time as would enable Congress to establish such rules and laws as would provide that a faithful and complete publication, as was originally intended by the statute of 1874, should be made.

That is all I have to say on the subject.

Mr. HAWLEY. Mr. President, if I am not mistaken this paragraph which the committee propose to strike out does not provide for printing; it is only for the work of compilation. The work of printing and publishing is to be provided for in the sundry civil bill I believe.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is where it is done ordinarily.

Mr. HAWLEY. So that striking out this paragraph suspends all the work of collation of past manuscripts, the preparation of the work, and the matter that the committee is after, or appears to be after, could be quite as well reached by ceasing in the sundry civil bill to appropriate money for the publication. Suspend the printing and publication if you will, but why in the world discharge a body of clerks who have had many years' experience in the collation of manuscripts? If, after leaving this paragraph in, between this action and the consideration of the sundry civil bill, the committee should be of opinion on further inquiry that it would be well to stop printing, let them do so, and suggest to Congress some method by which there can be a more satisfactory revision and collation of the manuscripts.

The Senator says that the work has not been done with fidelity. He might make that general assertion with perfect safety if there should be even one error of a line committed in the whole work. It is utterly impossible that any human being or any board should be able after seven or eight or ten years' work on this matter to defy contradiction and say that there was not an error of judgment or an omission anywhere. So I can not traverse that declaration that the thing has not been done with fidelity, but I think it has been done as near it as human nature ordinarily allows.

Mr. ALLISON. When I spoke of fidelity I meant that it has not been done as the statute originally indicated, namely, the insertion of these transactions in chronological order as they occurred.

Mr. HAWLEY. On that one point of chronological order, whether there was an error in the Fitz-John Porter case or not, that is not a sole instance of it by any means. I hold in my hand an extract from one of the volumes furnished to me by Colonel Scott as an illustration of what he has been authorized to do and what he thought it was perfectly fair to do.

[General Orders, No. 115.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, OFFICE OF THE ADJUTANT-GENERAL,
Washington, August 22, 1862.

Col.—

I will not read his name, because that is of no sort of consequence. The stain on the officer's honor was afterward removed—

Col. ——— ———, ——— Regiment ———, is, by order of the President of the United States, cashiered for repeated acts of cowardice in the face of the enemy.

By order of Secretary of War:

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Under advice, Colonel Scott thought it quite right and fair to insert immediately after that:

[Special Orders, No. 130.]

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, March 22, 1866.

* * * * * * *

III. By direction of the President—

Four years after, observe, and after the close of the war—

By direction of the President General Orders, No. 115, August 22, 1862, from this office, relating to Col. ——— ———, ———, is hereby revoked, and he is mustered out of the service of the United States to date August 22, 1862.

* * * * * * *

By order of the Secretary of War:

E. D. TOWNSEND,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

From what I have read of the case I do not think this officer should have been cashiered for cowardice; but if the records were made up severely according to the theory of the Senator from Iowa this officer would have appeared in the solemn records of the rebellion as cashiered for cowardice, and no correction whatever, no removal of the stain, no act of justice to him would have appeared anywhere in these one hundred volumes. Colonel Scott thought it a matter of justice, as well as fidelity to history, to insert in the place directly after the order cashiering him the order by which the order of cashiering him was revoked, and I think he was right. There is quite a correspondence following concerning it, that is to say official correspondence, several pages of it, the communications and the official answers and orders in 1866. I think that was right.

He published also a long inquiry into the McDowell matter. I believe it was a court of inquiry or commission of inquiry; I have forgotten what precise title they gave to it. Under the direction of an act of Congress passed in 1872 Colonel Scott caused to be written out from the notes of Benn Pitman, phonographer, the full report of the trial of General Buell, and that was put into the Rebellion Record. It seems to me quite proper. There was no such thing in existence at the time he compiled it, or until long after the war. To be sure it was the revival from the notes of a phonographer, the renewal of an old record that had been made during the war; but it illustrates this point only, that the strict absolute rule of chronological order may, with justice and fidelity to history, be departed from occasionally.

Now, as regards the Fitz-John Porter matter, I am one of those who voted against the Fitz-John Porter bill each time that it has been before the Senate. I thought it was right to so vote. I do not know what the politics of Colonel Scott are, or whether he be an adherent of Fitz-John Porter, but he has literally executed what I think to be his duty. The result of it is what is an injustice to those men who are opposed to Porter. There is the demand for a court-martial or a court of inquiry. There follows the order constituting the court. Then follow the charges and specifications at full length. Then the finding of the court-martial. Then the formal publication of the approval of the President cashiering Porter. That is not a very long record, of course.

The charges and specifications make the most of it. Nothing of the evidence is given. It would have made two octavo volumes, I suppose, and it was omitted. I should, very likely, if I had been compiling the work have omitted it without much thought, supposing it was not intended that all the tedious details of that inquiry should be printed. It would have made, if I recollect aright—for I have them—about a couple of octavo volumes. The Senator from New Jersey can tell me how much there was of it.

Mr. SEWELL. Fully that.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then came afterward this, in my judgment, unofficial and informal and advisory Schofield board. If Colonel Scott had been able to take the concluding portions of that board's report, if it had been a document drawn up with legal precision as the findings of a court-martial are, closing with distinct findings and recommendations on the part of the board, I think his better way would have been to take that and put it in. It would have been holding the beam impartially at any rate between the two sides, if that had been in his mind at all; but he published the whole of the Schofield and Terry statement or argument, or whatever you choose to call it, report.

Mr. SEWELL. The summing up of the board.

Mr. HAWLEY. It was the final report of the board; and he did not in that case, any more than in the Fitz-John Porter court-martial case, publish the evidence that was before the board. The Schofield board took quite a considerable quantity of evidence.

Mr. TELLER. Did he publish any of the evidence?

Mr. HAWLEY. None of that at all; he published the finding, which was, it is true, rather a long and argumentative finding, and did not have a distinct summary at the end as a lawyer perhaps would have put in.

Mr. ALLISON. Would not a good discriminating judgment have inserted the review of Judge-Advocate Holt under which Mr. Lincoln signed and approved the sentence?

Mr. HAWLEY. I think perhaps he would have put that in also.

Mr. BLAIR. There was no formal opinion rendered by the court-martial, and thus it happens that there is really no presentation anywhere in the evidence or of the opinion of anybody against Fitz-John Porter, while the long and elaborate argumentative finding of the board of review is published in the volume.

Mr. HAWLEY. There was as much of a report of the court-martial, if that expression is to be used, as much of a judgment in the case of the Porter court-martial as in any records of a court-martial. When a court-martial gets through with the evidence it does not go on as the judges of our civil courts do with a long argument upon it. The court simply states the conclusion to which it has come. So far as that is concerned Colonel Scott has done well enough. I have no objection, nor has Colonel Scott, nor has anybody, of course, to a careful inquiry into this matter and to the laying down of some more definite rule, which certainly would have been a very great relief to him in the beginning. There can be no objection to an inquiry. I hope it will not continue longer than the passage of the sundry civil bill.

Then in the sundry civil bill, if we choose, let us suspend the printing and publication for a still further inquiry if such may be needed; but I do entreat the committee not to subject this work for which the whole country is hungering to delay. The history of the war can never be written satisfactorily until diligent students shall have at their command all the official reports of the rebellion that can be obtained from both sides. Let us have the whole of it. Everybody desires it, North and South. The widows of confederate officers are lending the manuscripts, the correspondence of their deceased husbands, to the War Department. I do not know but that there has been a purchase or two, but, with one solitary exception, everybody on that side of the controversy has either upon solicitation or voluntarily placed his papers at the disposal of the Government.

Now, I beg that this work may go on. No one doubts the honorable character of Colonel Scott. I do not know what his politics or personal preferences are. If we can define the rules of proceeding a little more closely and sharply it will be for his benefit and for the benefit of all of us to let the work go on.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, the Senator from Connecticut has stated a fact in stating that the country is hungering for these documents, only he forgot to state that they are hungering for them because they want the truth in regard to all the important transactions of the war, and they do not want that qualified, I think, by something that took place ten or fifteen or twenty years later, and they do not want any partial account of any transaction that took place, but want it all.

The complaint, in the first place, is that that was published which was not within the proper terms of the law nor within the object which was in the mind of Congress in passing the law. The Senator from Iowa read the provision of the law originally providing for the publication of these records. I repeat it from a subsequent statute, showing that the purpose never changed:

> For continuing the preparation and publication of the official records of the rebellion, both of the Union and confederate armies.

That indicated, of course, that it was to be a contemporaneous publication; that is to say, as long as there were Union and confederate armies opposed to each other during the war of the rebellion the records of transactions in which they respectively took part should be placed in that permanent form for preservation for history, in fact as a record of the history itself. For some reason which has not yet been satisfactorily explained to me that idea has been departed from. I do not speak of this for the purpose of arraigning anybody or especially locating the responsibility, but to say that not only have we gone far wide of the original intention of the statute, but it has resulted in putting into these volumes a large mass of stuff which it was never contemplated should be published, increasing their volume and increasing the inability to properly get together the pertinent and material facts of the war. I think myself we ought to have, before it goes any further, a halt called, and see if we can not exscide something that has been already done, or at all events apply this rule to the future; and inasmuch as the officers in charge or somebody who has the responsibility in this matter will not observe the law, to try to get somebody who will, or else to put the law in a more mandatory shape.

Mr. President, I do not assume to speak from my own examination, for I have read very little of these volumes, only here and there, as I have had time, but not in a consecutive way; but I have been told on authority which will be recognized as good in the Senate, at least as good as testimony of any one man could be on this subject, that there has been a practical suppression of a large portion of the records of the Union Army—that is to say, as compared with the records of the confederate army. The records as published of the confederate army go into details, embracing the reports of colonels and captains and subordinate officers to an extent far exceeding that which is applied to the records of the Union Army. I do not say that is so, but I was told so within a few days by a gentleman who has read the whole of the work and says he knows that is the fact. It is not material which side it was on for the purpose of characterizing a thing of that kind. It only shows that the history has not been made up in such a way as to tell an impartial tale.

I think myself some portion of this can be accounted for by the fact that Fitz-John Porter was a regular Army officer. It will be found by observing the history of our Army that if there is any class of men who stick together, swear by each other, and are willing to certify that military science is confined to the men who are with them and that there is no merit anywhere else, it is the regular Army officer. And so I am prepared for a certain glorification and elevation and favorable report upon, as against facts and against public judgment, all the operations of a person who happened to be an officer of the regular Army, and especially a graduate of West Point, during the war or at any other time. That is a vice which I do not speak of to especially complain of; but it will be found running through other portions of our history as well, and in other records of the war as well.

I have no doubt that may be accounted for by the excessive desire which has been manifested to vindicate Fitz-John Porter. So the subsequent proceedings of late date go into the record along with the record of his condemnation; and it will be observed as part of the practical unfairness of this joint publication that while the testimony is not published in either case, the report of the Schofield board argues the case for Fitz-John Porter at great length and does set out some of the testimony upon which that board acted. So that the case, so far as it is put into cold type, is much more favorable to Porter than I think the testimony would be. But at all events the public, anxious to make up a judgment on this subject as well as all other subjects, has not the material furnished in these volumes to do it. In the one case there is the naked conviction without any of the testimony by which it was supported. In the other case there is an argument at great length setting out what the board claim to be the substance of the testimony before them on the material points which make the case as stated stronger for Fitz-John Porter than, in my judgment, the testimony itself would do.

But that is apart from the real issue here, which is that the law in its fair intent, according to that theory which existed in Congress certainly and which resulted in the enactment of these various statutes, has been violated by the character of the publication which has been carried into these volumes. I do not in speaking of that say anything by way of complaint about any individual who may have had to do with it, whether it was the Secretary of War, or whether it was Colonel Scott, who had charge of the work. I know Colonel Scott, have always esteemed him very highly as a man, but there have been circumstances over which he probably has no control, at all events to which he has yielded, which have induced the departing by him or by whoever else has had this matter specially in charge from the intent and from the plain, unmistakable language of the statute, and which makes this publication not a publication of the records of the rebellion, but an entirely different work.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I concurred with the Committee on Appropriations in the amendment proposing to strike out this provision, and I acted according to what I believed to be right with the facts we then had before us. I have since investigated the matter to my entire satisfaction, and I think have all the facts in the case, and I now shall vote to disagree to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations, and I will give my reasons briefly for it.

In the sundry civil appropriation act of June 23, 1874, we find the clause which the Senator from Iowa has read:

> To enable the Secretary of War to begin the publication of the Official Records of the War of the Rebellion, both of the Union and confederate armies, and directed him to have copied for the Public Printer all reports, letters, telegrams, and general orders not heretofore copied or printed, and properly arranged in chronological order.

That shows that this work was already in existence, it had already been commenced in the War Department, just as the work of the Naval Record has long since been commenced in the Navy Department but only recently any appropriation made for the regular publication of it. Under that law the Secretary of War organized the force which began this work. The Secretary of War was then the Hon. J. D. Cameron, of Pennsylvania, or he was soon afterward Secretary, and he issued the orders for this publication. I read now from the preface which contains the order in which the publications were to be made:

> The publication will present the records in the following order of arrangement:
> The first series will embrace the formal reports, both Union and confederate, of the first seizures of United States property in the Southern States, and of all military operations in the field, with the correspondence, orders, and returns relating specially thereto, and, as proposed, is to be accompanied by an atlas.
> In this series the reports will be arranged according to the campaigns and several theaters of operations (in the chronological order of the events), and the Union reports of any event will, as a rule, be immediately followed by the confederate accounts. The correspondence, &c., not embraced in the "reports" proper will follow (first Union and next confederate) in chronological order.
> The second series will contain the correspondence, orders, reports, and returns, Union and confederate, relating to prisoners of war, and (so far as the military authorities were concerned) to State or political prisoners.
> The third series will contain the correspondence, orders, reports, and returns of the Union authorities (embracing their correspondence with the confederate officials) not relating specially to the subjects of the first and second series. It will set forth the annual and special reports of the Secretary of War, of the general-in-chief, and of the chiefs of the several staff corps and departments; the calls for troops, and the correspondence between the national and the several State authorities.
> The fourth series will exhibit the correspondence, orders, reports, and returns of the confederate authorities, similar to that indicated for the Union officials, as of the third series, but excluding the correspondence between the Union and confederate authorities given in that series.

This was published and approved by Hon. Alexander Ramsey, Secretary of War, on the 23d of August, 1880. Before that time this question had been up while Mr. Cameron was Secretary of War. Now I will read from the reports to show what character of publications which were not in existence during the war have been admitted to these volumes. That is the question, what particular character of publications which were not in existence during the war of the rebellion have since been permitted to be published? I find here that General George H. Gordon applied to Hon. J. D. Cameron, Secretary of War, on the 6th of October, 1876, to have published in the Record of the War of the Rebellion certain reports then made by him and presented for the first time and which were not in existence during the war and not made soon afterward, but which he had written long afterward, and he desired them to be placed in the record. I have Secretary of War Cameron's reply:

DECEMBER 6, 1876.

DEAR SIR: Search instituted by my orders, based upon the contents of your letter of the 18th ultimo, fails to show that any reports additional to those made within a reasonable time subsequent to the occurrences which they narrate have been incorporated or filed with any such report, nor does it appear that there is any report on the files of this Department reflecting upon the operations of your brigade in 1862, either made during that year or filed subsequently. It may be possible, however, that there is such a report, and that the meager information in the possession of the searcher has caused it to be overlooked, and for that reason I should be pleased to have information of the date, name of writer, &c., of the paper you speak of furnished.

The Department does not conceive itself to be at liberty to go outside of what it interprets the act of Congress to mean, and while it appreciates the kindness which prompted you to furnish whatever related to the movements of your command now in your possession, had no other course than to return what was not strictly official matter.

If anything that is not so has been appended to the record of the Department I do not know it.

Yours, truly, &c.

J. D. CAMERON, Secretary of War.

General GEORGE H. GORDON,
Boston, Mass.

"Official" was what determined the course there. In 1883 General Lew. Wallace applied to have certain other documents placed in this publication. I have his letter before me making the application, and I also have before me the letter of the Secretary of War, Hon. Robert T. Lincoln, in response to General Wallace's application. In order that the Senate may exactly understand this, I will give this explanation: On the 16th of November, 1883, Colonel Scott made a report to the Secretary of War concerning General Wallace's application, from which I read:

> In October, 1876, General Gordon submitted certain documents for file as a part of the official records aforesaid. Under date of November 16, 1876, Secretary Cameron rejected the printed narrative thus submitted on the ground that under the act of Congress June 23, 1874, only official documents or authenticated copies thereof could be embraced in the publication. To this General Gordon replied that from information received by him he had supposed that "reports of military operations in the late war, but compiled long since the war, had been filed as official documents for publication," &c. To this Secretary Cameron replied that search based upon General Gordon's statement "fails to show that any reports additional to those made within a reasonable time subsequent to the occurrences which they narrate have been incorporated or filed with any such report." Copy of this correspondence is appended as Inclosure D. If the Adjutant-General's letter of April 19, 1878, is to be construed as an acceptance for publication it is in contravention of the Secretary's ruling and of the indorsement hereinbefore mentioned.
> Under the construction of the law announced by Secretary Cameron, and uniformly adhered to, I would have rejected the Wallace correspondence even had I known of its existence when Volume X was compiled. Why it was not submitted to me with the Shiloh report is not positively known. It may have been because of the rule established by Secretary Cameron or because of the indorsement referred to.
> My five years' experience in immediate charge of the publication of the military records most thoroughly justifies the established rule. Incidents of that experience were set forth in my report of November 29 last on a bill proposing to authorize the publication of supplementary reports, and other instances of like nature have since occurred. A copy of the Adjutant-General's indorsement on that bill and extract from my report are transmitted as inclosures E and F.
> The Whittlesey documents are clearly inadmissible, and should the Secretary determine to accept the correspondence of 1868, General Wallace should, in my judgment, be required to submit the original documents or duly authenticated copies.
> Very respectfully, your obedient servant,
>
> ROBT. N. SCOTT,
> Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel, U. S. Army.

The letter of Mr. Robert T. Lincoln, Secretary of War, is dated War Department, Washington, D. C., December 21, 1883.

On the 20th of November, 1883, Colonel Scott, compiling these records, examined the brief or outline of the letter prepared in the War Department in answer to General Wallace's letter and returned to Secretary Lincoln his memorandum, so that the Secretary could or could not adopt his suggestions in completing his letter to General Wallace. The Senate will understand that Mr. Lincoln prepared a brief of a letter, the outline of a letter, which he proposed to send to General Wallace, and that was submitted to Colonel Scott, and Colonel Scott made a memorandum and returned it to the War Department with Mr. Lincoln's letter, and then Mr. Lincoln's letter was corrected and sent to General Wallace. I will read this memorandum of Colonel Scott. It is dated November 20, 1883.

MEMORANDUM.

NOVEMBER 20, 1883.

Thinking over the Secretary's letter to General Wallace it occurs to me that the phrase "papers prepared after the war was over"—

That was a phrase that was in the draught of the letter—is more restrictive than Mr. Cameron's "reports additional to those made within a reasonable time subsequent to the occurrences which they narrate."

Mr. Secretary Cameron had defined what should go on as the "reports additional to those made within a reasonable time subsequent to the occurrences which they narrate," and Mr. Lincoln had used in this prepared letter to General Wallace the phrase "papers prepared after the war was over." Colonel Scott then says:

> The final reports on the rebellion of the Secretary of War, the general-in-chief, departmental commanders, and chiefs of bureaus were necessarily made after the war was over, but they are essential to the completion of the record.
> There are cases in which officers who have been dismissed for cowardice or other misconduct in the field have been reinstated or otherwise relieved from such stigma. In these cases it has seemed proper to publish the order of reinstatement, &c., irrespective of its date, whenever it has seemed necessary to publish the original order.

In my present arrangement for publication of the Second Bull Run documents the order pardoning General F. J. Porter accompanies the order publishing the findings and sentence of the court cashiering that officer, and as complementary to the pardon I have included the order convoking the "board of officers," the report of that board, and the action of President Hayes.

This seemed to me at the time a strictly impartial disposal of an extraordinary case within Mr. Cameron's rule; but although said report is strictly official, and, being made when called for by the President, is presumably seasonable, it and the order calling for it are "papers prepared after the war was over."

You will see Colonel Scott expressly calls Mr. Lincoln's attention to the fact that these publications do not come within the terms of his order as papers prepared after the war was over. Colonel Scott goes on further and says:

Suggested that the insertion in letter to General Wallace of the word "unofficial" before "papers prepared" would permit the publication of such strictly official and complementary documents as may be approved by the Secretary.

The Porter papers are in type, but can readily be excluded from the publication.

Respectfully submitted.

ROBT. N. SCOTT,
Brevet Lieutenant-Colonel, U. S. Army.

When that memorandum was presented to Secretary Lincoln with the letter the draught of which had been sent to Colonel Scott, Mr. Lincoln changed his letter and made it correspond with the suggestions of Colonel Scott. In this he says he declines to have published the matter furnished by General Wallace. This is the letter:

WAR DEPARTMENT, Washington City, November 21, 1883.

MY DEAR GENERAL: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter dated at Florence, October 28 last. I also received in due time your cable dispatch from Venice, asking me to have the publication of the reports of the battle of Shiloh deferred until the receipt of a letter from you. As it was not impossible that your purpose was to indicate some error as about to occur in the publication of the Official Records of the Rebellion relating to the battle of Shiloh, although the particular volume in which the reports relating to that battle are included, being Volume X, Series I, was then stereotyped and indexed, just waiting for the order to be printed for distribution, I withheld that order until I could hear from you.

I now see from your letter that you wish to have included in that publication material prepared after the end of the war, some of it after the publication of the first volume of Badeau's Life of General Grant.

I inclose to you a copy of a letter from Colonel Scott, the officer in charge of the publication of the Records of the Rebellion, from which you will see what, in the opinion of the Department, is authorized by law to be included in the publication and what should be excluded. I also inclose copies of papers which are referred to as being marked "E" and "F" in Colonel Scott's letter.

There would seem to be no doubt that the papers mentioned in your letter can not, within the law and the rule, be included in the publication.

I wish to assure you that I would be glad to oblige you personally, and I have no doubt that in many cases history would be more truthfully shown if undisputed facts more lately ascertained could be put into the publication; but such a course would, in my opinion, not only be contrary to the uniform action upon similar applications and unauthorized by law, but would change the work from a mere compilation of official records made at a particular time, as it is, into a publication of controversial papers almost without end.

In your own case the book gives the papers existing at the time when in the due course of the affairs to which they relate they should exist.

It does not in your own or in any case give unofficial papers prepared after the war was over.

So he has inserted "papers prepared after the war was over," but inserted before them "unofficial," so as to establish the rule which Colonel Scott had suggested of "official papers."

For these the historian must go elsewhere.

I regret very much the disappointment which will be caused you by the course which my duty in this matter compels me to take.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

ROBERT T. LINCOLN,
Secretary of War.

General LEWIS WALLACE,
United States Minister to Turkey, Rome, Italy.

Mr. President, we see that Colonel Scott has been from the beginning acting directly under the orders of the Secretaries of War, Secretary Cameron, now Senator from Pennsylvania, Secretary Ramsey, and Secretary Lincoln; and when the official proceedings of a regular military board called and convened by the chief executive officer of the United States and the Commander-in-Chief of the armies of the United States were to be published the matter was submitted to the Secretary, Mr. Lincoln; and certainly no man can say that the Hon. Robert T. Lincoln, late Secretary of War, was prejudiced in favor of General Porter.

Mr. President, the distinction is that they publish in these records of the rebellion only official documents. For example, an officer was cashiered for cowardice by order of the President. The President subsequently, after the war closed, revoked that order. That is an official document relating to the same subject-matter, and is put in just as the Senator from Connecticut read a few moments ago. There are numbers of instances of that kind; and, as I understand, Colonel Scott, with the sanction of the respective Secretaries of War, has put in only official papers, papers emanating from the Secretary of War or the President of the United States, and relating to what occurred during the war and were a part and parcel of it.

Complaint is made that only a few pages in regard to the Fitz-John Porter trial were inserted in this record. Colonel Scott could not increase the number of pages that contained the proceedings of that trial. He put it all in except the evidence. There is no complaint on that account. Colonel Scott had nothing to do with the calling of the board of reviewing officers in regard to Fitz-John Porter's case and their report. That was done by the President, and the report was approved, and he simply inserted it without the evidence.

Mr. PLUMB. Before the Senator gets too far away from his definition of what constitutes an official paper in reference to the war, will he permit me to ask him if he thinks a paper by the present President of the United States would be an official paper within the designation laid down by Colonel Scott and indorsed by him?

Mr. COCKRELL. I think it would.

Mr. PLUMB. Then why can not Colonel Scott publish the veto messages recently delivered to us?

Mr. COCKRELL. Such things do not affect the war record; they are matters affecting legislation; they were not in response to any action of the War Department, and are not official papers of that kind.

Mr. PLUMB. The War Department is merely the reflex legally of the Commander-in-Chief of the Army, who is President of the United States. President Arthur vetoed the bill to restore Fitz-John Porter to the Army. According to the theory, of course that veto message ought to be published.

Mr. COCKRELL. Not at all. I will make this distinction——

Mr. PLUMB. I have no doubt we shall get further definitions on this question as we go along.

Mr. COCKRELL. President Arthur's veto of that bill was not as Commander-in-Chief of the Army of the United States, but as the chief executive officer of the United States, and it was not a part or parcel of the records of the War Department. It was not historical, either. It was in regard to legislation entirely.

Mr. HALE. Will the Senator from Missouri allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. COCKRELL. As a matter of course.

Mr. HALE. The volume in question, while it does not publish of course the veto message of President Arthur, does publish President Authur's message remitting the penalty.

Mr. COCKRELL. That is true, because it related directly to that act. But I am not here for the purpose of defending President Arthur or Secretary of War Cameron or Secretary of War Ramsey or Secretary of War Lincoln; I am here simply to present the facts which I have ascertained and which have changed my opinion in regard to this matter. That is all.

Mr. President, if I had had the publication of these records and the control of them I do not know that I would have permitted anything to have gone in them after the close of the war as decided by the Supreme Court of the United States; but there has been a system and order in the War Department presided over by Secretary Cameron, now a Senator from Pennsylvania, and Secretary Ramsey and Mr. Lincoln, and they have confined the publication of documents since the war only to those that are official and relate directly to what is published in the record, as I understand; and this case of General Porter was submitted to Mr. Lincoln; it was all stated long before it was published, and it was stated to be in type, and Mr. Lincoln could have changed it if he had not thought it was proper and legitimate to go in there.

Under these circumstances I shall vote to disagree to the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations, and if the Senate desires that there shall be restrictions or better oversight over the publication, I have no objection. The question is a simple one. Here are the records of the war of the rebellion that are being published. On one side there can be no revision, no amendment, no change. The government and the authorities they represented have ceased to exist, and are numbered among the things that were. On the other side the parties are living actors in the drama now going on in the country, and if a President or a Secretary of War as a matter of justice or of right or of equity to any of these living persons whose Government stands today has permitted an official paper to go in explaining something that appears there during the war of the rebellion, I shall certainly not object to it.

Mr. ALLISON. Yesterday the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] gave notice that at this hour he would call up resolutions of respect to the memory of his late colleague in the House. As I am anxious to finish this bill to-night, I ask him if it will not suit his convenience to let that matter be postponed until to-morrow.

Mr. EUSTIS. I yield to the suggestion made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and give notice that to-morrow at half-past four o'clock I will call up the resolutions relative to the memory of Mr. HAHN.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President, the act of June 23, 1874, which laid the foundation of this work of preserving the records of the two contending sides in the great war of the rebellion was a wise and beneficent act, and it meant one thing, and but one thing, and it was based upon the belief and assumption that it was possible, in the War Department where this work was lodged, not for impartial history to be written, for that is not the object of the work, but to gather together the materials and documents that shall lie open to the future historian. The assumption and belief was that there would be an impartial record; the act could not have been passed but for that. Neither side in either House would have voted that the enterprise should be started upon except that in the belief that it would be conducted impartially, and there should be put into one body this most invaluable testimony, the records of the war of the rebellion. How it should be done, and what should be contained in those records, and what should be published from time to time in the volumes, is expressed in no doubtful fashion.

To enable the Secretary of War to begin the publication of the official records of the war of the rebellion, both of the Union and the confederate armies, the sum of $15,000.

That was the initiatory appropriation. Then the direction follows as to what shall be embraced in these compilations—

And the Secretary of War is hereby directed to have copied for the Public Printer—

That he might print the volumes—

all reports, letters, telegrams, and general orders not heretofore copied or printed, and properly arranged in chronological order.

Nobody then anticipated the magnitude of the work. But little at that time was known of the vast stores of valuable information that would be afforded, especially from the confederate side, in making up these historical memorials and records of the war. But no man at the time of the passage of that act, if he had been asked whether any compiler or editor or authority could intrude into these records (which were really intended to be contemporaneous) subject-matter occurring years afterward, would have ventured for a moment to intimate a belief that such a thing could be done; no man would have asserted for a moment that such a thing could be done.

Now, Mr. President, one of the important events in making up these memorials for history was what is known to military men and what the volume before me has properly designated as the campaign in Northern Virginia. One of the objects of the law which I have read was that among other things there should be presented a clearly portrayed picture of the events of the campaign in Northern Virginia, not only as shown by the telegrams, the letters, the general orders, and reports of the commanders and subordinate officers upon the Union side, but upon the rebel side; and it was not intended that it should be an incomplete record. It was of as much importance that the campaign in Northern Virginia should be all there as the campaign in and about Stone River or about Lookout Mountain or Chattanooga or the first battle of Bull Run.

And, Mr. President, there was not in the intention of Congress at that time, or of any man who took an interest in this matter, any thought or purpose that any individual was either to be defamed or vindicated by these reports. Personal considerations were to be sunk out of sight. These volumes are not paid for out of the Treasury and furnished to the American people either to cut down any personal reputation or to build up any personal reputation, either to accuse and destroy or to defend and vindicate; but they are to be a plain, simple narration as shown by contemporaneous papers of the events that went to make up the Titanic conflict which then engaged the American people. And whenever any authority—I care not whether it be the man in charge of this little bureau, or the man who is in charge of the War Department, or the President of the United States—dares to lay any hand upon that work which Congress marked out in 1874, and intrude upon it any matter not connected with it and not transpiring at the time, so as to come within the arrangement in chronological order, violates the act of Congress, he violates its intention, and he undertakes to embark in a work that Congress never intended that any official should embark in, and that is the making of history by interpolating subsequent events.

If that has not been done in a plain and clear and significant and wanton way in the volume that lies under my hand, then I am unable to form any judgment about it. Let Senators impartially take the pages and look at them. Here undoubtedly in one of the great transactions of the war, whether or not Fitz-John Porter should be vindicated or should not be vindicated is not the essential thing that the historian ought to be looking at hereafter in treating of the campaign in Northern Virginia.

The whole history of that great epoch in the war does not revolve around the question of Fitz-John Porter's vindication; but it is the question whether there shall be a true transcript of the records as showing the events attending those great transactions. Here, however, whoever is responsible for this—I care not who he is, for he has shown clearly that the method of making it up was not done in a corner; it was done by no inadvertence; it was not done under any misapprehension—somebody or other who had a single and distinct purpose in reference to this, and that purpose not to show the movements of the armies and the results there, but to bear upon this general officer's record and his vindication, made up that record.

Upon the one side everything is pared and cut out down and sliced into so that it stands in the baldest and barest proportions simply; and to begin with it does not commence with the order for the court-martial or the first commission which afterward resolved itself into a court-martial, but the foundation is the letter of Fitz-John Porter himself asking an investigation, so that in this transaction he appears as the central figure. Following that is the order for the commission; following that is the subversion or change of the commission into the court-martial. Following that is the date of its assemblage.

Then follows nothing but the bare specifications, then follows nothing but the bare result, then follows nothing but the bare sentence, and then the papers, voluminous as they must be, went from the court before the judge-advocate's office in order that they might be there passed upon, and in order that there might be made an official compilation of the results of the court-martial, in order that the President, Abraham Lincoln, might see briefly and clearly what were the grounds upon which that court-martial put its blow, almost a death-blow, upon Fitz-John Porter; and following the sentence, brief as it is, comes the order of the President sustaining it. The compiler of this volume who is able to put in nearly thirty pages of what a board of officers found fifteen years later has not found time and space to put in what is the essential and fundamental and cardinal document in that whole transaction of the court-martial. That is, the summing up of Judge-Advocate Holt, upon which Abraham Lincoln, merciful as he was and inclined to favor and not to severity, based his judgment and passed the sentence on Fitz-John Porter.

Why is it that in this volume other things are put in in extenso and scores of pages are taken up with the lumbering reports of the testimony of witnesses in little details upon military commissions, and room has not been found for that document which convinced the great understanding, and for a time perhaps hardened the heart, of Abraham Lincoln? Why did not the War Department find space for Judge-Advocate Holt's paper, which every man who has looked into this matter knows is luminous with intelligence and with logical force that no man may dispute? Because it was not upon the right side, sir, and because it did not make in the right direction!

Mr. SAULSBURY. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. HALE. I have only a little time, and I can not be interrupted now.

The next thing that follows is the sentence of Abraham Lincoln, of January 21, 1863, and then the dissolution of the court under the order of L. Thomas, Adjutant-General.

So far from coming under the scope of the language of the statute upon which this work was done, that whole transaction affecting Fitz-John Porter passed from sight, passed from recognition of this bureau that is making up these records. It is a thing that had been completed. All the processes in the war of courts and courts-martial had been exhausted. The contemporaneous events of that trial and its surroundings and its results had been completed; and how it is that any official, how it is that the Secretary of War—I care not who he is—could have come to any other conclusion, is to me a mystery.

I must assume that the Secretary of War who gave some recognition to this plan for interpolating and intruding this subsequent report, must not have examined it; he could not have gone into the subject; he must have taken some suggestion of somebody or other about him, because he could not examine into everything.

How stands the volume here before us that the Committee on Appropriations is assailed because it wants to hold the hand of Congress for a time to keep out this sort of work? Does the record close here? By no means; but most remarkable, most strange, following next are, "Extracts from proceedings of the board of officers convened at West Point pursuant to the following order."

Thirteen years had passed away since the last note of war had been sounded upon either side; sixteen years had passed away since the great occurrences that formed the basis of this report and of this record. Where is the man who will claim that under the language of the provision of law authorizing this work a board which, as the result of an incessant, continuing importunity that never ceased, was at last convened and went over this subject sixteen years away from the transactions, whatever its result might be, should be incorporated in a volume that is intended, if it intends anything, to be a contemporaneous record upon both sides of the war of the rebellion.

There is no man here who can make a decent case upon this; and when the subject-matter was presented in the Committee on Appropriations, so clear and so plain was it without any discussion that something should be done to change the nature of this work that no dissent arose upon either side. Whether the same processes have been resorted to and men have changed their minds, that have attended this case all the way through, I do not know and do not care; but I say here that no man has made a decent case or can why that should be put into this volume.

There is no end if you allow this to be done. Hereafter no man in the years to come who sits down in his closet and seeks to prepare a thoughtful history of the war, dealing with the things of the past, may expect to find impartial history afforded in its materials if this thing is allowed. This is a thing which goes beyond to-day. There ought to be a sacredness about those volumes that no rude hand should ever touch or interfere with.

They were intended to be a faithful transcript of both sides, and so it was from the beginning supposed that they would be. I do not know whether this has been so or not. I have not examined into many of the volumes. But this most remarkable proceeding, this most intrusive report that has been put into this volume, leads me to believe that investigation would find that this work has not been conducted as it should be, and until this can be examined I, for one, if I vote alone, will not vote another dollar to be appropriated from the public Treasury for this work that is being perverted in its purposes—not one dollar.

As I have said, I do not know what these volumes contain. I mean to know more about them before I vote any money. I heard what the Senator from Kansas said—the statement that has been made by some gentleman to him that the impartiality which the other side as well as this should insist upon in the preparation of these volumes had been violated by not giving the proper relations and importance of the two sides. I never heard of it before. I had assumed that in this Department, which ought to be impartial, which is not a political Department, which is over and beyond and outside of the passions of the war that have smoldered, lingered, and died, was capable of giving us an impartial record; and I had had no question raised in my mind; but while the Senator from Kansas was declaring here that his friends had told him that in making up the record in the different volumes it would be found that due importance according to the record of history had not been given to the one side in this war, I turned in this very volume to the first important matter which is chronicled here, and that is the battle of Cedar Mountain and that campaign.

I was not in it. I only know about it from reading. I have the recollection of men who were grown and interested in events then; and reading greedily everything that came in the public press, I do not think it is a campaign upon which the Northern heart can be electrified, but it is entitled to a fair record. I do not know whether it has got it or not; but I looked over it in this volume and I found that the operation in these States, revolving around the Cedar Mountain campaign in Virginia, as it is called, occupy in this volume the space between pages 131 and 239—one hundred and eight pages in all. Of that I find that forty-five pages are given to the reports and dispatches and orders and letters of the Union side, and sixty-three pages, eighteen pages more, are given to the reports, the letters, the dispatches, the orders, and the telegrams of the confederate side.

I make no comment upon this. I do not know but that it is right. I do not know but that the literature of the war, or of that campaign, or that part of the campaign in Virginia, in that year, which centered around the battle of Cedar Mountain, requires that there shall be sixty-three pages of testimony on the one side and forty-five pages upon the other. It may be that this is only a coincidence. I only mention it because it was suggested by what the Senator from Kansas has said, and it was the only part of this great work that I could examine.

If that is so, whether to-day the Senate of the United States refuses to put its hand of approval upon this work or not, some day if this is continued and such are found to be features of this work it will be stopped. There was no such intention in the beginning that history should be so twisted and perverted and subverted, and that intention will not be allowed to be carried out, whether now or hereafter. Whether or not, I see evidences that, whatever may have been the original feeling in the Committee on Appropriations, the other side upon this matter has been consolidated, that there is no expectation in my mind of anything being received in the way of aid in putting a stop to this work until investigation can be made. Whether or not this side of the Chamber is prepared now to put its approving hand and say the work is all right and that it shall go on and that we will give our usual appropriations, nothing but the yea-and-nay vote is going to settle.

Mr. SEWELL. Mr. President, when I first felt it my duty to bring this matter to the attention of the Senate I doubted very much whether the charge in relation to the Fitz-John Porter case was the whole cause of complaint. I am sorry to perceive from the debate that that seems to be the animus of the committee in striking at the proposition.

I do not intend to indulge in any debate so far as I am concerned, but I do wish to correct the impression which may have been created upon the minds of the Senate by the statement made by the Senator from Kansas that somebody has told him, and that somebody is nameless, that the records are made in favor of the confederate troops, and that their reports are put in to the exclusion of those of the Union Army.

Mr. President, it surely can not be necessary to deny such an accusation as that. Every official report on both sides, the report of every separate command—and by the word "command" I take the battalion and the battery as the unit—every one of them on both sides is inserted and none is excluded.

As to the affair at Cedar Mountain, what is there in the circumstance that the reports of the operations at Cedar Mountain occupy sixty-three pages on the confederate side and forty-five pages on the Union side? There was very much more than that proportion of confederate troops and much more than that proportion of confederate commands there. It was an advance of the whole confederate army swooping down on General Banks, a large part of whose army was captured at Cedar Mountain. That accounts for such statements.

I am sorry to see a desire to retry the Porter case before the Senate. To-day is an anniversary in his history. Twenty-four years ago to-day, when Porter was attacked by troops that ought to have been stopped before they reached his lines, he held the whole confederate army at Gaines's Mill; and, thank God, to-day the President of the United States, recognizing the services of that man, has approved the bill that has been passed by Congress to do him justice.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, I do not understand that the question of the skill or faithfulness of the editor of the Records of the Rebellion authorized to be published by an act of Congress is the determining question in this debate. I shall not vote upon this proposition at all with the understanding that if I vote to non-concur in this amendment proposed by the committee I approve of all the editor has done.

The greater question presented here is, shall we stop the publication of this work? That is what the committee propose. They do not propose to regulate it; they do not propose to put any limitation about it; they do not propose to declare more explicitly, if that is necessary, that matter occurring after the war even of an official character shall not be inserted, that nothing shall be placed there that was not actually written while war was still flagrant. If they mean that, I am willing to support their proposition; but what is complained of here has been done; the books have already been printed; and so far as these complaints have taken shape I see nothing in them that is specific or tangible except the complaint that the proceedings of the Fitz-John Porter board have been inserted here.

I am free to say that those proceedings do not seem to me to have been within the scope of the law; it does not seem to me that in compiling these records events taking place thirteen years after the close of the war, though they may have relation to events that took place during the war, ought to be inserted in these volumes. I think that report should not be found there; but because it has been placed there, as has been made clear here this afternoon, by the approval if not by the direction of the Secretary of War, who is not charged with having any feeling of favoritism toward Fitz-John Porter—because that has been done are we to stop the publication of this work? Are we to destroy this bureau that has it in charge and send these copyists and this indexer and these other men and women who are working there adrift, those who have become familiar with the papers and with the work, and to take the chances at some future time of legislation if Congress shall revive this enterprise, and then call together green men to take it up—I speak now of the subordinates in this bureau—or shall we go on with it, and if there are just complaints against its editor or against the management of it in any way, let us throw additional limitations of law about it?

I do not care to correct what seems to have been a mistake, and I say but one has been pointed out. I do not care to correct a single mistake by destroying the institution.

It has been vaguely hinted here—nobody seems to know—that some one has said in some report somewhere about some battle or about somebody's performance in some battle in some campaign that fairness has not been shown in the compilation of this material.

Mr. President, that is too vague a charge to be made, or if made, to influence any one. It is unjust to those who have had charge of this work. Such charges should be specific and not so general.

Now the Senator from Maine catches at that suggestion of the Senator from Kansas, takes up one of these volumes and he looks at the report of a particular campaign, and he finds that some fifteen or eighteen more pages have been given to the confederate records of that campaign or of that battle than to the reports from the Union commanders. If the Senator had reflected for one moment he would have seen that he was too hasty in presenting that as any evidence of unfairness in the compilation of this book. Until he can show me that the report of some Union officer connected with that campaign has been omitted, he makes out no case at all.

If our confederate friends were more prolix in their reports and the reports of both sides are published in full, where is the complaint or criticism or the ground for it? Was it intended? Does the Senator think that the impartiality of which he has spoken so eloquently should consist in assigning exactly the same number of pages to the Union side as to the confederate side in the account of each separate campaign? Of course he does not mean that. He has caught at this suggestion and produced here that which has no possible weight in supporting the suggestion of unfairness in the compilation of this book.

I am not able myself, from the fact of not having read these volumes and I probably would be unable if I had read them all, to pronounce a just criticism on the work of the editor in compiling this material. I should want to know whether he had omitted anything, and that I could not ascertain from reading the book, in all probability.

The principal appropriation for this work comes in the sundry civil bill in the appropriation for printing the volumes.

While I agree with the Senator from Maine in disapproving the publication of the reports of the Fitz-John Porter board of inquiry, a transaction so long after the war, as not being a document having an appropriate place in this book, yet I am not willing with him to destroy this bureau and scatter these people who have been employed there simply because of a fault which has been shown by the Senator from Missouri at least to have had sanction of the Secretaries of War, one if not more of them; but I will cordially support any proposition or any resolution that looks to confining this work exclusively to transactions that were contemporaneous with the war, to documents that were written during the war, official in their character.

I sympathized thoroughly with the appeal of General Lew. Wallace, of Indiana, to correct what I believe was a gross injustice to that gallant officer touching his conduct at Corinth; and yet I must approve the decision of Secretary Lincoln in that case, that the papers proposed by him to be inserted in the volume originating after the war could have no appropriate place there. They have their place elsewhere, and his name and reputation have been abundantly protected.

I would support a resolution confining it strictly to documents written during the war if the committee will propose it.

Mr. HALE. The Senator will permit me to ask a question?

Mr. HARRISON. Certainly.

Mr. HALE. Does not the Senator think that this is the place, upon this bill, to cure any evil that has grown up? Let the Senator bear in mind that this bill contains the provision where the real essential work is being done. It has been said that you can cure it on the sundry civil bill where we provide for the printing, but the Printing Office has got no such intelligence, no such special knowledge, nobody there that it can invoke who is able to decide what shall be published. We deal there with the printing, but we deal here with the compilation, with the editing of this work, and that is the most important thing I think to decide on this question that has sprung up. One of the great needs in this bureau is an editing faculty. The military officer does not have that faculty. He may have a higher faculty, but he has not got the trained literary faculty that will give him the proper literary perspective of events. All of that has got to be dealt with in this bill, and I have an amendment prepared which in due time I propose to offer covering what kind of work shall be allowed.

Mr. HARRISON. I can not say without hearing it whether I shall give my consent to the amendment to be proposed by the Senator from Maine. I have already indicated what I am willing to do.

Mr. BECK. Will the Senator from Indiana allow the Senator from Maine to read the amendment, because several of us have been looking in that direction?

Mr. HARRISON. I have no objection.

Mr. HALE. I have not one covering the editing part, but this is an amendment I propose to offer at the proper time, either before or after the vote on striking out:

And hereafter the records prepared for publication under this appropriation shall contain only papers covering contemporaneous events arranged chronologically, according to the provisions of the act of June 23, 1874, making appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.

And if some one else does not elaborate and prepare an amendment covering the lack which I think exists here of an editing force, I will prepare one.

Mr. HARRISON. I suggest to the Senator from Maine that he should modify the language of his amendment. I read it:

And hereafter the records prepared for publication under this appropriation shall contain only papers covering contemporaneous events.

It seems to me that that does not sufficiently describe the character of papers we mean—papers covering contemporaneous events arranged chronologically.

Mr. HALE. I refer to the original statute, and that contains in terms what the object is, the records of the war of the rebellion and the armies on both sides. The armies disappeared; they sank away at a given time, and you can find when it occurred as well as you can an eclipse of the moon in the years past. It is a distinctive event. The whole subject-matter for the completion of these volumes can be told by any man historically, and therefore I do not need to go on and put in language saying here what time these contemporaneous events shall have occurred. I will risk it that this amendment of mine would have kept out the paper which has given rise to this discussion and every such paper.

Mr. HARRISON. There is one difficulty to be noted here. I find in the letter of Secretary Cameron read by the Senator from Missouri that he makes an exception so as to admit papers prepared after the war within a reasonable time by officers who are charged with the duty or upon whom the duty devolved of making certain reports. I think it will be found that both the General and Lieutenant-General of the Army submitted their full reports after the war, perhaps added supplementary reports made some time after the close of the war. Of course those papers find an appropriate place in this record, and it is just there that the discrimination comes in. If you limit it absolutely to papers which were written while war was flagrant, then you probably have excluded from these volumes much appropriate matter.

Mr. HALE. It is intended to confine it to papers that were written when the impressions were flagrant; it is intended to be a faithful picture of men's doings and sayings and passions and theories at the time. When the war ceased the armies melted, went away to their homes, and the work should then cease. Not one scrap of paper should be put into that record that goes beyond that limitation. As the Senator has said, there is valuable literature outside of that, but it belongs elsewhere.

Mr. HARRISON. But the Senator is mistaken in that. In many cases I think there were officers who did not finish their reports of actual campaign transactions until the war ended; they had not time to do it.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask if the suggestion made by the Senator from Maine can not be agreed to by inserting instead of the word "papers" the words "records of the rebellion arranged chronologically?" That certainly would cover it. That is what was intended.

Mr. HALE. I think that is a good suggestion.

Mr. HARRISON. I have no doubt the purpose of the committee will be fully answered by this debate. I know favorably and well the gentleman who has been in charge of this work, and I do not believe that any just reflection can be made upon his honest purpose in the administration of his duties. He may have made mistakes. If he made one in reference to this Fitz-John Porter business, as I think he has, it was not without at first securing the approval of his chief, the Secretary of War. But if this results in securing some such amendment which will limit this work and allow its publication to go on, the object I had in making these remarks will be accomplished.

Mr. MAXEY. The Senator from Indiana has so very clearly and forcibly presented the case as I understand it, that I have but a few words to add.

Undoubtedly the original purpose of the Congress that passed this act to preserve the records on both sides of that memorable war was that there should be sent down to future generations a fair, impartial, and absolutely truthful account of what took place on both sides, and all those interested on both sides of the question were represented in the Congress which passed that law.

This work has been undertaken; and whether the original policy was wise or otherwise is not now the question. Both sides have been sending here to the War Department of the Government evidences, records of immense value to the future historian, and they have been compiled at great expense to the Government. The question now is—and that is the only question—shall we by the adoption of the amendment proposed by the Committee on Appropriations absolutely cut off and shut down this compilation, or shall we disagree with the action of the Appropriations Committee and let it go on? That is the only question.

We have come to that point where in my judgment it is wise to continue until we get all the testimony on both sides. That a great deal of cockle appears in this tremendous record no one will dispute, but that there are a vast number of grains of sound wheat that will be separated by the future historian and will be invaluable to the true history of this country is equally true. There is no doubt about that. If matter has been admitted into this compilation which was not entitled to go there, the policy is not to destroy the compilation, but to put the necessary checks and guards upon the compilation so as to force the compilers to carry out the intent and purpose of the law, which is to give a faithful, fair, and impartial account of what transpired during the war on both sides as evidenced by the records then made.

I have not had an opportunity of reading this record. I have had too much else to do. I have no doubt that there is much in that great compilation which might well be left out; but I am also perfectly satisfied that there is a vast amount of most useful, most valuable information, not in a condition now to be of service to the people of the United States, because there are but very few men in our country who have the time to read this compilation as it now is, but it will be valuable to the future historian.

I happened to belong to the side which has no control whatever over this publication; but we are perfectly willing to submit to the honor and integrity of the American Government in giving to the confederate side a fair, honest, just, impartial statement of what we did, good, bad, and indifferent. We are willing that every official act, every record on the Confederate side shall be brought up and perpetuated in the archives of this Government and handed down to the future historian, and by that record we are willing to be judged.

Mr. HALE. I move to add to the matter proposed to be stricken out the following:

And hereafter the records prepared for publication under this appropriation shall contain only the records of the war of the rebellion covering contemporaneous events arranged chronologically according to the provisions of the act of June 23, 1874, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1875.

Mr. SEWELL. I have no objection to that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Maine.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HALE. Now I offer the following amendment to come in after the amendment just adopted:

And the evidence taken by the court-martial on the trial of Fitz-John Porter, together with the reports thereof by Judge Holt to President Lincoln, shall be printed in connection with the matter already printed concerning the proceedings of said court-martial.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. We might direct that this should be published as part of volume 12. There are already three books in volume 12.

Mr. HALE. I take it that would naturally come. The series of volume 12 are not yet completed, and this will be put in the next one under this direction as part of volume 12 undoubtedly, I take it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment as amended.

Mr. EDMUNDS. To strike out?

Mr. HARRIS. The amendments just made did not perfect the text.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the amendment of the committee to strike out the clause from line 1696 to 1707 inclusive.

Mr. SEWELL. What are we voting on now?

Mr. EDMUNDS. On striking out as the committee proposed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment to strike out the clause printed in the bill.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. HALE. As it now stands the House provision as amended by the Senate is in the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And others. That is it.

Mr. ALLISON. Now, let us go on with the amendments that were passed over.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 85, in line 2092, the Committee on Appropriations reported an amendment to strike out "four" before the word "thousand" and insert "five;" so as to read:

For compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions, $5,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the present law?

Mr. ALLISON. It is $4,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This increases the salary. Why is that? I should like to have it explained.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee appropriate in this bill just what the Commissioner of Pensions has been receiving since 1882.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How much is he receiving as a pension—$1,200 a year? That will give him, with his pension, $6,200 a year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senate ready for the question on the amendment?

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, in line 2121, in the total of the appropriations for the compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions, deputy commissioners, and the clerks and employés in the Pension Office, to strike out "seven thousand five hundred" and insert "eight thousand seven hundred and fifty;" so as to make the amount $1,808,750.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in line 2145, to strike out "four thousand five hundred" and insert "five thousand;" so as to read:

For compensation of the Commissioner of the Patent Office, $5,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the present law?

Mr. ALLISON. Four thousand five hundred dollars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This increases the salary by $500, then, above what the regular law provides for.

Mr. ALLISON. Last year we provided for the first time for an increase of salary for the Commissioner of Patents to $5,000. The regular law is $4,500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that what you call reform?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment passed over was, in line 2181, after the word "thousand," to insert "five hundred;" so as to read:

In all $649,570.

Mr. ALLISON. Eighteen hundred dollars should be added to that according to the amendment made in line 2163.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. By general order made this afternoon the Secretary was requested to make up the footings correctly.

Mr. ALLISON. Yes; I only want to call attention to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The aggregate amount will now be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK:

In all, $651,370.

Mr. HALE. In the confusion and noise of the Chamber many Senators did not know that the amendment at the bottom of page 85, increasing the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions from $4,000 to $5,000, had been acted on. I do not know that it has been acted on.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been agreed to distinctly, but the Senator can have a vote on it in the Senate if he desires.

Mr. HALE. I want to reserve every point of order and every vote in the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator can reserve his point of order and have a vote in the Senate. The next amendment passed over will be read.

The next amendment was, in line 2296, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "five;" so as to read:

Office of the Director of the Geological Survey: For Director, $5,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The legal salary is $6,000, I am told.

Mr. CALL. I ask the Senator from Iowa in charge of this bill if he proposes to conclude the bill to-night?

Mr. ALLISON. Undoubtedly. It will take but a short time now to complete it, I think.

Mr. CALL. I object to this amendment, and I should like very much to occupy the time of the Senate for a few minutes in reference to it.

This is a most important bureau of the Government, the only one devoted to original research. There is a feeling throughout the world now of the importance of the character of research and investigation to which this bureau is devoted. Of the practical results which have attended it in the present century there can be no kind of doubt.

I find in an article in the Forum, a magazine published in the city of New York, in the March number, an investigation of the importance of geological researches and the connection of this kind of scientific research with the civilization of this day, and the practical advantages which accrue to a people from it. The subject is a very important one, and although it is a late hour of the evening and I would prefer very much if the bill were to go over so that the subject could be brought before the attention of the Senate much more extensively than I propose to do it, I wish to read briefly from the article to which I refer. It states:

It is proposed to enunciate a few fundamental propositions touching the relations between public prosperity and the progress of scientific ideas.

The article goes on to state:

The Coast Survey is for the benefit of harbors, commerce, and national defense. The National Observatory is for the benefit of navigation. The Geological Survey is for the advantage of the mining and land interests. The Weather Bureau is for agriculture and inland navigation. Our deep-sea studies are in the interest of the fisheries. Even our "transit of Venus" and polar expeditions are justified to the popular and the legislative mind by characterizing them as undertaken in the interests of navigation, industry, and humanity. Expenditures on the scientific work of the Smithsonian Institution are in fulfillment of obligations incurred in the acceptance of the Smithson trust.

* * * * * * *

In the first place, the prosperity of the State and the happiness of individuals are conditioned on the grade and character of our civilization. Lower our plane of civilization, and national and individual prosperity must be diminished. This proposition is sustained by the comparison of our own prosperity with that of other nations admittedly on a lower plane of civilization. I beg the reader to make the comparisons and reflect on their teaching. It is sustained, also, by an analysis of the meaning of prosperity and of the forces of civilization. What do we understand by prosperity? Comprehensively, the possession of enlarging opportunities to secure the gratification of our material, intellectual, social, and spiritual wants. We are happy in proportion to the fullness and range of our gratifications. I think this position will not be questioned by any reader. * * *

Now let us consider by what instrumentalities of civilization these gratifications are secured. Among material gratifications are those provided through rapid transit. In a few hours the passenger finds himself in a remote city. The irksomeness of travel without steam is avoided; much time is saved for other occupation; the individual's efforts become more productive; life is lengthened. All these ends are desirable. Further, rapid transit renders possible a great range of delicacies for the palate. All the foods of the tropics are accessible to the dweller in another zone; all the foods of the temperate zone may find their way to the tropics. Rapid transit has created an enormous mail service between distant points. Men who can not meet may yet hold intercourse and transact important business. Rapid and cheap transit has rendered available in one region or country any of the products of other and distant regions. The cattle reared in the grassy valleys of Texas, Colorado, or Montana are marketed in New York and London. The corn-fed pork of Illinois is sold in New York or Hamburg. The wheat-fields of Dakota feed the hungry in Paris. Thus the food of distant communities is cheapened, and more means are left for other gratifications. These are commonplace suggestions; but there is a neglected inference to be drawn from them.

* * * * * * *

The steam-press has made books cheap and numerous; every reader's mind impinges upon the broad current of thoughts sped through the world through the agency of types and presses. All that learning is and accomplishes; all that ready information concerning world-wide contemporary history is doing to quicken mental activity—to expedite conclusions, to make the experience of each nation profitable to all nations, to supplement the unfinished thought of one by the happy suggestion of another, to make the rich soil of European ideas bear the golden fruit of American invention—becomes not only the intellectual gratification of a few, but a stimulus and a pleasure to the universal intelligence. I hope the reader will pause over this suggestion, and enter into a fuller realization of the sources of the happiness which he derives from the quickened intelligence awakened by the agencies of our high civilization.

* * * * * * *

It is impossible to contemplate the array of inventions and mechanical adaptations which constitute the recognized agencies of civilization, without noting at once that they are the products of mind. Every one who reflects at all will observe this. But at this point many persons fall under a misapprehension. The last exercise of intelligence is invention, and unless we analyze the sources and grounds of invention we are inclined to ascribe the sole credit for it to the inventor.

* * * * * * *

It would be easy to specify cases; but a little reflection will direct every reader's thought to the underlying principle of any specific invention; and space at present command does not suffice for adequate presentation of particulars. But I offer a few condensed statements. The whole industry in colors and dyeing has been revolutionized by the isolation of alizarin, in 1868, by Graebe and Liebermann, who found it derivable from anthracene. Gun-cotton which, in collodion, so long played an essential part in wet-plate photography, was a result of the laboratory studies of Schönbein in 1845. Nitro-glycerine resulted from the researches prosecuted by Sobrero in 1846 on the interactions of nitric acid and glycerine.

* * * * * * *

Electricity in our times plays a part which has given civilization a marked impulse. Annihilate the electric telegraph, the telephone, the processes of electroplating, the electrotype, and electric lighting, and we should feel ourselves set back for ages. But note the progressive evolution of the scientific principles on which these inventions are based. Frictional electricity had been known for centuries, when Galvani in 1790, and Volta in 1800, showed that electricity could be excited by chemical action upon certain metals disposed in a particular way. It has since been shown that galvanic electricity is identical with frictional electricity. But its chemical effects far transcend those of ordinary electricity. Water, earths, and alkalis were decomposed as early as 1807. Later, the "battery" has been so improved by Wollaston, Hare, Sturgeon, Smee, Grove, Daniell, Bunsen, Léclanché, and others that prolonged and efficient currents could be produced. Thus the art of electroplating sprang up, the first patents for which were taken out in 1840 by Elkington in England and Ruolz in France. Thus also the very important art of electrotype, invented by Jacobi in 1839, and now extensively employed in the production of copies of wood-engravings.

In 1820, the mutual relations of electricity and magnetism were discovered by Oersted, and the physicists of Europe occupied themselves in investigating the phenomena. Arago first observed the power of a current of electricity to induce magnetism in a bar of soft iron, and the loss of the magnetism on the breaking of the current, though the process might be repeated indefinitely. Thus arose the "temporary magnet," which was turned to account so happily in the electric telegraph, the culmination of a succession of contributions of accessory principles, by Weber and Gauss, Steinheil, who discovered the earth current,

Wheatstone, and others. Morse, at length, in 1835, after devising his ingenious alphabet, and contributing the "relay" for the re-enforcement of the current, succeeded in the invention of the working electric telegraph, and in 1844 brought it into practical operation. To this time the scientific principles worked out by a long series of distinguished names remained comparatively unfruitful; and the sons of science labored without the encouragement of pecuniary reward, or even of popular appreciation. Yet the contributions of this long line of devotees of pure science were the essential prerequisites of the invention of Morse. To whom then belongs the world's homage for the bestowment of this inestimable agency of intelligence, society, business, and civilization?

* * * * * * *

In 1824 Arago discovered the magnetism of rotation, or influence of a rotating copper plate on the direction of a magnetic needle suspended over it, a mere isolated phenomenon of no practical value, but when thought out and evolved by skillful experimentation, a principle which led to results of the greatest importance. In 1831 Faraday discovered the principle of induction of electric currents, something which can not be here explained, but a truth which constituted an essential link in the series of conceptions which led to the construction of magneto-electric machines for the development of great supplies of electricity. The first was invented in 1833 by Pixii. Successive improvements have been suggested by Siemens, Wilde, Wheatstone, Paccinotti, who invented the circular magnet, and Gramme. The principle of the convertibility of electricity into heat and light led to the application of these prolonged currents to the lighting of buildings and streets.

* * * * * * *

It would require a volume to furnish any adequate exposition of the indebtedness of the great modern inventions to pure science. Without a broad survey the reader will not be in a position to appreciate the full force of the consideration here presented. I trust, however, that the few specifications made may throw sufficient light on the genesis of inventions to enable the intelligent reader to understand that an unbroken continuity of dependence reaches from the prosperity and happiness of our daily experience back to inventions which have multiplied a thousand-fold the productiveness of human effort and the sources of human enjoyment, and back still through lines of unostentatious and generally uncompensated investigators who, through terms of years, have contributed to the body of scientific principles which have found their final applications in these splendid and beneficent results.

I desire also to read a few extracts from the testimony of John W. Powell, Director of the United States Geological Survey, before the joint commission of the Senate and House of Representatives to "consider the present organizations of the Signal Service, Geological Survey, Coast and Geodetic Survey, and the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department, with the view to secure greater efficiency and economy of administration:"

Q. There are large deposits of borax in the country, are there not?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Who discovered the process of the formation of borax?
A. It was a joint discovery; hardly the discovery of any one man; but the earlier discoveries in this country were made by members of the organization of the Geological Survey of California, and they have continued to the present time.
Q. Have you not investigated the actual process of the crystallization?
A. Yes, sir. The general study of borax began with the study of the old lakes of the Far West which I previously mentioned.
Q. You came upon the fact that borax is in process of deposition in the United States?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. So that practically the supply of borax is inexhaustible?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Is it not also true that the United States is one of the largest producers of borax in the world?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Will not these discoveries greatly reduce the price of borax?
A. I think so.
Q. Have you not discovered in the Geological Survey that the soda found in the Western country is in a state of preparation by act of nature, which takes from its cost of production in a commercial way something like one-third?
A. That I believe is true.
Q. In other words, you have found soda in the United States deposited by a natural process, and in such form that you have it at one-third the cost of soda found in Germany and other parts of the world?
A. That is what I think we can say.
Q. Are these areas large or small?
A. Very large. The whole area has not yet been traced out.
Q. How much has been traced out?
A. Many thousand square miles.
Q. And is it capable of extraction under the conditions I have named?
A. Yes, sir; in many localities.
Q. Now as to the discoveries in petroleum. Has your survey led to information anywhere in regard to new petroleum fields?
A. To some extent new fields have been discovered, especially in Colorado. May I explain a little further?
Mr. MORGAN. Yes, go on.
A. The quantities of petroleum in the United States are enormous, with no possibility of exhaustion within any reasonable length of time; but the difficulty is that a very small per cent. of the petroleum can be used.
Q. The geologic investigations being made, whether made by your survey or otherwise, I suppose will naturally lead to the discovery of those localities where petroleum can be made available through wells or in some way?
A. Yes, sir. Large quantities of crude petroleum are known to exist at and near the surface in the Far West.
Q. What I want to get at is whether geologic research is useful in developing the use of petroleum.
A. Geologic research directly leads to the discovery of the petroleum fields, and the study of this petroleum in the laboratory of the Geological Survey leads to the discovery of methods by which crude petroleum may be refined.
Q. Have you discovered any fertilizing substances?
A. To some extent.
Q. What are they?
A. Phosphates; more in the Southern States than elsewhere. We have discovered pretty large deposits in Georgia, Florida, Alabama, and Mississippi.
Q. Have you discovered any nitrates in the West?
A. Yes, sir; in some limited quantities.
Q. Where have you discovered these nitrates?
A. Chiefly in the Green River country, the Snake River country, and in some of the mountains of Utah.
Q. In the mountains or plains?
A. In the mountains and bad lands.
Q. Suppose there was a great supply of nitrates in the plains of the West, would you consider that was a valuable acquisition and source of wealth to the country?
A. I would.
Q. So you have felt encouraged in your geologic researches in the development which you have made in soda, borax, petroleum, and nitrates?
A. Yes, sir; in all of this except perhaps the nitrates. The discoveries in that direction have been meager.
Q. How about deposits of sulphur?
A. Very large deposits of sulphur have been discovered. Some of them by myself personally.
Q. I notice the attention of the Senate has been recently called to some sharp necessity for preserving the forests at the headwaters of the Missouri, and it is thought one of the reasons why that proposition has been brought forward (in fact, a bill has been brought forward by Senator EDMUNDS) is that the preservation of the forests is necessary to prevent the great inflow of water from the melting snows of the different ranges of mountains there. Do you think it would be important, in connection with the proposition of preventing the rapid flow of the waters into these streams, to extend the topography of that country so as to know how far the forests affect this question?
A. As the topography extends over the country it maps that timber.
Q. One other suggestion I wish to call your attention to, because I saw an allusion to it in a former paper of yours. You speak of the possibility of relieving the Lower Mississippi of its surplus water by diverting the water after the snowfall from the Upper Missouri and other tributaries of that country. Do you think there is likely to be a practical outcome of that idea?
A. Senator, you touch me on a question in which I am very deeply interested. My judgment is that the only practical way of relieving the valley of the Mississippi, from Cairo to its mouth, of its floods is to take out the waters of the upper streams and use them in irrigation.
Q. Now, have you inquired into the topography of the upper country, the waters of the Missouri, for instance; have you a sufficient acquaintance with the general lay of the country to influence you to believe that such a scheme is practicable as an engineering project?
A. I have no doubt of it. I can now show in a general way where all of this water can be taken and utilized in irrigatton, and to a large extent I can show to what particular lands they must be taken; and if we extend the topographic survey over that region as it has begun, we shall be able to show exactly where the water is to be taken out of the channels of the streams and spread over the ground in irrigation.
Q. Instead of the water flowing out of the gulf, your view is that it can be, by some practical engineering process, diverted and made to make crops?
A. For every acre redeemed from the overflow in the South two acres on the great plains can be made fertile.
Q. If this proposition is a correct one, then it occurs to me, and I will ask you if you concur in it, that taking the topography of that part of the United States by very exact methods would be a work of great public benefit not merely to those Territories in the way of increasing the value of the lands, but also of the lower part of the Mississippi River to prevent overflows?
A. I most fully concur.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you made any estimate of the probable cost of such diversion of the waters of the Upper Missouri?
A. The waters of each of the small tributaries must be diverted in detail. Each little stream must be taken out, because to take out a great river implies great hydraulic works. The sources must be reached. The small streams must be taken out and the cost will be reduced thereby very greatly. In relation to the cost, it must be said that it can not be very definitely fixed without first preparing a plan necessary for the works therefor. But there is another method for obtaining an approximate cost. There has been much experience in this country in irrigation, and irrigation works of great magnitude have been constructed in California, Utah, and Colorado. The cost of such irrigation works is pretty well known, and their cost is usually reckoned in relation to the amount of country irrigated; that is, it is said that it costs so much, whatever that amount may be, for the irrigation of land per acre.

Now, in Utah, experience has shown that in the irrigation of 375,000 acres the cost of the hydraulic works therefor has averaged about $6 per acre, but varying from $1.50 to about $11 per acre. In California, where irrigating works have been established on a still greater scale, the cost per acre is somewhat less.

* * * * * * *

The work of geodesy now is to discover the minor deformations of the earth. The general form and size of the earth are known with a fair approximation to accuracy; but geodesists are searching for a little greater accuracy in this respect. They are also searching for local inequalities or deformations. The earth is not a symmetric figure; the object is to discover the deformations by which it is rendered asymmetric. In order to do that other instruments and methods are employed in addition to those mentioned by Mr. Colonna; gravimetric determinations are made with a pendulum; and most refined astronomic work now is also used; and very refined leveling is necessary.

But further: This subject of geodesy, by which the form of the earth is learned, has come to be closely related to geology, which has to do with the constitution of the earth, or, at least, with the constitution of its crust, so that to some extent, at least, and doubtless in the future to a greater extent, pendulum determinations have interest to the geologist as well as to the geodesist. The surface of the earth, or rather the crust of the earth, seems to be in an isogravic condition. Suppose a circle were described on the surface of the earth, say 100 or 200 miles in diameter, which would represent the base of a cone the apex of which should be at the center of the earth; and suppose that the base of this cone should be situated in some mountain region. Then let another similar cone be considered the base of which is in some valley or at the surface of the sea. Now, it seems probable that these cones would equal each other in weight, although the cone in the mountain region would be the higher. They would balance each other.

* * * * * * *

I also read a few extracts from a letter of Professor Powell to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON]:

A hundred years ago the present system of land surveys for the parceling of unoccupied tracts was organized. The plan adopted was not the result of accident, but was very carefully considered for a series years by able statesmen and engineers, inspired and guided by Thomas Jefferson, and it was proposed that a most thorough survey should be made of the public lands. For this reason the plan included not only an accurate parceling of the lands, but also such a survey as would constitute a proper basis for all cadastral maps. It was also designed to be a proper topographic survey which should subserve all industrial and military purposes; and later in the history of the country, under the leadership of Lewis Cass, a geologic survey was ingrafted upon the system, and a series of eminent geologists were employed to do the work.

The plan, so comprehensive and wise, was adopted after careful investigation and deliberation, and had it been executed according to the original intent, the country would now have completed by far the greatest and most important geographic survey on the face of the globe. Unfortunately, one vicious principle was early incorporated in the plan, namely, that the work should be given out under contract, not to the lowest bidder, but to preferred bidders, a method which resulted in great extravagance on the one hand and deterioration of the work upon the other that it finally subserved but the single purpose of parceling the lands. Since the organization of these surveys up to the present time $35,000,000 have been expended therefor.

These articles demonstrate most conclusively that our inventions of rapid transit, of communication by telegraphy, of the telephone, our great inventions in gunnery, in the construction of ships—all these are the result of scientific researches, of original research carried on largely by the instrumentality of the Government. The connection of the Geological Survey with the practical industries of the country is traced up in a most convincing and conclusive manner. The connection with the overflows of the Mississippi River, the future protection against the vast destruction of property that occurs from those overflows, is clearly demonstrated to be within the reach of geological investigation and geological science or original research which can be conducted alone by the Government.

These important facts point to the conclusion reached long ago by that great man Francis Bacon, of the necessity of a system of "original research" to establish the "commerce between mind and things," in a great invitation of original research founded and maintained by the Government and continuing its labors from one generation to another.

Therefore, as this is the only branch of our Government devoted to original research, to purely scientific attainments, and conducted by a man who, whatever may be said of him, has obtained a world-wide reputation among scientists as a man not only of great theoretical knowledge and of great industry but of great scientific attainments, I am of the opinion that the salary should be preserved at a compensation which is worthy of the character of the man and the importance of the service in practical results and to the world in scientific results.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. GEORGE. That is a reduction of Major Powell's salary $1,000, I understand.

Mr. CALL. It is.

Mr. DAWES. I was not in the committee when the amendment was agreed to. I regret exceedingly that the committee adopted the amendment.

The amendment was rejected, there being on a division—ayes 5, noes 34.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2297, in the appropriations for the office of the Director of the Geological Survey, the Committee on Appropriations proposed to strike out "three thousand" and insert "two thousand five hundred;" so as to read:

Executive officer, $2,500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Was the preceding amendment agreed to or disagreed to?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was disagreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then this ought to be disagreed to, because the gentleman who is the executive officer is one of the best workers in the world.

Mr. PLUMB. Yes; his service is worth more to the Government a great deal than that of the chief. It is an outrage to put the chief at $6,000 and reduce this officer to $2,500.

Mr. DAWES. I trust the amendment will not be agreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2310 it is proposed to reduce the total appropriations for the office of the Director of the Geological Survey from $35,540 to $34,040.

Mr. ALLISON. That amendment ought to be disagreed to.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment passed over will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2675, in the appropriations for the office of the Solicitor of the Treasury, after the word "thousand," the committee report to insert "five hundred;" so as to read:

For compensation of the Solicitor of the Treasury, $4,500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask the chairman what is now the lawful compensation of the Solicitor of the Treasury?

Mr. ALLISON. I answer as I have in many other instances that the Revised Statutes provide for a salary of $4,000, but since 1874 the actual salary of this officer has been $4,500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the annual appropriation?

Mr. ALLISON. The annual appropriation.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to say in one word that what I am in favor of is to have this bill provide for precisely what the already existing law says these salaries shall be, great or small, and change the salaries in a regular bill for that purpose. Therefore it is not out of any want of confidence in the Solicitor of the Treasury or with any reference as to how much the man ought to have that I vote against this amendment and not to raise his salary, it being what is the regular lawful statutory compensation.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the amendment raise the salary?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It raises the salary $500. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment passed over was, in line 2679, in the total of the appropriations for the office of the Solicitor of the Treasury, to increase the amount from $27,580 to $28,080.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That will have to be corrected a little.

Mr. ALLISON. It must be disagreed to, as the amendment just passed upon was rejected.

The amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments of the Committee on Appropriations are now disposed of.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask the Chair to return to line 1159, in the appropriations for the office of the assistant treasurer at Cincinnati. After the word "dollars" in that line, and before the word "night," I propose to insert "two," and to change "watchman" to "watchmen;" in line 1160, after the word "dollars" where it first occurs, to insert the word "each;" and, in the same line, after the word "dollars" where it occurs the second time, to strike out "two" and insert "one," and to change "watchmen" to "watchman;" and after the word "dollars," in line 1161, to strike out the word "each;" so as to read:

Two night watchmen, $720 each; messenger, $600; one watchman, at $120.

I will state that I move this amendment on a letter from the Secretary of the Treasury with reference to the assistant treasurer's office at Cincinnati, where they are in a new building requiring an additional watchman.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ALLISON. In line 1162 the total should be changed by adding $600 to the amount. The amendment just agreed to makes $600 more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The total will be changed to correspond.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In line 2252, after the word "each" and after the semicolon, I move to insert:

To enable the Commissioner of Labor to collect and to report to Congress the statistics of and relating to marriage and divorce in the several States and Territories, and in the District of Columbia, $10,000.

Mr. ALLISON. Why not insert it as a new paragraph after line 2254?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I want to get the totals altogether. That is the only reason.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will state that I offer this amendment from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred a bill providing for securing statistics of marriage and divorce in the United States, as involving social information in regard to the social conditions of our people like a great deal of other information we get of great value and importance.

The committee on investigation found that it was clearly within the present authority of the Bureau of Labor under an express statute broad enough to cover the obtaining of such statistics. Therefore the committee instead of reporting the bill favorably, as we otherwise would, reported an amendment to be applied to this bill, appropriating a small sum to enable the Commissioner of Labor to do that part of his duty, with which he is now charged by law.

Mr. PLUMB. That seems to be a pretty large sum. It will all be done by correspondence.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I will state that the committee thought that same way too, but the Commissioner of Labor came up here, a gentleman whom I had never met before, but knew very well of course by reputation as a man of uprightness and intelligence, and he urged the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to put it up to $25,000, and for this reason: In order to make these statistics of value it will be desirable to go back for a few years and to go to every judicial record office and executive record office of marriages and divorces in each one of the States, and by correspondence and otherwise gather together, say for the last ten or fifteen years, all these statistics, instead of beginning now, as the committee had in mind, and going forward from now. To do that would require the expenditure, as the Commissioner stated, and showed to my satisfaction, of a very considerable appropriation; he thought $25,000. While I should be quite willing to vote for that, I do not feel authorized to offer it, for the reason that the committee reported this only at $10,000, and I should not be in order in moving to increase it. With the $10,000 he can start, and from this time forth gather together year by year the annual statistics of that question which enters so largely into the foundation of society; so that this sum I am sure is not at all too large.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no doubt that all the information could be obtained during the fiscal year for $2,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then this appropriation will enable the Commissioner to go back.

Mr. PLUMB. Of course if he sends out agents to do the work and to visit the various courts throughout the United States to gather information, which the clerks of those courts would cheerfully furnish for a mere pittance if not for nothing, we may multiply the sum so that $100,000 would be totally insufficient. My belief is that if the Commissioner were to do that business as any private individual would do his business the sum of $5,000 would be ample, even to go back for ten years.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He does not think so, and I think he is an honest man.

Mr. PLUMB. I understand that the trail of the serpent is over them all. Notwithstanding the commendation of the former Secretary of the Interior, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] yesterday of the various Government employés who do not want to spend public money, they will spend $25,000; and if the Senator has his doubt about it he can make it $50,000 and they will spend that, and double that and they will still spend it. He need not be alarmed about the non-expenditure of public money that is appropriated.

But what I mean to say is that the amount is unnecessarily large to enable the bureau to do all that the Senator from Vermont has in contemplation to be done. It will be done by circulars sent out to each clerk of a court that grants divorces, and a mere trifle, a small sum of money, a few dollars, five or ten dollars probably, or for nothing in the majority of cases, would suffice to compensate the clerks of the courts for referring to their records and returning an answer to the inquiries made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I must think that would be the true way to do it; and I have no doubt that this gentleman, who is not of my way of thinking about politics or much else except to do honest work, as I believe he wishes to do, will do it that way.

Now let us look at it in that way, beginning with marriages. There are thirty-eight States in this Union and there are nine Territories and there is the District of Columbia, making forty-eight distinct municipal organizations. The number of counties in the United States must be more than a thousand. This is a mere rough estimate, you understand, but I say the number must be more than a thousand. Every county probably now in the United States has a court with divorce jurisdiction. Formerly in Vermont, for instance, it was only the supreme court that had jurisdiction in matters of divorce, although that sat in every county and you would have to go to every county then; but now in Vermont and in most States the inferior courts have the power to hear divorce cases, so that every county would have to be resorted to for the statistics of divorce.

When you come to the statistics of marriage, take the New England old-fashioned Puritan system of towns, as we call them. In every town in New England, I presume in every State—it is certainly so with those I have in my mind—every town clerk's office is to contain the record of the certificates of marriages. In the little State of Vermont alone there are two hundred and forty-six or two hundred and fifty towns, certainly more than two hundred and forty, that would have to be resorted to to get in that little State the statistics of marriages, because the town is the initial autonomy of our social system, where the records of all the social affairs of the inhabitants that their law has to do with are kept.

So in the way stated by my friend from Kansas it is clear to my mind that this sum will not be at all extravagant to begin merely now at the beginning.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the amendment by reducing the sum proposed to be appropriated from $10,000 to $5,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. A change should be made in the footing at the close of the paragraph to correspond with the amendment just agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The amount in line 2253 should be increased $10,000, making it $62,960.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection the footing will be changed to correspond.

Mr. SHERMAN. There is a simple matter of justice which I desire to have done. In line 19, I move to strike out "one hundred and two dollars and forty" and to insert in lieu thereof "two hundred and twenty dollars;" so as to put the salary of the officer there provided for on the same footing as the clerk of a committee. The gentleman who occupies the position has been for a long time an employé of a Senate committee, and has had a salary of $2,220, and by being made secretary of the Vice-President his salary is reduced to twenty-one hundred and some odd dollars.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It line 19 it is proposed to strike out "one hundred and two dollars and forty" and to insert "two hundred and twenty dollars" after the word "thousand;" so as to read:

For secretary to the Vice President, or in case of the death or inability of the Vice President, of the President of the Senate, $2,220.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The total footing in the paragraph will be changed. If there is no objection the Clerk will make the change.

Mr. ALLISON. The Secretary has that authority.

Mr. MAHONE. In line 69, after the words "clerk to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate," I move to insert "clerk to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds."

The object of the amendment is to place the clerk of the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds on the same footing with the clerk of the like committee in the House of Representatives, and if I may be permitted to say on a footing with the growing importance of this committee in the Senate, looking to the importance and magnitude of the work committed to it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Virginia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 2362, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "fifteen" and insert "five;" so as to reduce the appropriation for the clerks in the office of the surveyor-general of California from $15,000 to $5,000.

It will be observed that an appropriation of $5,000 is made for the office of the surveyor-general of the State of Colorado for the same purpose. The report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office shows that nearly twice as much money was allotted to the State of Colorado for surveys as was allotted to the State of California. That implies, of course, the performance of a great deal more labor in that office, and I think the sum ought to be cut down.

I wish to say still further that the sundry civil appropriation bill as passed by the House of Representatives makes no provision whatever for continuing public surveys, so that if the Senate should concur in the action of the House of Representatives no public lands will be surveyed during the fiscal year, and yet we shall have an official staff in the shape of surveyors-general and chief clerks and clerks and so on at a cost of $130,000.

For the purpose of getting this subject into conference and putting the Senate in a condition to avail themselves of the proposition of the House that there shall be no surveys of public lands during the fiscal year, I move to strike out $15,000 and insert $5,000; and for the reason I before stated I shall move also to amend the other several paragraphs relating to this subject, so that the conference committee may have it in its power to take jurisdiction of the matter according to the light which may be furnished by the subsequent action of the Senate on the question of public surveys.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I shall move an amendment in regard to each one of the paragraphs about surveyors-general, so as to leave this matter as far as possible within the control of the conference committee. In line 2355, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "two" and insert one;" so as to read:

And for clerks in his office, $1,500.

That is in regard to the clerk-hire in the office of the surveyor-general of the Territory of Arizona. I shall move to reduce each one of these items, so that this question may be considered by the committee of conference in connection with such legislation as the two Houses may determine upon in regard to the public surveys.

Mr. TELLER. Whatever may be the fact about the surveys in Arizona, and in Montana, Idaho, and Colorado, the surveyor-general must keep up his office and he must devote his whole time to that service.

Mr. PLUMB. I am not cutting down his salary.

Mr. TELLER. Oh, I thought it was his salary which was proposed to be reduced.

Mr. PLUMB. No, I do not propose to reduce any salaries. I propose simply to reduce the clerk-hire and put it in a shape that the conference committee when they come to consider the question whether there shall be surveys or not may consider in connection with that how much clerk-hire is necessary in view of whatever emergency may be presented. If there are to be no surveys of our lands during the fiscal year, then of course the clerk-hire in the office of the surveyors-general ought to be diminished.

Mr. TELLER. If the amendment is for that purpose, I do not make any objection.

Mr. CALL. What office did the Senator from Kansas specify?

Mr. PLUMB. I shall move the same amendment in regard to all of them, simply to leave the matter so that it may be adjusted hereafter by the committees of both Houses with reference to whatever legislation may be taken in the sundry civil bill in regard to continuing the public surveys. If they are continued, then of course we want all this clerk-hire, but if they are not continued, then manifestly some of it can be eliminated.

Mr. CALL. I can speak for the surveyor-general of the State of Florida, that there is a large area of country there which requires to be surveyed.

Mr. PLUMB. But the Senator did not hear my statement. The sundry civil appropriation bill as it passed the House makes no appropriation whatever for surveys for the fiscal year. If the Senate should agree to that, then no surveys can take place during the fiscal year; and if that is the case, of course we do not need this clerk-hire in the various offices of the surveyors-general.

Mr. CALL. Do you propose not to make any surveys?

Mr. PLUMB. I am only speaking about what has already been done. I want to leave it in such a way that if the Senate shall concur in the action of the House we may have the expenses of the offices of the surveyors-general limited in proportion.

Mr. CALL. It is very sudden to start a question of that kind now. I do not think the amendment ought to be agreed to. The bill has been prepared very carefully. We can not tell what will be done on the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. ALLISON. The estimates for clerk-hire in the offices of the surveyors-general are based upon the fact that surveys are being made.

Mr. PLUMB. Yes.

Mr. ALLISON. If there are to be no surveys, I think the Senator from Kansas is right in the suggestion that we ought not to keep up this large amount for clerk-hire.

Mr. CALL. But who knows? There is no information that this body can act upon. This question is started all at once here.

Mr. ALLISON. We know perfectly well that the estimate for clerks to surveyors-general has been made from year to year and appropriated for from year to year on the basis of an appropriation of $350,000 annually for public surveys. If there are no surveys to be made, it is manifest that we do not need any clerks in the offices of the surveyors-general.

Mr. CALL. That is very true, but it is equally manifest that the officer who submitted the estimate to this body of three hundred and odd thousand dollars for surveys is impeached very gravely by the Senator from Kansas and the Senator from Iowa when they say that there will possibly be no necessity for the appropriation, a fact in regard to which we know nothing. I do know that there is a necessity for surveys in Florida.

Mr. ALLISON. Would that be true, I ask the Senator from Florida, if there were no surveys to be made in the State?

Mr. CALL. Then they would not want the clerks.

Mr. ALLISON. So I say.

Mr. CALL. But you assume that the clerks will not be needed because there may not be a provision or some other bill for surveys to be made.

Mr. PLUMB. I have been informed by members of the other House that the sundry civil appropriation bill as passed by the House makes no provision for continuing the surveys of public land, and I want to put this thing in such shape that it may be under control and that we shall not be placed in the attitude of keeping up an apparently useless force of clerks, conceding as I do that if it shall finally be enacted and we shall have the surveys continued of course this clerk-hire will then be restored in conference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 2368, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "five" and insert "three;" so as to reduce the appropriation for clerks in the office of the surveyor-general of Colorado from $5,000 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 2375, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "nine" and insert "three;" so as to reduce the appropriation for clerks in the office of the surveyor-general of Dakota from $9,000 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 2381, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so as to reduce the appropriation for the clerks in the office of the surveyor-general of Minnesota from $3,000 to $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 2386, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "two" and insert "one;" so as to reduce the appropriation for clerks in the office of the surveyor-general of Florida from $2,000 to $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 2394, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "two" and insert "one;" so as to reduce the appropriation for clerks in the office of the surveyor-general of Idaho from $2,500 to $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 2401, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "ten" and insert "three;" so as to reduce the appropriation for clerks in the office of the surveyor-general of Louisiana from $10,000 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 2410, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "eight" and insert "three;" so as to reduce the appropriation for clerks in the office of the surveyor-general of Montana from $8,000 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 2417, in regard to the office of the surveyor-general of Nevada, an amendment has already been agreed to. I do not like to go into that.

Mr. ALLISON. That is all right.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 2424, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "seven" and insert "three;" so as to reduce the appropriation for the clerks in the office of the surveyor-general of New Mexico from $7,000 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 2435, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "two" and insert "one;" so as to reduce the appropriation for clerks in the office of the surveyor-general of Oregon from $2,500 to $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 2441, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "three" and insert "one;" so as to reduce the appropriation for clerks in the office of the surveyor-general of Utah from $3,000 to $1,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 2448, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "six" and insert "three;" so as to reduce the appropriation for clerks in the office of the surveyor-general of Washington Territory from $6,000 to $3,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In line 2455, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "three" and insert "one;" so as to reduce the appropriation for clerks in the office of the surveyor-general of Wyoming Territory from $3,500 to $1,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. That completes the list, and gets things in such a shape that the conference committee can govern the matter.

Mr. HAWLEY. I am instructed by the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment to offer an amendment on page 19, the first one, to insert, after the word "dollars," in line 454, the words:

One clerk of class 3.

I will say in regard to this amendment, if it is necessary to say anything, that the chairman of the Civil Service Commission urgently requires it as—I am quoting his words—as "absolutely necessary for a proper discharge of the routine business of the commission and keeping of its records."

The clerical force of the commission now consists, besides the secretary and stenographer, of one clerk of class 2 and one clerk of class 1. The appropriation bill just passed by the House provides for the same force for the coming year. It is utterly inadequate, being barely sufficient (with the help of the messenger, an expert type-writer, and the laborer, who is constantly employed on clerical work) for the dispatch of the absolutely current work, leaving important records and tabulations which should be kept up to date untouched.

There appear to be a secretary, a stenographer, and two clerks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. At the end of line 450, after the word "dollars," it is proposed to insert:

One clerk of class 3.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. In line 455, after the third word "one," I move to insert:

Two clerks at $900 each.

The commission desired the clerks at $1,000 each. The recommendation of the Appropriations Committee to me was that it should be made $900.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be agreed to if there be no objection.

Mr. VANCE. I object to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Carolina objects. The Chair will submit the question on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have one more amendment to offer in accordance with a regular estimate submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury. In line 465, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "three" and insert "four," to the end that this year the contingent expenses, &c., of the Civil Service Commission may be $4,000 instead of $3,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. HAWLEY. Let me say that there is in another bill a provision for removing the Civil Service Commission—it must move anyhow—to the City Hall, on Judiciary Square, and there is an appropriation of $11,000 provided for fitting up rooms there. Their removal is inevitable, and so an increase of $1,000 is desired in the appropriation for contingent expenses with regard to that. The present appropriation of $3,000 is barely adequate under the present conditions.

Mr. ALLISON. I trust the Senator will not press that amendment. There is a provision in the sundry civil appropriation bill which I think will take care of that matter.

Mr. HAWLEY. Does it provide for fitting up new rooms?

Mr. ALLISON. I understand that it does, and if it does not that can be provided for.

Mr. HAWLEY. Then I have nothing to say with that understanding.

Mr. COKE. Mr. President——

Mr. VANCE. What has become of the last amendment offered by the Senator from Connecticut?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. COKE. I find that section 276 of the Revised Statutes reads thus:

There shall be connected with the Department of the Treasury six auditors of accounts, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be known as the First, Second, Third, Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Auditors, respectively. Each auditor is entitled to a salary of $4,000 a year.

These Auditors are respectively given $3,600, commencing on page 30 with the First Auditor. I rise to move an amendment in each one of these cases increasing the salary from $3,600 to $4,000, the amount prescribed by the statute.

These salaries are fixed by law. If they are too large the law ought to be repealed. As long as the law stands unrepealed upon the statute-book it is too small a thing for a great Government like this to disobey its own laws and cut down the salaries of its officers. The law prescribes $4,000 as the salary of these several officers. They are granted but $3,600 in this bill. I move that $3,600 be stricken out as to each one of them and $4,000 inserted.

Mr. ALLISON. Is an amendment in order to increase the appropriation?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is if it is to carry out existing law. The Senator from Texas says it is the existing law.

Mr. ALLISON. Of course, then, I can not make the point of order. The Senator from Texas may be right as to the statutory compensation. I think he read from the Revised Statutes.

Mr. COKE. Yes, sir; section 276.

Mr. ALLISON. The law increasing the compensation of these Auditors I think was passed in 1873.

Mr. HARRIS. Diminishing, you mean.

Mr. ALLISON. No, increasing. Prior to that time the salary of the Auditors was $3,000 each per annum. In 1873 we passed an act, as all remember, which increased the compensation of Senators and Representatives and all the bureau officers, &c. My impressson is that when that law was repealed it carried these Auditors' salaries with it, but I am not certain as to that.

However, I submit to the Senator from Texas that, inasmuch as the four Auditors of the Treasury named by him served since 1875 at a salary of $3,600, the new Auditors who have just come in, fresh to their duties, ought to be willing to go on at least for one year at the same rate. I submit that to the judgment of the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment proposed by the Senator from Texas. It will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 714, it is moved to strike out "three thousand and six hundred" and insert "four thousand;" so as to read:

For the First Auditor of the Treasury, $4,000.

Mr. MAXEY. The amendment proposed by my colleague simply gives the salary that the law provides for, and the appropriation bill as it stands gives a salary beneath what the law gives. The only object and design is to give the salary fixed by law. If that should not be the law it ought to be repealed, but as long as it is the law let us obey it.

Mr. HARRISON. May I ask the Senator from Texas if he would be willing to apply that throughout the whole bill?

Mr. MAXEY. Yes, I would.

Mr. HARRISON. Then we should have to reduce some of the salaries from the amounts appropriated in the bill.

Mr. COKE. In reply to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] I have to say that there is no law on the statute-book modifying section 276 which I have just read. That is the law of the land, and I do think that Congress should either observe it or repeal it. Officers are appointed under this law with the guarantee by the law of a salary of $4,000. It is a law passed by Congress, and if the bill passes in its present shape without the adoption of the amendment there is a distinct repudiation by Congress to the extent of $400 of its own obligation to its own officers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE].

Mr. ALLISON. I desire to raise a point of order upon the amendment. Notwithstanding it was stated distinctly by the Senator from Texas that $4,000 is the statutory salary of the Auditors, I think the statutory salary was fixed by the act of 1873, which is known as the "salary grab" act (I dislike to use that phraseology in reference to it), and therefore was carried into the Revised Statutes; but on the 20th day of January, 1874, after the Revised Statutes were adopted, that law was repealed, which carried the repeal of these officers' salaries. I have not had time to examine it carefully.

Mr. COKE. Has the Senator got the law before him?

Mr. ALLISON. I have the repealing law before me, and I also have the law relating to these officers. The act of March 3, 1873, provides that from and after the 1st day of July, 1873, the salary of the Supervising Architect, &c., running along down through these officers, shall be such an amount, and fixes their salaries.

Mr. COKE. Was that an appropriation act?

Mr. ALLISON. It was an appropriation act.

Mr. COKE. Then it only applied to that year, just as this one would.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, it does; for it repeals all acts inconsistent therewith.

Mr. ALLISON. So I think it is not clear that the statutory salary is the salary named by the Senator from Texas. However, I am willing that the vote may be taken directly upon the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Texas.

Mr. COKE. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee, in order that we may vote understandingly, to see what this reform means, how long the salary of these officers has been as a fact under the action of Congress at the sum mentioned in the bill as distinguished from the sum mentioned in the Revised Statutes?

Mr. ALLISON. Ten years.

Mr. GEORGE. How is that? I should like to hear that.

Mr. ALLISON. The salary of the First Auditor for ten years has been $3,600 a year.

Mr. GEORGE. For the ten years last past?

Mr. ALLISON. For the ten years last past. I will also state that I think I was mistaken with reference to the statutory repeal. I think the Senator from Texas is right about it, because I see in 1875–'76 that the salary was appropriated for at $4,000; but for ten years the salary has been $3,600.

Mr. HALE. I wish to ask the chairman of the committee if during these ten years he has ever heard any appeal for raising that salary until this year?

Mr. ALLISON. I do not know that I have, but I am quite sure that if such an appeal had been made it would have been made in vain.

Mr. HALE. The Senator from Texas has appealed.

Mr. COKE. But has there been such a law-abiding administration in power during that time as the present one?

Mr. GEORGE. If the salary of these officers has been $3,600 for the past ten years, I should like to hear some good reason for putting it at $4,000 now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE].

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Before the vote is taken I desire to call attention again to the fact that we are increasing the salaries of all officers, it seems to me, who get the largest salaries, and every attempt at economy is made by cutting down the salaries of per diem employés and those who are at the bottom of the ladder. All the $4,500 salaries have been increased to-day to $5,000. Here is a $3,600 salary to be increased to $4,000. How many under clerks, how many per diem laborers have we reduced the pay of in this bill?

Mr. ALLISON. Not one.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. How many messengers have been stricken from the roll of the Senate whose services are necessary? How many firemen have been stricken from the Senate roll whose services the Sergeant-at-Arms says are necessary?

We are economizing in that direction and increasing the salaries of those who have a sufficiency upon which to subsist in the District of Columbia, a sufficiency as they understood it when they came here and took these offices.

Moreover, they are inexperienced men, they are new men, and you propose here now to increase their salaries beyond the amounts that were given to old and experienced officers who had conducted the affairs of the Government here for years.

I was looking to this when I introduced my bill this morning. I have voted against every increase of salary for men who are at the top of the ladder, who are at the head of Departments and bureaus, and I have voted against curtailing the force of the Capitol employés.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE].

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON] who is not present in the Chamber.

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. DAWES (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE.] I do not see him in his seat, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I stated to the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] that if he were out of the Chamber when a vote was taken I would pair with him. I see that he is absent. I notice that his colleague has voted "nay." I should vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. BERRY. I do not know how my colleague would vote.

Mr. HARRISON. I withhold my vote, announcing that I would vote "nay" if I were not paired.

Mr. HEARST (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. STANFORD].

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], being indisposed, left the Chamber and asked me to pair with him. I do not know how he would vote. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON], who is temporarily absent.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. I also wish to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. KENNA], who is detained from the Senate Chamber by sickness, with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. MCMILLAN. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is also detained from the Chamber by sickness, and has been ill for several days.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. No quorum has voted, although much more than a quorum is present.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope the Senator will vote to make a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A number of Senators who are present are paired with absentees.

Mr. HARRISON. It was understood between the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. JONES] and myself that I should vote to make a quorum; I therefore vote "nay."

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], but I vote "nay." I presume he would vote "nay" if he were here.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. ALLISON. He would vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am told that the Senator from Vermont would vote "nay," and I vote "nay."

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], with whose colleague I am paired, has just told me that I could vote to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

Mr. SEWELL. To make a quorum, I vote "nay."

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired on all political questions with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], but as this is not a political question I will vote "yea," to make a quorum.

Mr. GEORGE. If the Senate is without a quorum, as we Democrats came into power on the idea that we were going to——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order.

Mr. GEORGE. I was just going to say to Senators on the other side—— ["Order!"]

Mr. GEORGE. That I want to vote "nay." My vote is "nay."

Mr. SAWYER. I was paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. WILSON], but he said I might vote to make a quorum on any question that was not political. I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 12, nays 29; as follows:

YEAS—12.

Beck,	Coke,	Hampton,	Pugh,
Call,	Evarts,	Maxey,	Ransom,
Camden,	Gray,	Miller,	Voorhees.

NAYS—29.

Allison,	Cullom,	Ingalls,	Spooner,
Berry,	Edmunds,	McMillan,	Teller,
Blair,	Eustis,	Palmer,	Vance,
Brown,	George,	Riddleberger,	Walthall,
Chace,	Hale,	Saulsbury,	Whitthorne.
Cockrell,	Harris,	Sawyer,
Colquitt,	Harrison,	Sewell,
Conger,	Hawley,	Sherman,

ABSENT—35.

Aldrich,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Platt,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	Mahone,	Plumb,
Bowen,	Hearst,	Manderson,	Sabin,
Butler,	Hoar,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Stanford,
Cameron,	Jones of Arkansas,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Van Wyck,
Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Morgan,	Vest,
Dolph,	Jones of Nevada,	Morrill,	Wilson of Iowa,
Fair,	Kenna,	Payne,	Wilson of Md.
Frye,	Logan,	Pike,

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLAIR. In line 69, after the words "Public Buildings and Grounds" as the paragraph now stands amended, I move to insert:

Clerk to the Committee on Education and Labor.

I offer this amendment by direction of the Committee on Education and Labor and I hope that it may be adopted.

Mr. ALLISON. I make the point of order against the amendment.

Mr. BLAIR. The Committee on Education and Labor now has a clerk only for the session, and for the last two Congresses we have been obliged to obtain by action of the Senate a clerk during the vacation. The work of the committee is constantly increasing. It is impossible to get on without the assistance of a clerk. Correspondence during vacation requires some one at the Capitol most of the time. I trust that the amendment may be adopted.

Mr. HARRIS. I move to amend the amendment——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. A point of order having been raised upon the amendment an amendment to it can not be entertained.

Mr. HARRIS. The amendment I was going to move to the amendment is that the clerk of every standing committee be an annual clerk and I would vote for the amendment to the amendment and then vote against the amendment as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa raises a point of order. The point of order is well taken, unless the Senator from New Hampshire introduced the amendment and referred it to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLAIR. The amendment is offered by direction of the Committee on Education and Labor.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It ought to have been referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. BLAIR. The amendment which this would follow, giving an annual clerk to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, was subject to the same objection.

Mr. ALLISON. My attention was diverted for the moment when that amendment was offered.

Mr. BLAIR. The point of order was not raised against that amendment, and I trust when the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, the Committee on the Census, and other committees have annual clerks, the Senate in being generous to them will be at least just to a committee which has, I think, a great deal more work to do. It is impossible for us to get on without a clerk during the vacation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The point of order being made against the amendment it is not debatable.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Senator from Iowa to withdraw his point of order.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be very glad to oblige the Senator, but I do not see how I can. We are obliged to get on with the bill. I will accommodate him in some other way at another time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is not in order.

Mr. MILLER. In line 1896, before the word "thousand," I move to strike out "five" and insert "six."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 1896, before the word "thousand," it is proposed to strike out "five" and insert "six;" so as to read:

Contingent expenses of branch offices at Boston, New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, and San Francisco, including furniture, fuel, lights, rent and care of offices, car-fare and ferriage in visiting merchant vessels, freight, express, telegrams, and other necessary expenses incurred in collecting the latest information for the Pilot Chart, and for other purposes for which the offices were established, $6,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that amendment in order?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is it reported by any committee?

Mr. MILLER. I ask that a letter may be read from the secretary of the Maritime Association.

Mr. ALLISON. It is estimated for in the regular Book of Estimates.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to hear the letter read.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not object to it myself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But let the letter be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The letter will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[The Maritime Association of the Port of New York, Produce Exchange Building, Beaver street. P. O. Station P.]

NEW YORK, June 29, 1886.

DEAR SIR: May we bespeak your good offices in the interest of our ocean commerce on behalf of the Hydrographic Office of the Navy Department. For the benefit of merchant shipping, branch offices have been established at New York, Boston, Philadelphia, Baltimore, New Orleans, and San Francisco, and naval officers have been stationed there to impart to masters of vessels the latest information collected by the Government as to foreign waters, lights, dangers to navigation, &c. They inspect vessels' nuatical instruments, correct their charts, &c., and in return collect from them valuable meteorological data. Through these operations the shipping interest has been materially benefited, no doubt to the extent of saving life and valuable property.

The House, in its legislative and judicial bill, appropriated only $5,000 for the branch offices in place of the $7,000 asked. Even the larger sum will necessitate close economy. The $5,000 we believe will be entirely inadequate, particularly because the operations of the offices are extending as they become better known.

I have the honor to remain, very faithfully, yours,

F. W. HOUGHTON, Superintendent.

Hon. WARNER MILLER.

Mr. GEORGE. Is the point of order sustained?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands not. This is part of the regular estimates of the Department.

Mr. ALLISON. The committee considered it. We tried to keep the bill down as low as we could. We thought they ought to get along with $5,000.

Mr. MILLER. The letter asks for an appropriation of $7,000; but there are only six of these offices, and after consultation with the chairman of the committee we thought it best to make it $6,000; which is a thousand dollars for each office.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

Mr. VANCE. Is there a right to call for a vote on any particular amendment?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will give notice of any amendment he desires a separate vote upon.

Mr. VANCE. I desire a separate vote on the amendment on page 19 giving additional clerks to the Civil Service Commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That will be reserved.

Mr. HARRIS. I want to reserve for a separate vote five amendments, the first of which is in line 109 and the last of which is in line 127. These amendments effect a reduction in the force of the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate, and after the other amendments have been disposed of I will consume about half a minute in stating the reasons why I do not think those amendments ought to be concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendments will be reserved.

Mr. HALE. I reserve all the amendments that increase the salaries of the different heads of bureaus, and I give notice that I will call for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will please designate them. If there be no further reservations the question will be taken on concurring in the amendments not reserved.

Mr. CALL. I ask for a separate vote in the Senate on the amendment in line 2048.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question will be on concurring in the amendments not reserved.

The amendments not reserved were concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reserved amendments will now be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 109, in the appropriations for "Office of Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "twenty-nine" and inserted "twenty-five;" so as to read:

Twenty-five messengers, at $1,440 each.

Mr. HARRIS. I desire to say, and all I desire to say in respect to this matter is this: This amendment and the other four reserved by me make a slight reduction in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms of this body. Seeing these amendments after the Committee of the Whole had acted on them, I sought that officer and asked him to what extent he could afford, if at all, to dispense with the services of this number of persons, and I learned from him that to reduce the present force as indicated by these five amendments will make it somewhat inconvenient, and he will be less able to perform the duties of his office with the same convenience to Senators and with the same facility he can at present. He thinks it would cripple him to some extent. While he is disposed to endeavor to perform his duties with whatever force the Senate chooses to give him, he will be to some extent crippled in the performance of those duties. I am disposed to give him the full measure of force that he desires or needs.

Mr. ALLISON. After saying one word I desire to make a proposition to the Senate in relation to the matter suggested by the Senator from Tennessee.

The committee with reference to the force of the Senate reported exactly what we understood to be the present force outside of the increase made last year on account of the Butler building, and, therefore, I think the Senate can get on with the force provided for in this bill.

Now, having said that much, I ask unanimous consent that to-morrow morning after the morning business is disposed of we shall vote upon these reserved amendments without debate.

Mr. CONGER. Let us vote on them now.

Mr. ALLISON. We shall have a fuller Senate then, and I understand the yeas and nays are to be called upon several of these amendments. I suggest to the Senate that we adjourn now, and to-morrow morning without debate we vote upon these reserved amendments, and in the mean time the clerks will have an opportunity of preparing the bill, and it will not delay us at all.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us vote now.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I desire to ask the Senator a question before that is done. Have we not about ten more committee-rooms than we had three years ago when the Sergeant-at-Arms was inducted into office, and is it not cutting him down two messengers with ten additional committee-rooms?

Mr. CONGER. If the proposition is to vote without debate I desire to say that without the messengers and some of the officers that are cut off here some of the committees of the Senate would have been compelled to ask for an additional clerk. The officers who have performed the duties of clerk for some committees have been overridden with duties, worked night and day, and committees would have been required, except for the assistance of messengers as clerks, to ask for a clerk in two or three cases within my knowledge. I say that without hesitation in regard to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads. There are some two thousand nominations to be acted upon, aside from other business, and it would have been utterly impossible to get along, but for the messengers, without an additional clerk.

Mr. ALLISON. I will modify my suggestion that debate shall be limited to five minutes on these several amendments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. And upon all other amendments that may be offered so as to get your bill through in the course of a month or so.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well. I will adhere to my original proposition.

Mr. VOORHEES. I do not think there can be serious objection to voting on the question of the Sergeant-at-Arms' force at this time and then reserve the other questions.

I do not believe there is anybody in this Chamber or connected with the Senate who desires to reduce the force below what the competent and efficient Sergeant-at-Arms desires. I do not know how much this reduction is. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations says it relates simply to the increase connected with the Butler building. I do not understand it that way; but whether it is that or not, I think the safest thing for the Senate to do is to leave the force as it is now. It has worked acceptably and well, and I know of no reason for this innovation or this reduction. I hope the vote will be taken now and leave matters that will divide the Senate much more than this will, under the five minutes' rule, or any other rule to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] asks unanimous consent that to-morrow without debate the vote shall be taken on the pending amendments.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I can not consent.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I thought the proposition was to limit the debate to five minutes on the amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa withdrew that proposition.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Then I object to this.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make this proposition, Mr. President. I am extremely sorry that this bill apparently for some reason can not be finished to-night; but I do not think it safe for the Senators to tie themselves up by an understanding that we shall vote without any debate on these amendments or any others which may be subject to be offered; and therefore I make this proposition, regretting that apparently we can not get on to-night—I do not know why—and it is that to-morrow morning, immediately after the strict morning business, we vote upon the amendments to this bill and upon its final disposition without any debate except what has always been understood to be the ordinary five minutes or so of explaining amendments and an answer thereto within the same time.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I understand the Senator to say that debate shall be limited to five minutes on any amendments that are to be proposed?

Mr. INGALLS. Five minutes by each person.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Then I understand that amendments which have been debated in committee are not to be debated in the Senate?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, all amendments.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Five minutes applies to all?

Mr. ALLISON. All reserved amendments.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks unanimous consent of the Senate that to-morrow after the strict morning business we proceed under the eighth rule to consider any amendment pending or which shall be offered to this bill. Is there objection?

Mr. CONGER. I think we might as well go along as far as we can to-night.

Mr. ALLISON. Very well.

Mr. CONGER. These little amendments we are prepared to vote upon to-night.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made——

Several SENATORS. Suppose there is no quorum on the vote?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will report the next amendment.

Mr. CALL. I do not think we can get on with the bill to-night.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, subject to the permission of the Senator from Iowa, who has charge of this bill—I will not do it unless it meets his approbration—I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

Mr. ALLISON. I hope not until we have some understanding respecting this bill. I appeal to the Senator from Michigan to allow us to go on to-morrow morning, as suggested by the Senator from Vermont, under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CONGER. Well, in view of the numbers present, I will withdraw my objection to the proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again repeat that the Senator from Vermont asks that adjournment be now had until to-morrow morning, and that to-morrow after the morning business this bill and such amendments as may be proposed be taken up and discussed under the five-minute rule. Is there objection to the proposition? The Chair hears none. It is unanimously agreed to.

Mr. VOORHEES. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, July 2, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, July 1, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

VETO—DES MOINES RIVER LANDS BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a message from the Senate of the United States communicating the veto by the President of the United States of the bill (S. 150) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, with the action of the Senate thereon.

The Clerk will read the veto message.

The Clerk read as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

I return herewith, without approval, and with a statement of my objections thereto, Senate bill No. 150, entitled "An act to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands, in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes."

This proposed legislation grows out of a grant of land made to the Territory of Iowa in the year 1846 to aid in the improvement of the navigation of the Des Moines River.

The language of this grant was such that it gave rise to conflicting decisions on the part of the Government Departments as to its extent, and it was not until 1860 that this question was authoritatively and finally settled by the Supreme Court of the United States. Its decision diminished the extent of the grant to a quantity much less than had been insisted on by certain interested parties, and rendered invalid the titles of parties who held, under the Territory or State of Iowa, lands beyond the limit of the grant fixed by the decision of the court.

For the purpose of validating such titles and to settle all disputes so far as the General Government was concerned, the Congress, in the year 1861, by a joint resolution, transferred to the State of Iowa all the title then retained by the United States to the lands within the larger limits which had been claimed and then held by bona fide purchasers from the State; and in 1862 an act of Congress was passed for the same general purpose.

Without detailing the exact language of this resolution and statute, it certainly seems to be such a transfer and relinquishment of all interests in the land mentioned on the part of the United States as to relieve the Government from any further concern therein.

The questions unfortunately growing out of this grant and the legislation relating thereto have been passed upon by the United States Supreme Court in numerous cases; and as late as 1883 that court, referring to its many previous decisions, adjudged:

"That the act of 1862 (C. 161, 12 Stats., 543) transferred the title from the United States and vested it in the State of Iowa, for the use of its grantees under the river grants."

Bills similar to this have been before Congress for a number of years, and have failed of passage; and at least on one occasion the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate reported adversely upon a measure covering the same ground.

I have carefully examined the legislation upon the subject of this grant, and studied the decisions of the court upon the numerous and complicated questions which have arisen from such legislation, and the positions of the parties claiming an interest in the land covered by said grant; and I can not but think that every possible question that can be raised, or at least that ought to be raised, in any suit relating to these lands, has been determined by the highest judicial authority in the land. And if any substantial point remains yet unsettled, I believe there is no difficulty in presenting it to the proper tribunal.

This bill declares that certain lands which, nearly twenty-four years ago, the United States entirely relinquished are still public lands, and directs the Attorney-General to begin suits to assert and protect the title of the United States in such lands.

If it be true that these are public lands, the declaration that they are so by enactment is entirely unnecessary; and if they are wrongfully withheld from the Government, the duty and authority of the Attorney-General are not aided by the proposed legislation. If they are not public lands because the United States have conveyed them to others, the bill is subject to grave objections as an attempt to destroy vested rights and disturb interests which have long since become fixed.

If a law of Congress could, in the manner contemplated by the bill, change, under the Constitution, the existing rights of any of the parties claiming interests in these lands, it hardly seems that any new questions could be presented to the courts which would do more than raise false hopes and renew useless and bitter strife and litigation.

It seems to me that all controversies which can hereafter arise between those claiming these lands have been fairly remitted to the State of Iowa, and that there they can be properly and safely left; and the Government, through its Attorney-General, should not be called upon to litigate the rights of private parties.

It is not pleasant to contemplate loss threatened to any party acting in good faith, caused by uncertainty in the language of laws or their conflicting interpretation; and if there are persons occupying these lands who labor under such disabilities as prevent them from appealing to the courts for a redress of their wrongs, a plain statute, directed simply to a remedy for such disabilities, would not be objectionable.

Should there be meritorious cases of hardship and loss caused by an invitation on the part of the Government to settle upon lands apparently public, but to which no right or lawful possession can be secured, it would be better, rather than to attempt a disturbance of titles already settled, to ascertain such losses and do equity by compensating the proper parties through an appropriation for that purpose.

A law to accomplish this very object was passed by Congress in the year 1873.

Valuable proof is thus furnished, by the only law ever passed upon the subject, of the manner in which it was thought proper by the Congress at that time to meet the difficulties suggested by the bill now under consideration.

Notwithstanding the fact that there may be parties in the occupancy of these lands who suffer hardship by the application of strict legal principles to their claims, safety lies in the non-interference by Congress with matters which should be left to judicial cognizance; and I am unwilling to concur in legislation which, if not an encroachment upon judicial power, trenches so closely thereon as to be of doubtful expediency, and which at the same time increases the elements of litigation that have heretofore existed and endangers vested rights.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, March 11, 1886.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, pass the bill?

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, this matter is open for debate, I take it?

The SPEAKER. It is.

Mr. PAYSON. Having reported the bill, I desire to be recognized for discussion.

Mr. OATES. I desire to make a motion for a reference of this matter.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield for that purpose?

Mr. PAYSON. No, sir.

Mr. OATES. I trust I will be permitted to make that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can do so when he obtains the floor in his own right.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I do not care to occupy the attention of the House to any great length with reference to the bill, nor the veto message of the President accompanying it. I take it from the discussion which occupied the attention of the House for some time when this bill was passed, that gentlemen who hear me are as familiar perhaps with its details as they would be if the arguments then fully presented were to-day repeated. From the fact that this bill comes before the House now accompanied by a veto message from the President it may be assumed possibly that there are grave questions connected with it which justified or authorized the interposition of the President of the United States in this manner. But this is not so; the veto simply expresses the individual judgment of one man on a question of propriety as to a few poor settlers in Iowa. No question of politics, party policy, or governmental concern is involved—only whether a few poor people may have a standing in court, where under existing law they now do not have.

This question, Mr. Speaker, has been before Congress in different forms, commencing with the Forty-third Congress, and has been from that time until now presented to every Congress. There have been, since it was first presented to the attention of Congress, favorable reports upon bills substantially like this in each Congress, and, with only one exception, there have never been other than favorable reports. Favorable reports were made in the Forty-third Congress by both Houses, and at that session the bill passed the lower House. In the Forty-fourth Congress favorable reports were made upon it, but no action was had. In the Forty-fifth Congress it was reported favorably in both Houses. In the Forty-sixth Congress it was reported favorably in the House of Representatives and adversely in the Senate; and in the same Congress, the Forty-sixth, at the same session, it was reported in the House by Mr. Converse favorably from the Committee on the Public Lands.

In the Forty-seventh Congress the Committee on the Public Lands reported it favorably through the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN], and in that Congress the bill passed the House. In the Forty-eighth Congress the bill was reported favorably in the Senate by Mr. PLUMB, and passed the Senate. In the House it was favorably reported from the Committee on the Public Lands, but was not reached on the Calendar. In the present Congress it was reported favorably and unanimously from the Committee on the Public Lands in the House and the Senate, and passed both bodies with practical unanimity. If I recollect aright there were less than ten votes in opposition to it when it passed the House of Representatives, and in that form it went to the President.

On an examination of this bill and of the long array of facts in connection with it by the President of the United States for a single day, and, as I shall be able to show in a very few minutes' time, upon a total misapprehension not only of the facts but of the thing sought to be accomplished by the bill, it was vetoed by him, and the veto communicated to the Senate, through which body it now reaches us. A single sentence from the veto message of the President, which has been read, will demonstrate with a single explanatory statement the inaccurate position which the President occupies with regard to the bill. He says:

It is not pleasant to contemplate loss threatened to any party acting in good faith, caused by uncertainty in the language of laws or their conflicting interpretation; and if there are persons occupying these lands who labor under such disabilities as prevent them from appealing to the courts for redress of their wrongs, a plain statute, directed simply to a remedy for such disabilities, would not be objectionable.

That is the language of a section of this veto message, and precisely that thing is sought to be done by this bill, and for the relief of the persons who are named in the message of the President.

Let that be understood; that is all this bill seeks to do, and for the persons contemplated in that quotation from the veto message.

Digested, what are the facts upon which the bill is based? Something like eight hundred settlers are living upon a lot of land in Iowa, lands originally embraced, as was thought, within the limits of a grant made in aid of the improvement of the Des Moines River in that State——

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Between a thousand and twelve hundred families.

Mr. PAYSON. I am corrected as to the number by my friend on the left from Iowa. He says that there are between a thousand and twelve hundred families. The grant of land was made in aid of the improvement of the Des Moines River, but there was some ambiguity as to the extent of the grant. It was for the improvement of the Des Moines River, and it was asserted at the time the bill was passed that the grant only extended to so much of the length of the river as reached to what was known as the Raccoon Fork. It was made with that understanding, and it was so interpreted by the Governor of Iowa who made the selection under it. These selections were confirmed, in the manner prescribed by the law, through the Interior Department. Three or four years afterward a genius in the Interior Department made the suggestion that the State of Iowa was entitled to more land than this grant conveyed; that the grant instead of stopping at the Raccoon Fork of the river could by a proper construction of the act be made to extend to the northern line of the State of Iowa, thus increasing the extent of the grant by something like 300,000 acres.

The Secretary of the Interior then in office, Mr. Secretary Stuart, examined the matter; but without coming to a conclusion absolutely and asserting it involved a judicial question which had better be considered by the courts, he made what he called a conditional certification to the State of Iowa of the lands above the fork and of this increased grant, giving notice when the certification was made, as there were serious doubts as to the proper construction of the grant, he would make to the State of Iowa a conditional certification of these 300,000 acres of land.

Shortly after that the question got into the courts as to the amount of land which was involved in the grant and the proper construction of it, and the case known as the Litchfield case was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States restricting the grant to the mouth of the Fork, holding that the State of Iowa took no lands above the mouth of the Fork but was restricted to the lands below it. That was the sole question made in the case, and the only question that was decided and decided for all time. The decision was acquiesced in by the State authorities of Iowa, and acquiesced in by the Des Moines Railroad and Navigation Company, which had become the successor to this grant by contract with the Legislature of Iowa.

Immediately upon that these lands upon the fork were thrown open by the Interior Department to sale and settlement, but without any formal order revoking the reservation of the land which had been made by Mr. Secretary Stuart at the time the conditional certification was made.

Here is the point to this whole case, and I repeat it, so that I may be distinctly understood by gentlemen who are not familiar with the administration of public-land law. Whenever a withdrawal of public lands is made for any purpose the land is placed by the Interior Department in what is known technically as a state of reservation. It is absolutely a segregation of that land from the public domain for the purpose for which the withdrawal is made; and after that, whether the withdrawal was properly or improperly made, no valid settlement can ever be made on that land unless this state of reservation is removed by formal order of the Interior Department.

So, then, although the local land offices were afterward open at Des Moines and Fort Dodge, settlers went in upon this land in large numbers. Mr. Secretary Browning, who succeeded afterward as Secretary of the Interior, promulgated a long circular with reference to this land that it was public land and people were entitled to settle upon it. The settlers went in there twenty-five, twenty-eight, thirty years ago under the pre-emption and homestead laws.

Under the pre-emption laws they paid their money. The records show that upward of $100,000 in cash have been paid by portions of these people who live on the land there as entry-money at one dollar and a quarter per acre, paid into the Treasury, and they received their patents, received their land, and they remained in possession from that time until now.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman permit me to make a suggestion? I think Secretary of the Interior Smith opened the land to settlement.

Mr. PAYSON. I believe I said so. Secretary Browning was not the first Secretary who opened it. The first Secretary who decided that the limits of the grant were at the fork was Mr. Ewing. And then the next Secretary was Secretary Smith. He was followed by Secretary Browning; and every Secretary of the Interior from that time down to now has regarded these lands as public lands and open to settlement.

Mr. VIELE. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. VIELE. I want to ask the gentleman if he asserts to this House that the persons to whom he refers as having gone in and paid that money are the sole persons to be benefited by this bill?

Mr. PAYSON. I do. I assert no other person is benefited by this bill; and the bill in terms expressly provides that no person shall be benefited except those who have gone beyond the land above the mouth of the fork and made bona fide settlements there under the pre-emption and homestead laws of the United States.

Nobody else is benefited, except—I wish to be understood as to this—that the bill goes further, and validates the title of every person who has any claim to that land under the Des Moines Railroad and Navigation Company or remotely as grantee under the State of Iowa in any form whose titles do not conflict with actual settlers under general laws except the class I have named who have settled under the general land law.

Mr. VIELE. Are not, in fact, a large majority of the people who represent the league formed to prosecute this business squatters on the land, and have they not refused to pay for the land or to pay taxes?

Mr. PAYSON. That is not the case. I may as well make a statement as to that now as at any other time.

I know that parties who represent the Des Moines Railroad and Navigation Company, which now sets up a claim of title to all those lands above the mouth of the Raccoon Fork, are asserting that every settler who went upon those lands was there as a trespasser and squatter.

Mr. VIELE. That is not the assertion. Only those who went there after a certain period.

Mr. PAYSON. I want to be understood, and if the gentleman will not anticipate me he will find that I will state the case with absolute fairness, as I understand it.

I have stated how these people went upon that land. What proportion of the thousand or twelve hundred families now living there entered as pre-emptors and paid their money to the Government I do not know, but they all either went there as pre-emptors and paid the Government of the United States a dollar and a quarter an acre, or they went there as homestead settlers under the general land laws of the United States expecting to make their title by living five years upon the land and making bona fide improvements.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. And paying the proper fees under the law.

Mr. PAYSON. And paying the proper fees under the law. Now, Mr. Speaker, this condition of things existing, it stood so for some little time. The Des Moines Railroad and Navigation Company in June, 1854, made a contract with the State of Iowa that they, this corporation, would construct certain improvements in the river for a certain amount of land. They commenced in good faith to work upon those improvements. What volume of land they expected to get I do not know, but the land was to be turned over to them at the rate of $1.25 or possibly $2.50 an acre; at all events at a stipulated price. They commenced the prosecution of the work; but on the 10th of November, 1856, a dispute arose between the navigation company and the State of Iowa as to the further progress of the work. About that time, a little prior to it, the Secretary of the Interior held that the title to the lands in the grant did not extend above the fork, and refused to certify any more, and thereupon the navigation company threw up its hands and abandoned the contract.

The next thing done was to settle with them. A meeting of the Legislature of Iowa was had, and in the spring of 1858, on the 22d of March, a bill passed which authorized the compromise of all differences between the State and the navigation company. The navigation company was to pay a certain sum of money into the State treasury, to liquidate certain indebtedness due to citizens of the State, and in consideration of this agreement and for the work that they had done the State was to execute a quitclaim deeed to the company of such lands as were granted by Congress to the State of Iowa by the act of August 6, 1846.

Mr. VIELE. And those are the lands, are they not?

Mr. PAYSON. I beg the gentleman not to anticipate me. I will satisfy the gentleman as to my statement of the facts, whether I satisfy him as to the correctness of my conclusions or not.

Mr. VIELE. I want to direct the attention of the House to the facts.

Mr. PAYSON. On the 18th of May, 1858, this deed from the State was executed. I hold a copy of it in my hand. I do not take time to read it except the descriptive clause. The deed is dated on the 18th day of May, 1858, and is between the State of Iowa as grantor and this navigation company as grantee. It conveys to the company "all lands granted by an act of Congress approved August 8, 1846." It does not attempt to describe the lands by sections, but simply makes, in this general way, a conveyance to the navigation company of "all lands granted by an act of Congress approved August 8, 1846." Now, what lands were so granted? The Supreme Court had decided in the Litchfield case, prior to the time this deed was executed, that all the lands that were granted by Congress were the lands lying south of the mouth of the fork of the Raccoon, and it was understood in Iowa——

Mr. VIELE. Did not the subsequent decision extend that?

Mr. PAYSON. I am coming to that. If the gentleman will not anticipate I will state the case as he understands it, if he understands it as the record shows. Now, bear in mind what this deed purports to convey, namely, "all lands granted by an act of Congress approved August 8, 1846," to the Territory of Iowa, and that when this grant was made and selections were made under it it was restricted to lands lying south of the fork. Everybody so understood with reference to it at that time. But under the conditional certification which Mr. Secretary Stuart had made the State of Iowa had opened a land office, and, assuming that it would get the lands, had sold a large amount of them to citizens of that State. Fifty-five thousand nine hundred and ninety acres of land were thus sold by the State of Iowa, the State assuming under Mr. Secretary Stuart's conditional certification that it was entitled to the land.

Mr. PETTIBONE. That is, above the fork?

Mr. PAYSON. Above the mouth of the fork. The settlers were thus left without title. It does not need any argument to show why. The State of Iowa had assumed to sell the lands as a part of this grant above the fork. Fifty-five thousand nine hundred-odd acres were in possession of settlers as purchasers from the State of Iowa. What could be done? This was after the decision of the Supreme Court in the Litchfield case restricting the grant below the fork, and so these purchasers from Iowa were without title. Something had to be done. Of course the first thing, and the proper and only thing, was to come to Congress for a validating act, and so subsequent legislation was had. In March, 1861, an act of Congress was passed to validate these titles; and at this point I will say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. VIELE], if he represents the other side, the point of divergence begins.

Mr. VIELE. I represent the just side, whatever that is.

Mr. PAYSON. I have no doubt you represent what you believe to be the just side. About that there may be a difference of opinion, as appears from your statement just now. I know that I represent the just side. [Applause.]

In 1861 application was made to Congress to help out in some way these men who had bought from the State of Iowa, and the joint resolution was passed, approved March 2, 1861, which I ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution to quiet title to lands in the State of Iowa.

Be it resolved, &c., That all title which the United States still retain in tracts of land along the Des Moines River and above the mouth of Raccoon Fork thereof in the State of Iowa, which have been certified to said State improperly by the Department of the Interior as part of the grant by act of Congress approved August 8, 1846, and which is now held by bona fide purchasers under the State of Iowa, be, and the same is hereby, relinquished to the State of Iowa.

Now I ask that special attention be given to the language of this joint resolution of 1861, because it is in connection with this resolution that the adverse claim arises which is set up by the Des Moines River Railroad and Navigation Company. That claim arises out of language contained in this act. Bearing in mind the fact that the exciting cause for this resolution was the fact that this land had been sold to these purchasers under the State of Iowa, the language of the resolution is:

That all the title which the United States still retain in the tract of land, &c., and which is now held by bona fide purchasers under the State of Iowa, be, and the same is hereby, relinquished to the State of Iowa.

Now at that time there never was anybody who claimed to be a purchaser from the State of Iowa except natural persons who had actually purchased. A little later on—five or six years later—for I desire to be perfectly fair with everybody in this matter, so that my argument may be understood as it progresses, this Des Moines River Railroad and Navigation Company set up the claim that because of the passage of this resolution, and because the company had a deed which on its face was general in its terms and which some lawyers said was broad enough to include in its scope this land above the fork as well as below it, the Railroad and Navigation Company was a bona fide purchaser under the State of Iowa and was entitled to this land.

Mr. LONG. Was the deed from the State to the railroad and navigation company dated prior to this act?

Mr. PAYSON. It was. The deed to the company, as I have already stated, was dated May 18, 1858; and the act in question was approved March 2, 1861. But the gentleman from Massachusetts, who I am glad to know is following my argument, will bear in mind that before the resolution of 1861 was passed the Supreme Court had judicially construed the grant, restricting it to the land which was below the fork; this was in 1860. There has never been a claim on the part of anybody since the Litchfield case was decided in 1860 that the State of Iowa, under the act of 1846, took title to an inch of land above the mouth of the fork.

Mr. BAYNE. As I understand, this is a contest between one thousand or twelve hundred settlers on these lands and the Des Moines River Railroad and Navigation Company.

Mr. PAYSON. That is precisely what it is. I am coming to that point a little later on.

Mr. SKINNER. The gentleman says, as I understand, that fifty thousand and odd acres were conveyed by the State of Iowa to settlers. Were those conveyances prior to the decision in the Litchfield case?

Mr. PAYSON. They were, very largely.

Mr. WADSWORTH. At the date of the deed from the State of Iowa to the navigation company, May 18, 1858, did the State set up any claim of title to these lands above Raccoon Fork?

Mr. PAYSON. It had a claim of the title to them under the conditional certification I have spoken of down to the decision in the Litchfield case.

Mr. WADSWORTH. But at the time of the conveyance from the State?

Mr. PAYSON. Well, nothing was said in reference to that. Gentlemen who live in that portion of the country may perhaps be better prepared to answer on that point than I am. But the records show nothing with reference to that matter either one way or the other.

Mr. HOLMES rose.

Mr. PAYSON. I yield a moment to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HOLMES. No claim was made by the State of Iowa to these lands above the Raccoon Fork till nearly two years after the act was passed. The lands were certified. The register of the State presented a list of the lands to be certified; and that list included these lands below the Raccoon Fork. They were so accepted by the United States and everybody concerned for two years.

Mr. PAYSON. Now, as showing beyond any question who were to be the beneficiaries of the legislation of March 2, 1861, I have incorporated in the report which I have submitted on this bill the debates in the House with reference to it.

The bill was introduced by a member from Iowa, and without stopping to read it, because it takes up a whole page in fine print, it is enough to say it shows on the face of it the only parties in contemplation at the time this joint resolution of 1861 was passed were citizens—natural persons—who were the grantees of the State of Iowa as purchasers. I do not stop to read it. It will be set forth in my remarks.

Mr. LONG. That is, the purchasers of 55,000 acres are?

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, the purchasers of 55,000 acres. Further on, after this grant was made to Iowa, there was a grant made to two railway companies for the construction of lines of road across the State, which conflicted with this grant made to the State of Iowa for river improvement. Down to that time it was understood when these grants were made because of the original certification they were not included in these railroad grants, and conflicts arose between the State of Iowa and the General Government as to the acreage the State was entitled to under all these grants. The result was that a statement was made by the State of Iowa, represented by a gentleman by the name of Harvey, known in the whole of these proceedings as the "Harvey settlement," the State of Iowa on one side and the Secretary of the Interior on the other. That settlement was made in 1866. An examination of the figures in connection with that settlement, long details of which appear in the committee's report on this bill, shows no claim was made down to that time by the act of the Des Moines Railroad and Navigation Company for any of these lands. That was as late as 1866. The claim of this company to any lands above the fork was never made until subsequent to that time. It was true what they had they had received, and they were entitled to hold the lands below the fork. It went on.

Finally the company set up a claim to this land. Then, when the claim was set up suit was brought. Collusive suits were brought, the first known as the Wolcott cases, a memorandum of which I think I have here about me.

Mr. VIELE. "Collusive" is a very strong word.

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, and when I use it I use it with a full appreciation of what it means.

Mr. VIELE. How is he to know that?

Mr. PAYSON. I know it by looking at the cases, and finding Wolcott, a member of the Des Moines Railroad and Navigation Company, one of the parties who got interest in the land by parceling it out to him as one of the body—by his assuming to be plaintiff in the case against the Des Moines Railroad and Navigation Company, and by the agreement on his part that these lands had been properly certified to the State of Iowa, and that they had been properly sold by the State of Iowa to the Des Moines Railroad and Navigation Company; and by his agreeing still further that the Des Moines Railroad and Navigation Company—to the fact the Des Moines Railroad and Navigation Company was the bona fide purchaser from the State of Iowa. I do not need to tell the lawyers of this House whether it is collusive on the face of it when the plaintiff gives away every shadow of any case he has.

Mr. PERKINS. And when he admits what is not true.

Mr. PAYSON. Yes; and when he admits what is not true, and when there is not a shadow in the statute to prove his statement to be true.

Of course the Supreme Court expressly said, because it is admitted these lands were properly certified to the State of Iowa and because it is admitted the State of Iowa sold all these lands they are taxable by the State of Iowa under the act of 1861, the company is entitled to the land. Nothing else could follow.

On the strength of that kind of adjudication trouble began in the State of Iowa. I agree in the emphatic statement made by the gentlemen representing the other side that the troubles have been serious and persistent and long continued.

It does not require, Mr. Speaker, large imagination on the part of any gentleman to appreciate where there are a thousand families in possession of the public lands of the country, invited to go there by the legally constituted authorities under a circular sent out by the Secretary of the Interior, who paid into the Treasury of the United States $1.25 an acre for their land, and who had put for safe-keeping in a bureau drawer the patent of the United States bearing the great seal of the General Government and attested by the President of the United States—I say it is not difficult to appreciate a thousand men, when approached by an agent of this corporation with a claim for that land through the ingenious device of some attorney, should exhibit some degree of excitement in reference to it.

These people were threatened with litigation, which resulted in many of them being turned out of their homes. How? By bills filed in the State courts of the State of Iowa by parties in possession to quiet their titles; and lawyers present will understand why it was necessary for these parties, being in possession, to become plaintiffs in the suits in order to settle the question as to whether the Des Moines Railroad Company, under which they held, had a title to the land which could be conveyed to them.

The court decided that because this land was in a state of technical reservation at the time of entry that no such entry could be validly made so that the Interior Department could recognize it as a proper entry, and hence that the title was void. That is all of the decision. A half a dozen cases—no, three cases, that I recall—went up to the Supreme Court of the United States, and the decision of that court, which applied to all of the remaining cases which had not been appealed, turned upon that very question; and I read from one of the cases, that of Hannah Reilly against William B. Welles:

It will appear from the case of Wolcott against the Des Moines company that the tract of land of which the lot in question was a part had been withdrawn from sale and entry on account of a difference of opinion among the officers of the Land Department as to the extent of the original grant by Congress of lands in aid of the improvement of the Des Moines River. * * * As the husband of the plaintiff entered upon the lot in 1855 without right—

Because it was withdrawn from sale and settlement, and therefore original entry was without right—and the possession was continued without right, the permission of the register to prove up the possession and improvements and to make entry under the pre-emption laws were acts in violation of law and void, as was also the issuing of the patent.

Mr. BAKER. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. PAYSON. Certainly.

Mr. BAKER. Did they know that these lands had been withdrawn when they made the entry?

Mr. PAYSON. Well, whether they did or not it may be answered yes or no. They knew the authorities had opened land offices and were offering the lands for sale and they purchased; that is certain and the controlling circumstance.

I repeat, after the Supreme Court had decided the Litchfield case the land offices of Iowa were opened for these parties to come in and settle. They did come in and settle when the land offices were opened to them and Secretary Browning invited them to come and make the settlement. They had no reason to suppose that there was any cloud upon the title. They were invited to come, the register received their proofs, the Government received the money, and the patents were issued.

Mr. LONG. Secretary Browning invited them to do what technically they could not do.

Mr. PAYSON. Certainly; he invited them to do what, according to the decisions of the Supreme Court, they had no right technically to do.

At the time that Mr. Browning was Secretary of the Interior and these invitations were issued no case had been then decided that there was an illegal withdrawal and reservation; hence that the entries might be made and the citizens could secure a title. It was a subsequent decision of the Supreme Court that unsettled the whole question, and that doubtless was a question of law with which Mr. Browning was not familiar at the time he issued these invitations. It was a bowlder of law hewn out of the great ledge afterward. This decision in the Reilly case was the same:

The reasons for this withdrawal of the public lands from public sale or private entry are stated at large in the opinion in the case of Wolcott against the Des Moines company, and need not be repeated. The point of reservation was very material in that case, and we have seen nothing in the present one, either in the facts or in the argument, to distinguish it.

The Crilly case was another of the same kind. He was in possession of the land under a patent. He had held it for fifteen years under what he believed to be, and what he had a right to believe was, a good title. He was foolish enough to go into court for the purpose of quieting the title, and the Supreme Court made this decision which unsettled it. He then had no redress whatever. That is another illustration of the unfortunate side of this question. This man Crilly to-day, after having a patent to his lands, after holding possession all that time, after going into that litigation and having his rights denied him, is of unsettled mind because of it, and no doubt members of this House may have received, for I have within the last few months, a number of rambling, disconnected postal cards upon this very question of his title.

Mr. MILLS. I have received them; also other members the same.

Mr. PAYSON. No doubt other gentlemen also have received them. That is the man, George Crilly, who has lost his reason by this subject. He was the plaintiff in that court, resting his title under a patent of the General Government. Having paid his money into the Treasury, some $200, which is still in the Treasury to-day, and he is a maniac by reason of the claim set up by this corporation.

Mr. PETTIBONE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PAYSON. Well, if the gentleman does not anticipate my argument.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I merely wish to ask whether or not there is any partisan politics in this thing?

Mr. PAYSON. Oh, bless you, no; it is a question of justice and decency on the part of Congress. I will come to that.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Another question. Does this seek more than to do this——

Mr. PAYSON. Let me tell you, friend PETTIBONE, I will make my argument as clear as possible.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Will the gentleman say what the bill proposes?

Mr. PAYSON. There are three classes of persons interested in these lands, amounting to some 271,000 acres, that will be affected by this bill. There are, first, the men who claim under the navigation company, who are in possession and that nobody has claimed adversely to; there is a second set of people in possession under the general land law; and, third, a set of men claiming under the State of Iowa as remote grantees from the Des Moines Navigation Company. Now, what does the bill propose? It settles the titles of the first and last named classes in possession, and provides that the title of everybody in the Des Moines Navigation Company and its grantees, not in possession, that their title shall be validated.

It provides, secondly, that those who are in possession claiming as grantees of the Des Moines Railroad and Navigation Company or as grantees from the State of Iowa shall have their title validated. And as to the other class, those who are claiming in good faith under the general land laws of the United States, it is provided that they shall be permitted to assert their rights in court. This bill does not seek to interfere with the title of any man whatever which does not clash with that of a settler. It does not presume that the title of the railroad and navigation company is invalid. It leaves all that question for judicial determination where it interferes with a settler's title. But the officers of the Interior Department have failed hitherto, and still fail, to remove this state of reservation. An act of Congress which was passed in 1853 provides in substance that wherever an entry is made on public lands in good faith and the land is then in a state of reservation and when that state of reservation shall afterward be removed the rights of these people shall be respected.

It is provided that under that statute these men may be allowed and permitted to go into court and set up their homestead and pre-emption rights as against the railroad and navigation company. This is all the bill purports to do, and the only other thing that can result from the passage of this bill is the inconvenience of a lawsuit to the Des Moines Railroad and Navigation Company. In one side of the balance are the interests of twelve hundred American citizens who rely upon the promise which was made to them by those on whom they had a right to rely, the officers of the Interior Department. Relying upon that promise, they went out upon the frontier at an early day and braved the dangers and endured the hardships and privations of a frontier life. They paid their money into the Treasury for the land on which they are living. That is one side of the balance. On the other side there is the inconvenience of a lawsuit to a corporation which has set up a claim to 270,000 acres of land to which, in my judgment, it has no more right legally or equitably than I have to the desk under my hand.

That is the case in a nutshell. Nobody pretends to gainsay it. I know what will be the argument on the other side, and the President of the United States intimates it in his message. The doors of the courts are open if these people have any legal rights, and he asks why they did not come in and assert them. In this he studiously avoids the proposition that under existing law the doors of the courts are shut to the people because of the state of reservation in which these lands have been for all these years.

Mr. MCKENNA. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCKENNA. This bill supposes some interest still left in the Government. What answer do you make to the President's objection that the title of the Government has already been conveyed by prior action?

Mr. PAYSON. The answer I make, and which I have already made, is that the legislation to which I have called attention, the act of July, 1861, only purported to convey the title to bona fide purchasers from the State of Iowa. The President assumes that the Des Moines River Navigation Company is a bona fide purchaser from the State of Iowa and therefore it was in contemplation in this act of 1861, and every question in connection with this grant has been passed upon in some form or other in the courts. That, Mr. Speaker, I deny, and I challenge now and here any gentleman who represents, not improperly, I do not use the expression in any offensive way, who represents the interests of this company as to these lands—I challenge him to point me to a single case ever presented to the Federal courts where either the right of the United States, the right of the State of Iowa, or the right of settlers under the public-land laws to an acre of these lands freed from this restraint of reservation has ever been considered.

Mr. LONG. And you go further, do you not, and say that the deed from the State of Iowa to the Des Moines River Railroad and Navigation Company did not profess to cover the land above the fork but simply such lands as were granted by Congress to the State, leaving open the question what those specific lands were?

Mr. SESSIONS. The decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Litchfield case was conclusive on the rights of all parties concerned, and that condition could not be changed even by legislation of Congress. Any legislation attempting to change that would be unconstitutional.

Mr. PAYSON. In answer to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] I will say that is my construction of it. In the Litchfield case it was expressly decided the limits of the grant were the mouth of the fork.

Mr. HERBERT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. HERBERT. I understood you to say this bill did not undertake to settle anything; that it gave certain parties the right to go into court.

If my understanding of what the gentleman has said is correct, what is the meaning of this proviso:

Provided, That the title of all bona fide settlers under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with pre-emption or homestead claimants, are hereby ratified and confirmed, and made valid.

It seems to me those words are intended to settle some controversy.

Mr. PAYSON. I want the vote of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] and will repeat what I said three minutes ago. I said there were three classes of people affected by this bill. I answered the gentleman's question then, but he does not seem to have appreciated what I said or I failed to make myself understood. I will read the proviso:

Provided, That the title of all bona fide settlers under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with pre-emption or homestead claimants, are hereby ratified and confirmed, and made valid.

We settle all those titles and say that there shall never be any dispute on the part of the United States as to them. That is one class.

Mr. VIELE. The uncontested class.

Mr. PAYSON. We simply draw over them the mantle of our approval and say to them: "The Congress of the United States declares that, as far as the Government is concerned, your titles are ratified and shall never hereafter be questioned."

Mr. HERBERT. But is not that one of the points in dispute?

Mr. PAYSON. Not at all.

Mr. HERBERT. And does not this bill undertake to settle that point by law?

Mr. PAYSON. Why, sir, it is for the interest of the navigation company and for the interest of the people who are claiming under the State of Iowa that these titles are hereby confirmed.

Mr. PERKINS. And it is not because of that point that the bill is vetoed?

Mr. PAYSON. Not at all. The next proviso is—and here is the only affirmative legislation that affects any one—the next proviso is:

That the claims of all persons who, with intent in good faith to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, entered or remained upon any tract of said lands prior to January, 1880, not exceeding 160 acres, are hereby confirmed and made valid in them.

These are the actual settlers of whom I have spoken. The next proviso is—

That the title of all bona fide claimants under color of title from the State of Iowa and its grantees, or the United States and its grantees, which do not come in conflict with persons who, with intent in good faith to obtain title thereto under the pre-emption or homestead laws of the United States, settled upon the said lands prior to January, 1880, are confirmed and made valid.

Everything is validated, settled, and cleared up except the claims of these homesteaders and pre-emptors, thus surrounded by difficulties, and as to them, they are simply given the poor boon of being allowed to go into court to prove up their rights. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MORROW. How much land is involved in the claims of that last-named class?

Mr. PAYSON. Probably 200,000 acres.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, I do not assume to predict the result of this vote. This I know, the appeal which I earnestly make for these poor people for the mere right to be heard in court and that a final settlement of all these questions may be made, ought to be successful, and no feeling of party pride in standing by the veto as a party matter ought to control the vote of a member.

Justice and right demand the passage of this bill, and I trust it will receive the necessary two-thirds, as I know it will a majority vote.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to take issue with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] or to enter into the discussion of the merits of this question. I have some knowledge of the facts of the case, and from my first acquaintance with them the Des Moines settlers have had my sympathy. I have always desired to see relief extended to them if it were possible, and when this bill was on its passage, from my general knowledge and without special or particular investigation, I voted for it. But, sir, the President has only exercised his constitutional power and right in the veto of this bill. He places his veto entirely upon alleged legal grounds, stating that there are legal complications in the measure which make it objectionable. Now, my sympathies are none the less with those settlers, but at the same time I desire to see the President treated fairly and respectfully.

Therefore I think it is but right that this bill should go to a committee for the purpose of investigating the grounds upon which the veto rests. Inasmuch as the bill originated with the Committee on Public Lands, I would move its reference to that committee but for the fact that the veto deals entirely in legal questions.

Mr. PAYSON. Or rather it fails to deal with any legal questions.

Mr. OATES. Well, that is the gentleman's view of it. I may agree with the gentleman hereafter, but not at present. For these reasons, Mr. Speaker, without entering at all into the merits of the matter, I now move that the bill and the veto be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary. That will delay the consideration of the matter at most but a few days, and I am quite sure that that committee will give it a fair investigation, and when they make their report to the House, if the grounds of the President's veto are found not to be well taken, no one more cheerfully than myself will vote to pass this bill over the veto; but until the question is investigated and the President treated, as I conceive, fairly in the matter, I am not willing to so vote. Give us an opportunity to fairly investigate, and let the question come back before the House for action. The delay will be very brief, and gentlemen will then have an opportunity to be heard upon the bill.

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman yield to me for one question?

Mr. OATES. Yes, for one question.

Mr. PAYSON. As there is nothing involved in this bill or in the veto, as is apparent from the report and the message, except simply a technical question of public-land law, does the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] assume by his motion that the reference of the matter to the Committee on the Judiciary is any more proper than would be its reference to the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. HAMMOND. The Committee on Public Lands has already passed upon the bill.

Mr. PAYSON. I think every member of the Committee on Public Lands but one is a lawyer.

Mr. OATES. The law involved may relate only to the public-land laws, but, inasmuch as the Committee on Public Lands has already expressed an opinion upon the subject, and the President has dissented from that opinion, I think it is but fair and right to refer the question to the Committee on the Judiciary, which has not had anything to do with the bill heretofore, and which can be relied upon to make a thorough and fair investigation and report. I now demand the previous question on the reference of the bill and the veto message.

Mr. REAGAN. Will the gentleman permit me to move an amendment?

Mr. OATES. I can not yield.

Mr. REAGAN. I hope the motion will be voted down.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to refer the bill with the accompanying message to the Committee on the Judiciary; which motion is not debatable.

Mr. PAYSON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. I make the point of order that the motion to lay on the table, which is a subsidiary motion, is not in order as applied to the motion to refer, which is also a subsidiary motion.

Mr. PAYSON. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If this motion to lay on the table should be adopted, will it have any effect upon the question previously pending?

The SPEAKER. If the motion to lay on the table (supposing it to be in order) should be adopted, it would not affect the main proposition. The Chair thinks, however, that under the circumstances the motion to lay on the table is not in order when a point of order is made against it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order to move to refer the bill and message to the Committee on Public Lands?

Mr. PAYSON (to Mr. TOWNSHEND). Oh, don't do that.

The SPEAKER. The motion would be in order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I make that motion.

Mr. PAYSON. I hope no friend of the bill will support that motion. It may result in keeping the bill on the Calendar indefinitely.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I propose to add to my motion a provision that the committee have leave to report the bill back at any time.

The SPEAKER. It is a privileged matter and could be reported at any time.

Mr. PAYSON. Before the question is put I trust I may be allowed to say to my colleague [Mr. TOWNSHEND] that this bill was unanimously reported from the Committee on Public Lands in this Congress, as it has been for the last three Congresses, and nothing is to be gained by the recommitment.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But the Committee on Public Lands have not yet considered the President's veto.

Mr. MCKENNA. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Can the committee under this reference retain the bill as long as they choose?

The SPEAKER. It is a matter within the control of the committee.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But the committee can report at any time.

Mr. MCKENNA. I have not yet finished my parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman made his parliamentary inquiry, and the Chair answered it.

Mr. MCKENNA. Then I will put another parliamentary inquiry. When the bill is reported back, where does it go?

The SPEAKER. It is a privileged matter, and comes up immediately for consideration, unless otherwise disposed of by the House.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. TOWNSHEND to refer to the Committee on the Public Lands, it was not agreed to.

The question then recurred on the motion of Mr. OATES, that the message with the accompanying bill be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, Mr. BAYNE, and others called for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 102, nays 146, not voting 75; as follows:

YEAS—102.

Adams, J. J.	Dunn,	McAdoo,	Sawyer,
Anderson, C. M.	Ermentrout,	McCreary,	Seney,
Barksdale,	Felton,	McKenna,	Seymour,
Barnes,	Findlay,	McMillin,	Singleton,
Beach,	Ford,	McRae,	Skinner,
Belmont,	Forney,	Merriman,	Snyder,
Bennett,	Gibson, C. H.	Millard,	Sowden,
Blanchard,	Halsell,	Miller,	Spriggs,
Blount,	Hammond,	Mitchell,	Springer,
Boyle,	Henderson, J. S.	Morgan,	Stahlnecker,
Bragg,	Henley,	Morrison,	Stone, E. F.
Breckinridge, C. R.	Herbert,	Muller,	Stone, W. J., of Ky.
Breckinridge, W. C. P.	Hewitt,	Norwood,	Storm,
Cabell,	Hill,	Oates,	Taylor, J. M.
Caldwell,	Howard,	O'Ferrall,	Throckmorton,
Candler,	Hudd,	Outhwaite,	Trigg,
Cowles,	Irion,	Peel,	Turner,
Cox,	Johnson, F. A.	Perry,	Viele,
Crisp,	Johnston, T. D.	Pidcock,	Wallace,
Curtin,	Jones, J. T.	Pindar,	Ward, T. B.
Dargan,	Ketcham,	Randall,	Wheeler,
Davenport,	Le Fevre,	Reid, J. W.	Willis,
Davidson, A. C.	Lore,	Richardson,	Wilson,
Davidson, R. H. M.	Lowry,	Robertson,	Wise.
Dibble,	Martin,	Rogers,
Dowdney,	Matson,	Sadler,

NAYS—146.

Adams, G. E.	Farquhar,	Little,	Sessions,
Allen, J. M.	Fisher,	Long,	Spooner,
Anderson, J. A.	Fleeger,	Louttit,	Steele,
Atkinson,	Frederick,	Lovering,	Stephenson,
Baker,	Fuller,	Lyman,	Stewart, Charles
Barry,	Funston,	Markham,	Stone, W. J., of Mo.
Bayne,	Gallinger,	Maybury,	Strait,
Bingham,	Geddes,	McComas,	Struble,
Bland,	Gilfillan,	McKinley,	Swinburne,
Bound,	Grosvenor,	Mills,	Tarsney,
Boutelle,	Grout,	Moffatt,	Taulbee,
Browne, T. M.	Guenther,	Morrill,	Taylor, E. B.
Brown, C. E.	Harmer,	Morrow,	Taylor, I. H.
Brumm,	Hayden,	Murphy,	Taylor, Zach.
Buck,	Henderson, D. B.	Neal,	Thomas, O. B.
Burnes,	Henderson, T. J.	Neece,	Tillman,
Burrows,	Hepburn,	Negley,	Townsend,
Butterworth,	Hermann,	Nelson,	Van Eaton,
Bynum,	Hiestand,	O'Donnell,	Van Schaick,
Campbell, J. M.	Hires,	O'Hara,	Wadsworth,
Campbell, J. E.	Holman,	O'Neill, Charles	Wait,
Carleton,	Holmes,	Payne,	Wakefield,
Caswell,	Hopkins,	Payson,	Warner, A. J.
Cobb,	Hutton,	Perkins,	Warner, William
Conger,	Jackson,	Peters,	Weaver, J. B.
Crain,	James,	Pettibone,	Weber,
Culberson,	Jones, J. H.	Pirce,	Wellborn,
Cutcheon,	Kelley,	Price,	West,
Daniel,	Kleiner,	Ranney,	White, A. C.
Davis,	Laffoon,	Reagan,	White, Milo
Dingley,	La Follette,	Reed, T. B.	Wilkins,
Dockery,	Laird,	Rice,	Winans,
Dorsey,	Lanham,	Rockwell,	Wolford,
Dunham,	Lawler,	Romeis,	Woodburn,
Eldredge,	Lehlbach,	Rowell,	Worthington.
Ely,	Libbey,	Ryan,
Everhart,	Lindsley,	Sayers,

NOT VOTING—74.

Aiken,	Compton,	Hanback,	Plumb,
Allen, C. H.	Comstock,	Harris,	Reese,
Arnot,	Cooper,	Hatch,	Riggs,
Ballentine,	Croxton,	Haynes,	Scott,
Barbour,	Dawson,	Heard,	Scranton,
Bliss,	Dougherty,	Hemphill,	Shaw,
Brady,	Eden,	Hiscock,	Smalls,
Brown, W. W.	Ellsberry,	Hitt,	Stewart, J. W.
Buchanan,	Evans,	Houk,	St. Martin,
Bunnell,	Foran,	Johnston, J. T.	Swope,
Burleigh,	Gay,	King,	Symes,
Campbell, Felix	Gibson, Eustace	Landes,	Thomas, J. R.
Campbell, T. J.	Glass,	Mahoney,	Thompson,
Cannon,	Glover,	Milliken,	Tucker,
Catchings,	Goff,	O'Neill, J. J.	Wade,
Clardy,	Green, R. S.	Osborne,	Ward, J. H.
Clements,	Green, W. J.	Owen,	Weaver, A. J.
Cole,	Hale,	Parker,	Whiting.
Collins,	Hall,	Phelps,

So the motion of Mr. OATES to refer the bill and message to the Committee on the Judiciary was rejected.

The following members were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. WARD, of Illinois, with Mr. HOUK.
Mr. EDEN with Mr. PHELPS.
Mr. SCOTT with Mr. SCRANTON.
Mr. HARRIS with Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania.
Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina, with Mr. HITT.
Mr. BALLENTINE with Mr. GOFF.
Mr. COLLINS with Mr. DAVIS.
Mr. RIGGS with Mr. WHITING.
Mr. SPRIGGS with Mr. OWEN.
Mr. HEMPHILL with Mr. DORSEY.
Mr. COLE, of Maryland, with Mr. BRADY.
Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, with Mr. FUNSTON.
Mr. LANDES with Mr. HANBACK.
Mr. HEARD with Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois.
Mr. CLEMENTS with Mr. BUNNELL.
Mr. ARNOT with Mr. COOPER.

The following pairs were also announced:

Mr. CROXTON with Mr. OSBORNE, till July 2.
Mr. TUCKER with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, till July 2.
Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, with Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana, till July 5.
Mr. GLASS with Mr. SWINBURNE, till July 2.

The following members were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. REESE with Mr. THOMPSON.
Mr. FORAN with Mr. PARKER.
Mr. SHAW with Mr. EVANS, of Pennsylvania.
Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey, with Mr. BURLEIGH.
Mr. SWOPE with Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska.

The SPEAKER. Before announcing the result of this vote the Chair will lay before the House the requests of several gentlemen for leave of absence.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HOUK, indefinitely, on account of sickness.
To Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois, indefinitely, on account of sickness.
To Mr. BALLENTINE, indefinitely, on account of a death in his family.
To Mr. SAYERS, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.
To Mr. REESE, for ten days.
To Mr. HALL, for to-day, on account of sickness. If present, he would vote "no" on the question of reference.
To Mr. WARD, of Illinois, until Tuesday next.
To Mr. SMALLS, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

Mr. DAVIS. I am paired on all political questions with my colleague, Mr. COLLINS, but not regarding this question as political, I have voted.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. PAYSON. If there be no desire for further debate I will demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House, on reconsideration, pass the bill? And on that question the Constitution requires the yeas and nays to be taken.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 162, nays 93, not voting 68; as follows:

YEAS—162.

Adams, G. E.	Farquhar,	Louttit,	Spooner,
Allen, J. M.	Felton,	Lowry,	Steele,
Anderson, J. A.	Fisher,	Lyman,	Stephenson,
Atkinson,	Fleeger,	Markham,	Stewart, Charles
Baker,	Frederick,	Matson,	Stone, E. F.
Barksdale,	Fuller,	Maybury,	Stone, W. J., Mo.
Barry,	Funston,	McComas,	Strait,
Bayne,	Gallinger,	McKenna,	Struble,
Bingham,	Geddes,	McKinley,	Swinburne,
Bland,	Gilfillan,	Milliken,	Symes,
Bound,	Grosvenor,	Mills,	Tarsney,
Boutelle,	Grout,	Moffatt,	Taulbee,
Brady,	Guenther,	Morgan,	Taylor, E. B.
Browne, T. M.	Harmer,	Morrill,	Taylor, I. H.
Brown, C. E.	Hatch,	Morrow,	Taylor, J. M.
Brumm,	Hayden,	Murphy,	Taylor, Zach.
Buck,	Henderson, D. B.	Neal,	Thomas, O. B.
Burnes,	Henderson, T. J.	Neece,	Tillman,
Burrows,	Henley,	Negley,	Townshend,
Butterworth,	Hepburn,	Nelson,	Van Eaton,
Bynum,	Hermann,	O'Donnell,	Van Schaick,
Caldwell,	Hiestand,	O'Hara,	Wade,
Campbell, J. M.	Hires,	O'Neill, Charles	Wadsworth,
Campbell, J. E.	Holman,	Owen,	Wait,
Cannon,	Holmes,	Payne,	Wakefield,
Carleton,	Hopkins,	Payson,	Warner, A. J.
Caswell,	Jackson,	Perkins,	Warner, William
Cobb,	James,	Peters,	Weaver, J. B.
Conger,	Jones, J. H.	Pettibone,	Weber,
Crain,	Kelley,	Pirce,	Wellborn,
Culberson,	Kleiner,	Price,	West,
Cutcheon,	Laffoon,	Reagan,	White, A. C.
Daniel,	La Follette,	Reed, T. B.	White, Milo
Davis,	Laird,	Rice,	Wilkins,
Dingley,	Lanham,	Rockwell,	Winans,
Dockery,	Lawler,	Romeis,	Wise,
Dorsey,	Lehlbach,	Rowell,	Wolford,
Dunham,	Libbey,	Ryan,	Woodburn,
Eldredge,	Lindsley,	Sayers,	Worthington.
Ely,	Little,	Sessions,
Everhart,	Long,	Skinner,

NAYS—93.

Adams, J. J.	Crisp,	Halsell,	McCreary,
Anderson, C. M.	Curtin,	Hammond,	McMillin,
Barnes,	Dargan,	Henderson, J. S.	McRae,
Beach,	Davenport,	Herbert,	Merriman,
Belmont,	Davidson, A. C.	Hewitt,	Millard,
Bennett,	Davidson, R. H. M.	Hill,	Miller,
Blanchard,	Dibble,	Howard,	Mitchell,
Blount,	Dougherty,	Hudd,	Morrison,
Boyle,	Dowdney,	Hutton,	Muller,
Bragg,	Dunn,	Irion,	Norwood,
Breckinridge, C. R.	Ermentrout,	Johnson, F. A.	Oates,
Breckinridge, W. C. P.	Findlay,	Johnston, T. D.	O'Ferrall,
Cabell,	Ford,	Ketcham,	Outhwaite,
Candler,	Forney,	Lore,	Peel,
Cowles,	Gibson, C. H.	Martin,	Perry,
Cox,	Hale,	McAdoo,	Pidcock,

Pindar,	Sawyer,	Stahlnecker,	Wallace,
Randall,	Seney,	St. Martin,	Ward, T. B.
Ranney,	Seymour,	Stone, W. J., Ky.	Wheeler,
Reid, J. W.	Singleton,	Storm,	Willis,
Richardson,	Snyder,	Throckmorton,	Wilson.
Robertson,	Sowden,	Trigg,
Rogers,	Spriggs,	Turner,
Sadler,	Springer,	Viele,

NOT VOTING—68.

Aiken,	Compton,	Hanback,	Parker,
Allen, C. H.	Comstock,	Harris,	Phelps,
Arnot,	Cooper,	Haynes,	Plumb,
Ballentine,	Croxton,	Heard,	Reese,
Barbour,	Dawson,	Hemphill,	Riggs,
Bliss,	Eden,	Hiscock,	Scott,
Brown, W. W.	Ellsberry,	Hitt,	Scranton,
Buchanan,	Evans,	Houk,	Shaw,
Bunnell,	Foran,	Johnston, J. T.	Smalls,
Burleigh,	Gay,	Jones, J. T.	Stewart, J. W.
Campbell, Felix	Gibson, Eustace	King,	Swope,
Campbell, T. J.	Glass,	Landes,	Thomas, J. R.
Catchings,	Glover,	Le Fevre,	Thompson,
Clardy,	Goff,	Lovering,	Tucker,
Clements,	Green, R. S.	Mahoney,	Ward, J. H.
Cole,	Green, W. J.	O'Neill, J. J.	Weaver, A. J.
Collins,	Hall,	Osborne,	Whiting.

So (two-thirds not having voted in the affirmative) the House refused to pass the bill over the veto.

During the roll-call,

Mr. HEPBURN said: I ask to change my vote from "ay" to "no." I would inquire whether the motion to reconsider is in order?

The SPEAKER. Not under the rulings heretofore made.

Mr. HEPBURN. Let my vote stand in the affirmative.

It was announced that Mr. LOVERING was paired with Mr. HAYNES until further notice.

The vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. SPRINGER and Mr. HOLMES, by unanimous consent, were granted leave to print in the RECORD remarks on the question just decided.

FRANCIS GILBEAU.

Mr. RANDALL. It was my intention to call for the regular order of business, but as the gentleman from Texas [Mr. SAYERS] will be compelled to leave for home to-night on account of the illness of his father, I will yield to him.

Mr. SAYERS. I ask, by unanimous consent, to call up the bill (S. 718) for the relief of Francis Gilbeau, and ask for its present consideration and passage.

The bill was read.

Mr. BRAGG. I object.

CALL OF COMMITTEES.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

JOHN K. MITCHELL.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2721) removing the political disabilities of John K. Mitchell; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM H. F. LEE.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 2759) to remove the political disabilities of William H. F. Lee; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. ROGERS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were laid on the table:

A bill (H. R. 9292) to amend section 847 of the Revised Statutes; and

A bill (H. R. 8693) to amend certain portions of chapter 16 of title 13 (the Judiciary) of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

SALARIES OF CIRCUIT AND DISTRICT CLERKS.

Mr. ROGERS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, also reported a bill (H. R. 9735) to amend section 839 and section 837 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had agreed to the reports of committees of conference on the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 7165) to increase the pension of Manhattan Pickett;

A bill (H. R. 3463) granting a pension to Hannah Babb Hutchins;

A bill (H. R. 1462) granting a pension to Addie L. Macomber; and

A bill (H. R. 4544) granting a pension to Ann E. Cooney.

BRIDGE ACROSS WILLAMETTE RIVER.

Mr. BYNUM, from the Committee on Commerce, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2115) granting to the Oregonian Railway and Bridge Company, of Oregon, the right to construct a bridge over the Willamette River in the vicinity of Ray's Landing, in the State of Oregon; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LOAN OF TENTS FOR REUNION PURPOSES.

Mr. WHEELER, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendments the joint resolution (H. Res. 181) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to loan tents to the Southwestern Iowa and Northwestern Missouri Veteran Soldiers' Association for reunion purposes; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EDWARD BYRNE.

Mr. STEELE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 1207) for the relief of Edward Byrne; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. STEELE also reported back the bill (H. R. 1444) of the same title; which was laid on the table.

STEPHEN O'CONNOR.

Mr. STEELE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 798) for the relief of Stephen O'Connor; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

EDMUND G. FECHÉT.

Mr. STEELE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1173) to correct the record of Capt. Edmund G. Fechét; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ROBERT H. MONTGOMERY.

Mr. STEELE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, also reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 6010) for the relief of Robert H. Montgomery; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN F. LEWIS.

Mr. STEELE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, also reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. 791) to restore John F. Lewis to the rank of first lieutenant Twenty-first United States Infantry, and place him on the retired-list.

Mr. PETERS. I ask unanimous consent that the bill, with the adverse recommendation, be placed upon the Calendar.

There being no objection, the bill was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the adverse recommendation, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. STEELE, from the Committee on Military Affairs, also reported back with an adverse recommendation a petition and bills of the following titles; which were severally ordered to be laid on the table, and the accompanying reports printed, namely:

The petition of Orville Burke;

A bill (H. R. 362) for the relief of Capt. T. J. Spencer;

A bill (H. R. 65) to place the name of Capt. Allen L. Anderson on the retired-list of the Army;

A bill (H. R. 4357) for the relief of Robert Carrick;

A bill (H. R. 3470) for the relief of William C. Spencer;

A bill (H. R. 1958) to provide for the retirement of Brig. Gen. Rufus Ingalls, retired, as a major-general of the United States Army;

A bill (H. R. 1167) for the relief of James A. Bates;

A bill (H. R. 1392) to restore S. S. Robinson, late of the Sixteenth United States Infantry, to the Army and place him on the retired-list;

A bill (H. R. 4302) to authorize the restoration of Thomas Little to the rank of captain;

A bill (H. R. 2111) for the relief of Henry C. Parry;

A bill (H. R. 1379) for the relief of Eugene Wells;

A bill (H. R. 1640) to place Col. George W. Getty, retired, on the retired-list of the Army with the rank and pay of brigadier-general;

A bill (H. R. 562) for the relief of Second Lieut. James E. Macklin;

A bill (H. R. 3391) for the relief of A. H. Von Leuttwitz;

A bill (H. R. 287) to correct and complete the record of Col. B. H. Grierson, of the United States Army;

A bill (H. R. 4954) touching the appointment of a lieutenant-colonel of cavalry;

A bill (H. R. 913) for the relief of D. Q. Rousseau;

A bill (H. R. 289) to restore Charles H. Campbell to the rank of captain in the Army;

A bill (H. R. 5948) to authorize the appointment of John W. Chickering to the rank of first lieutenant;

A bill (H. R. 2992) for the relief of William W. Webb;

A bill (H. R. 1981) to correct the record and fix the rank and pay of George W. Gile, a lieutenant-colonel in the United States Army;

A bill (H. R. 3867) for the relief of Thomas F. Riley;
A bill (H. R. 5165) for the relief of Thomas F. Riley;
A bill (H. R. 223) for the relief of Capt. Henry H. Humphreys;
A bill (H. R. 1428) to confirm the title of Benjamin F. Pope to his office of assistant surgeon in the Army of the United States; and
A bill (H. R. 2834) authorizing the Secretary of War to restore the name of Thomas H. Carpenter, late a captain in the United States Infantry, to the roll of the Army.

WHARF AT FORTRESS MONROE.

Mr. FINDLAY, from the Committee on Military Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 1148) providing for the construction of a new wharf at Fortress Monroe; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

RIGHT OF WAY THROUGH GILA INDIAN RESERVATION.

Mr. VAN EATON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 8543, a bill (H. R. 9736) to grant to the Maricopa and Phœnix Railroad Company of Arizona the right of way through the Gila River Indian reservation; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JAMES BAINTER.

Mr. STORM, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 1417) for the relief of James Bainter; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEORGE M. COMSTOCK.

Mr. STORM, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, also reported beck with an amendment the bill (H. R. 1416) for the relief of George M. Comstock; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the amendment and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

A. BROOKS FLETCHER.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 1644) to pay A. Brooks Fletcher for letter-boxes furnished the post-office at Jamestown, N. Y.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with an amendment the bill (H. R. 4482) for the relief of Jefferson Davis; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the amendment and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

WASHINGTON POST-OFFICE, ETC.

Mr. WILKINS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back with an amendment in the nature of a substitute the bill (S. 1404) to authorize the acquisition of certain parcels of real estate embraced in square 406 of the city of Washington, for the enlargement of the Post-Office Department building and to provide accommodations for the city post-office; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, hereafter to be filed, ordered to be printed.

Mr. SNYDER. I ask leave to present the views of the minority to be printed with the report of the majority.

There was no objection.

SUBMARINE CABLES.

Mr. DANIEL, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 9324) to carry into effect the international convention of 14th March, 1884, for the protection of submarine cables; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

LAND DISTRICT IN WYOMING.

Mr. LAFFOON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with an amendment the bill (S. 1566) to establish a new land district in the Territory of Wyoming.

Mr. PAYSON. I move that that bill be referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill was accordingly referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the amendment and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE MISSOURI RIVER AT SAINT JOSEPH.

Mr. CRISP. I desire to make a privileged report.

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill of the House numbered 41, to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near Saint Joseph, in the State of Missouri, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, and agree to the same.

CHARLES F. CRISP,
W. D. BYNUM,
A. J. WEAVER,
Managers on the part of the House.
S. J. R. McMILLAN,
O. D. CONGER,
G. G. VEST,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, the report is not accompanied by a written explanation, which I ask to be excused from presenting. I will state that the only purpose and object of the amendments are to make some provision in regard to the character of the abutments of the bridge and to change in one or two places the form of construction. This is satisfactory both to the gentleman who introduced the bill in the House and to the conferees.

The report of the committee of conference was agreed to.

Mr. CRISP moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the able.

The latter motion was agreed to.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole, Mr. REAGAN in the chair, and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9478) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. When the committee rose yesterday there was pending a point of order made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] upon the paragraph in the bill relating to public printing and binding.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order upon the provision in the bill commencing at the word "and," in line 1817, and extending to and including the word "business," in line 1831. In the first place, the lines from 1817 to 1820 contain simply a reproduction of the present rule in respect to printing. In lines 1821 to 1823 I find injected the provision that with every report containing an estimate of the cost of any piece of printing there shall go a statement from the Public Printer of "the amount and cost of work previously ordered by Congress within the fiscal year for which this provision is made." I claim that that is entirely new legislation. There is only one provision of law now for such a report, and that report has been made annually to both Houses of Congress by the Public Printer. I make the point also that practically it is utterly impossible that every one of these joint resolutions, concurrent resolutions, and bills can be accompanied by such a statement as is called for here, unless Congress will create a clerkship or more than one clerkship in the Government Printing Office to carry out the provision. At all events, I make the point that this is purely new legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. As the gentleman has entered upon the merits of the question, I want to say that this provision has been submitted to the Public Printer and his assistants, and they say it is practicable to comply with it.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I wish to state to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that I am speaking now for the Public Printer and the Committee on Printing.

Mr. RANDALL. Well, Mr. Chairman, I am speaking of what the Public Printer stated to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. FARQUHAR. This has been a matter of consultation between the Public Printer and members of the committee. I want to state to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that in making this point of order I have no desire to throw down any safeguards in respect to the public printing.

I have simply to refer to the action of the House Committee on Printing for this session to show that it has been more economical than any Printing Committee that ever preceded it.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not doubt that.

Mr. FARQUHAR. And I wish to say further, that in that Committee there are now held bills which would amount to $459,000, which have not been reported to the House. It is hardly necessary for me to say, therefore, that the committee have no desire to throw any obstacle in the way of any safeguards that may be provided against extravagant printing, but I do not regard this as a practical provision. Here you direct the heads of the Executive Departments, before transmitting their annual reports to Congress, "to cause the same to be carefully examined, and to exclude therefrom all matter, including engravings, maps, drawings, and illustrations, except such as they shall certify in their letters transmitting such reports to be necessary and to relate to the transaction of public business."

That regulation is practically now in the hands of the Joint Committee on Printing, and has been for years, and therefore the provision is entirely new legislation. It is new legislation even to require the heads of Departments to supplement the existing sources of intelligence with letters of transmittal either to the House or to the Committee on Printing. Mr. Chairman, three distinct points here are new legislation. It is made mandatory upon these public officers to do certain things, and, as was ruled yesterday by the Chair in the case of the amendment which I offered in relation to Fort Porter, such provisions are out of order, because they command specific work to be performed by these public officers, which is entirely new either to the rules of the House in respect to printing or to the general laws upon that subject. I, of course, expect the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to follow me in discussing this question, and therefore I wish to say that, while I see that he and the other members of that committee favor this legislation as a means of providing additional safeguards against extravagance, in my opinion if it should become a law it would not serve that purpose, because, if the same rule which prevails in the Senate prevailed in the House, when a letter of transmittal from an Executive Department came into the House merely the letter would be printed, and the question of printing the accompanying documents would be referred to the Committee on Printing.

Under such a rule as that prevailing in the Senate the public interests have a safeguard. But in this House the letter of transmittal and all the accompanying documents are printed at once by the action of the House, without any reference of the question to the Committee on Printing. In this way a large expense for additional printing has been incurred without the committee ever being consulted or the House ever knowing whether it was worth while that the documents should be printed or not. I insist on the point of order that this is new legislation.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] expresses a great desire to throw safeguards around the public printing; but if he were successful in his point of order, which does not lie at all against the paragraph, he would in effect do away with valuable safeguards.

I now yield to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. REID], a member of the Committee on Printing.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I maintain that the point of order is not tenable; that the provision reported in this bill by the Committee on Appropriations, both as to the appropriations to be recommended by the Committee on Printing and also as to the limitation upon the Executive Departments with regard to the publication of expensive maps and charts, is merely carrying out what is already provided by existing law. The first part of the clause reads as follows:

Printing and binding for Congress chargeable to this appropriation, when recommended to be done by the Committee on Printing, shall be so recommended in a report containing an estimate of the cost thereof.

I submit that this is now the rule. I know it is the practice of the Committee on Printing; for every report which we make to the House is accompanied with an estimate of the cost furnished by the Public Printer. This provision, then, can not be in conflict with existing law; nor is it new legislation. The remaining portion of the clause is in these words:

Together with a statement from the Public Printer of the amount and cost of work previously ordered by Congress within the fiscal year for which this appropriation is made.

Now, there is no legislation on the statute-book, so far as I can find, that conflicts with this provision, which merely requires that the Committee on Printing, in recommending any appropriation for printing, shall accompany the recommendation with an estimate of the cost, and that there shall be furnished at the same time a statement from the Public Printer showing the amount and cost of work previously ordered by Congress within the fiscal year for which this appropriation is made. The provision merely proposes a limitation or condition upon the appropriation.

No money is to be spent under this appropriation until the Committee on Printing has recommended it in a report containing an estimate of the cost and also a statement of the Public Printer as to the amount and cost of the work previously ordered by Congress. This is in conflict with no statute; it provides no new restrictions, but simply reiterates and emphasizes existing law and couples with the appropriation the statutory limitation or condition as to the manner in which the money shall be spent.

Now let us consider the provision with reference to the Executive Departments. The clause is:

And the heads of the Executive Departments, before transmitting their annual reports to Congress the printing of which is chargeable to this appropriation, shall cause the same to be carefully examined, and shall exclude therefrom all matter, including engravings, maps, drawings, and illustrations, except such as they shall certify in their letters transmitting such reports to be necessary and to relate entirely to the transaction of public business.

Section 193 of the Revised Statutes provides that—

The head of each Department shall make an annual report to Congress, giving a detailed statement of the manner in which the contingent fund for his Department, and for the bureaus and offices therein, has been expended, giving the names of every person to whom any portion thereof has been paid; and if for anything furnished, the quantity and price; and if for any service rendered, the nature of such service, and the time employed, and the particular occasion or cause, in brief, that rendered such service necessary; and the amount of all former appropriations in each case on hand, either in the Treasury or in the hands of any disbursing officer or agent. And he shall require of the disbursing officers, acting under his direction and authority, the return of precise and analytical statements and receipts for all the moneys which may have been from time to time during the next preceding year expended by them, and shall communicate the results of such returns and the sums total annually to Congress.

The sections immediately succeeding, sections 194, 195, and 196, embrace legislation in the same direction, requiring the report of the names of clerks and other persons employed, their compensation, &c., and specifying the time when these annual reports shall be submitted to Congress and the time when they shall be furnished to the Public Printer.

What do we find accompanying these reports? Examine them, and you will find that they are filled with expensive engravings, notwithstanding that in the act of June 23, 1874, we have provided that "no expensive maps or illustrations shall be printed without special order of Congress." I hold in my hand the report of the Secretary of the Navy, filled with expensive maps and illustrations; so with the report of the Secretary of War, and others of these reports.

I maintain that the Committee on Appropriations, seeing this abuse, have very properly inserted this limitation, and that it is in accordance with law. The first clause of the provision now in question provides a safeguard of the same nature as that already existing under our rules; the second seeks to enforce a law which appears to have been violated in regard to printing maps and illustrations with these reports. I maintain that the point of order is not tenable; that the provision against which it is raised merely provides safeguards which ought to be thrown around this appropriation and aid in keeping down the expense of our public printing. If allowed to stand as inserted by the committee, there will be an annual saving of nearly $150,000 to the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. Now I ask for a decision on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is not sustained.

Mr. HISCOCK. I move to amend by striking out, in line 1812, the words "two million dollars" and inserting "two million two hundred and fifty thousand dollars."

Mr. RANDALL. It is too late; that paragraph has been passed.

Mr. HISCOCK. Then I will move to amend by striking out the last word. I have something to say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania and to this committee, and I desire an opportunity to say it.

Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand one of the annual proclamations issued by the Committee on Appropriations, generally used as a campaign document. I desire to call attention to this document. All the appropriation bills that were enacted into law at the last session of Congress making appropriations for the fiscal year that expired June 30, amounted in the aggregate to a little more than $211,000,000 as they passed the House. In the Senate they were increased to $221,177,254; and thereupon, Mr. Chairman, there went up an immense shout from the Committee on Appropriations and the other side of the House over the extravagance of a Republican Senate. The gentlemen who had charge of these appropriations told the people with what iron nerve they would hold down the appropriations and make the Senate recede from its extravagance! The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] and other members of that committee were profuse in patriotic professions, and their friends throughout the United States howled to the echo against the extravagance of a Republican Senate and in praises of the economy of a Democratic House.

And, sir, they did reduce those bills to two hundred and fifteen millions and a half. Thereupon our friends on the other side were commended for their economy and as friends of the poor people—it is always the poor people or the dear people—and this little proclamation I hold in my hand went to the whole country as a campaign document.

I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will give attention to what I am saying, as his special friends everywhere commended his economy. He had saved to the Treasury so much money, they said, that a profligate Senate would have squandered.

What is the result of all this? The House has either passed or has the bill pending in Committee of the Whole reported by the Committee on Appropriations providing for deficiencies of thirteen and a half millions of dollars. I want to be exact on this point—$13,162,000. I hope the committee will take note of it.

Look a little further. Seven and a half millions in excess of the bills as they passed the Senate—the extravagant Senate, as they styled it!

Mr. RANDALL. Let me interpose a word there.

Mr. HISCOCK. Yes.

Mr. RANDALL. Six and a half millions of that is for pensions.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not care whether it is for pensions or what it is for. I admit it is honest enough, but it is part of the annual appropriations, and was left out of the annual bills in the last session to deceive, to dodge some difficulty about amounts. If you look back to the appropriation bills you find you reappropriated unexpended balances of previous years to deceive the people still further as to the amount of your bills.

So, then, this Congress for the first year of a Democratic administration has exceeded, this House of Representatives with its forty Democratic majority, in this the first year of this administration, has exceeded the appropriation bills as they passed the Senate seven and a half millions of dollars. Why, Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. McCOMAS. If I am recognized I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, you must remember these facts. It was Democratic thunder in the last canvass all over the United States. Thereupon every Democratic newspaper in double-leaded lines talked about the profligacy and extravagance of a Republican Senate. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania—I appeal to the gentleman from Indiana; these two men are the self-constituted representatives of the economical spirit. I ask what is the object of playing this farce over again? Here is an item under consideration which appropriates half a million of dollars less than you have appropriated for the last year, than has been expended in the last year for the same special service.

Tell us the object of the decrease. Half a million of dollars less than has been expended in the last current year! Is there longer profit in indulging in this cheap demagogism? You have the administration. Here are appropriation bills you have forced through the House that in the fiscal year commencing July 1 you will not be compelled to increase from twelve or fifteen millions of dollars, and you know it.

Of course this fall you are to have a canvass. This fall another House is to be elected. Still the figures must confront you that I have given. Having the administration and being responsible for the Government, being responsible for the appropriation at least of the money to be expended, I appeal to gentlemen on the other side why not rise—not to the full altitude of statesmanship, but up as high as the knees—and abandon this deceitful policy indulged in for the last twenty years.

Mark it. Thirteen million one hundred and sixty-two thousand dollars of deficiencies this year and asking for appropriations to the amount of seven and a half millions of dollars more than the bills carried as they passed the Senate, and after your criticisms of the Senate, and you have not provided for all the deficiencies yet. Creditors of the Government are to be turned away now and not paid the claims against the Government which have been audited and which are just, and you know that also you have neglected to provide for.

I ask the gentleman in charge of this bill, looking to this special service provided for here, why not admit that so much is needed for the purpose—a half-million more than you provide? Why attempt to throw into this provision some legislation which you assert it may have the effect to keep down the appropriations a little when you know it will not, to base your pretense claim of economy upon?

You know it can not have effect to reduce the expenditure. You know that this great Printing Bureau of the Government must be supported. You know that there is no institution or Department of the Government that is more popular to-day with the people than the Printing Bureau. The people want the documents, they contain information, are in the nature of education, and at the first session of the next Congress the gentleman from Pennsylvania or some other gentleman upon the Appropriations Committee will come in and report a deficiency bill for the Printing Bureau. [Applause on the Republican side.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from New York has indulged in his usual tirade against the efforts of this side of the House to enforce economy in public expenditures. [Derisive laughter on the Republican side.] He claims now——

Mr. HISCOCK. The gentleman must have said something funny; I could not hear what it was.

Mr. RANDALL. I said something that was true.

Mr. HISCOCK. I noticed that it raised a laugh in the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope you feel comfortable, because from the tone of your observations I suspect that you are not happy. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Let us examine the statement of the gentleman from New York in detail. He speaks of $13,000,000 of deficiencies for the current year, and yet he fails to tell the House how these deficiencies are occasioned; six and a half millions are connected with pensions, an amount not anticipated, for we gave in the last Congress every dollar that was estimated for by the Commissioner of Pensions.

This deficiency grew in a measure out of new legislation, or else from a more rapid adjustment of the pension claims.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is the principal cause.

Mr. RANDALL. Who is there within the sound of my voice who does not want to appropriate and pay the full amount that has been adjusted and found due to these pensioners of the country?

The next item amounts to two and a half millions of dollars for soldiers' claims for bounty and back pay, &c., which each year takes its place in the deficiency bill; and $700,000 is for judgments of the courts against the Government.

So that deducting these we are actually left with a deficiency of only $3,300,000 on the appropriations of last year.

These deficiencies apply to the amounts allowed, and not to expenditures, for this administration has largely diminished the outgo under the amounts appropriated.

The gentleman talks of the effort of this side with "iron will" to resist appropriations. Yes, sir; I admit that this side of the House with iron will has resisted subsidy appropriations so often insisted upon by that side of the House and by the Senate of the United States. [Applause.]

Mr. BAYNE. Not all of this side.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman will not interrupt me.

I want further to say that the bill under consideration, as reported, reduces the appropriations to an extent of five millions of money under what was given last year. I say further that the legislative bill, as passed by the House, reduces the expenditures below last year about $800,000.

Every bill except the pension, Post-Office, and consular and diplomatic bills show reductions as compared with last year, the amount of which last bill was increased in the Senate. Of course the pension bill necessarily is an exception. I do not object to that nor do I take it into the controversy, because we have to give and are willing to give and give cheerfully every dollar of the amount that is required to pay pensions. The Post-Office bill shows an increase. The receipts aggregate about forty-seven millions of dollars as estimated, while the estimated expenditures reach fifty-five millions.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WILSON was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. RANDALL.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from New York may reckon that that same "iron will" will continue to regulate the efforts of this side of the House against the chronic attempts of that side of the House to raise appropriations. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

The history of the bill under consideration tells us of the truth of what I have indicated. A week has been consumed in the discussion of its provisions, and the incessant efforts from the other side to increase the aggregate have been uniform.

In this purpose we will continue unmoved by the sneers of the gentleman or by his taunting. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We mean to stand firmly and solidly here in that direction and rely on it as one of the principles of Democratic faith. [Applause on the Democratic side.] We believe that the reason why we are here is because this policy has not prevailed in the past history of Republican administrations. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HISCOCK and Mr. BAYNE rose.

Mr. BAYNE. I have no objection to yielding to the gentleman from New York if I can be recognized afterward.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will have to take his chances for that.

Mr. BAYNE. Then I do not desire to yield just now.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

Here the committee informally rose, and Mr. DUNN took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. McCOOK, its Secretary, informed the House that the Senate had passed with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the joint resolution (H. Res. 196) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. BAYNE. My colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] has said that this side of the House was chargeable with having voted large subsidies, and with having encouraged extravagance; and that that side of the House was not at all responsible for that course of conduct. There were on this side of the House a very large number of Republicans who voted against subsidies, and who were unwilling to imperil any moneys of the Government in any such visionary schemes as were contemplated in the bill referred to.

My colleague the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has contended that that side of the House has presented an unusual example of economy. I call his attention to a statement that was made at the other end of the Capitol only yesterday, where a reputable and representative Democratic Senator said——

Mr. McMILLIN. I rise to a point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. Well, I will say a prominent man in another position, if that will be more satisfactory to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. McMILLIN. I rise to the point of order that the gentleman must not use what is said in the Senate to influence action here.

Mr. BAYNE. Then I will say a prominent citizen of the United States.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope the gentleman from Tennessee will let it be read.

Mr. McMILLIN. At the request of friends around me I withdraw the objection.

Mr. BAYNE. I will read what is said by the prominent citizen to whom I have referred:

I sit in that committee with a certain sense of mortification——

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a question of order.

Mr. BAYNE. I hope this will not come out of my time. I do not care much how it is done, but I want to get the facts in.

Mr. HAMMOND. The point of order I make is that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has no right to read in debate here the proceedings in the other branch of Congress. He may if he sees proper, in violation of the spirit of the rule, pretendedly in a different way get this in; but I trust when the point of order is made he will have a higher regard for the rules of the House than to violate them.

Mr. REED, of Maine. On the point of order I wish to say it is perfectly well settled in the body from which we derive this precedent that an allusion to what has occurred in another place is parliamentary and suitable. The gentleman from Pennsylvania is entirely in order in proceeding as he does.

Mr. BAYNE. If I am violating any rule its primary violation was at the other end of the Capitol. The criticism was made by a representative Democrat upon the members of this House and the other side of this House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not want to lose my time with this.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire the gentleman to understand that the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. I will read now what a prominent Democrat has said, a representative man in that party, and whose integrity on all questions has never been disputed, however much we may differ. He said:

I sit in that committee with a certain sense of mortification——

Mr. HAMMOND rose.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Oh, how sick it makes them.

Mr. HAMMOND. Under the decision of the Chair the gentleman should not be allowed to read the proceedings in the Senate.

Mr. BAYNE. How do you know what I am reading?

Mr. HAMMOND. I see what you are reading. The House sees it. It is patent to the world. You are violating the rules of the House and you will not deny it.

Mr. BAYNE. I do not want my time taken up in this way.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair sustained the point of order when a direct reference was made to the Senate. He can not sustain the point of order against a reading in which it is not professed that there is a reference to the proceedings of the Senate.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That is right.

Mr. BAYNE. This is what I desire to read:

I sit in that committee with a certain sense of mortification at the delay, which I think needless, and I confess I feel humiliated when I hear Republican gentlemen say, what I have heard stated on this floor more than once in the last day or two, that very likely many of the appropriations are diminished so that gentlemen at the other end of the Capitol can go before the country and tell how economical they were and how extravagant this end of the Capitol was, when this and many other items have to be inserted as amendments for the very purpose of enabling the Government to be carried on at all. I can make no excuse for the delay.

The CHAIRMAN. It appears evident that the gentleman is now reading from the proceedings of the Senate.

Mr. BAYNE. Then it must be susceptible of identification in some way apart from any words I have uttered. The facts are sufficiently familiar, it seems, on both sides of the House to be thoroughly appreciated, and I am glad to know it.

I quote from another gentleman, from whom I may quote without violating any parliamentary law; that is, the distinguished gentleman from Indiana, a member of the Committee on Appropriations.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, was recognized, and yielded to Mr. BAYNE.

Mr. BAYNE. I refer now to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], a member of the Committee on Appropriations, a gentleman whose reputation has been established all over the country for economy and reform and retrenchment, a member now of the committee. What does he say? In an interview which I see published in a newspaper that gentleman is reported as having said:

Its extravagance—

That is, the extravagance of the House—

Its extravagance in voting appropriations is an outrage upon the people and a violation of every pledge made by the party. Every appropriation bill but one has been largely increased beyond the expenditures for the current year and the aggregate increase is about $23,000,000.

Mr. DUNN. And still you want to make them bigger.

Mr. PETERS. We are not in control of this House.

Mr. BAYNE. The editor says:

In that state of things Mr. HOLMAN does not know what we shall have left with which to go before the people at the coming elections.

[Laughter.]

And thereon there seems to be a wide difference between the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations and I believe its second representative. And as suggested by my friend from Maine [Mr. REED], there has been considerable difference between them lately. But my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] came to the rescue, and assumed the position that the statements made by his colleague on the committee the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] were not true, although those statements were published in the newspapers of the country and sent out, as I understand, by the Associated Press, and have not been denied to this day excepting the denial made by my colleague from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] in reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. I am not familiar enough with the details of the different bills and the aggregate amount to speak of them, but I think it has been shown beyond all controversy that the aggregate appropriations made by this Congress for the support of the Government will be larger than any that have ever been made before, if we eliminate from former appropriations the amounts that were required for the payment of interest on our large public debt and the amounts that were necessary for extraordinary expenditures.

I make the statement, Mr. Chairman, that the appropriations made at this session of Congress for the ordinary and current expenditures of the Government will be larger than the appropriations ever made by any previous Congress for ordinary and current expenditures, and in the same connection I make another statement, namely, that if the Democratic party came into power with a view to retrenchment and reform the door is wide open for that movement, because they can eliminate from nearly every public office in the city of Washington a number of unnecessary clerks, and thus curtail the unnecessary expenditures provided for in this and the other appropriation bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a few words, but in truth it has always seemed to me that the time consumed in this kind of discussion is the least profitably employed of any time spent in debate here. Discussions of this character annually occur and they very seldom throw any light upon current events.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Oh, yes, they do.

Mr. HOLMAN. But my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] has almost compelled to me say a word. He calls attention to an "interview" with me, said to have been sent out from this city and published in the papers. I have not examined the paper to which he has called attention, although I must have seen it at the time it was published some months ago. If the statements there made are as the gentleman has cited them, it is to be remembered that they were necessarily speculative, because the appropriation bills generally had not then been framed.

Still I owe it to candor to say that I anticipated some months ago a large increase of the appropriations. I was apprehensive of it; the outlook to me then was not satisfactory. I was very willing to sound a note of alarm if I could; and I am very fortunate in being able to say now, when we are approaching the end of the session, when the appropriation bills have been substantially made up, that this session of Congress will make a very good showing, and that the appropriation bills as they pass the House will be more than usually satisfactory.

There are but two bills upon which there will be an increase—the pension bill, as all gentlemen here know, and the Post-Office appropriation bill. I do not speak of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. LONG. How about the deficiencies?

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, the deficiencies are easily explained. They will not exceed, I think, three and a half millions of actual deficiencies—I mean the deficiencies proper.

The increase in the pension appropriations and Post-Office appropriations do not admit of that classification.

The six millions growing out of pension legislation all gentlemen approve——

Mr. HISCOCK. Pension legislation when?

Mr. HOLMAN. The pension legislation of the current session of Congress.

Mr. HISCOCK. I beg the gentleman's pardon. There is only one million growing out of that. I do not want any mistake on that point. I say there is only one million deficiency growing out of the pension legislation of this session.

Mr. HOLMAN. We were speaking of deficiencies. As far as pensions are concerned in the aggregate we ran up on the regular annual pension appropriation bill, after it passed the House, from $75,000,000 to $81,000,000, and gentlemen will find that in the deficiency bill proper the items which are to be passed as real deficiencies aggregate materially below the average little more, if anything, than three and one-half millions. That these two bills, the Post-Office appropriation bill and the pension bill, had to be increased is a fact known to all gentlemen, and the reason is known to all.

But my friend from Pennsylvania fails to notice the fact that the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, even as it will come from the Senate, judging from its present condition, will still show a reduction of nearly $700,000 from the appropriations of last year, and gentlemen on the other side of the House very well know, from their own experience when in power, that that is the bill which it is most difficult of all to reduce. The party administering the Government will always find more difficulty in making reductions in the legislative, judicial, and executive appropriation bill than in any other. Indeed, the tendency of this bill is to an everlasting increase; yet I feel justified in saying that, except in the first and second sessions of the Forty-fourth Congress, no reductions have been made upon that bill for many years so great as those made and that will be made during the present session of Congress.

One word more, sir; and I mention this point for the purpose of showing the members of the House and the country that the committees having charge of the appropriation bills have been anxious to cover all proper matters of appropriation to an extent quite beyond our past experience here. For instance, the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] will remember that the items for back pay and bounty and for loss of horses by volunteer officers and soldiers of the Union Army have ordinarily come into the appropriation bills only to the extent they were settled up to December of the preceding year.

In other words, we have usually, in making up the appropriations for those items, taken into account only the reports of settlements made by the accounting officers of the Treasury at the meeting of the session making the appropriation. But I wish to call attention to the fact—and I think it is greatly creditable to the gentlemen having charge of the preparation of the appropriation bills—that they have called upon the accounting officers of the Treasury to report to the House every dollar allowed for back pay, bounty, and for losses on horses by volunteer soldiers and officers in the late war, and other audited claims of a similar character, down to the 18th day of June, 1886, and every such item is included in the proper appropriation bill of the present session.

Does this look like an attempt merely to reduce the aggregate of the appropriation?

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I regret that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] should have sought to make himself the conduit through which the evil-speakings of anybody should be poured out upon the House of which he is a member.

Mr. BAYNE. I am glad the gentleman characterizes them in that way.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman says the appropriations of this Congress when it shall have ended will be larger than those of any other Congress that ever assembled here. Yet there does not sit in this Hall a single man who has ever seen the gentleman from Pennsylvania vote during this Congress against a single increase of appropriation.

Mr. BAYNE. Why, I voted with the Democrats against the Pacific mail subsidy.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I was not aware of that fact. The gentleman, then, admits that his party was wrong in attempting to force the subsidy upon the House.

Mr. BAYNE. I was against the subsidy.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Now, the very abuse that the gentleman speaks of as coming from outside arises from the fact that this House has set its face against excessive appropriations. However unpopular economy may be in this Hall, the gentleman does not sit on this side nor on the other who maligns economy when he gets into his canvass. But I regret to say that the difference between the utterances of gentlemen before coming here and after coming here are too often as great as the difference between "before taking" and "after taking," as exhibited in the picture in the almanac. This House has sat here and refused to increase appropriations; and I am glad to say that in spite of an effort of the Senate to increase the Post-Office appropriation bill $800,000 for mail subsidy we have at last conquered. If it is opprobrious to have done so, we take whatever of responsibility attaches to it.

Nobody is frightened at the diurnal complaints of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK]. They come as regularly as the rising and setting of the sun; but we have the consolation of knowing that, as is sometimes said by the poor patient in regard to quack remedies—I do not mean anything offensive to the gentleman—"If they do no good, they do no harm."

Now, Mr. Chairman, the showing of this Congress when it shall have ended will not be as predicted by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. We shall show a general reduction of expenditures. It is true that the pension-list will show an increase; but gentlemen will remember that there has been an increase of certain grades of pension. There was the increase of the widows' pension from $8 to $12 a month, the increase of the pension of dependent relatives from $8 to $12 a month. Is there any man on the other side who is rash enough to get up and say that those were illegitimate appropriations? I think not. Then let us have in these discussions a clear statement of the facts. Let it be said, as is true, that, with the exception of one other appropriation besides that for pensions, there is a decrease in this year's appropriations.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, gentlemen on the other side entirely mistake the point I have been striving to make. They seem to think I have attacked these appropriations because they have been improperly made. Oh, no; that has not been the purport of my remarks. You seem to think that I am charging you with voting appropriations for unworthy and improper objects. Oh, no; I am not attacking you for any such reason whatever.

In my opinion (if it is worth anything after the flippant criticisms which have been made upon me by my friends on the other side) I believe that in the main all the general appropriation bills which pass this House are, as to the objects of appropriation, honest and economical.

I do not believe a general appropriation bill has passed this House within my knowledge or recollection that carried improper or extravagant appropriations; and I say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] I concede that all the objects for which he proposes to appropriate in this bill and in the deficiency bill are worthy. But what I am trying to point the House and the country to is the fact that you come in here with bills which fail to appropriate sufficient for the year's service, fail to appropriate a sufficient amount. You bring them in knowing that there must be a deficiency; you bring them in for the purpose of making a contrast between yourselves and the Senate—to prove in a canvass that you are more economical than the Senate, although you know that at the very next session you will be compelled to appropriate an amount in excess of the recommendations of the Senate. That is what I charge upon you—that you indulge in this cheap, contemptible pettifogging. It is not demagogism even; it is not shrewd enough for demagogism, and it is beneath the contempt of the great party you profess to lead.

The idea of a Committee on Appropriations sending out to the country this statement to which I have called the attention of the House showing how much they had reduced the appropriations below the estimates, how much they had stricken off of Senate amendments, and then before the ink with which the statement was printed is dry, to come in here reporting to this House $13,000,000 of deficiencies—an amount $7,500,000 in excess of the appropriations which the Senate recommended. And then we have the spectacle of the chairman of the committee standing here and talking about the "economy" of his side of the House, making a tirade against this side, and his party friends clapping their hands!

Mr. HOLMAN. I understood the gentleman stated while I was absent from the House that the pension deficiencies were only about $1,500,000. I have here the law——

Mr. HISCOCK. What I have said is that the bill passed this session would require for its execution $1,000,000; and your $13,000,000 of deficiencies are only to that extent made up by pension appropriations that should not have been in the regular annual bills, leaving $12,500,000 that should have been. The gentleman from Pennsylvania points to clamors again about pension appropriations. Take out all there is in the deficiency bill for pensions, and then you are above the amount at which the bill passed the Senate in the last session. I find no fault with the payment of these amounts; they ought to be paid. What I desire is to forever put an end to this transparent demagogism, this species of trickery, which evokes applause from the other side of the House—trickery of the people it is. I desire to prevent the people from being deceived in future by these misleading documents which go to the public as the basis of appeals by members here to be returned by their constituents. What I hope for, and will procure for you if I can, is a just estimation of you by your constituents and the country and at your proper value. [Applause.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the question at issue arises out of what the gentleman from New York states as to the amount and cause of the deficiencies. I stated the deficiencies embraced six millions for pensions. The gentleman's answer seemed to imply that my statement was not correct; that the amount of pension deficiency was only about one and a half millions of dollars. I wish to place that statement as to the pension deficiency upon the basis of absolute truth. I hold in my hand the act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for public printing, pensions, and pay of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886; it contains a provision for Army and Navy pensions as follows:

For pensions: For invalid widows, minor children, and dependent relatives, and survivors and widows of soldiers of the war of 1812, $6,000,000.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do not misunderstand me. I do not find fault with that.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then you admit it?

Mr. HISCOCK. Why did you not appropriate for it a year ago without having a deficiency bill brought in to meet it?

Mr. HOLMAN. The fairness of the gentleman's statement is seen in this: From thirteen and a half million dollars he deducted one million and a half for pensions, and said the residue was twelve millions. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HISCOCK rose.

Mr. HOLMAN. Do not interrupt me.

Mr. HISCOCK. You interrupted me, and I will take the privilege of interrupting you. What I complain of is this, you did not appropriate for it last year; you left it out of your bill last year for the purpose of perpetrating a cheap trick that you have been economical. [Derisive laughter on the Democratic side.]

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, see how unfair all this is; see how discreditable it is. We voted every dollar last year that was asked by the Commissioner of Pensions. Yes, sir, we appropriated every dollar that was estimated for by the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. SPRINGER. Who made that estimate?

Mr. HOLMAN. I repeat it. Every dollar estimated by the Commissioner of Pensions as necessary for the present fiscal year was voted by the Committee on Appropriations and appropriated by the House and Senate.

Mr. SPRINGER. Who was the Commissioner—Dudley?

Mr. HOLMAN. A Republican Commissioner of Pensions was holding that office and made the estimate and every dollar he asked for was appropriated. Could we do any more? Did the gentleman who gets up this tirade ask for any more? It seems to me his tirade might be creditable to him in some less organized body than ours. [Laughter and applause.]

Did that gentleman propose any larger sum? Yet he has the temerity in the presence of respectable gentlemen to undertake to leave the impression that only one million and a half of dollars of the amount mentioned as deficiencies was for pensions, whereas the law I have shown fixes the sum at six millions of dollars, or nearly one-half of all the deficiencies is for pensions, although every dollar called for had been appropriated for in the regular current bill for the present year.

I do not think the gentleman from New York can pride himself on this little speech of his when he comes to read it. It is not creditable to the House or the occasion. It is not creditable to a representative of the people. It is the cheapest kind of debate.

A MEMBER. Buncombe.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; the cheapest kind.

Mr. HISCOCK. Let me ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. HOLMAN. You can not afford to indulge in oratory quite as lean and cheap as that. [Great laughter and applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I move the following amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 1823 add the following:

"The reserve work shall be bound in sheep; and no part of the appropriation provided in this section shall be available to carry out provisions of the sundry civil act approved March 3, 1883, providing that there may be bound for each Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress one copy of each book or document issued or ordered by authority of Congress during the term of service of such Senator, Representative, or Delegate."

Mr. CANNON. I make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CANNON. That it changes existing law, and is therefore not in order. It is new legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from North Carolina on the point of order.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, the point of order which is raised by the gentleman from Illinois can not be sustained. A consideration of the practice which has obtained in the Printing Office in reference to the binding for members of the two Houses will show this.

There is bound in calf, for the use of the two Houses, 578 copies of each public document in what is called the reserve work or number. I have searched diligently and have been unable to find any law authorizing such a style of binding. I am informed by persons familiar with the history of the Government Printing Office that this custom sprang up when the printing for the two Houses of Congress was let out by contract.

In order to make what was called by the printers a "fat" job there were bound a number of copies in calf. This custom has been kept up ever since without authority of law and at great and unnecessary expense to the Government.

I hold in my hand a letter from the Public Printer, from which I read the following extract bearing directly on this question:

In answer to your request, I beg to make one further suggestion in the direction of economy, and send herewith two specimens—one bound in sheep and the other in law calf.

The law calfskins cost $29 per dozen. We cut four to the skin, which makes the cost of each book about 58 cents.

The sheepskins cost about $9 per dozen, or about 18¾ cents per book (cuts the same number).

One binding is about as good as the other for all practical purposes.

You can not distinguish the difference between the two as a rule without a careful and minute examination and yet the calf binding costs the Government $25,000 a year more than the sheep.

Mr. MILLS. What does it cost to bind these books in library style?

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I say the difference between the cost of binding in sheep and binding in calf is $25,000 a year to the Government. I do not know what the cost of binding would be in the ordinary library style, but there is no authority of law for this expensive style of binding at all. And therefore this amendment does not change any existing law. It is making no new legislation, but simply directing the Public Printer that this money shall not be used hereafter to bind the reserve work in calf, but in some other binding less expensive, to wit, sheep or cloth.

Just as well might you say that there is authority of law for binding in any other style, for instance, the most expensive morocco, as in calf, for you have the same authority by law to bind the one as the other. There is no authority for it; but, as I have shown, it has grown into a custom that sprang up in the Department some years ago. To save $25,000 a year is the object of the first part of the amendment.

Now the second clause of the amendment is in the following language:

That no part of the appropriations provided in this section shall be available to carry out the provisions of the sundry civil act approved March 3, 1883, providing that there may be bound for each Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress one copy of each book or document issued or ordered by authority of Congress during the term of service of such Senator, Representative, or Delegate.

Under Rule III, clause 3, it is provided that the Clerk of the House shall have preserved for each member of the House an extra copy, in good binding, of all documents printed by order of either House. Under this rule every member gets one copy of every document printed by order of the House, neatly bound for his library. In addition to that, this amendment which I propose allows every Member, Senator, and Delegate to have bound one copy of every publication made by order of the Congress to which he belongs.

Now let us see what has been the result. In the Forty-seventh Congress, 936 volumes were bound at an average cost of $1.30 a volume, amounting to $1,216.80. In the Forty-eighth Congress this had grown to 11,677 volumes at a cost of $1.30 a volume, amounting to $15,180.10, and for the Forty-ninth Congress up to date 7,783 volumes have been bound at a total cost of $10,078.90, and only about one-half of the term has expired. The total cost of this binding up to the close of the fiscal year just completed is $15,000.

To give an idea of the kind of binding done under the law referred to, I have recently seen an order directing the binding of the estimates made by the Treasury Department for the Appropriations Committee, to be bound in morocco, to be placed in a library. Now, I maintain that one copy for each member of every document provided under this rule is sufficient; and it is no new legislation to limit the appropriations under this bill to the simple requirements of the law providing for binding for the use of the two Houses.

In other words, none of the appropriations provided in this rule shall be applied for the purposes of carrying out the act of March 3, 1883. That will save to the Government about $30,000; and the amendment altogether, that is, requiring this binding to be done in cheaper style instead of in calf, will save $25,000. The other provision of the amendment will save $30,000, making a total of $55,000 saved annually to the Government, and it will be a saving of an expenditure which has heretofore done nobody any good, because it prevents that much useless binding and does not affect any existing legislation.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is the act of 1883 referred to in the amendment the act under which this additional binding comes?

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. It is.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. In my former remarks in reply to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], touching the appropriations for deficiencies for the current year, I was not able on the spur of the moment to give the accurate figures and specifications of all of the purposes for which the deficiencies are recommended. I can now show that the conduct of the Committee on Appropriations and the other committee having charge of appropriations under the existing rules has been both commendable and just. No fair criticism in this respect can be made in reference to any of the appropriation committees in this House.

For pensions there is a deficiency provided for of $6,000,000; for artificial limbs for soldiers, $175,000; for surgeons' fees, $500,000; for customs service, $277,000.

It is well known that the customs service is supplied by a permanent and indefinite appropriation of five and a half millions, together with the amount received from "fines, forfeitures, and penalties." The amount was not sufficient during the current year to pay the entire expense of collecting the customs duties. But this administration has adopted a different course from any of its predecessors. It has not permitted the appropriation in that connection for one year to be taken out of the appropriations for another year. So that we have been compelled to make an appropriation for that purpose. A wise conclusion is reached, that as to the matter of appropriations each year's expenditures shall stand separate and distinct from any other year.

Then there is a deficiency for soldiers' and other certified claims for 1883 and prior years growing out of the war of $2,442,938. There is $555,000 in the deficiency bill for water supplied to the District of Columbia, one-half of which the District will ultimately pay, but which the Federal Government advances. This deficiency grows out of the imperfect legislation of the Forty-seventh Congress. There is for Court of Claims judgments $682,000; in all, $10,631,938. The balance, about $2,370,000, is what may be called the usual deficiencies growing out of the necessary expenses which it was impossible to anticipate with accuracy.

When I come to compare this with the deficiency which the House at the first session of the Forty-eighth Congress had to appropriate for as a result of the legislation under the control of the Republican party, with the gentleman from New York as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I find that the deficiencies necessary were $7,057,509 in regular deficiency bill and an urgent deficiency of $1,671,579, showing an aggregate of deficiency arising out of the management of the appropriations of the prior year of $8,729,000. [Applause on the Democratic side.] I do not find in this amount of nearly $9,000,000 a dollar for pensions.

Before I close I want to say a word to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE], who has seen fit to repeat language used in another Chamber. I say in answer to such statement that there is not a scintilla of warrant, justification, or truth in the criticism elsewhere made, whether it is applied to the Appropriations Committee or any committee having charge of appropriation bills, or whether it is applied to the body of the House on this side. [Applause.] I think that is a clean-cut reply and there is no occasion to say another word in reply. [Applause.]

Mr. REED, of Maine. I desire to say that I differ with the gentleman from Indiana in regarding discussions of this kind as unnecessary. It is never unnecessary to expose false pretenses. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] stands up in the presence of this House and says there never have been appropriation bills that have not covered the needs of the Government that have gone out from his hand. And yet year after year I have witnessed his acceptance of amendments on the part of the Senate which were in furtherance of existing law. If he wants proof of it, take the Post-Office appropriation bill of the last Congress, where he had to admit amendments to carry out existing law.

Now, the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows and every man here knows that there has been a pretense of language and of sounding phrases about the economy on that side of the House; and he knows perfectly well that that has consisted in making lower appropriations than the public service needed and demanding of the Senate that they should stand up in defense of the real necessary expenses of the Government of the United States. And here to-day there are before the Senate honest Democratic officials like Mr. Durham, the First Comptroller, who is demanding of the Senate that they shall give him more assistance and shall spend more than this economical House says ought to be spent.

I am glad to see that this thing has been discussed sufficiently in this House so that gentlemen of opposite political persuasions, prominent Democrats in this country, are beginning to realize the falseness of the pretense which has been practiced upon this country. The gentleman from Pennsylvania says that his iron will is going to continue to control the Democratic party.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not say that. I said the iron will of this side of the House.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But everybody knows yours is the only iron will there [laughter and applause], and gentlemen on the other side are smarting under it too much not to know that such is the fact. They realize it. We all realize it. And why should we not? What other iron will could have foisted upon this House year after year without explanation, without a single argument, such arrangements as we have had that have been called appropriation bills? And yet the gentleman gets up here and is followed by other gentlemen pretending that we are not opposed to the items.

What we say is, appropriate what the Government requires. Do not undertake to run this Government as railroad "wreckers" do a railroad, by cutting down the needed appropriations in hopes that some Congress may come that will meet deficiencies. Gentlemen are proud of this kind of thing that they call economy. What is economy? It is the expenditure of Government money for honest purposes in sums that are needed. What is the economy that is practiced here? It is reducing the amount appropriated below what is needed for the use of the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. RANDALL was recognized and yielded to Mr. REED.

Mr. REED, of Maine. This is not a fair method of appropriation. It shows economy in the appropriation bills but not in the Treasury, and the question is a question of money, not of figures on white paper. It is a question of actual Government expenditure. Why, yesterday the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] stood up against the payment of witnesses and of jurors in the United States courts, and he did that notwithstanding the fact that he himself has sanctioned expenditures in the one instance of $75,000 more than the amount he appropriates and in the other instance $185,000. What is the use of pretending that this is a matter of economy? It is a matter of stump-speaking. That is all. It is a matter that furnishes him material when he goes to New York to help out a free-trade Democratic brother. [Laughter.] It is material which makes him in demand upon the stump; but I think that after the exposition made of his methods both here and elsewhere it may not be henceforth as satisfactory to the people as it seems to have been in the past. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say to the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] and to his colleagues upon the other side of the House, that this side will take care of the appropriations necessary to support the Government. The people of the country have intrusted the administration of affairs to the Democratic party. They have elected a Democratic President. They have elected a Democratic majority in this House. We take all the responsibility that that implies, and, among other things, that responsibility requires this side of the House, through its Committee on Appropriations and the other committees having authority to report appropriation bills, to furnish the money necessary to run the Government. That responsibility is assumed; it is taken; and we propose to discharge it in our own way. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] need not distress his soul upon this subject. We will take care of this Government. We will take care that it is correctly, honestly, and economically administered; and that is just what disturbs the gentleman from Maine and his friends upon the other side of the House.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committe now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. REAGAN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to take up House joint resolution, with the Senate amendments, in regard to the extension of the appropriations.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 196) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.

Mr. RANDALL. I move to concur in the amendments of the Senate, and I demand the previous question upon that motion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen."
Page 1, line 15, strike out "ten" and insert "fifteen."

The previous question was ordered; and the amendments were concurred in.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of general appropriation bills, and pending that I move that all debate upon the paragraph in relation to the public printing be closed in one minute.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, and Mr. CANNON. I hope not.

Mr. RANDALL. How much time do you want?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I want this practical, sensible amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. REID] to be discussed somewhat.

Mr. RANDALL. How much time do you want?

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Say five minutes.

Mr. RANDALL. Everybody is for the amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Everybody is not for it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I thought they were.

Mr. CANNON. I can not tell how many guesses the gentleman from Pennsylvania is to swap with this side of the House about the appropriations. If the debate is to be confined to the merits of the amendment, we would like ten or fifteen minutes on this side.

Mr. RANDALL. Very well; say fifteen minutes on that side and five on this.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to that arrangement?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I insist on an equal division of the time. I object to the five-minute limitation on this side.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry: If this motion be agreed to, will it cut off amendments?

The SPEAKER. It will not cut off amendments, whether offered heretofore or hereafter, but will stop debate after the expiration of the time fixed by the House.

Mr. RANDALL. I move now that the debate be limited to twenty minutes, to be equally divided.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Pennsylvania moves that debate on the clause of the bill under consideration in relation to public printing and binding be limited to twenty minutes, with the understanding that the time is to be equally divided between the two sides. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the order to close debate be reconsidered, and that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is now on the motion of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union to resume the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. How far does the limitation of debate apply?

The SPEAKER. It applies to that part of the bill which relates to public printing and binding.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then it does not refer to the rest of the bill? To what line does it go? I think there may have been some misunderstanding.

The SPEAKER (after examining the bill). The entire paragraph seems to relate either to public printing or public binding, or both.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That was not understood.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. The last amendment offered related to line 1823.

The SPEAKER. But the order made by the House was that debate be limited to twenty minutes upon so much of the bill as relates to public printing and binding. The Chair finds upon examination that the entire paragraph to the end of the bill relates to that subject.

Mr. RANDALL. In making my motion I said "clauses relating to public printing and binding;" that is, to the end of the bill.

Mr. REED, of Maine. It is not possible to limit debate on what has not been read.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is advised that the whole bill has now been read.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then there was a misunderstanding.

Mr. RANDALL. I think the bill was read to the end; that is my recollection.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Then there has been a misunderstanding, because I desired to present a matter of which I have spoken to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RANDALL. That will come in as new matter.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But I want to debate it.

Mr. RANDALL. This does not abridge debate on that. This applies only to public printing.

Mr. REED, of Maine. If it does not abridge the presentation of that matter——

Mr. RANDALL. It does not cut off amendments, it only cuts off debate as to public printing.

Mr. REED, of Maine. But the gentleman from Pennsylvania knows——

Mr. RANDALL. I will take no advantage of the gentleman; he may rely on that.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman knows that I want to present that matter.

Mr. RANDALL. I am aware of it.

The question being taken on the motion of Mr. RANDALL that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. REAGAN in the chair), and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 9478) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House debate has been limited to twenty minutes on that part of the bill relating to public printing and binding. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Illinois to control the ten minutes on one side and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL] to control the ten minutes on the other.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Did the Chair indicate my colleague [Mr. CANNON] or myself as entitled to control the time on this side? I happen to be in favor of the motion made by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. REID].

Mr. CANNON. Then the gentleman is not entitled to any part of the ten minutes on this side.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I want five minutes.

Mr. CANNON. Then the gentleman must get it from the other side.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to control the time on that side of the question.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, all I want is the attention of the House, so it may understand just exactly what this amendment means. I move to amend the amendment by striking out the proviso.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the words to be stricken out.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, There may be bound for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress one copy of each book or document issued or ordered by authority of Congress during the term of service of such Senator, Representative, or Delegate.

Mr. CANNON. Gentlemen understand the calf-bound set of books each member gets some time after the close of each session of Congress, if the gentleman's amendment prevails, is to be bound in sheep. I have no objection to that.

He withholds, however, by the latter clause of his amendment all money under which a member of Congress can have any document issued during his service bound during the session. I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that this legislation was put on advisedly in the sundry civil appropriation bill in 1883. The Senate from their contingent fund bound anything they chose in any kind of binding they wanted. That was the habit of the Senate going back indefinitely, away back before their service commenced. The House never followed that precedent. We proposed the matter should be regulated by law. So the provision was inserted in the sundry civil bill of March 3, 1883. I believe that regulation is right. Gentlemen understand from time to time when they want a document bound it is sent down to the Government Printing Office through the Clerk's document-room to be bound, and when bound it is returned. It is more serviceable than the set of books members get after Congress has expired. I am opposed to limiting this appropriation so as to prevent our doing that. That is all I desire to say at this time. I will reserve my remaining time.

Mr. RANDALL. No one seems to want any further time, and I therefore call for a vote.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I desire to say a word in reply to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. Under Rule III, clause 3, each member of the House gets one copy of every document, part bound in calf and the rest bound in sheep or cloth. The sheep is as good as calf binding for all practical purposes. It does not affect the number bound, but only the quality of the binding.

Then we come to the next item in the amendment, and that is under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883, of the sundry civil appropriation bill allowing each Senator, Representative, and Delegate to have bound one copy of any document printed by Congress.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question to see whether I correctly understand the effect of his proposition. Does it prohibit the appropriation of money to carry that out?

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Yes; it does.

Mr. CANNON. So I supposed.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I wish to call the attention of the House to an abuse which has crept in. In the prosecution of its work by the Committee on Printing we have been trying to save all we possibly could. Now, at the first session after that provision became a law, allowing each Senator, Representative, and Delegate to have bound one copy of any document printed by order of Congress, there were 937 books bound, at $1.30 per volume, amounting to about $1,200 in all. At the next session it went up to 11,671. Members do not always have them bound for themselves, but any one wanting a document bound comes and asks some Senator, Representative, or Delegate to have it done for him. I found in one instance the estimates of appropriation for the past year ordered to be bound, when it was almost worthless now but to the Committee on Appropriations, and to them only at a preceding session.

In the Forty-eighth Congress the number went up to 11,677, costing some $9,000. For the fiscal year ending yesterday the cost ran up to $15,000. At this rate it will not be long before it reaches $50,000 and $100,000. If my amendment be adopted it does not cut off from any Senator, Representative, or Delegate a single copy of the set of books now provided to be bound by the law.

I say, gentlemen, if your Appropriations Committee is going to commence a system of economic administration by cutting off officers, by cutting off clerks, and cutting down their pay, I know of no better way to begin a saving than by commencing right here in the House and cutting off unnecessary expenses.

Let us commence by paring close to ourselves. What if the Senate does this? The Senate does many things that the House does not and will not do. Let us stop this abuse before it doubles and trebles in succeeding Congresses the expenditure that is now required.. I have shown you how it has been growing from year to year.

I maintain that one copy bound in sheep or cloth is enough for each member to put in his private library, and it is a useless extravagance to permit these orders to be made at any time for binding; because they are often given to messengers or pages, and documents useless to members in connection with their legislative duties are thus bound at the expense of the Government. It is an abuse that ought to be stopped, and the annual saving of $55,000 effected.

Mr. CANNON. A single word. Gentlemen around me here say they do not understand this proposition. I will state again that the amendment the gentleman proposes would prevent the binding of documents here during the session on the requisition of members. Now if members are in favor of that, well and good. I can stand it as well as they can.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Would they not get these books bound anyhow afterward?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes; they get one volume after the Congress adjourns; but I would far rather do without that and have the current work bound as we need it.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I said that I was in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina, but I wanted it extended further than he extends it. I want to see a provision to cheapen the cost of binding; but what I want to see particularly is that provision of law abolished altogether by which a complete list of documents is furnished to each member after he leaves Congress, whether he wants them or whether they are valuable or not. I have been here since the beginning of the Forty-eighth Congress, and am informed that a set of documents is being prepared for me. I have not even seen them; I do not want them, and have no use for them. Many of them are utterly valueless. I have no shelf-room or garret-room in which to store them away; and I can do nothing with them but either to throw or give them away.

What I want is to select out the valuable documents that will pay for their binding; and that was my understanding of the object of the resolution of the gentleman from North Carolina. I think this provision, that a complete set of public documents, valuable or valueless, shall be supplied to us at a considerable period after we have lost our interest in them and after they have become useless to us in our capacity here as legislators is one that ought to be abolished. It is a provision that ought to be repealed; but the provision for current binding may be and is a matter of considerable convenience and value to members in many respects.

Mr. CANNON. I now propose to modify the amendment, and ask the Clerk to read it as modified.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of the amendment of Mr. REID, of North Carolina, the words "and no part of the appropriation provided in this section shall be available to carry out the provisions of the sundry civil act approved March 3, 1883, providing that there may be bound for each Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress one copy of each book or document issued or ordered by authority of Congress during the time of service of such Senator, Representative, or Delegate."

Mr. CANNON. That modifies his amendment to provide that all reserve work can be bound in sheep. That will merely change the law from what it is so that the set of documents which come to members after their term of service has expired will be bound in sheep instead of calf.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. But you will not get an extra number of any document unless you order it, and you have to state in the order the style of the binding. By striking out that provision of the amendment you will have an expenditure of $30,000 that would otherwise be saved.

Mr. CANNON. I do not want to save any expenditures that we need or to which we are entitled in the performance of our duty here which will enable us to do it properly.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that this discussion shows the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina to be rather too broad. That the members ought not to have two copies of a document is true; but if I prefer to have a copy bound now for present use in Congress, rather than wait six months to get it when it will be useless to me, I ought to be able to do that under the act of 1883; and the real remedy ought to be not the annulment of that law, by refusing to pay for binding under it, but a change in this regard: that when a copy is so ordered that copy shall be charged to the member, and the other copy he shall not get. Then if he gives it away it is his own business. Further, they may limit the expenditure on that copy, if you please, so that it shall be in cloth or sheep or anything else cheaper; but the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina as now proposed, and as I understand it, will deprive members, for the whole of the session of Congress when such documents have important uses to them, from having any document bound for their convenience. We keep up a library for our use here, and that furnishes all the printed matter that is needed, as a general thing; not as a favor to us, but on the assumption that it will enable us as public servants to better perform our public duty; and we should not prevent ourselves from being in a position to have all the tools with which the work can be best and most properly done.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Will the gentleman answer me a question for information?

Mr. HAMMOND. I will if I can.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Under that law is it true, whether you want documents or not or order them or not, a complete set of all documents, valuable and valueless, has gradually accumulated for each member and he gets them all after a while?

Mr. HAMMOND. There is a law giving all documents to each member.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I was not aware of that for some time after I was a member of this body. I was informed two and a half years after I first sat in Congress that a large collection of books in boxes will go to my library in Chicago which I do not want.

Mr. HAMMOND. This amendment does not affect that at all. It simply cuts off from us the right to have a book bound which we desire to use here during the session of Congress.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I would ask the gentleman from Georgia, suppose he gives an order for binding, say to-day, how many months would it be before his order would be executed?

Mr. HAMMOND. I have given only one such order during the eight years I have been in Congress, and in that case I got the book back within four weeks.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. I know of members who have given orders and have not received the bound volume till they got home.

Mr. WILSON. The complete set of public documents which we get under the standing rule that the gentleman from North Carolina would continue comes to us so long after a session of Congress that we have almost forgotten that we have been members of Congress. They are useless—not helps to us in the transaction of the public business. We have not yet received all the documents of the Forty-eighth Congress, and I understand the members of the Forty-seventh Congress have not received their full quota of the documents of that Congress.

If gentlemen want to make reforms in the way of diminution of expenditures they should strike at the general rule, and not at this privilege of members of getting unbound copies from the document-room and having them bound for their use during the session.

This enables us to discriminate between works of permanent value, which we should wish to preserve, and this miscellaneous mass of two grains of wheat in two bushels of chaff reaching us at a time when we can not select from them the portion we desire to preserve for our personal use.

Mr. MILLS. I want to contribute something to this debate in connection with economy. I think on the matter of printing we may well have some economical thoughts. I regret I have not time to go so extensively into the subject as the case merits. But there is an ample field for a display of economical force in connection with the abuse of the printing privilege both of the House and of the Senate. Not only have we this item to provide for, but we are going ahead printing to an immense extent and scattering broadcast over the country what is worthless to members of Congress or to their constituents.

Mr. WILSON. You do not refer to speeches made in the House?

Mr. MILLS. I do not. I think that is the most valuable literature that we disseminate. [Laughter.]

Mr. FARQUHAR. Will the gentleman permit me for a moment?

Mr. MILLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. FARQUHAR. It is impossible for the Printing Committee to practice any economy so long as the House and Senate pass on all this amount of printing. Nor is it possible for the Public Printer to do so. The bills for printing are discussed and passed here and in the Senate, and the Public Printer is under the control of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

Mr. MILLS. I am much obliged to the gentleman for his interruption. But the Committee on Printing in this House or the Joint Committee on Printing can address itself to the question of a reform in that direction and investigate the subject and go to the bottom of it, and report the result of that investigation to this House. It can do that, and call the attention of the House to the amount of worthless printing that we are scattering over the country.

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is a very good suggestion.

The CHAIRMAN. The time limited for this debate has expired. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] to the amendment of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. REID].

The amendment offered by Mr. CANNON to the amendment was adopted, and the amendment as amended was adopted.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1856, after the word "expended," insert as follows:
"For payment of sixty-five printers, regularly employed on the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, $90 each for time unemployed during the present session, $5,850."

Mr. RANDALL. I make the point of order. The reason I do so is that this is new legislation, because we have under the action of the two Houses of Congress already given to these printers on the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD what they have never had before; that is, pay during fifteen days' absence. This was given heretofore I think only once—last year, in lieu of any absence-pay.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I see very well that as a matter of economy because we have given fifteen days' leave of absence with pay that is measurably something in this line. But I wish to call the attention of the chairman to a broader view of this matter.

This is simply the same amendment which was made last year. Under the scale of prices adopted by Congress for the payment of hands in the Government Printing Office 50 cents per thousand ems are paid for composition. We give that for night-work and pay the same for day work.

These men on the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD do harder work, and are also subject to a furlough. When there is enough matter for composition they are put on at night, and when there is not they are furloughed and sent adrift.

So that really this House and the Senate of the United States, having in care the men who do the composition on this CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, give them now comparatively less pay than is received by any other employés in the Government Printing Office. This amendment was made originally to cover this deficiency in the pay.

I grant to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that the proper way to deal with the matter would be to so amend the law that the men on the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD should receive, as printers do all over the United States, 5 cents per thousand ems above the rate for day-work; but as that has not been done, an equalization of pay was sought in the amendment offered a year ago, and the same thing is sought in the amendment I offer now. I do not say to the House that the men demand this, but I do say that fair play to these servants of the Government requires it, and that in order to put the Government Printing Office in a line with all the printing establishments of the country and with all the rules and regulations that govern the printing business everywhere this amendment ought to be adopted.

Mr. RANDALL. I do not remember that they made any such request of me.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I believe the request was made of the subcommittee, as it was last year. In justice to these hard-working, these expert men, who are doing book-work at plain news-composition rates, I desire to say that they should be paid a fair wage instead of losing time and earning only from $65 to $75 or $80 a month, when clerks who work only six or seven hours a day are receiving $100 a month. Such discrimination is entirely unjust.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him to state that these printers have actually lost at this session of Congress, up to the present time, thirty-one days?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Yes, they have lost thirty-three days on an average. This is only paying them for loss of time. There is not an employing printer in the country who does not pay for that, and it is small in the American Congress not to be as fair and just as a private individual.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must sustain the point of order.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I submit by the instruction of the Committee on Appropriations.

The amendment was read, as follows:

STATUE OF LIBERTY ENLIGHTENING THE WORLD.

To pay to H. F. Spaulding, treasurer of American committee, for expenses incurred in landing the statue, housing and protecting it on Bedloe's Island; for wages of two watchmen for four years for protecting Government property on the island, and for balance due on contract for heavy steel girders and fastenings for the statue, in all, $15,000; for construction of platforms for ceremonies of inauguration, decorations, music, and police, $3,520; unforeseen expenses of inauguration day, $480; entertainment of official French guests, $9,000; clearing grounds of island, grading, and removing unsightly structures, $3,000; repairing wharf, $2,500; electric-light plant and elevator in interior of pedestal, $13,500; in all, $47,000.

On motion of Mr. RANDALL, the committee rose informally, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled a joint resolution of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 196) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session, Mr. REAGAN in the chair.

Mr. RANDALL. As I have said, I offer the amendment just read by instruction of the committee. I now yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT], who desires to amend the amendment. I do this so as to permit the two propositions to be discussed together.

Mr. HEWITT. Mr. Chairman, I offer a substitute for the amendment, which I send to the desk.

The amendment of Mr. HEWITT was read, as follows:

Estimates for the installation of the statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World," on Bedloe's Island, in the harbor of New York, in accordance with the provisions of the joint resolution approved March 3, 1877, to be expended under the direction of the President for the objects specified in the annexed estimate submitted by the engineer of the American committee in charge of the work so far as the President shall deem the said expenditures or any portions of them to be necessary and proper, $106,000.

Estimate for installation of statue of Liberty.

For amount of memorandum by H. F. Spaulding, treasurer of American committee	$15,000
For construction of platforms for ceremonies of inauguration, decorations, music, police	3,520
For refreshments, for, say, five hundred invited guests	2,500
For unforeseen expenses of inauguration day	480
For entertainment of official French guests	9,000
For clearing grounds of island, grading, and removing unsightly structures	5,000
For building a new wharf of stone and concrete	16,000
For electric-light plant	15,000
For elevator in interior walls of fort	7,200
For connecting-arches between walls of fort and foundation mass of pedestal	26,400
Total	106,100

CHAS. P. STONE,
Engineer-in-Chief.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I reserve all points of order on both these amendments. I believe there is no law authorizing such an appropriation.

Mr. HEWITT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will first discuss the point of order. This inauguration was specifically authorized in the joint resolution of Congress approved March 3, 1877. That resolution came before the House as the result of a communication of the President of the United States informing the House that citizens of France had organized to present to the United States a statue of Liberty Enlightening the World, to be erected in the harbor of New York, as a memorial of the ancient friendship between the French Nation and the American Colonies when in time of trouble they were struggling for the establishment of a free government.

The resolution on this subject was prepared by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported to this House, approved unanimously by both Houses, and signed by the President. It is as follows.

Joint resolution authorizing the President to designate and set apart a site for the colossal statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World," and to provide for the permanent maintenance and preservation thereof.

Whereas the President has communicated to Congress the information that citizens of the French Republic propose to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of our independence by erecting, at their own cost, a colossal bronze statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World," upon a pedestal of suitable proportions, to be built by private subscription upon one of the islands belonging to the United States in the harbor of New York; and

Whereas it is proper to provide for the care and preservation of this grand monument of art, and of the abiding friendship of our ancient ally: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept the colossal statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World," when presented by citizens of the French Republic, and to designate and set apart for the erection therefor a suitable site upon either Governor's or Bedloe's Island, in the harbor of New York; and upon the completion thereof shall cause the same to be inaugurated with such ceremonies as will serve to testify the gratitude of our people for this expressive and felicitous memorial of the sympathy of the citizens of our sister republic; and he is hereby authorized to cause suitable regulations to be made for its future maintenance as a beacon, and for the permanent care and preservation thereof as a monument of art and of the continued good-will of the great nation which aided us in our struggle for freedom.

That resolution imposed a duty upon the President of the United States which he is now called upon to execute; for the statue has been finished, was presented to the United States Government on the 4th day of July, 1884, was accepted by the American minister in Paris on behalf of the United States, was transmitted to this country in a French vessel, the Isère, was received in the harbor of New York, where suitable entertainment was given at the expense of the citizens of New York to the distinguished gentlemen who were in charge of the statue; and Bedloe's Island having, in accordance with the terms of the resolution, been designated as the proper site for the erection of the statue, citizens of New York have, at their own cost, by a popular subscription amounting to $323,000, completed the pedestal, without asking one dollar of Government money.

The amount raised in France by popular subscription was about $250,000; that raised in New York and vicinity, with contributions, I believe, from some other cities, amounted to $323,000. The statue is now in process of erection upon the pedestal; and the time has come when this unparalleled evidence of the sympathy and good-will of a sister republic is at last, in accordance with the terms of the act, to be inaugurated by the President of the United States, in the presence of the donors and in the view of the civilized world, which will look upon this monument not only as one of the grandest achievements of art, but as a proof that free peoples cherish for each other a feeling of regard and sympathy which is higher than all the temporary and mercenary considerations of trade and commerce or of mere political treaty. It was a tribute from the heart of the French people to the heart of the American people.

The only question, then, is as to the scale of expenditure upon which the inauguration shall be made; and if the point of order be withdrawn I will now proceed to consider the question of the substitute which I offer for the proposition of the committee.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I desire to inquire of the gentleman from New York whether the title of Bedloe's Island is in the United States?

Mr. HEWITT. The title of Bedloe's Island is in the United States; the title of the statue is in the United States. Everything has been paid for by private individuals as a patriotic contribution. Let me say that the original proposition was to donate this statue to the people of the United States, and by an amendment offered by me to the resolution which I have just read the provision was inserted that the pedestal should be paid for by private subscription, otherwise the United States would have been in the attitude of having to receive this statue and provide for its erection. But I felt that, as the statue was to be placed in the harbor of New York, not by the request of the people of New York but of the French Nation, the people of New York should in some proper way testify their appreciation of this magnificent act of generosity. Therefore, although when the subscriptions lagged bills were introduced here proposing that the Government should contribute $100,000, I have at all times resisted all applications of that kind, saying to my constituents, "No, we are rich enough in New York to pay all the expenses attendant upon the reception of this statue until it rears its head to the skies; after that let the Government take it and do with it what it will."

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS APPROVED.

The committee rose informally; when a message from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that he had approved and signed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 76) fixing the time when the pay of certain clerks to committees of House of Representatives shall begin;

An act (H. R. 7650) to remove the political disabilities of J. G. Flournoy, of Mississippi;

Joint resolution (H. Res. 5) authorizing payment of C. H. Mann, messenger to the reporters' gallery;

An act (H. R. 4177) to reduce the fee on domestic money-orders for sums not exceeding $5;

An act (H. R. 4415) to make the allowances for clerk-hire to postmasters of the first and second class post-offices cover the cost of clerical labor in the money-order business, and for other purposes.

An act (H. R. 5886) making appropriations for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887;

An act (H. R. 5887) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887;

An act (H. R. 7481) making an appropriation for the Department of Agriculture for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 6395) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 544) granting leave of absence to employés in the Government Printing Office;

An act (H. R. 5547) for the erection of a public building at Savannah, Ga.;

An act (H. R. 7735) making an appropriation to complete the public building at Hannibal, Mo., in accordance with the original plan of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, and to make the same fireproof;

An act (H. R. 279) for the relief of T. H. Triplett;

An act (H. R. 2428) for the relief of V. F. Gorrissen;

An act (H. R. 3475) for the relief of William Talbert;

An act (H. R. 4115) for the relief of John Taggart;

An act (H. R. 5553) for the relief of E. J. Phillips;

An act (H. R. 7470) for the relief of William Fisher;

An act (H. R. 8676) for the relief of Lafayette Fowler;

An act (H. R. 4009) for the relief of Ann B. Hubbard, administratrix;

An act (H. R. 2953) for the relief of John P. Bush and James Grigsby;

An act (H. R. 5509) for the relief of St. Patrick's church, in the City of Washington, D. C.;

An act (H. R. 3998) for the relief of Susan A. Wamack, administratrix of the estate of Stephen M. Farish;

An act (H. R. 5401) making appropriations for additional barracks at the Southern, Northwestern, and Western branches of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers;

An act (H. R. 5888) to legalize and validate the general laws of the Territory of Dakota for the incorporation of insurance companies, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 5221) to change the time of holding United States circuit and district courts in the southern district of the State of Florida;

An act (H. R. 5251) making an appropriation for the repairs and enlargement of the post-office and court-house at Des Moines, Iowa, and fixing a limit therefor;

An act (H. R. 368) to amend an act entitled "An act to provide for the erection of a public building in the city of Peoria, in the State of Illinois," approved May 9, 1882;

An act (H. R. 6665) for the erection of a public building at El Paso, Tex.;

An act (H. R. 275) for the relief of William D. Stewart and others, heirs at law of James Stewart, deceased;

An act (H. R. 868) appropriating money for the completion of the public building at Frankfort, Ky.; and

An act (H. R. 67) for the relief of Fitz-John Porter.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill (H. R. 5874) to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands, and for other purposes; when the Speaker signed the same.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. REAGAN in the chair.

Mr. BLAND. I will read the joint resolution:

Be it resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to accept the colossal statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World," when presented by citizens of the French Republic, and to designate and set apart for the erection therefor a suitable site upon either Governor's or Bedloe's Island, in the harbor of New York; and upon the completion thereof shall cause the same to be inaugurated with such ceremonies as will serve to testify the gratitude of our people for this expressive and felicitous memorial of the sympathy of the citizens of our sister republic.

Up to that point, Mr. Chairman, it will not be pretended there is any authority for appropriation by Congress.

The subsequent portion of the resolution is as follows:

And he is hereby authorized to cause suitable regulations to be made for its future maintenance as a beacon, and for the permanent care and preservation thereof as a monument of art and of the continued good-will of the great nation which aided us in our struggle for freedom.

It is for its future maintenance as a beacon and not for a celebration. It is not to provide $100,000 for the purpose of having a good time, but simply to preserve this monument as a beacon and that only.

If it is for the preservation of this statue as a monument of art, then this appropriation is not in order under the joint resolution. The Government is to do nothing more than preserve it as a beacon. We have no authority to waste the public funds to provide for an inauguration and good time for the citizens of New York. If they have been so liberal as to contribute the amount of money necessary for the erection of that monument for the benefit of their citizens, they certainly, if it is necessary to have an inauguration, ought to pay their own expenses.

Mr. HEWITT. Not one dollar of this goes to the city of New York in the way of entertainment.

Mr. BELMONT. Mr. Chairman, I hope the amendment offered by my colleague [Mr. HEWITT] will be adopted. It is in accordance with the report made by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, who, without recommending any specific amount, reported that the honor of the United States Government was involved in making a suitable appropriation for this purpose. By the statement of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] I judge there are those who take this to be a matter of a somewhat local character simply because the statue is to be erected in the harbor of New York. It is not a local matter, Mr. Chairman; it is of a national character, and even of an international character. It is so described in the message of the President in these words:

The international character which has been impressed upon this work by the joint resolution of 1877 makes it incumbent upon Congress to provide means to carry their resolution into effect.

The Committee on Foreign Affairs, at its own request, was discharged from the further consideration of the matter, and it was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, to whose province it seemed to belong, to recommend a suitable appropriation. This action on the part of the Foreign Affairs Committee, it appears to me, should be considered in connection with the point of order raised. The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has presented a resolution which indicates that that committee is in accord with the Committee on Foreign Affairs in believing the joint resolution of 1877 does make the appropriation in order on this bill.

Every dollar called for in the amendment proposed by my colleague [Mr. HEWITT] is covered by the joint resolution of 1877. The resolution commits Congress not only to provide for the expense of inauguration, but that it should also make provision for the permanent care of the statue as a beacon.

That it will eventually come under the control and direction of the Light-House Board if an appropriation be now made by Congress is made clear in a letter addressed to me by the Treasury Department, which I will ask the Clerk to read.

The Clerk read as follows:

[Inclosure 5.]

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 26, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 24th instant, requesting the views of this Department as to whether, under the joint resolution of Congress of February 22, 1877, the Bartholdi statue of Liberty, in New York Harbor, would be considered as coming under the jurisdiction of the Light-House Board, without further legislation on the part of Congress, so that its permanent maintenance as a beacon may be considered as assured, after the first expense of establishing it as such has been met, &c.

In reply, I have respectfully to transmit herewith a letter of the Light-House Board of this date, from which it appears that while the matter has never been formally considered by the board in session, it has been assumed that eventually this statue, when inaugurated, would be placed under the control of the light-house establishment for the exhibition of an electric light thereon, and it has been estimated that an appropriation of from $25,000 to $30,000 would be required to cover the cost of the electric-light plant, boilers, engines, dynamos, lamps and accessories, and for the erection of a suitable building for the keepers.

The board states that as it can not establish a new light without express authority from Congress, it is doubtful whether the joint resolution referred to would place the statue under the jurisdiction of the board without further legislation, but should Congress make an appropriation for the establishment and maintenance of a light thereon, the statue would then be placed permanently under such jurisdiction for light-house purposes, subject to such regulations as the President may see fit to make.

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD,
Acting Secretary.

Hon. PERRY BELMONT, M. C.,
House of Representatives.

Mr. BELMONT. It should be remembered that the statue is not to be erected on territory belonging to the State of New York, but on an island which is the property of the United States.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, this monument when built is not only to be, in the language of the resolution, "an evidence of the good-will of the great nation which aided us in our struggle for freedom," but a material advantage to the United States as a beacon-light on its own property and in its most important harbor. Therefore everything in that resolution that looks to that object is certainly in order.

In reply to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], who speaks of this as a mere local thing, I will remark that this is not more local than any light along the coast of the country anywhere. They have to be located, and they have to be located by the Government and for the public good; but whether they are local or not they are for the use of the commerce of the country, and this resolution binds us to accept this beacon, and accept it how?

Why, if a gentleman was presented with a little memento of friendship, a cane, for instance, by a friend who thought it of sufficient importance to give some ceremony to the presentation, it would be accepted under decent circumstances. Here is one of the great nations of the world accepting from another great nation a magnificent work of art to be utilized for the good of commerce in the grandest port in the Union, and the language of the law is:

The President shall cause it to be inaugurated with such ceremonies as will serve to testify the gratitude of our people for this expressive and felicitous memorial of the sympathy of the citizens of our sister republic.

Shall we go there in a niggardly manner and take off our hats and say, "We are much obliged?" Or shall we in a dignified manner make forever memorable the day on which the inauguration of this great work occurs? Every gentleman will agree with me that it is our duty to do the latter, and all know that it can not be done without money and that the money should be appropriated.

Mr. RANDALL. I hope we will have a decision on the point of order.

Mr. SPRINGER. A word in regard to the point of order.

This resolution, which is now a part of the law of the land, provides for the acceptance of a monument which has been erected upon the soil of the United States, and is therefore a part of the property of the Government.

The law under which it was accepted requires the President of the United States to cause the formal acceptance of this statue to be accompanied with suitable ceremonies. That acceptance, in the form required by the law, will necessitate the expenditure of money. It will be the duty of the President to invite at least some representative persons of the Government of France, a government whose people donated this great work to this country, and they will be expected while here—those who accept the invitation—to be our guests. It will be necessary to furnish suitable facilities for their entertainment, as well as for the incidental expenditures connected with this celebration.

Will gentleman say that there is no authority for it under the law? The President is required to do it. The law is clear, and here is the appropriation to enable him to carry it out in a respectable and decent manner.

It is a piece of Government property just as any public building in the United States; and these other provisions of the amendment are items relating to its repair and permanent preservation. Would any gentleman say it would be out of order to put upon the bill an appropriation of an amount of money for expenditure upon a public building in the United States that needed repair or for keeping it in repair? That is all there is here. The point of order is certainly not well taken, because this is simply appropriating for carrying out a law already passed. It is the duty of Congress to make suitable provision to carry it out and to have the property taken care of after it is erected. That is what is being done.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask a decision on the question of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair finds that the joint resolution designates the duties of the President with regard to the reception of this monument, and uses this language:

> And upon the completion thereof shall cause the same to be inaugurated with such ceremonies as will serve to testify the gratitude of our people for this expressive and felicitous memorial of the sympathy of the citizens of our sister republic.

This resolution, therefore, has made provision for the duty to be performed by the President in connection with the reception and inauguration of this monument. The appropriation in the original amendment and in the amendment to the same is for the purpose of carrying out the objects of that joint resolution. The Chair holds that the point of order is not good, and it is overruled.

Mr. BRUMM. Mr. Chairman, the point of order being overruled, I wish to say a word in favor of this proposition. I think that under all the circumstances this Government ought to make the reception a success; and inasmuch as the city of New York is so small and so poor that it can not do it, this Government of ours ought to run no risk as to its being a failure, and ought to put its shoulder to the wheel and say we are going to treat our French friends in a becoming and respectable manner and make a sufficient appropriation to do the thing in a handsome way.

Now, let us see. The proposition was made to present us with a statue of liberty enlightening the world. New York it was supposed and decided was the proper place to put it. Yet New York city had no ground to give for its erection, and the Government came handsomely in to the aid of the poor city and gave the child a place to rest upon. But after the site is selected there is something else necessary. It would not do to set the statue down in the mud, so that there had to be a fund provided for the erection of a foundation and the necessary pedestal on which to stand it. New York was too poor to build that pedestal.

Mr. BELMONT. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. BRUMM. Yes, sir; for a question.

Mr. BELMONT. I suppose the gentleman knows the citizens of New York formed a committee which raised $323,000 for the purpose of erecting the pedestal?

Mr. BRUMM. I am aware of it; but how did the committee raise it? Why, every one of us contributed toward the $323,000. The patriotic poor, even to the washer-women of our country and the sewing-girls, contributed their dollars and bought your miniature statues as mementoes of your greed. They had more patriotism in them than your millionaires of New York.

You were too mean to contribute the necessary funds to raise your pedestal, and went begging and preyed upon the patriotic sentiment of the country to furnish the means of erecting a pedestal on which to set your statue of Liberty. You have been begging throughout the length and breadth of the land for that pedestal. And now you are not satisfied with that, but you want to have a grand spree, and you want the people to go to your city to make it a success. But you think you can not do it yourselves, and you come to the Government again and go down on your marrow-bones begging for a miserable $100,000 to have this spree.

I am willing you should have it. If it is to be done at all it should be done right. I will say, God knows if there is any place in the world that requires enlightenment it is New York city [laughter], and if we are to have a statue of Liberty to enlighten the world, let its brightest rays fall on our own Egypt, right in the harbor of New York city.

I hope there will be patriotism enough in this House to run no risks upon this proposition; for New York city will not do it half right; therefore, to avoid disgrace, we must do it for her. At all events do not let us disappoint our honored French friends and guests in this undertaking. I shall vote for the proposition.

Mr. RANDALL. There is a matter of a difference between $106,000 in the substitute of the gentleman from New York and $47,000 as recommended by the committee.

Mr. HEWITT. I think it may be as well that the House should have some explanation of it.

Mr. BEACH. Let us take a vote.

Mr. HEWITT. I do not wish to take up the time of the House if the House wants to vote. But as there is a difference between the amount recommended by the committee and the amount in my amendment I am ready to give an explanation if the House desires it.

Mr. RYAN. I think the House does not understand it.

Mr. HEWITT. It being conceded that this statue ought to be inaugurated in a decent and becoming manner, an estimate has been made by the engineer as to the amount that will be required not merely for the purpose of the inauguration but for the fulfillment of the latter part of the resolution, which is the maintenance of this as a monument of art and as a permanent beacon.

Now the commmittee have conceded the propriety of the items recommended by the engineer to the extent of $47,000. On the following points only is there a difference:

The engineer estimated there would be five hundred invited guests, and that it would be necessary to spend $2,500 in taking care of these invited guests. I beg to say if the committee wish to reduce the amount by that $2,500 I will cordially assent, for the simple reason that that sum can be raised in a few moments by passing around the hat.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman should mention that an appropriation is made of $9,000 for guests from France.

Mr. HEWITT. The amount of $2,500 is for taking care of the five hundred invited guests in this country.

The inauguration is to take place on the 3d of September, the anniversary of signing the treaty of Paris, by which the independence of the United States was acknowledged by Great Britain. It is supposed that anniversary, which has never been celebrated hitherto, would attract a great number of gentlemen of distinction, and that it would be proper for the President, who is the host on this occasion—he is not the guest but will be surrounded by these guests—to have the control of some moderate sum of money to give them a decent entertainment. But there need be no apprehension that that amount will not be supplied if the House does not want to make it a part of the appropriation.

There are $9,000 appropriated for the expenses of the invited guests from France. They are estimated at thirty and their expenses at $10 a day each, which would be $9,000 for thirty days. That the committee recommends. There is no difference as to that.

Next, for clearing the grounds of the island, grading, and removing unsightly structures the engineer recommends $5,000. The committee say $3,000. Anybody who has ever been abroad and seen the manner in which these great public ceremonials are conducted and the elaboration and grace and taste of our French friends in the preparation of the surrounding grounds will naturally desire that this little island, when our visitors come to see it, with the statue rearing its lofty head, shall be seen to the same advantage as when a gentleman inviting his friends gets his gardens and lawn in proper order, as far as it is possible. There is a provision that the expenditure of this money shall be in the discretion of the President, and if he thinks it should not be expended, it will not.

Then there is an estimate to build a new wharf of stone and concrete. The present wharf is of wood and is decayed and rotten. It is estimated that it can be built again of wood for $10,000, but stone and concrete will cost $16,000. The committee recommend the repair of the old wharf with an appropriation of $2,500. If the House prefers to repair the old wharf at that cost the result will be that there will be a request coming every year to renew it. It will be false economy. Let us make a good job while about it and give the $16,000.

Now for the electric-light plant. I want to say a word about that. I was told by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations that the Post-Office Department had been recently lighted in this way for $5,000 or about that.

Mr. RANDALL. I did not say that.

Mr. HEWITT. I so understood the gentleman.

Mr. RANDALL. Not for $5,000; for $15,000, I think.

Mr. HEWITT. Fifteen thousand dollars. Well, let me say that this estimate is the result of an examination made by the engineers who have had in charge the beacon at Hell Gate where the plant and the light have been the result of very careful experiment, and in the report made to General Newton is mentioned the fact that Generals Duane and Abbot, with the assistance of Lieutenant Mills, have examined and approved this estimate. The gentleman will bear in mind that it is not designed merely to light up the monument. This beacon, which consists of a gigantic hand, is to be made so luminous that the entire harbor of New York, from the Narrows to the wharves, will be as if lighted by a great heavenly body introduced by the hand of man. Fifteen thousand dollars is the amount estimated for that work, and I do not think it can be done for less. Let me say, in conclusion, that all these items are the estimates of competent engineers.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish the gentleman from New York would modify his amendment so as to strike out that $2,500 item.

Mr. HEWITT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I will modify the amendment so as to deduct from the sum total the $2,500 to which the gentleman refers. But, as to the other items, I repeat that they are not for the entertainment of the people of New York; they are for the preservation of this public property in a shape that will be decent and creditable to all the people of the United States.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. HEWITT to the amendment offered by Mr. RANDALL; and there were—ayes 102, noes 50.

Mr. BENNETT. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. BENNETT, and the gentleman from New York, Mr. HEWITT.

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Chairman, I do not want to obstruct the business of the committee, and if there can be an understanding that we shall have a vote in the House upon this proposition I will not insist upon the point of no quorum.

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman can have a vote in the House if he can get enough members to call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. BENNETT. If it can be understood that we shall have a yea-and-nay vote on this in the House, I will not insist upon the point.

Mr. RANDALL. I can not undertake to make any such agreement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Committee of the Whole can not make any arrangement about the action of the House, but the amendment is subject to a vote in the House.

Mr. BENNETT. I insist upon the point of order.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 116, noes 49.

So the amendment was adopted.

The amendment of Mr. RANDALL as amended was then agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. I promised the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] an opportunity to present a matter to the committee.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Mr. Chairman, I have received a communication which I wish to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF GENERAL SUPERINTENDENT OF REPAIRS,
UNITED STATES CUSTOM-HOUSES, &C.,
Charlestown, W. Va., June 30, 1886.

SIR: Your special attention is called to the fact that the office of Supervising Architect has approved my recommendations for repairs to the public building in Portland, Me., and they were also approved by the Secretary of the Treasury, and transmitted to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, but have not been reported in sundry civil bill. It is therefore important that you should give this matter your personal attention, as it will be impossible to use any part of the general appropriation for the year 1886-'87 on this building.

Yours, respectfully,

JULIUS C. HOLMES,
General Superintendent of Repairs.

Hon. THOS. B. REED.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I received that communication this morning, after we had passed the matter, and as I do not wish to have any responsibility resting on me by virtue of this communication, I ask the attention of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to it. I have examined all the recommendations presented to the Committee on Appropriations, and I do not find that the gentleman who sends me this communication has ever made any such recommendation to that committee. I do find a general recommendation in Executive Document No. 113, a letter from the Supervising Architect to the Secretary of the Treasury, in which he says:

Many of the older buildings require extensive repairs by reason of past neglect, also extensive alterations that will give the additional floor space and rearrangement of rooms required for the proper transaction of increased business. Heretofore this office has been obliged, by reason of the limited appropriation, to determine which of the numerous urgent demands for repairs would suffer least by postponement. I do not think that this state of affairs should longer exist. It is, I claim, both economy and good judgment for the Government to properly care for its property, and to this end I have the honor to state that certain buildings have been carefully examined and reports submitted with estimates, showing that extensive alterations and repairs thereto are urgently needed, the cost of which will exceed by far the general appropriation hereinbefore mentioned, thus rendering it imperative, if said alterations and repairs are to be executed, that special appropriations in each case be made by Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. In reply to the gentleman from Maine, I will say that after this bill had been reported we received from the Supervising Architect, Mr. E. M. Bell, a communication, dated July 26, directing attention to certain estimates which had been previously made. The body of this communication speaks of "work of repair of old buildings and for the heating, &c., of new buildings in the amounts as specified below."

In a subsequent part of the communication he states that "the sum of $775,826.74 is estimated to repair and preserve the buildings scheduled above." He further says that this amount is "for work which seems absolutely essential to the preservation of the buildings." Now, in this list of items deemed "absolutely essential" I find the following:

Assessments for paving done by cities and sought to be charged to the Government, $11,451.74.

New York post-office, for additions to and extension, requiring authority of law, $96,728.

New York subtreasury, for alterations and extension of vault, $45,000.

New Orleans marine-hospital, additional wards, surgeon's house, &c., $50,000.

Saint Louis custom-house, to fit building for bonded warehouse, $10,000.

Boise City assay office, for coal and wood house and fence, $9,000.

Philadelphia mint building, for extension and alteration, $85,000.

These are all new projects, and not at all connected with any repairs; and their aggregate amount approaches $300,000.

Now I suppose that many members here have read communications such as that I hold in my hand from a subordinate of the Treasury Department, a gentleman from the State represented in part by my friend who sits before me, the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON]. This is a most remarkable letter——

Mr. MCADOO. Will the gentleman allow me to read a letter which I have received from the gentleman in question, Mr. Holmes, general superintendent of repairs?

Mr. RANDALL. I have not time to yield. I wish to say that this is a most unusual mode, it seems to me, of addressing members of the Committee on Appropriations and of the House in regard to their public duties. I do not believe that this letter has the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, nor do I consider this mode of communication defensible in any degree. I think the Secretary of the Treasury, when he has this communication brought to his attention, will be more likely to reprimand this officer than to commend him for his energy and zeal. He is a new officer, and is therefore perhaps to be forgiven in some measure for his zeal in this direction.

I wish to say that in this bill we have appropriated $200,000 for the repairs of all the public buildings in the United States, averaging about $1,000 to each building; and this amount is $37,500 in excess of what was given last year for the same purpose and $50,000 more than was appropriated for the same purpose the year before. It will be seen that as these buildings increase in number we have to make a reasonable increase in these appropriations. But I wish to say that in one instance which has been brought to our attention—the public building at Hartford, where this officer claims there ought to be an appropriation made for repairs, or paving, or something of that sort—the building is a new one, and, so far as we are advised, is in perfect order. I think there is no occasion to pay any particular attention to the communication of this gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. WILSON. I move to strike out the last word. I wish to make a remark or two in reference to the letter of this gentleman to say a word in his behalf of what has fallen from the lips of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. Chairman, I am personally acquinted with this official. I wish simply to say he is one of the best mechanics in the country. He is an admirable carpenter and has contracted for a large number of important buildings. He is a man who has worked his way up from a carpenter to his present position. It may be that being a new official and zealous in his desire to perform well the duties of his office he has assumed to himself to remind members of their interests in their districts.

Soon after his appointment he made a tour of inspection of the public buildings of the country by direction of the Treasury Department. Being a thoroughly trained mechanic, having a thorough experience in the erection of public buildings, he discovered a great many defects in public buildings, even in some like those alluded to by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which had just been erected. He was particularly quick to discover defects in plumbing, and he found such defects in many of the buildings just erected. He found they were not built in accordance with modern sanitary science. I wish to say in his defense there could be no more zealous, energetic, or competent superintendent of repairs.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise and report the bill to the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. There has been a little mistake made in an amendment adopted which I ask to be corrected. I send to the Clerk's desk to be read a substitute for what is included in line 768.

The Clerk read as follows:

Nor shall any part of the money appropriated by this act be used in the payment of per diem compensation to any clerk or marshal for attendance in court except for days when business is transacted in court, which fact shall be certified in approval of their accounts.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and the amendment just read will be substituted for the one heretofore adopted.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the committee rise and report the bill and amendments to the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. REAGAN reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9478) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question on the bill and amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the previous question was ordered; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL. During the progress of this bill through the Committee of the Whole there was an understanding, I think, that there should be a separate vote on the silver-certificate clause, page 13. I have this memorandum of separate votes from the Clerk's desk, and I think it is correct: Page 37, informers' revenue clause; page 39, Hot Springs appropriation, on the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEACH]. Also on the statue clause, at the request of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BENNETT]. I do not remember there are other amendments upon which a separate vote is desired. If there are any I hope gentlemen will indicate them now. If not I shall ask the remaining amendments be voted on in gross.

Mr. STORM. I understood a separate vote was asked on the printing of the one and two dollar notes.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. There was no understanding, but I suppose there will be no objection to taking a separate vote.

The SPEAKER. Any gentleman has a right to demand a separate vote.

Mr. RANDALL. A little order just now would be a great benefit.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I do not want a separate vote on the one and two dollar note clause.

Mr. RANDALL. I do.

The SPEAKER. Several gentlemen demand separate votes.

Mr. SPOONER. I ask a separate vote on the amendment striking out in line 1352 the amount originally incorporated in the bill and inserting a smaller amount.

Mr. RANDALL. That is the Block Island cable. That went out on the point of order.

Mr. SPOONER. But the amount is changed, and I ask a separate vote on that.

Mr. DUNHAM. Is a separate vote asked on the New York appropriation for the statue?

Mr. RANDALL. That has been reserved.

The SPEAKER. Is any other separate vote demanded?

Mr. BAYNE. As I understand my colleague a separate vote is demanded upon the issuing of silver certificates.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYNE. And for printing the one and two dollar notes?

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. STORM] now asks a separate vote; but I did not so understand in the committee.

The SPEAKER. If there be no further separate vote demanded the question will be upon agreeing to the remainder of the amendments in gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendments were agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. MCADOO. I would like to ask if a vote may not be taken upon the amendment I proposed in reference to the New York dry-dock?

Mr. RANDALL. That is not in the bill.

Mr. MCADOO. I know; but may I not ask unanimous consent to offer the amendment in the House and have a vote upon it in that way? [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. RANDALL. The first separate vote is on page 12 of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the first amendment on which a separate vote is to be taken.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 279 insert:

"Provided, That no portion of this sum shall be expended for printing United States notes of large denominations in lieu of notes of small denominations canceled or retired."

Mr. RANDALL. Before the vote is taken upon this I ask unanimous consent that the time for adjournment be extended until 6 o'clock.

Mr. BEACH. Say until the bill is finished.

Mr. RANDALL. Very well; until the bill is completed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Has any member a right to call for a separate vote without being seconded by a larger number?

The SPEAKER. Any member has a right to demand a separate vote on an amendment—each amendment being a distinct proposition.

The question is upon agreeing to the amendment just read reported from the Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was demanded was read, as follows:

After the word "Treasury," in line 295, insert:

"That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and required to issue silver certificates in denominations of one, two, and five dollars on all the surplus silver dollars now in the Treasury in payment of appropriations made in this bill and other expenditures or obligations of the Government. That the silver certificates herein authorized shall be receivable and payable in like manner and for like purposes as is provided for silver certificates by the act of February 28, 1878, entitled "An act to authorize the coinage of the standard silver dollar and to restore its legal-tender character," and shall be redeemable in standard silver dollars on demand; and when paid into the Treasury, shall be reissued subject to the provisions herein for the redemption of the same."

Mr. BAYNE. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The amendment was agreed to. [Applause.]

The next amendment on which a separate vote was demanded was on the following provision, stricken from the bill:

Punishment for violations of internal-revenue laws: For detecting and bringing to trial and punishment persons guilty of violating the internal-revenue laws, or conniving at the same, including payments for information and detection of such violations, $25,000; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall make a detailed statement to Congress once in each year as to how he has expended this sum, and also a detailed statement of all miscellaneous expenditures in the Bureau of Internal Revenue for which appropriation is made in this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was demanded was on striking out, on page 39, the provision as follows:

Hot Springs improvement:

For continuation of improvement of Hot Springs Creek, $20,000.

The SPEAKER. The Chair understands the situation to be this: A motion was made to strike out the provision, which was not agreed to, and it was understood that a vote on the motion to strike out would be taken in the House.

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BAYNE. I demand the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

The question being taken on the motion to strike out, there were on a division—ayes 63, noes 83.

Mr. BEACH. No quorum has voted.

The SPEAKER. The point of order being made that a quorum has not voted, the Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. BEACH and Mr. ROGERS were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 56, noes 110.

So the motion to strike out was rejected.

The next amendment on which a separate vote was demanded was on page 56, line 1352, as follows:

Strike out $26,350 and insert $8,000.

The SPEAKER. This is the amendment on which the gentleman from Rhode Island demanded a separate vote.

The question was taken, and on a division there were ayes 13, noes not counted.

Mr. HOPKINS. There seems to be a misapprehension in reference to this question. A vote in the affirmative means what?

The SPEAKER. It means to concur in the action of the Committee of the Whole reducing the amount. A vote in the negative means to non-concur, and leave the amount as originally reported. The Chair thought there was some misapprehension in reference to it.

Mr. RANDALL. I ask that the vote be taken over again. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The question was again taken; and on a division there were—ayes 91, noes 62.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The Clerk read the next amendment on which a separate vote was demanded, as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

"Statue of Liberty Enlightening the World: For the installation of the statue of Liberty Enlightening the World on Bedloe's Island, in the harbor of New York, in accordance with the provisions of the joint resolution approved March 3, 1877, to be expended under the direction of the President for the objects specified in the annexed estimate submitted by the engineer of the American committee in charge of the work, so far as the President shall deem the said expenditures, or any portion of them, to be necessary and proper, $103,600, as follows:

For amount of memorandum by H. F. Spaulding, treasurer of American committee	$15,000
For construction of platforms for ceremonies of inauguration, decorations, music, and police	3,520
For unforeseen expenses of inauguration day	480
For entertainment of official French guests	9,000
For clearing grounds of island, grading, and removing unsightly structures	5,000
For building a new wharf of stone and concrete	16,000
For electric-light plant	15,000
For elevator in interior of pedestal	6,000
For strengthening interior walls of fort	7,200
For connecting-arches between walls of fort and foundation-mass of pedestal	26,400

The House divided; and there were—ayes 90, noes 77.

Mr. MILLS. I call for the yeas and nays.

The affirmative vote being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, there were ayes 43—more than one-fifth of the last vote.

Mr. LONG. Count the other side.

The negative vote being taken, there were noes 119.

So (the affirmative being more than one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 103, nays 107, not voting 113; as follows:

YEAS—103.

Adams, G. E.	Dargan,	Lindsley,	Romeis,
Adams, J. J.	Davidson, R. H. M.	Long,	Rowell,
Baker,	Dingley,	Mahoney,	Sawyer,
Barnes,	Dowdney,	McAdoo,	Seymour,
Bayne,	Dunn,	McComas,	Snyder,
Beach,	Ermentrout,	McRae,	Spooner,
Belmont,	Evans,	Merriman,	Spriggs,
Bingham,	Everhart,	Millard,	Springer,
Blanchard,	Farquhar,	Milliken,	Stahlnecker,
Bliss,	Ford,	Moffatt,	Stephenson,
Blount,	Gallinger,	Morrison,	Stone, E. F.
Boyle,	Gilfillan,	Morrow,	Symes,
Breckinridge, C. R.	Hammond,	Muller,	Tillman,
Breckinridge, WCP.	Hayden,	Negley,	Tucker,
Brumm,	Henderson, T. J.	O'Hara,	Turner,
Buck,	Henley,	O'Neill, J. J.	Van Eaton,
Caldwell,	Hewitt,	Outhwaite,	Viele,
Campbell, Felix	Hiestand,	Payne,	Ward, T. B.
Campbell, T. J.	Hiscock,	Pettibone,	Warner, A. J.
Candler,	Hudd,	Pindar,	Warner, William
Cannon,	Jackson,	Randall,	Weber,
Caswell,	James,	Reagan,	Wilson,
Crain,	Johnson, F. A.	Reed, T. B.	Wise,
Crisp,	Jones, J. T.	Rice,	Wolford,
Cutcheon,	Ketcham,	Rockwell,	Worthington.
Daniel,	Libbey,	Rogers,

NAYS—107.

Allen, J. M.	Forney,	McCreary,	Stewart, Charles
Anderson, C. M.	Frederick,	McKinley,	St. Martin,
Atkinson,	Fuller,	McMillin,	Stone, W. J., Ky.
Barksdale,	Funston,	Miller,	Stone, W. J., Mo.
Barry,	Geddes,	Mills,	Storm,
Bennett,	Guenther,	Morgan	Strait,
Bland,	Halsell,	Morrill,	Struble,
Bragg,	Hatch,	Murphy,	Tarsney,
Browne, T. M.	Henderson, J. S.	Neal,	Taulbee,
Burnes,	Hermann,	Neece,	Taylor, J. M.
Bynum,	Hill,	O'Donnell,	Taylor, Zach.
Cabell,	Holman,	O'Ferrall,	Thomas, O. B.
Campbell, J. E.	Holmes,	Payson,	Townshend,
Carleton,	Hopkins,	Peel,	Trigg,
Catchings,	Howard,	Perkins,	Van Schaick,
Conger,	Irion,	Perry,	Wadsworth,
Cooper,	Johnston, T. D.	Peters,	Wakefield,
Cowles,	Jones, J. H.	Pidcock,	Weaver, A. J.
Culberson,	Kleiner,	Price,	Weaver, J. B.
Curtin,	La Follette,	Reid, J. W.	Wellborn,
Dorsey,	Lanham,	Richardson,	Wheeler,
Dougherty,	Lore,	Ryan,	White, A. C.
Dunham,	Lowry,	Sadler,	White, Milo
Eldredge,	Lyman,	Seney,	Wilkins,
Ellsberry,	Martin,	Singleton,	Willis,
Fisher,	Matson,	Skinner,	Winans.
Fleeger,	Maybury,	Sowden,

NOT VOTING—113.

Aiken,	Dawson,	Hires,	Ranney,
Allen, C. H.	Dibble,	Hitt,	Reese,
Anderson, J. A.	Dockery,	Houk,	Riggs,
Arnot,	Eden,	Hutton,	Robertson,
Ballentine,	Ely,	Johnston, J. T.	Sayers,
Barbour,	Felton,	Kelley,	Scott,
Bound,	Findlay,	King,	Scranton,
Boutelle,	Foran,	Laffoon,	Sessions,
Brady,	Gay,	Laird,	Shaw,
Brown, C. E.	Gibson, C. H.	Landes,	Smalls,
Brown, W. W.	Gibson, Eustace	Lawler,	Steele,
Buchanan,	Glass,	Le Fevre,	Stewart, J. W.
Bunnell,	Glover,	Lehlbach,	Swinburne,
Burleigh,	Goff,	Little,	Swope,
Burrows,	Green, R. S.	Louttit,	Taylor, E. B.
Butterworth,	Green, W. J.	Lovering,	Taylor, I. H.
Campbell, J. M.	Grosvenor,	Markham,	Thomas, J. R.
Clardy,	Grout,	McKenna,	Thompson,
Clements,	Hale,	Mitchell,	Throckmorton,
Cobb,	Hall,	Nelson,	Wade,
Cole,	Hanback,	Norwood,	Wait,
Collins,	Harmer,	Oates,	Wallace,
Compton,	Harris,	O'Neill, Charles	Ward, J. H.
Comstock,	Haynes,	Osborne,	West,
Cox,	Heard,	Owen,	Whiting.
Croxton,	Hemphill,	Parker,	Woodburn.
Davenport,	Henderson, D. B.	Phelps,
Davidson, A. C.	Hepburn,	Pirce,
Davis,	Herbert,	Plumb,

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. JACKSON. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of the names.

Objection was made.

Mr. TUCKER. I am paired with Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, but I have been assured he would have voted in favor of this amendment, and therefore I have voted "ay."

Mr. BOUTELLE. I voted inadvertently. I am paired with Mr. SAYERS, of Texas. Not knowing how Mr. SAYERS would vote, I withdraw my vote.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Until further notice:

Mr. SAYERS with Mr. BOUTELLE.

Mr. LE FEVRE with Mr. BUTTERWORTH.

For the rest of the day:

Mr. LAWLER with Mr. GROSVENOR.

Mr. DIBBLE with Mr. IKE H. TAYLOR.

Mr. RANNEY with Mr. HERBERT.

Mr. HUTTON with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. OATES with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. CLARDY with Mr. WAIT.

Mr. LAFFOON with Mr. HARMER.

Mr. ROBERTSON with Mr. E. B. TAYLOR.

Mr. THROCKMORTON with Mr. DAVENPORT.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, with Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated.

Mr. MILLS moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

Mr. SPRINGER. On the latter motion I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 70, noes 68.

Mr. HEWITT. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. A quorum not having voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from New York [Mr. HEWITT] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 90, noes 67.

Mr. HEWITT. No quorum.

Mr. SPRINGER. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The question being put, the Speaker stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. SPRINGER. I call for a division.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 42, noes 85.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. HEWITT. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So (further count not being called for) the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. RANDALL. I demand the previous question on the passage of the bill.

The previous question was ordered, and under the operation thereof the bill was passed.

Mr. RANDALL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

And then, under its previous order, the House (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARRY: Papers relating to the claim of John Young, of Robert Tarver, of R. R. Roydston, and of Samuel H. Miller, of Yalobusha County; of William Talliaferro and of Joseph A. Weatherby, of La Fayette County; and of Phil. Davis and of John White, of Chickasaw County, Mississippi—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BENNETT: Papers relating to the claim of David Banks, of Elizabeth Covington, and of Archibald S. McNeill, of Richmond County; of William Grisson, of Brunswick County; and of Arthur J. Hill, of Wilmington, N. C.—to the same committee.

By Mr. BYNUM: Petition of 40 soldiers of Howard Post, Grand Army of the Republic, No. 311, Department of Indiana, for the passage of the Blair pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CALDWELL: Papers relating to the claim of estate of John J. Wherry, by his widow, Jane E. Wherry, of James W. Gee, of Sarah Wright, and of Horace H. Hanmer, of Davidson County; of W. B. Lillard, executor of Alfred Blackman, and of Eli A. Seay, of Rutherford County; of John A. Curtis, of Franklin County; of Thos. L. Porter, administrator of Nimrod Porter, deceased, of Maury County; of Alice A. Trice, of Montgomery County; of Madison Porter, of Winchester; of Thomas J. Johnson, of Haywood County; and of W. A. Davis, administrator of R. R. Hightower, deceased, of Williamson County, Tennessee—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HEWITT: Petition of William Shepard, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. JAMES: Petition of Andrew C. Roesche and 57 others, citizens of Brooklyn, N. Y., asking for liberal appropriations to enable the National Board of Health to prosecute its work, &c.—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. LANDES: Petition of E. A. Jackson, and others, members of York Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Clark County, Illinois, praying for the passage of the Lovering pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LIBBEY: Petition of Mary Walton, for payment of war claim—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. McMILLIN: Petition of E. P. McGalenck, for pay for horses used in the Mexican war—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. NORWOOD: Petition of W. R. Phillips and others, of T. J. Fuller and others, and of James Thompson and others, citizens of Georgia, asking national aid for common schools—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. OUTHWAITE: Petition of A. J. Donley and 22 others, of Samuel Weller and 19 others, of R. D. McMonigal and 12 others, and of Hon. Seth Weldy and 42 others, of Logan, Ohio, in favor of the passage of House bill 1096, granting pensions for service in the Army and Navy of the United States during the late war—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of George T. Newton, of South Perry, Ohio, and 41 others, in favor of the passage of Senate bill 1886, known as the Blair pension bill—to the same committee.

By Mr. PERKINS: Petition of the Western Miami Indians, praying for relief—to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SENEY: Petition of T. W. Prentiss and 60 others, citizens of Putnam County, Ohio, favoring pending pension legislation—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SPRINGER: Petition of Charles F. Mills, secretary of the Illinois State board of agriculture, for the passage of Senate bill 2004—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. STAHLNECKER: Petition of the Engineers' Club, of Philadelphia, asking that the appropriation for the improvement of New York Harbor be not restricted to any special plan, but open to all competitors—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. WHEELER: Petition of Israel P. Russell, asking that his war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, papers relating to the claims of Eliz. Wallace, of Minerva Coats, and of Maria Barriere, of Stevenson County; of Israel P. Russell, of W. H. Christian, of John Sullivan, of William Russell, and of William Hayes, of Jackson County; and of Jesse Lilly, of Larkinsville, Ala.—to the same committee.

By Mr. WILLIS: Petition of the Liquor Dealers' Association of the District of Columbia, against the passage of the high-license bill (S. 1380)—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. WILSON: Petition of George Koonce, of J. H. Smith, of Joseph J. Whittington, and of Alfred O'Bannon, of Jefferson County, and of B. S. Kilmer, of Berkeley County, West Virginia, asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

The following petitions, asking for the passage of House bill 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts; of House bill 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants; of bill forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with; of House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma; of Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement; of bill prohibiting aliens from holding land in the United States; of bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery; and of bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired, were severally referred to the Committee on the Public Lands:

By Mr. C. M. ANDERSON: Petition of Benjamin Vintree and 124 others, and of Edward Plance and 62 others, citizens of the fourth district of Ohio.

By Mr. BARNES: Petition of Z. P. Rogers and 50 others, and of S. W. Neese and 361 others, citizens of the tenth district of Georgia.

By Mr. BELMONT: Petition of Carl Christman and 53 others, and of Richard Luthers and 76 others, citizens of New York.

By Mr. BOUND: Petition of J. K. Maurer and 186 others, of William H. Siles and 34 others, citizens of the fourteenth district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. BOYLE: Petition of R. M. Apple and 54 others, of Samuel Ruple and 141 others, and of John Rae and 55 others, of the twenty-first district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. BRADY: Petition of Robert A. Harris and 57 others, of C. Booker and 30 others, of J. F. F. Young and 25 others, of J. G. Dolan and 27 others, and of John H. Allen and 104 others, citizens of the fourth district of Virginia.

By Mr. C. E. BROWN: Petition of William Martin and 50 others, of Elmer Allee and 200 others, of F. Wyrick and 99 others, and of Michael Kenrick and 73 others, citizens of the second district of Ohio.

By Mr. BUTTERWORTH: Petition of J. W. Caldwell and 130 others, of John Herbone and 57 others, of James E. Schoenberger and 169 others, of Michael Fox and 26 others, of George Roeder and 142 others, and of Frank F. Pflum and 72 others, citizens of the first district of Ohio.

By Mr. J. M. CAMPBELL: Petition of W. C. Reem and 86 others, citizens of the seventeenth district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. DANIEL: Petition of N. Jackson and 131 others, and of A. L. Keely and 65 others, citizens of the sixth district of Virginia.

By Mr. ELY: Petition of Jeremiah Lyons and 142 others, of Martin Bolan and 18 others, of Thomas O. Nelson and 37 others, and of S. Pilling and 72 others, citizens of the ninth district of Massachusetts.

By Mr. FINDLAY: Petition of Charles M. Metz and 176 others, of C. B. Townsend and 88 others, of Robert H. Allen and 43 others, of J. H. Ruhl and 40 others, of Thomas Overcash and 384 others, of George Sinclair and 119 others, of Fred. F. Meyers and 16 others, of James H. Crouch and 152 others, of Charles G. Rose and 85 others, of Samuel B. Hasson and 75 others, of J. C. Wilson and 41 others, of Henry Michael and 250 others, of E. H. Poole and 68 others, of Joseph E. Cummings and 156 others, of Theodore Michael and others, of James Rody and 50 others, of Francis Cawley and 27 others, of William N. Hill and 42 others, of Thomas Henry and 52 others, of Lonha Frederick and 80 others, of Jacob E. Robertson and 36 others, of Henry Randels and 170 others, of James Hoey and 153 others, of Henry G. Harrison and 88 others, of O. H. Weinere and 23 others, of Daniel C. Walsh and 136 others, of H. L. Baucher and 44 others, of John Blosk and 30 others, of Berry Leddon and 85 others, of William T. Sagle and 15 others, of Lewis Parker and 50 others, of John E. McConley and 50 others, of J. T. Colman and 178 others, of H. L. Baescher and 44 others, of Daniel C. Walsh and 136 others, of George W. King and 45 others, of O. H. Weiner and 23 others, of H. G. Harrison and 88 others, of Francis Cawley and 48 others, of James Hoey and 157 others, of Henry Randels and 170 others, of Jacob Robertson and 56 others, of E. J. Smead and 29 others, of L. Frederick and 80 others, of W. N. Hill and 42 others, of Thomas Henz and 52 others, of J. H. Hodge and 28 others, of James Beckwith and 33 others, of R. Ompetede and 50 others, of Robert Keating and 49 others, of L. G. Weikarts and 181 others, of Martin Connor and 15 others, of Adam Graf and 165 others, of M. A. Morgan and 23 others, of N. H. Grank and 146 others, of Jacob Grant and 65 others, of W. J. Ward and 92 others, of Adam Reiser and 520 others, and of Philip T. Ulher and 430 others, citizens of Maryland.

By Mr. GROSVENOR: Petition of Henry Gavre and 41 others, of John G. Riley and 73 others, and of Bernard Fishter and 48 others, citizens of the fourteenth district of Ohio.

By Mr. HIRES: Petition of Charles Hensel and 17 others, and of James Lutts and 99 others, citizens of the first district of New Jersey.

By Mr. JAMES: Petition of Thomas Dolan and 82 others, of William C. Taft and 46 others, of William R. White and 156 others, and of Samuel P. Babcock and 156 others, citizens of the third district of New York.

By Mr. KETCHAM: Petition of Benjamin Dykeman and 10 others, of William Barker and 26 others, of Francis Kikman and 182 others, and of G. J. Harman and 205 others, citizens of the sixteenth Congressional district of New York.

By Mr. LEHLBACH: Petition of Gottleib Hebb and 42 others, of August Kremp and 28 others, of Robert Spiers and 45 others, of August Kremp and 28 others, of C. L. S. Walkin and 76 others, and of W. P. Cully and 24 others, citizens of the sixth district of New Jersey.

By Mr. LIBBEY: Petition M. A. Moore and 42 others, of B. A. Richardson and 23 others, of A. Holt and 47 others, of Fred. Brewer and 52 others, of Joel C. White and 159 others, of B. A. Richardson and 23 others, of William B. Ballard and 46 others, of C. A. Archer and 50 others, of William McManus and 68 others, of C. Cooper and 262 others, and of F. J. Sansom and 401 others, citizens of the second district of Virginia.

By Mr. LONG: Petition of James Tracy and 47 others, of Mary Hallihan and 104 others, of Robert E. Loyd and 143 others, and of George F. Phillips and 24 others, citizens of the second district of Massachusetts.

By Mr. MAHONEY: Petition of D. Corbet and 27 others, of John F. White and 71 others, and of Walter E. Lincoln and 128 others, citizens of the fourth district of New York.

By Mr. MERRIMAN: Petition of Thomas Smith and 136 others and of William Walsh and 211 others, citizens of the eleventh district of New York.

By Mr. MITCHELL: Petition of Henry Langdon and 66 others, of James F. Butler and 45 others, of George Worten and 47 others, of Dennis Horan and 74 others, of W. D. Wedge and 23 others, of Charles B. Parish and 41 others, of James F. Donahue and 52 others, and of Henry Palmer and 21 others, citizens of the second district of Connecticut.

By Mr. MULLER: Petition of William H. Baker and 238 others, G. D. McVey and 180 others, of William Scanlon and 123 others, of H. J. Dowdall and 209 others, and of Joseph Lapham and 37 others, citizens of New York.

By Mr. PAYNE: Petition of W. J. Fitzgerald and 60 others, of James O'Connell and 69 others, of John Sullivan and 179 others, and of Joseph L. Darling and 94 others, citizens of the twenty-seventh district of New York.

By Mr. PINDAR: Petition of Sims A. Harpell and 26 others and of C. W. Lambert and 23 others, citizens of the twenty-fourth district of New York.

By Mr. RICE: Petition of Benjamin Webster and 108 others, of C. S. Jones and 54 others, of Hammond Page and 53 others, and of Nelson Weeks and 101 others, citizens of the tenth district of Massachusetts.

By Mr. STAHLNECKER: Petition of Frank J. McGuire and 36 others, of J. A. Burke and 28 others, of J. A. Dunne and 150 others, and of John Murphy and 22 others, citizens of the fourteenth district of New York.

By Mr. STORM: Petition of John Duffy and 36 others, of Condy Brennan and 31 others, and of James Broderick and 96 others, citizens of the eleventh district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. SWINBURNE: Petition of Joseph Kline and 65 others, of Charles Fallon and 145 others, of John O. Willey and 44 others, of Henry Sam and 21 others, of John G. Gebhardt and 79 others, of Charles R. Wager and 24 others, and of Patrick Adams and 46 others, citizens of the nineteenth district of New York.

By Mr. A. J. WARNER: Petition of S. M. Cole and 144 others and of Francis Moore and 36 others, citizens of the seventeenth district of Ohio.

By Mr. WEST: Petition of James Gater and 102 others, of William S. Taylor and 161 others, of John J. Helan and 31 others, of John Dingley and 41 others, citizens of the twentieth district of New York.

By Mr. WILKINS: Petition of John Adams and 25 others, of John Krebs and 22 others, and of John J. Burkert and 123 others, citizens of the fifteenth district of Ohio.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, July 2, 1886.

Prayer by Rev. S. B. BARNITZ, of Des Moines, Iowa.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

AGRICULTURAL REPORT FOR 1885.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the Commissioner of Agriculture; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table and to be printed:

UNITED STATES DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
COMMISSIONER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., July 1, 1886.

SIR: In response to a resolution of the Senate of the 29th ultimo, directing me to inform the Senate "why the report of the Commissioner of Agriculture for 1885 has not been delivered for distribution," I have the honor to state that the responsibility for the non-delivery of the reports of this Department does not rest with me. On June 24 the Public Printer began delivering the quota assigned to this Department. I may add that I am informed that these reports are now being delivered to the Senate.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

NORMAN J. COLMAN,
Commissioner of Agriculture.

Hon. JOHN SHERMAN,
President pro tempore United States Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of 104 citizens of Cleveland, Ohio; a petition of 100 citizens of Cleveland, Ohio, and a petition of 78 citizens of Boston, Mass., praying for the passage at the present session of Congress of the following measures:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad and land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding land in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and prohibiting bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursements of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of Dr. Harrison Wagner, of Cardington, Ohio, praying that he be allowed a pension for disability incurred as hospital nurse in General Hospital No. 1, at Frederick, Md.; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. DAWES presented the petition of A. B. Taylor and 48 others, citizens of fifth Congressional district, Massachusetts; the petition of E. S. Scribner and 148 others, citizens of the fifth Congressional district, Massachusetts; the petition of Calvin D. Weeks, mayor of Haverhill, Mass., and 281 others, citizens of the fifth Congressional district, Massachusetts; the petition of W. H. McFadden and 63 others, citizens of the eighth Congressional district, Massachusetts; the petition of W. P. Clark and 73 others, citizens of the ninth Congressional district, Massachusetts; the petition of Patrick Murphy and 92 others, citizens of the tenth Congressional district, Massachusetts; the petition of L. P. Dustin and 24 others, citizens of the eleventh Congressional district, Massachusetts; and the petition of Alonzo Pennington and 112 others, citizens of the eleventh Congressional district, Massachusetts, praying for the passage of the following measures at the present session of Congress:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad and land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding land in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and prohibiting bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursements of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, presented a petition of citizen-soldiers of the State of Oregon, praying for the passage of what is known as the Weaver bill; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of citizens of Elkland, Tioga County, Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the bill to tax oleomargarine; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MILLER presented the petition of Stephen P. Ellsworth and 294 other citizens of the third Congressional district of New York; the petition of William A. Walther and 38 other citizens of the fourth Congressional district of New York; the petition of Charles Gateson and 39 other citizens of the fourth Congressional district of New York; the petition of Miles McGavan and 104 other citizens of the fourth Congressional district of New York; the petition of J. R. Nichols and 55 other citizens of the fifth Congressional district of New York; the petition of George Welley and 39 other citizens of the fifth Congressional district of New York; the petition of Richard L. Raleigh and 69 other citizens of the seventh Congressional district of New York; the petition of F. W. Clarke and 57 other citizens of the ninth Congressional district of New York; and the petition of George W. Wylie and 110 other citizens of the eleventh Congressional district of New York, praying for the passage at the present session of Congress of the following measures:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding lands in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000, Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MILLER. I present a petition of the Daniel F. Schenck Post, Grand Army of the Republic, located at Fulton, N. Y., which reads as follows:

We, comrades of the late Capt. D. F. Schenck, and members of Post D. F. Schenck, Fulton, N. Y., Grand Army of the Republic, notice with sorrow the action of the President of the United States in vetoing the bill granting a small pension of $20 per month to the widow of the late Captain Schenck, and we do most earnestly petition your honorable bodies (the Senate and Congress) to reverse this action by passing this bill over the veto, if necessary.

This petition is signed by A. H. Gilbert, commander, and a large number of members of the post.

In addition to that I have here a letter numerously signed by members of this post, which I will also read in connection with this matter:

FULTON, N. Y., June 29, 1886.

DEAR SIR: We inclose petition from Post D. F. Schenck, Grand Army of the Republic, Fulton, N. Y., and we wish to say something in reference to this case.

Knowing Captain Schenck as we did, a brave and faithful officer who served his country well during the war, contracting disease that never left him till his death, and for a number of years previous to his death suffering day by day, unwilling to make known his special complaints and difficulties to any except his nearest of kin, we could see that he was gradually failing, and finally had to succumb to the powers of disease. His widow, one of the noblest and best of women (supposing herself well provided for), refused to ask for a pension, although entreated to do so by her friends at the time of his death, and not until unexpectedly brought into circumstances of actual need, and away from her many friends, has she sought for the evidence that would enable her to obtain what so justly belongs to her, but so far has failed to satisfy the requirements of the Commissioner. She has at last asked your special help, which has been so generously given, and now she is nearly crushed by the action of the President, and we do hope you will in some way provide for her case. We understand that the bill has been in the President's hands beyond the limit of the Constitution. If that be so does it not become a law? We entreat you to give it your most hearty and earnest effort.

Will you please put this petition in the hands of Senator PALMER, of Detroit, and as many others as you think best, with this letter if you choose.

Yours, most respectfully.

Hon. WARNER MILLER,
Washington, D. C.

This letter is signed by A. R. Chase, A. J. Osborne, and a large number of other members of the post.

It will be seen from these papers that Captain Schenck was so honorable and true a soldier that one of the posts of the Grand Army of the Republic has been named in his honor.

I submit these papers and ask their reference to the Committee on Pensions; and I shall ask that committee to take up this matter at an early day and see what can be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition and accompanying papers will be referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PLATT presented the petition of Peter Jennings and 64 others, citizens of the first Congressional district of Connecticut; the petition of S. Sieler and 19 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Connecticut; the petition of Thomas Fair and 88 others, citizens of the first Congressional district of Connecticut; the petition of John Purdy and 54 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Connecticut; the petition of F. Richards and 66 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Connecticut; the petition of F. A. Robbins and 33 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Connecticut; the petition of C. R. Townsend and 36 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Connecticut; the petition of Harry Corwin and 8 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Connecticut; the petition of Daniel H. Ford and 78 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Connecticut; the petition of John C. Nelson and 50 others, citizens of the first Congressional district of Connecticut; the petition of Thomas F. O'Conner and 150 others, citizens of the first Congressional district of Connecticut; and the petition of Joseph McGill and 100 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Connecticut; praying for the passage of the following measures at the present session of Congress:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad and land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding land in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and prohibiting bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursements of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CULLOM presented a petition of 34 members of the Bunker Hill Milk Producers' Association and other dealers in dairy products at Bunker Hill, Ill., praying for the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a memorial of Concordia Assembly of the Knights of Labor, of Chicago, Ill., composed of German-American citizens, and having 683 members, remonstrating against the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARRISON, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying report and papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2508) to authorize the Shoshone and Bannock Indians to sell to the Utah and Northern and Oregon Short-Line Railway Companies certain lands situated upon the reservation of said Indians, in Idaho, necessary to said railway companies for railway purposes, and for the relief of said railway companies, reported a bill (S. 2789) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to negotiate with the Shoshone and Bannock tribes of Indians for the relinquishment of their title to so much of the lands of the Fort Hall reservation, in Idaho Territory, as is required for the uses and purposes of the Utah and Northern Railway Company and the Oregon Short-Line Railway Company, either separately or conjointly; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1336) to authorize the construction of a bridge over Bayou Bernard, in the State of Mississippi, reported it with amendments.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, from the Committee on Claims, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 190) for the relief of certain employés and others of the twelfth United States light-house district; and

A bill (H. R. 5872) for the relief of R. D. Beckley and Leon Howard.

Mr. VOORHEES, from the Committee on the Library, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS. Some days ago the Senate passed the bill (S. 1800) to secure to the Cherokee freedmen and others their proportion of certain proceeds of lands, under the act of March 3, 1883; which was reported favorably from the Committee on Indian Affairs. Subsequently I moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed the bill, and that motion is now pending. Since that time I have been directed by the Committee on Indian Affairs to report a substitute for the bill when it shall be reconsidered. I report the substitute and ask that it may be placed on the Calendar to be ready to be called up when that action shall be taken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The proposed substitute will be printed and laid on the table. Does the Senator desire it to be read the first and second times and treated as a new bill, or simply as an amendment?

Mr. INGALLS. The action of the committee is that it shall be offered as a substitute for the bill I have named when it shall be reached.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. CAMERON introduced a bill (S. 2790) granting a pension to Catherine M. Lee; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2791) to provide for an American register for the steamer Nuevo Montezuma, of Philadelphia; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying documents, referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, introduced a bill (S. 2792) granting a pension to Mrs. Melvina Van Ness; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PALMER introduced a bill (S. 2793) for the relief of Mary J. Watts; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. WALTHALL introduced a bill (S. 2794) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection and construction of a public building at Oxford, Miss.," approved July 12, 1882; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

Mr. HARRIS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2795) granting a pension to Francis W. Strickland; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. TELLER introduced a bill (S. 2796) to establish a land office at Lamar, Colo.; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DOLPH introduced a bill (S. 2797) granting a pension to Lizzie Wright Owen; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BUTLER introduced a bill (S. 2798) to amend section 839 and section 847 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. CAMERON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. PLATT. I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which I ask to have referred to the Committee on Appropriations together with a certified copy of the decision of the Court of Claims relating to the matter.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be printed, and referred, with the accompanying papers, to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HALE. At the request of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SEWELL] I submit an amendment to the sundry civil appropriation bill, which I desire shall be first referred to the Committee on Commerce, in order that that committee may pass upon it and then refer it to the Committee on Appropriations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be referred to the Committee on Commerce, and printed.

Mr. McMILLAN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GIBSON submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DUTIES ON REIMPORTED GOODS.

Mr. DAWES submitted the following resolution; which was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Treasury be directed to furnish to the Senate a copy of a letter addressed to the Attorney-General of the United States, of date 19th of March, 1886, asking an opinion as to whether imported goods, wares, and merchandise, the product or manufacture of the United States, which under section 2500, Revised Statutes, are liable to a duty equal to the tax imposed by the internal-revenue laws, are entitled to the privilege of the bonded-warehouse system prescribed by sections 2962, &c., of the Revised Statutes.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House of Representatives having proceeded in pursuance of the Constitution of the United States to reconsider the bill (S. 150) to quiet title of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in the State of Iowa, and for other purposes, returned to the Senate, in which it originated, by the President of the United States with his objections, and sent by the Senate to the House of Representatives with the message of the President returning the bill, it was Resolved, That the said bill do not pass, two-thirds of the House not agreeing to pass the same.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 503) relating to the supreme court of Montana Territory and providing for the establishment of judicial districts in said Territory.

The message further announced that the House had appointed Mr. J. E. CAMPBELL a manager at the conference on the bill (S. 335) to provide for protecting the interests of the United States in the Potomac River Flats, in the District of Columbia, in place of Mr. BARBOUR, excused.

The message also announced that the House had receded from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 41) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Saint Joseph, in the State of Missouri, and to establish it as a post-road.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there no be further "concurrent or other resolutions" the Calendar is in order.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The PRESDIENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the appropriations for office of "Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper" of the Senate, in line 109, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "twenty-seven" and inserted "twenty-five" before the word "messengers;" so as to read:

Twenty-five messengers at $1,440 each.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment was, after the word "each" at the end of line 117, to strike out "one fireman at $1,080."

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I object to that amendment. I wish to say in this connection that I have taken the pains to make a great deal of inquiry about the proposed reductions in the force of the Senate, and I think I have gone to the proper officers to ascertain what is proper to be done in this matter.

If we take the bill from one end to the other we find that the force in the Senate is proposed to be reduced, while as a rule in the House there are no changes with two exceptions other than to increase the force.

If we go to the folding-room of the Senate we find that the work there has increased one-third within the last few years. If we go to the post-office we are informed by the Postmaster that the labor of that office has almost doubled within five years. If we go down into the engine-room we are told there that the labor required of the men employed is almost double what it was three years ago, made so by the increase of committee-rooms and by the increased labor in all the several offices pertaining to the Senate.

I notice furthermore that it is not proposed to reduce any expenses here except such as may be accomplished by striking from the rolls of the Senate the laboring men. If there is no use for these laboring men in the Senate, what has been the use for them hitherto when one-third less work was required of them? Ask the officers of the Senate who know most about this matter, and they will all tell you that they have more need for the services of these men to-day than they have had hitherto in the last ten years.

I therefore hope it will be the pleasure of the Senate to leave the force employed here as it has been hitherto, and as we know now in the near future which will have to be increased rather than diminished.

Mr. HARRIS. Has the question been put upon the first amendment reserved by me yesterday evening?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question has been put and the amendment has been concurred in.

Mr. HARRIS. I am satisfied that not one in ten, if indeed any Senator on the floor understood it. I did not, and I beg that the question be put again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will again put the question on concurring in the amendment, if there be no objection.

Mr. HARRIS. Let the question be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 107, before the word "messengers," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "twenty-seven" and inserted "twenty-five;" so as to read:

Twenty-five messengers at $1,440 each.

The question being put, it was declared that the noes appeared to prevail.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. VOORHEES. I wish the matter might be explained so that we may know what it is.

Mr. ALLISON. I will explain it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays are demanded on concurring in the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. ALLISON. A resolution was passed by the Senate on the 3d day of February, 1885, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ three messengers at $1,440 each; two skilled laborers at $1,000 each; two laborers at $720 each; two firemen at $1,080 each; two janitors at $900 each. And the Secretary of the Senate is hereby authorized and directed to pay the above employés out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

This resolution was adopted because of the renting of what is known as the Butler house, and it was stated on the floor of the Senate that these additional employés were required because of the renting of the Butler house. Just before the adjournment of the last Congress all resolutions relating to the Butler house were rescinded, and it was understood by the Senate that those employés who were engaged at the Butler house should be dispensed with.

The Senate Committee on Appropriations, instead of providing for the three messengers authorized by the resolution, only provided for two, and instead of authorizing two firemen at $1,080 each, only provided for one. So this resolution was only partially executed by the appropriation act for the fiscal year which has just closed.

In the present bill as reported these employés, each and every one of them, were dispensed with, and the Committee on Appropriations, in making these changes in the force of the Senate, simply placed it back where it was before the Butler house was rented. In the judgment of the Committee on Appropriations the force which they have provided for in this bill is sufficient to carry on the operations of the Senate with efficiency and to the convenience of all Senators and all the committees of this body.

I trust that each and all of these amendments as presented by the Committee on Appropriations will be concurred in by the Senate.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. That is a very fair explanation of this matter, so far as it goes. The only two men who were really assigned to the Butler building under that resolution, and who came back here and can be dispensed with, as I understand, are the two janitors.

We know that since we gave up the Butler building we have ten additional committee-rooms in this building. We are occupying more additional committee-rooms in this building now than were occupied when we had the Butler building, by reason of the changes wrought here within the last two years, some of them last year. There is a room over yonder made across one end of the hall in the old portion of the Capitol. There is a room down-stairs for the Committee on Fish and Fisheries made since that time. There is a room over here for the Committee on the District made within the last three years, one of the most important in the Senate. There is another new room down-stairs occupied by the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment. Senators know how these changes have been wrought. We have ten more committee-rooms in this building now than we had when we took hold of the Butler building.

How, then, can we dispense with these two messengers without inconveniencing some committees? Whose messengers do you propose to dispense with? Submit that to the chairmen of committees here and say we are going to ask the Sergeant-at-Arms to discharge your messenger, and how quick you will find them kicking against it; and yet it is proposed to make the Sergeant-at-Arms discharge two messengers, after giving him ten more committee-rooms to manage and to supply with assistants when the committees are in session. I say that it is unjust to the Sergeant-at-Arms, it is unjust to the committees themselves, to take one man from the messenger rolls of the Senate. The economy will amount to nothing.

Not a single man is stricken from the roll of the House of Representatives, and here, with an increase of committees, with an increase of committee-rooms, we propose to strike off two messengers and leave two committees without messengers. That is the statement of the case as it ought to be presented to the Senate, and it is a fact which every Senator can ascertain for himself, and as I believe every Senator who has gone around the Capitol knows for himself now.

Mr. TELLER. It is not a question what the Senate may have done heretofore about this force; it is simply a question what can the Senate afford to do with reference to the dispatch of the business of the Senate. If there are any more employés about the Senate than are necessary for the orderly and proper dispatch of business, we ought to dispense with them. I understand from the officers who have this force in charge that this is not the fact. I am sure that my own observation has not led me to suppose that there are about the Senate any number of men who are not engaged; and I believe that will be the observation of every Senator on this floor.

I am as much in favor of economy as anybody, but I am not in favor of any picayune business. I think I speak the sentiment of the people of the United States when I say they do not ask that their representatives in this Hall or in the other shall come here and be without the proper appliances, the proper medium by which they may transact their business.

When this body voted that every member who was not at the head of a committee should have a clerk or stenographer it was said that that would not meet with the approval of the people of the United States. There never has been, that I am aware of, a dissent from that action anywhere. The people of the United States do not expect that the Senate of the United States will proceed upon the same system that a farmer who is laboring to pay for his farm proceeds upon in the management of his business. It is expected that the Senate will have all the necessary facilities for the dispatch of its business. As I said the other night on another subject, what the people demand is dispatch of business, celerity, and attention to public affairs in such way as to promote the general public good.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). Senators must bear in mind that debate to-day is under the five-minute rule.

Mr. TELLER. I have not spoken five minutes yet. I do not know that I have anything further to add, but will simply say that I do not believe the experience and observation of any considerable portion of the Senate will sustain the suggestion that we have more employés here than are necessary for the orderly and proper dispatch of the public service; and therefore I am not disposed for the sake of saving $2,800 or thereabouts that we should all be inconvenienced.

There are so few employés about the Senate who were put upon the force at my suggestion or recommendation that nobody who knows the facts would suspect that I am interested in any person or in keeping any particular individual in the service.

Mr. BECK. Mr. President, before the vote is taken I desire to add one word to what has been said by the chairman of the committee.

The Committee on Appropriations did not feel at liberty to cut down any of the employés of the Senate or to inconvenience any gentleman or any committee, but when a resolution was introduced by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] two years ago to rent additional rooms, and when that was referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses and reported back by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. JONES] approving the renting of what is known as the Butler house, a resolution was agreed to, which was read by the chairman of the committee, to employ a certain number of messengers, firemen, skilled laborers, laborers, and janitors. The Committee on Appropriations did not feel that they ought to give all that was asked, but they did substantially. We gave them two messengers, one fireman, two skilled laborers, two laborers, and two janitors, making a total of $10,280.

Afterward that resolution was rescinded; the Butler house was given up; there was no longer any need for those employés, and therefore in this bill we have just stricken out two messengers at $1,440 each, one fireman at $1,080, two skilled laborers at $1,000 each, two laborers at $720 each, and two janitors at $900, making $10,280, because the purpose for which they were employed no longer exists.

That is all there is of it, and that shows, in my judgment, the wisdom of the provision made by the committee, which was discussed here fully the other day, when we gave, for the purpose of restoring and repairing worn-out and defaced rolls in the Second Auditor's Office, $21,000. Instead of employing so many messengers, so many firemen, so many skilled laborers, so many janitors, so many clerks, and putting them on the pay-roll and making them a part of the regular force, we gave $21,000 in gross to have the work done, so that when that work has been done the men will not be on the pay-rolls and will not have any claim upon them. Instead of saying "two messengers at $1,440 each, one fireman at $1,080, two skilled laborers at $1,000 each, two laborers at $720 each, and two janitors at $900 each, in all, $10,280," as we did, if we had just said, in compliance with that resolution, "the sum of $10,280 is hereby appropriated for the purpose of employing the necessary number of persons to take care of the Butler building while used," when that was given up they would all have been disposed of. But we have them on our rolls, and they being on our rolls, although there is no longer any use for them, although the object for which they were employed is gone, are still here protesting that being upon the rolls it is improper to discharge them, and that we can not get along without them. They have got fastened upon us, and here they are. There is no use for them; there is no pretense that that building is used any more; there is no pretense that we have cut down anything else except what was increased for that purpose, and now when that building is given up, when that purpose is ended, here they all are as though they were injured as individuals because they can not be kept any longer.

Mr. HARRIS. I beg to suggest to the Senator from Kentucky and his committee that these employés were not given to the Butler building. They were given to certain committees of this body that happened to be located there, and though that building has been given up the committees to which these employés were given still exist and still need the services of the officers who were then employed. The committees, whether located in the Butler building or elsewhere, require the same services they did when located in the Butler building.

I think the Senate has been fortunate in having a very efficient Sergeant-at-Arms with a very efficient corps of employés. The Senate has been faithfully and well served. I think the officer at the head of that service knows the necessities of it quite as well as, and I am tempted to say even better than the Committee on Appropriations. That he may struggle along in the performance of the duties without these employés whom it is proposed by the bill to drop I grant, but that he can do so with the same convenience and the same facilities to the Senate and to Senators is what no Senator can claim.

If there be a supernumerary here in the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms—it has not been my fortune ever to find him, but if there be one here who has not been and is not required to perform the full measure of duty that an employé should perform, I should be glad to have the Senator from Kentucky or some other Senator point him out to me. I have not found him, I have not heard of him, and I do not think the Senator has.

These employés are necessary to the comfort and to the convenience as well as to the facilities with which the business of the Senate is to be conducted. The Sergeant-at-Arms tells me that they are necessary, and being necessary, so far as my vote can go he shall retain them.

Mr. BECK. I have no complaint to make of the Sergeant-at-Arms with regard to his efficiency or anything else. I have never looked around this building to see who are needed and who are not needed. I do not know the name of one out of ten of those employed here. There is nobody here on my appointment and I have no interest in the matter at all except so far as the public service is concerned. Therefore I am not looking around to see how men are working or whether they are working or not. Until we rented the Butler house we had a sufficient force for all our needs without these men. On the 5th of July, 1884, the Senate passed this resolution:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms and the Architect of the Capitol be, and they are hereby, authorized and directed to rent and prepare suitable rooms outside of the Capitol for the use at the next session of Congress of such Senate committees as have no rooms, and that all expenses hereunder be paid out of the fund for the contingent expenses of the Senate, subject to the approval of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

That was adopted, and in obedience to that the Sergeant-at-Arms proceeded to rent the Butler building, and rented it very cheaply, for $5,000 a year. We are paying $20,000 a year for a house this side of Willard's Hotel, occupied by the survey under Major Powell, no more commodious than the Butler building. I have no complaint to make of the rent; it was cheap; that house was as well worth $10,000 as that building, and yet we rented it for $5,000. The Senate provided on the 3d of February, 1885, as follows:

Resolved, That the Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ three messengers at $1,440 each; two skilled laborers at $1,000 each; two laborers at $720 each; two firemen at $1,080 each; two janitors at $900 each. And the Secretary of the Senate is hereby authorized and directed to pay the above employés out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The committee did not allow quite all that were so provided for, but those who were employed were paid. The Senate rescinded the original resolution and gave up the Butler house and it is no longer used. Those who were employed for the purpose named in the resolution, because of the rooms rented outside, as janitors and firemen to take care of that house, have no longer any house to take care of. That is all there is of it.

I am not complaining of anybody's work; I am not complaining of anybody's action, but after having directed a house outside to be rented, and after providing what service should be employed for it, now having given up that building and having no longer any work for these people, I do not see why they should be employed any longer; and that was the view of the committee.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, the Senator from Kentucky has stated the proceedings in regard to the Butler house and the appointment or men there correctly as far as I recollect; but the Senator knows, I presume, as I know, that it was a matter of discussion and conversation in the Senate whether it was necessary to keep the Butler house and whether by making changes in the Capitol not only the committees which were sent to the Butler house might have rooms but that there might be in this building even more additional committee-rooms than there were in the Butler house. That was a matter of public and private discussion among Senators. This was especially talked about among members of the committees who had to go in inclement weather and at nights to the Butler house and did not wish to go there any longer, whether there could not be some arrangement made by which there could be additional rooms fitted up in the Capitol for the committees. A committee of inquiry finding that that could be done, the Architect of the Capitol under proper authority was instructed by a committee, of which I think the Senator from Kentucky was one, to take a room that had been used for one purpose and make a committee-room of it, and that other rooms—rooms that were used for storage and rooms that were used for other purposes—should be changed. So in dark rooms and other places the storage and the officer who had charge of the folding-room were placed. Many officers are now in dark rooms that have to be illuminated with gas, with no access of sunlight to them, giving the outer rooms to committees.

There were ten committee-rooms prepared in this way, and the committees came back, and were glad to come back to the Capitol and have rooms here where they could go and do their business without going out across the country to the Butler house; but they had to have their messengers, they had to have the same service performed. In these ten additional committee-rooms in the Capitol, as the Senator from Virginia said, the committees found places to do their labor here without going out of doors to another building; but that is no reason why the committees should not have their messengers, their laborers, and their firemen to take care of their fires.

There is no reason for any diminution in the fact that the location of the committees is changed; and that the Senator from Kentucky did not state; perhaps the importance of it did not impress him. I believe that all the facilities which can be given to forward the business of the Senate by committee-rooms and by messengers and by those who shall perform their proper duties should be afforded so as to relieve the time of Senators which ought to be devoted to the consideration of the serious and grave matters which are committed to them personally to attend to as members of this body.

I agree with the Senators who have spoken. I have tried to find whether there are any superfluous men, men not needed for attention to the committees and the committee-rooms and the duties about the Senate, and I have been unable to find any idle or unoccupied person among our roll of employés. If that is so, the Senate ought to have its force.

I do not care about this specially and I have no special interest in this; but I want sufficient force to attend properly to the duties.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. I would vote "yea" if he were here.

Mr. DAWES (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DAWES. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. HOAR], who is necessarily absent, is paired generally with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL].

Mr. FRYE, I am paired with the senior member from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN], who is detained at his house by sickness.

Mr. CAMDEN. I wish to announce the pair of my colleague [Mr. KENNA], who is detained from the Senate by illness, with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

Mr. STANFORD. I am paired with my colleague [Mr. HEARST] generally. I do not know that the pair extends to this case, but on reflection I think I shall not vote on this question.

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—21.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Vance,
Beck,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Walthall,
Berry,	George,	Platt,	Wilson of Iowa.
Brown,	Hampton,	Plumb,
Call,	Harrison,	Pugh,
Colquitt,	Hawley,	Sherman,

NAYS—25.

Blackburn,	Gibson,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Vest,
Blair,	Gray,	Palmer,	Voorhees,
Butler,	Harris,	Ransom,	Whitthorne.
Cameron,	Jones of Arkansas,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Md.
Conger,	Mahone,	Sawyer,
Cullom,	Maxey,	Spooner,
Evarts,	Miller,	Teller,

ABSENT—30.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Kenna,	Pike,
Bowen,	Frye,	Logan,	Sabin,
Camden,	Gorman,	McMillan,	Saulsbury,
Chace,	Hale,	Manderson,	Sewell,
Cockrell,	Hearst,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Stanford,
Coke,	Hoar,	Morgan,	Van Wyck.
Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Morrill,
Dolph,	Jones of Nevada,	Payne,

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

MISSOURI RIVER BRIDGE AT SAINT JOSEPH.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I desire to submit a conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive it.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The bill came from the House this morning. The House recedes from its disagreement to all our amendments.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 41) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Saint Joseph, in the State of Missouri, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, and 7, and agree to the same.

S. J. R. MCMILLAN,
O. D. CONGER,
G. G. VEST,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
CHARLES F. CRISP,
W. D. BYNUM,
A. J. WEAVER,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senate agree to the report?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That does not need any agreement. The House has receded entirely, the Chair will see.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct. The bill is passed without any further action of the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 392) declaring forfeited certain grants of land made to certain States in aid of the construction of railroads.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the said bill and amendments; and had appointed Mr. COBB, Mr. STONE of Missouri, and Mr. PAYSON managers at the conference on its part.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 5874) to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands, and for other purposes; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. BUTLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. COCKRELL submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. RANSOM, from the Committee on Private Land Claims, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MILLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the clause making appropriations for office of Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper of the Senate, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, in line 118, struck out:

One fireman, $1,080.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 25, noes 10; no quorum voting.

Mr. BECK. There seems to be no quorum voting, and I call for the yeas and nays. This fireman was employed for the Butler house, which we have given up.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Do I understand the Senator to say that this fireman is for the Butler house?

Mr. BECK. Yes.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Has he not been employed here on account of the increase of the accommodation for committees in this building?

Mr. BECK. Does that require more firemen?

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Did the Committee on Appropriations ask any officer in the building whether the employment of this man was necessary, or did the committee simply go on the theory of economy proceeding here? I do not propose to rely on the judgment of the committee in respect to this force. I know it is sacrilege to say anything in opposition to what is reported from the Committee on Appropriations; but if I turn over a few leaves of this bill I find that the very Senators who are proposing to economize by striking down one man in this building are the members of committees that cost the Senate more than all the rest put together.

I take the Committee on Appropriations; I take the Committee on Public Lands; I take all the committees that are considered the most important committees and look at the service that they get. I can see every one of them voting here to sustain their own reports, to economize by striking off from the pay-rolls the laborer who is employed in this building and has been employed in it for the last few months since the Butler building was abandoned. We have had three firemen here; and the officers in charge, of whom you complain the very moment they do not give you every convenience and I might almost say every luxury that you demand, say that the continued services of these men are necessary.

I repeat again, sir, that the only endeavor to economize in this building by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate is in regard to a few laboring men on the Senate side of the Capitol, while in the other House I find that every appropriation in the total that is added at the end of the paragraphs for its force is increased by the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate. I challenge denial of that statement from any member of the committee. There is an increase of appropriation there while there is no increase in numbers and no demand for any additional force there.

Here we have had additional work to be done; here we have had additional committees; here we require additional service, and here we have an Appropriations Committee that comes in and says, "Strike off eight men from the labor rolls of the Senate," commencing with two of the messengers, then two skilled laborers, one of whom is the tonsorial artist that splits the hair to cover the bald places on Senatorial heads and to wax the Senatorial dude moustaches. He is called "a skilled laborer." Strike him out, and then you will complain that you can not get shaved or your moustache waxed when you come to the Capitol.

That is the economy in this bill that proceeds from this Committee on Appropriations. I am opposed to it all unless there can be some other reason than that the Committee on Appropriations can not see any other way to economize.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays are demanded on concurring in this amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE. (when his name was called.) I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN.] If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. DAWES (when his name was called). I make the same announcement I did on the last vote, that I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE]. I do not know how he would vote on this question and therefore I withhold my vote. If at liberty, I should vote with the committee, "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am assured that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL] would vote "yea" if he were here.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He certainly would.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Under these circumstances I vote "yea."

Mr. CAMDEN. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. If he were present, I should vote "yea." I do not know how he would vote, and therefore I withhold my vote. I announce also the pair of my colleague [Mr. KENNA] with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 23; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Allison,	Edmunds,	Hawley,	Saulsbury,
Beck,	Eustis,	Ingalls,	Sherman,
Berry,	George,	Maxey,	Vance,
Brown,	Gibson,	Platt,	Vest,
Call,	Hampton,	Plumb,	Walthall,
Colquitt,	Harrison,	Pugh,	Wilson of Iowa.

NAYS—23.

Blackburn,	Evarts,	Miller,	Spooner,
Blair,	Gray,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Teller,
Butler,	Harris,	Palmer,	Voorhees,
Cameron,	Jones of Arkansas,	Ransom,	Whitthorne,
Conger,	McMillan,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Md.
Cullom,	Mahone,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—29.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Kenna,	Pike,
Bowen,	Frye,	Logan,	Sabin,
Camden,	Gorman,	McPherson,	Sewell,
Chace,	Hale,	Manderson,	Stanford,
Cockrell,	Hearst,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Van Wyck,
Coke,	Hoar,	Morgan,
Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Morrill,
Dolph,	Jones of Nevada,	Payne,

So the amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 124, before the word "skilled," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "ten" and inserted "eight;" so as to read:

Eight skilled laborers, at $1,000 each.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask for the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. I should vote "yea" if he were here.

Mr. DAWES (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY], who is called from the Chamber for a few moments.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MCMILLAN. My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is detained from the Chamber by sickness. He is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA], who is also absent on account of sickness. I do not know how my colleague would vote on this amendment.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Allison,	Colquitt,	Hampton,	Pugh,
Beck,	Cullom,	Hawley,	Sherman,
Berry,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Eustis,	McPherson,	Vest,
Brown,	George,	Platt,	Walthall,
Call,	Gibson,	Plumb,	Whitthorne.

NAYS—19.

Blair,	Harris,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Spooner,
Butler,	Jones of Arkansas,	Palmer,	Teller,
Cameron,	McMillan,	Ransom,	Voorhees,
Conger,	Mahone,	Riddleberger,	Wilson of Iowa.
Evarts,	Miller,	Sawyer,

ABSENT—33.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Kenna,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Gorman,	Logan,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Gray,	Manderson,	Sewell,
Chace,	Hale,	Maxey,	Stanford,
Cockrell,	Harrison,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Van Wyck,
Coke,	Hearst,	Morgan,	Wilson of Md.
Dawes,	Hoar,	Morrill,
Dolph,	Jones of Florida,	Payne,
Fair,	Jones of Nevada,	Pike,

So the amendment was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment was, in line 125, before the word "laborers," to strike out "fourteen" and insert "twelve;" so as to read:

Twelve laborers, at $720 each.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment was, in line 126, after the word "each," to strike out the following words:

Two janitors, at $900 each.

Mr. CONGER. I understood the chairman of the committee to say that those men are employed here and that there is no objection to their remaining if they are necessary. If that be so, I hope they will be retained.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Michigan said these two janitors were actually employed here. I do not know that that is true.

Mr. CONGER. They are doorkeepers in the galleries of the Senate now.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not think they are necessary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in this amendment.

Mr. BECK. I ask for the yeas and nays. There are two janitors at every door.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Instead of having two janitors at every door, I know the fact that at the principal doors of this Senate Chamber now they take a doorkeeper away for service in a committee-room. I know that one of the doorkeepers at yonder door is nearly always to be found in the room of the Committee on Fisheries, and nearly all the doorkeepers have to go to various committee-rooms and perform service there, to the neglect of the doors. That is noticeable to those who go in these doors, and certainly to Senators who act on the committees.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Colorado [Mr. BOWEN]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

Mr. HARRISON (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

The result was announced—yeas 20, nays 24; as follows:

YEAS—20.

Allison,	Colquitt,	Hampton,	Plumb,
Beck,	Edmunds,	Hawley,	Pugh,
Berry,	Eustis,	Ingalls,	Vance,
Brown,	George,	McPherson,	Vest,
Call,	Gibson,	Platt,	Walthall.

NAYS—24.

Blair,	Evarts,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Stanford,
Butler,	Harris,	Palmer,	Teller,
Cameron,	Jones of Arkansas,	Ransom,	Voorhees,
Chace,	McMillan,	Riddleberger,	Whitthorne.
Conger,	Mahone,	Sawyer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Miller,	Sherman,	Wilson of Md.

ABSENT—32.

Aldrich,	Fair,	Jones of Florida,	Morrill,
Blackburn,	Frye,	Jones of Nevada,	Payne,
Bowen,	Gorman,	Kenna,	Pike,
Camden,	Gray,	Logan,	Sabin,
Cockrell,	Hale,	Manderson,	Saulsbury,
Coke,	Harrison,	Maxey,	Sewell,
Dawes,	Hearst,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Spooner,
Dolph,	Hoar,	Morgan,	Van Wyck.

Mr. BECK. The footing will have to be changed at the end of the clause to correspond with the amendments which have been made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary is already authorized to insert the proper amounts in the various footings.

The next reserved amendment was, in line 454, in the appropriations for the Civil Service Commission, to insert:

One clerk of class 3.

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HAWLEY. I wish simply to call the attention of the Senate to what the amendment is. It was adopted before, apparently without objection.

The Civil Service Commission, through its chairman, most urgently represents that this is necessary, absolutely necessary. They have really but four persons who are devoted to clerical duty, and they declare that they need three more clerks. I have the sanction of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

I will say for the benefit of the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] that the majority of the Civil Service Commission is Democratic and earnestly endeavoring to enforce this law.

Mr. FRYE. I doubt that.

Mr. HAWLEY. I paused for a moment to see whether there would be a contradiction of my statement. I will say, for the purpose of my argument then, that they are earnestly endeavoring to enforce this law; and I have no doubt, whatever their sincerity in this matter, that they are badly cramped from the lack of clerical assistance. It is necessary for the examiner to travel from one part of the country to another. Besides the examiner there is a secretary, a stenographer, and two clerks. They also have a messenger who is a skilled type-writer, and a laborer who serves chiefly as a clerk.

With the sanction of the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations I had amendments providing for three clerks referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, and all of that committee who were in town, making a quorum, sanctioned the amendments and instructed me to offer them. I consider the additional force indispensable to the work of the commission—that is all. If they are to be crippled, and the system is to be destroyed, it would be far better to do it directly in the manly way proposed by the Senator from North Carolina; that is, to repeal the law.

Mr. VANCE. This is a bureau that has an examiner. It has already imported a force of new officers classified in this way: One clerk of class 4, one clerk of class 2, one clerk of class 1, one messenger, and one laborer—five additional persons since the creation of this commission. If it shall continue to grow in this way, as I have no doubt it will every year, it will after a while have a force of forty or fifty clerks doing Heaven knows what. I think it ought to be stopped now before it goes further. Twenty-eight thousand dollars a year is sufficient for an experiment, the establishment of a bureau that is to determine who is fit to serve the Government.

Mr. HAWLEY. I will not undertake to recite the law, but it requires an examination to be made in a large number of the principal cities of this country, and it provides a very large list of persons from whom appointments are to be made. It regulates the appointment, and promotion, and continuance in service of more than fifteen thousand employés of the Government. It is utterly impossible for these gentlemen to conduct their correspondence, prepare the papers, and give the notices, &c., with the force they have at present.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to ask the Senator from Connecticut a question. How many employés have the Civil Service Commission now independent of this new increase?

Mr. HAWLEY. I read all that yesterday, and I do not find the report of the Committee on Appropriations at this moment. I laid it aside supposing the matter was settled.

Mr. ALLISON. The Civil Service Commission have three clerks and a messenger and a laborer.

Mr. HAWLEY. A messenger and a laborer who are capable of working as clerks and do so act besides doing their work as messenger and laborer.

Mr. VANCE. They have six employés now including the Secretary, five of whom have been added since the creation of the bureau, and I understand they have a supply of elegant blanks, &c., that are on hand now, enough to last during the remainder of this administration. If, then, without this increase, they are unable to do any more business, so much the better.

Mr. HAWLEY. That is frank. I desire that the vote be taken on the proposition. If they are unable to do anything more so much the better, says the Senator from North Carolina. I ask no better argument for my amendment.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not understand that to be the proposition. I do not propose to vote on that proposition myself in acting on this amendment.

There is one proposition which I wish to submit to the Senate in regard to the work of the commission. The Senator from Connecticut says the commission is doing its duty, and I am not disposed to dispute it; but if the commission is doing its duty, the law is utterly failing in doing its duty and is entirely different from what it was supposed to be when enacted. The Commissioner of Pensions was before a committee of the Senate some weeks ago and had something to say about the operations of the law. In his bureau he said he had got seventy-six or seventy-seven clerks through the medium of the Civil Service Commission, and of those seventy-one or seventy-two were Democrats that he knew of and he was not positive as to the politics of the other five. Either he was a very good guesser or the commission made a very good guess, or perhaps they both guessed well in regard to the politics of these men, or the law is somewhere at fault.

Just as the matter stands now, not knowing exactly what the rule is, I think on the whole the Civil-Service Commissioners could get long with the force they have got. Besides, if we were to introduce a new clerk into that force he might not be able to steer the commission into the Democratic camp quite as fast as it is going. There might be some interruption in that process which seems to be going on at present.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am willing to give every facility needed to carry on the Government, but I look on this Civil Service Commission as a useless piece of machinery in carrying on this Government. If I had my way I would abolish it. If I can not do that I will vote for the smallest appropriations for it. I am opposed to the whole concern; and if these Commissioners depended on my vote for their salaries they would get none at this session of Congress.

Mr. VOORHEES. In response to the statement made by the Senator from Kansas, I desire to say that the first seventy-two special examiners appointed by General Black after he came into office were every one of them Republicans. They had been in the service, and he chose, when it was optional with him, to continue them by reappointment rather than to attempt to fill their places with new men.

Mr. ALLISON. That is, he retained one-half of the force of one hundred and fifty Republicans.

Mr. VOORHEES. They were not retained; they were reappointed. Their terms were out, and he had the choice of selecting new men, and I am not certain but that he ought to have done it.

Mr. PLUMB. I was not talking about that instance at all. I was simply talking about the manner in which the Civil Service Commission furnished him men.

Mr. VOORHEES. There are over fourteen hundred clerks in that bureau and he has not changed one hundred and fifty of them. I wish he would change more. But it is not proper to arraign a man improperly.

Mr. PLUMB. I was not arraigning him at all. I was only commending the Civil Service Commission for the manner in which it succeeds in designating Democrats for all the vacancies that occurred.

Mr. VOORHEES. I have never been for the law, sleeping or waking, in my dreams or in any other way that I know of; but it is the law and is now in the course of experiment; and while it is the law I shall treat it fairly and give it a fair chance. If there is good in it, I hope it will come out; if there is not, it will be made manifest in due time and the people will pass in judgment upon it.

Mr. INGALLS. As this is a matter of some interest, I have had attention called to the speech made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] on the 30th ultimo, in which he purports to quote from the testimony given by the Commissioner of Pensions on the 25th of March, 1886, before a committee of the Senate, and I assume that that is authentic.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator from Kansas will allow me I will put in his hands the original testimony.

Mr. INGALLS. Inasmuch as the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] has seen fit to place the Commissioner of Pensions before this body and the country as a non-partisan in his administration of that office, I will read what he said.

Mr. VOORHEES. I did not say he was non-partisan.

Mr. INGALLS. Well, the Senator said there were fourteen hundred employés in the Pension Office and that the Commissioner of Pensions had not removed one hundred and fifty of them. The reason is because he can not remove them. That stands in the first place as the answer to the allegation intended to be in favor of the Commissioner of Pensions as a non-partisan.

The Commissioner testified:

I have removed as many Republicans as I could with due regard to the expedition of public business.

So that he has not been governed by any considerations of a non-partisan character in retaining the present force of the Pension Office. He says that he has removed as many Republicans as he could, and he goes on:

I can state approximately that 90 per cent. of those originally appointed have been Democrats. Out of seventy-seven appointed under civil-service rules, seventy-two have been Democrats and five politics unknown.

If that does not ring the bell on the enforcement of the civil-service law by this administration, then I certainly miss my understanding. The Senator from Indiana states that he wants to give this law a fair trial; and if this is a result of a fair trial of the civil-service law as administered by the Democratic party, I do not profess to be in favor of it. If out of seventy-seven men appointed under civil-service rules seventy-two have been Democrats and five unknown as to their politics, I would say that its administration ought to be tolerably satisfactory to the Democratic party.

I do not wonder that the Senator from Indiana with his usual liberality proposes to furnish this commission with additional clerical force to carry out these ideas. I have no doubt that if the clerical force had been sufficient the politics of the five other men would have been known and that they would have been Democratic, and that the only reason why these five were of unknown politics out of the seventy-seven was because the commission did not have clerical force enough to inspect around about the history and antecedents of those who had been certified up in order to enable them to make the selection so that they would be in accordance with the political sentiments of the party in power.

If the Senator from Connecticut, whom I believe to be sincere in his support of the law, will state again after reading this that he thinks notwithstanding the fact that the majority of this commission are Democrats it is carrying out in its spirit the purposes for which the law was enacted, I certainly shall be very much surprised. If he desires to vote for additional clerical help to a commission that so manages to steer this business that out of over seventy-seven men appointed in the Pension Office seventy-two are of the Democratic party and five non-partisans or unknown or not classified in politics, then he certainly is more easily satisfied than I should suppose he would be.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President, I hardly know the operation of a man's mind who complains of the changes that have been made, to use a common phrase, in the civil service of this Government. I have here a statement made by a distinguished gentleman from Illinois on the floor of the House some time ago to this effect: When General Black went into office March 17, 1885, he found one hundred and forty-eight holding positions by express appointment as special examiners; there was not one single Democrat among that number.

Mr. TELLER. I beg the Senator from Indiana to qualify that statement. The great mass of them of course were Republicans.

Mr. VOORHEES. I am not making the statement myself, but I am making it on very high authority.

Mr. TELLER. I do not care what the authority is; there were some Democrats in that number.

Mr. VOORHEES. I would not make any antagonism on a question of veracity with the Senator from Colorado; but I repeat my belief that if there was one Democrat there it was a mistake on the part of those who were responsible for his being there. He was an accidental Democrat if he was there. Those who administered that office at that time did not seem to want Democrats in those places. There were seventeen hundred in round numbers of a clerical force in that bureau when General Black took charge of it. I venture to say—and I do not wish to be extravagant or inaccurate—that there were not twenty known Democrats, whose politics were known, in that entire force of seventeen hundred; and yet we hear complaints—I will not say whinings and grumblings, I will not use unkind or harsh expressions—but it does seem to me the smallest business that men's minds can engage in to complain that a few of those men have been turned out.

It is a fact—and I have never made any outcry about it—that for the last quarter of a century the Republican party, dominant and powerful and compact and solid and moving from one victory to another, did administer this Government in all its parts, high and low, by having their people in small places as well as large places, in the corridor and in the closets and everywhere else. I never complained of that. I thought it was your right. I think so now. And I can not comprehend the spirit of men who come here and complain that a few of these offices have changed hands. I say frankly in the Senate and before the American people as far as my poor voice may extend that I believe we ought to have more of them. I believe the Democratic party has in it the elements to administer this Government purely, wisely, and well, and if I did not believe so I would not belong to that party.

So far as the Civil Service Commission is concerned, it is composed of gentlemen of integrity, and has been from the first. I had confidence in the integrity of the men who composed that commission before the recent change; and whether I like the system or not I intend that the men who are charged under the law with executing the system shall have a fair opportunity to do it. So far as I am concerned, I will no more cut down their force or deny them the means of giving their system a fair trial than I would vote to cut off supplies from an army in the field even if I did not approve the policy of the war. These men are there charged with a duty, and they have taken their oaths, and I am for upholding their hands in a liberal and proper spirit.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, my colleague [Mr. VOORHEES] mistakes the issue. The issue is not whether it is an appropriate thing that there should be Democrats in office or not. It is not whether in the absence of law it would be a just subject of criticism if the Secretary of the Interior or any other head of a Department here appointed Democrats, or Democrats exclusively if you please. The question here is one of the administration of the law, and a law that had a distinguished Democratic origin, though I am sorry to say it has never had much Democratic support, and the fact of originating it has been very creditable to its originator.

The question here raised is as to the faithfulness of the administration of the law; and upon the facts I have before me I do not intend to say that on the part of the commissioners who are here appealing to Congress for some additional clerical force there has been a maladministration or a corrupt administration of it. The investigation to which reference has been made is not yet concluded, and I am not one of those who rush into the discussion of a case until the evidence is closed. It does appear, however, according to the facts as stated by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], that somehow or other under the operations of this civil-service law and the rules which have been made for its enforcement, which have in most cases required that only the three or four leading persons, the three or four highest upon the list, should be certified, by some process or other this has been accomplished in the Pension Office, namely, that seventy-two out of seventy-seven men who have been selected under the law from lists furnished by the Civil Service Commission have been Democrats, and that the other five are found without any politics at all.

That is true. That may be consistent with an impartial, non-partisan administration of the Civil-Service Bureau. It may be so. We shall know more about it when we get through with the investigation which has been inaugurated on that subject. It is true, undoubtedly true, that prior to the passage of the civil-service law, both on the part of the Republicans and the Democrats when they were in power, the great bulk of the appointments were made of the political faith of the person having the appointing power.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator how that happened while there was a majority of Republicans on that commission if the law was enforced?

Mr. HARRISON. That I do not know. The conundrum which the Senator from South Carolina has proposed to me is one that I intend to solve, if I can, before we get through with the investigation.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator, I understand, is complaining that the present board of Civil-Service Commissioners are putting a majority of Democrats in office. What I desire to get from the Senator is how the board was administered when there was a majority of Republicans on that board, whether any Democrat got in then.

Mr. HARRISON. That I know nothing about.

Mr. BUTLER. I think it a very important inquiry in that connection.

Mr. HARRISON. I know nothing about that. I did not rise to enter any complaint, and should not have said anything on such a subject except for references that have been made by other Senators.

If the Civil Service Commission need these clerks, as the chairman of the committee having that subject in charge assures us, I am willing to give them to them; and if it shall be found that the office is in some way administered so as to give a partisan turn, so that while things are put promiscuously and fairly into the mill nothing but Democratic results come out—when we have ascertained that fact, then it will be time enough, so far as I am concerned, to arraign the commission and to hold them to that just responsibility to which the country will hold them if it is found to be the result of any maladministration or fraudulent administration of the law.

Mr. HAWLEY. I have turned to the report of the Committee on Appropriations, and I ask the Secretary to read the passages which I have marked on pages 13 and 15 concerning the necessity for this appropriation.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

[Extract from letter of Civil Service Commission, dated June 21, 1886.]

The three additional clerks asked for are absolutely necessary for a proper discharge of the routine business of the commission and keeping of its records.

* * * * * * *

The clerical force of the commission now consists, besides the secretary and stenographer, of one clerk of class 2 and one clerk of class 1. The appropriation bill just passed by the House provides for the same force for the coming year. It is utterly inadequate, being barely sufficient (with the help of the messenger, an expert type-writer, and the laborer, who is constantly employed on clerical work) for the dispatch of the absolutely current work, leaving important records and tabulations which should be kept up to date untouched.

[Extract from present appropriation.]

One stenographer, at	$1,800
One clerk, class 2, at	1,400
One clerk, class 1, at	1,200

[Extract from letter of Civil Service Commission, dated March 29, 1886.]

In the performance of all these various and exacting duties the chief examiner has the assistance of two clerks, whose office hours are from 9 a. m. till 5.30 p. m., instead of 9 a. m. till 4 p. m., as in the Departments, and the chief examiner finds it necessary to prolong his hours of labor until midnight four nights in each week, and with that is not able to keep up with the work.

Heretofore the chief examiner has been compelled to be much away from Washington in the discharge of his duties, traveling in the last three years over 200,000 miles, often holding examinations at different points on successive days, going from point to point at night.

The burden is now too heavy to be borne by one man with the clerical assistance now provided, and for its adequate and satisfactory performance an additional clerk and an assistant chief examiner are required.

An additional clerk is also needed in the part of the work more immediately under the direction of the secretary of the commission. Both the messenger and laborer of the commission, in addition to doing the proper work of their respective grades, are compelled to perform clerical work constantly, the former being an expert type-writer.

A. P. EDGERTON,
President Civil Service Commission.

Mr. HAWLEY. The Senate will remember very well how earnestly General Grant tried to introduce a system of civil-service reform practically, without statutory direction as to detail but with statutory authorization, some years ago. He was as earnest in that as in everything else. No one can doubt his sincerity. His attempts were insidiously baffled or directly baffled and ended by the refusal of the House of Representatives, and I suppose the Senate also. I remember the struggle in the House to give him any further appropriations. Public sentiment did not rest with that. I think the better public sentiment of the whole country, of all parties, demands a resolute and persistent attempt to purify the civil service. Not that I join in the common defamation of that service. I believe it is the best that any government in the world has; that it was one year ago, and two years ago, and three years ago; but it was susceptible of great improvement, and the civil-service law is a sincere attempt to reach that improvement.

That bill was drawn as the result of innumerable consultations and attempts at devising a system that should be fairly satisfactory to the country, that should not attempt too much, but should attempt that which was practical and that which if successful would demonstrate the possibility of still greater reforms. The bill came to Congress directly from the New York Civil Service Reform Association, and a Democrat was found with courage enough to present the bill and to champion it. It is upon the statute-book; it has been executed more or less perfectly or imperfectly (I do not discuss the degrees in that regard) for some three years. It is stronger, in my opinion, in the public respect than it was when it was adopted.

It is to be expected that such a law will be imperfectly executed for a time. The whole movement is tentative and experimental, after a fashion. I could find similar imperfections in the execution of almost any new system, and especially one that had resolute opposition from a portion of the people.

But I submit to the Senate that whatever errors may have been committed by the previous or the existing commission, whatever the politics of the commissioners, it is not statesmanlike now to attempt to kill it by a withholding of the necessary appropriations for simple clerical work. If the law has proved itself to be an unfit and unwise law, let us repeal it like men; let us make the movement directly, as the Senator from North Carolina has done. But if it contains in it the substantial germ of an honest purpose and a wise improvement in the administration of the Government, let us stand by it. I stand by it. I know the majority of these commissioners are Democratic. The law provides that they may be so. But I am willing to credit them with a sincere desire to execute the law. Moreover, we propose to hold them to that resolutely; and I will join as earnestly as any man in any investigation of what may appear to be movements in another direction on their part.

Mr. VANCE. Does the Senator from Connecticut think that so far the civil-service law has materially improved the class and character of appointees?

Mr. HAWLEY. I have not examined the fifteen thousand persons who come under its rules, but I believe it has been a benefit to the service. A change of administration has very largely relieved Republican Senators from importunities for office, it is true, and the Democratic Senators having just come into this blessed privilege do not know what they might have suffered if it had not been for the civil-service law. Unquestionably they would have been to a far greater extent crowded, not to say overborne, by the pressure for office. I think the Democratic party is doing very well in clearing Republicans out, according to the statistics given by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] in his most admirable speech. I do not think it has any reason for complaining of not getting at the patronage sufficiently. I do not think it ought to grudge the reform sentiment of the country the little foothold it has gained in an attempt to improve the service.

I said I would hold the commission rigidly to a proper execution of the law. Now there have been, it is said, in one branch of the Government a large number of appointments made almost wholly from the Democratic party. An investigation is going on, we are told, which will throw some light upon it. I hope so. I can see how in other cities at least, whether it was so in this particular class of appointments or not, those figures could have been perfectly true without anybody's fault, for it is the fact that in many places where examinations are conducted scarcely a single Republican makes an application for an examination.

You may say that is because the Republicans know they would not stand a fair chance for appointment if they were examined. I do not know what the prevailing reason may be, but with regard to many of them it is an unwillingness to hold office of any description under a Democratic administration. They do not care to ask for it. They would not accept it if it were offered to them. In many cases there have been entirely voluntary, not to say enthusiastic, resignations of their places by men who were not asked to resign, because they did not desire to continue in the public service under the Democracy. They would feel uncertain of the tenure, and they chose to start directly for some better land the moment the Democratic party came into power.

So then, I say, you will find, if you will investigate, that at several of the places where examinations have been conducted very nearly every applicant was a Democrat.

But I return to the simple proposition upon which I base my motion and on which I defend it: This law is entitled to and will have under the demands of the best sentiment of this country a fair and a continued trial. If it is to be destroyed let it be destroyed in an open, square, fair, and manly way by a repeal of the statute, and not by an indirect attack which hampers the men who are charged with its execution.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President, I questioned a statement made by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES], of course not desiring to question his veracity. I have seen the statement made several times in the public press. I have seen it made and I think perhaps I have heard it made here in the Senate, that prior to the incoming of the present administration all of the officers, all of the clerks in the Interior Department were of one political party. The special examiners of which the Senator speaks were provided for in the appropriation bill of the year 1884. They were appointed by the Secretary of the Interior.

In the first place the Department had out two hundred and fifty clerks detailed as special examiners in the field. From the clerks in the office who were entitled to become special examiners under this bill without an examination by the Civil Service Commission, about fifty or sixty were taken. The remainder were selected from lists furnished by the Civil Service Commission after examination, and I say to the Senator now that I court the most thorough and searching examination, and it can not be shown by anybody that the question of the politics of any single man of the one hundred and fifty was ever discussed by the Secretary or anybody in connection with him. First, those who wanted to go into that force were selected to the extent of fifty or thereabouts from the clerks in the office; nobody was required to go in, because it was a temporary service and such of the clerks as were supposed to be available and capable were told "if you desire to go in, you may go in." The remainder were taken from the certifications made by the Civil Service Commission to the Secretary of the Interior; and the Senator can not say and nobody else can say to-day, unless every man has been interviewed personally, what the political faith of these appointees was.

I will say that from the time the civil-service law went into effect I never heard a suggestion by any head of a bureau or by anybody connected with the Interior Department as to the politics of any man who was certified by that commission; and I do not think there was an officer of the Interior Department who knew what his politics were unless he happened to see on the list the name of some person with whom he might be personally acquainted. So much for that. I do not myself know how it could be determined what a man's politics is unless the head of the Department were to go out and make inquiry after the man was certified to him, which is not a presumable case at all. I presume it is likely that when the Republicans were in power the majority of the men who applied for appointments were Republicans. I have no doubt to-day the majority of the men who are applying are Democrats.

One other thing as to Democrats being put in office. There are a good many Senators and Members who ought to know that the statement made by the Senator from Indiana can not be true. I know that in the three years I was at the head of the Interior Department I appointed a great many Democrats—more than there are members of the Senate all told, both Democrats and Republicans. I appointed a great many Democrats at the request of Democratic Senators and Democratic Members, but never unless I believed they were capable and competent men, and then I appointed them as I would appoint Republicans. I will say for the Democrats as a general rule that they did not ask to have these appointments made, and did not expect that they would be made, but they were made in many cases, and I can now from recollection point to a great number of men who are to-day in the public service, and some that have left, who were not simply Democrats but pronounced Democrats all the time they were in the service, and they suffered nothing at the hands of the late Secretary of the Interior because they were Democrats if they were faithful and efficient officers. Ladies were appointed at the request of Democrats, and the only question when such applications were made was as to their fitness for position.

I believe this debate is under the five-minutes order, but I want to say that I shall vote for this amendment, and I am going to vote for it as I vote for all these amendments. The Democratic party is in power. I intend to hold it to a strict accountability, as the people will, for the administration, and when the members of its administration say to us officially that it is necessary that they shall have anybody to discharge the duties of the offices that they have taken upon themselves, you will find me voting promptly to give them the aid. They shall never be able to say, "We did not succeed as well as we would because a Republican Senate withheld from us the means and opportunities, the tools, the agencies." I propose to vote for any increase that is asked for by any head of Department unless there shall be good reasons given—and I doubt whether they can be—to show that it is not honestly needed in the service.

Mr. DAWES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Before the Senator from Massachusetts proceeds, the Chair will state that he has not strictly enforced the eighth rule, but hereafter the Chair will feel bound, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, to enforce strictly the rule of the Senate limiting debate.

Mr. DAWES. The civil-service law is by no means a perfect law. When it was introduced into the Senate and when it was under discussion, many defects and shortcomings in the provisions of that law were pointed out. Some of them were remedied. Some of them it was impossible to carry the bill through and take out of the law. Defects in the bill were left there to help it through. Some of the sincerest and warmest advocates of the measure pointed out those defects; but still for various reasons they were left there. I think the vitality of the bill was taken out of it largely when Congress refused to enact that the appointments should come from the three highest upon the list certified by the commission.

When it was left to the administrative power to say whether the appointment should come from the highest or from all certified, it was left solely to the fidelity and sincerity of those who administered the law whether the spirit of it should be carried out at all or not; and we have seen demonstrated just what was predicted upon the floor of the Senate during its pendency here.

But that is not the question before us now. Whatever imperfections the law has, it is upon the statute-book and a great advance from the condition of things when it was adopted. It deserves the ardent and sincere support of every one who believes it possible to improve the civil service. Amendments will ultimately come to make more stringent and more perfect the administration of that law. In order to do it, the Civil Service Commission must have force sufficient. The commission appeared before the Committee on Appropriations and not only made it appear to them but they did in advance before the Committee on Civil Service itself and it is apparent that if they carry out the law with any efficiency, certainly with any sincerity, they must have a sufficient force, and I am here to give them all the force they can reasonably ask for, and then as the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] has said hold them responsible for an efficient and honest administration of the law, and then its beneficence will be made to appear.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I do not propose to discuss the civil-service law more than to say that in my judgment it is one of a series of attacks upon the sovereignty of the people in the form of this Government, and in the direction of privileged classes and aristocratic influences and a clear denial of the responsibility of the President and the heads of Departments to the people. I shall take occasion at some time before the Senate adjourns to endeavor to present my own opinions on that subject.

I wish to say as to the policy of this law that in the State of Florida there have been various applications for clerkships in the Departments. Many applicants have passed the examination provided by the Civil Service Commission, and I addressed to every head of Department a request containing the official certification of their having passed the examination; but the year has passed away and not a single one of those applicants for position has been enabled to obtain a place in any Department of the Government. It illustrates the fact that under this law, with the Departments filled as they have been, there is but little or no opportunity for those who pass the civil-service examination to obtain places. In my own State it has failed utterly to provide any means by which a citizen of Florida, of whatever party, can obtain a position in any of the Departments. We did quite as well under the Republican as we have done under the Democratic administration; and, so far as we are concerned, we have nothing to claim of advantage from the change in the respect of obtaining places in the Departments. Therefore, I have no care whether you give the Civil Service Commissioners additional force or not. So far as my people are concerned, there is no benefit or advantage to them from the commission.

Mr. VOORHEES. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Indiana having addressed the Senate once is not entitled to speak again.

Mr. VOORHEES. I wish to bear testimony to the uniform fairness and liberality of the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] when he was Secretary of the Interior, and disclaim any purpose of accusing him of consulting party in the making of his appointments beyond what any man in his position should.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DAWES (when his name was called). As I have already stated, I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE]. If he were here, I should vote for this amendment.

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. RANSOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LOGAN], but his colleague permits me to vote, and I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. My colleague [Mr. LOGAN], if he were present, would vote "yea."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired generally with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. I am informed by his friends that if present he would probably vote "yea," so that I withhold my vote. If he were here, I should vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 36, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—36.

Allison,	Evarts,	McMillan,	Sawyer,
Blair,	George,	McPherson,	Sherman,
Butler,	Gibson,	Miller,	Spooner,
Cameron,	Gray,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Stanford,
Chace,	Hale,	Palmer,	Teller,
Conger,	Hampton,	Platt,	Vest,
Cullom,	Harrison,	Plumb,	Voorhees,
Dolph,	Hawley,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Ransom,	Wilson of Iowa.

NAYS—11.

Beck,	Coke,	Harris,	Vance,
Berry,	Colquitt,	Maxey,	Whitthorne.
Brown,	Eustis,	Riddleberger,

ABSENT—29.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Logan,	Sabin.
Blackburn,	Gorman,	Mahone,	Saulsbury,
Bowen,	Hearst,	Manderson,	Sewell,
Call,	Hoar,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Van Wyck,
Camden,	Jones of Arkansas,	Morgan,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Jones of Florida,	Morrill,
Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Payne,
Fair,	Kenna,	Pike.

So the amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, in the appropriations for the Civil-Service Commission, in line 455, inserted after the words "one clerk of class one" the following:

Two clerks, at $900 each.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment was, in line 460, to strike out "three," before the word "thousand," and insert "four;" so as to read:

For necessary traveling expenses, including those of examiners acting under direction of the commission, $4,500.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment was, in line 1111, in the clause making appropriations for "office of assistant treasurer at Baltimore," after the word "thousand" to insert "five hundred;" so as to read:

For assistant treasurer, $4,500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I should like to have the chairman of the committee state again whether that is to bring the salary in conformity with the Revised Statutes or any later general law, or whether it is to increase the existing salary, or how it stands.

Mr. ALLISON. This is still $500 below the statutory compensation of the assistant treasurer at Baltimore.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As fixed in the Revised Statutes?

Mr. ALLISON. In the Revised Statutes; and I will say that yesterday in the hurry of the debate in regard to the First Auditor I omitted to remember at the moment that although we repealed the law of 1873, yet as to the Treasury in 1875, by what is known as the Kellogg act, we increased the salaries of the Auditors of the Treasury.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the bill give them the sum provided in the act of 1875?

Mr. ALLISON. The bill gives them $3,600. The act of 1875 gives them $4,000. The law now in reference to the assistant treasurer at Baltimore is $5,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Unless these repealing clauses have affected it.

Mr. ALLISON. Unless the repealing clauses in the annual appropriation bills have changed it.

Mr. BECK. I understand $4,500 is the salary this officer has received for a number of years back and what he is receiving now.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Does the Senator from Kentucky understand that this is an accident in the arrangement of the House bill which we are to correct, or that it is a policy which is contained in the bill all around to economize and reduce? If the latter, I should be inclined to accept the situation.

Mr. BECK. I do not know what the policy of the bill may be. My policy is when you place a man in a highly responsible place such as the subtreasury at Baltimore to pay him fair wages; and when we have men employed, whether as firemen, or janitors, or anything else, and there is no use for them, and they become supernumeraries, cut them off. That is my idea. Believing that the assistant treasurer at Baltimore with all his responsibility ought to have $4,500 salary, I desire to vote for the amendment.

Mr. CALL. This matter was considered in committee because the office is a very important one in a leading city, and certainly $4,500 is no more than a moderate compensation for a person competent to discharge such responsible trusts. We have fixed the salaries of various officers occupying somewhat similar positions and given as much as this, and I see no reason why it should not be allowed in this case.

Mr. HALE. The amendments as to salaries touching the independent treasury and certain others which will be found later in the bill were reserved at my request. I am opposed to increasing the salaries of these higher officers in the different Departments beyond the limit fixed by the House of Representatives. I do not believe that any harm will come to the service from taking the bill as it comes from the House. I do not think the service will be crippled. I do not expect that any official will resign because the House of Representatives has fixed his salary on the basis indicated by the provisions to which these amendments apply. The assistant treasurer at Baltimore is not going to abandon his place because the House of Representatives has declared that $4,000 shall be his salary for the next fiscal year, if the Senate agrees to that and under that provision the bill becomes a law. So with the other assistant treasurers; I shall vote against the amendments that increase the salaries fixed by the House.

I do not desire to detain the Senate or to impede the passage of the bill by any further comment, giving notice that in all cases wherever the question arises upon these reserved amendments where the additional sum put on by the Senate committee exceeds the salary fixed by the fundamental law as found in the Revised Statutes, I shall insist that the yeas and nays be called and that the Senate put itself upon record on the proposition of increasing salaries.

Mr. BECK. I wish to present the case fairly and properly. In answer to the Senator from Vermont I said I did not know of any general principle except to be decent and fair in the employment of men for responsible positions. The Revised Statutes, section 3596, provide—I may as well read it as to all these officers, for they all follow in succession:

SEC. 3596. The assistant treasurers shall be entitled to the following salaries, to be paid quarter-yearly at the Treasury of the United States, to wit:
First. The assistant treasurer at Boston, to $5,000 a year.
Second. The assistant treasurer at New York, to $8,000 a year.
Third. The assistant treasurer at Philadelphia, to $5,000 a year.
Fourth. The assistant treasurer at Baltimore, to $5,000 a year.
Fifth. The assistant treasurer at Charleston, to $4,000 a year.
Sixth. The assistant treasurer at New Orleans, to $4,500 a year.
Seventh. The assistant treasurer at Saint Louis, to $5,000 a year.
Eighth. The assistant treasurer at San Francisco, to $6,000 a year.
Ninth. The assistant treasurer at Cincinnati, to $5,000 a year.
Tenth. The assistant treasurer at Chicago, to $5,000 a year.

In the bill as sent to us from the House the assistant treasurer at Baltimore is cut down from $5,000 to $4,000; at Boston from $5,000 to $4,500; at Chicago to $4,500, and so on in a number of other cases; and at San Francisco to $4,500, although his salary is fixed by the Revised Statutes at $6,000. Confining myself to the case at Baltimore, the Revised Statutes allow the assistant treasurer $5,000. The law of last year and previous years have given him $4,500. The House has now cut it down to $4,000, and the Senate committee restored it to $4,500, which is what he got last year, and I believe for years before, and that is $500 less than the Revised Statutes authorized him to have. Therefore I hope at least this amendment will be adopted making a fair basis for a responsible officer.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I ask the Senator from Kentucky a question? I agree with the general proposition he has laid down, but I should be glad to have his opinion in respect of the effect of these last sections in these late appropriation bills repealing all inconsistent laws, &c., and in which bills provision is made for a different salary than that which the general statute creating the office and regulating it provided. What I want to find out—and it is not an easy question with me at the present moment—is, what is the effect of that clause? If the effect of giving a man less pay this year than he had before, when the bill says it shall be in full compensation and repeals all inconsistent laws, is to repeal that section of the Revised Statutes, then, of course, all that is left is simply what Congress chooses to give each year; we may give $20,000 or $1,000 a year. I would like the opinion of my friend from Kentucky on that subject. What is the effect and legitimate consequence on the old Revised Statutes of these repealing clauses where the appropriation for the year is different from what the regular statutes had provided as the compensation?

Mr. BECK. When this bill was first considered I stated the difficulty, and the Senator from Vermont fully appreciated it, because he said that he saw the difficulty in the construction of these various acts. I had hoped that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee before this time would have been able to make up his mind, because I expected to be advised by him, and not he to ask me for advice. I see the difficulties—"all laws and parts of laws inconsistent with the act are hereby repealed," and it is in "full compensation."

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wanted to get the opinion of my friend from Kentucky.

Mr. BECK. There may be serious difficulty in their construction, and since that is the fact I have supported the proposition of giving to this man a fair salary, the same as we gave him last year, and not do him the gross injustice of cutting him down $1,000 below what the Revised Statutes give him, if that is the law, and $500 below what we gave him last year. If that is the law I am willing to stand on what he got last year.

Mr. ALLISON. This is one of the items of so-called reductions in the legislative appropriation bill as it came to us from the House of Representatives. I saw in my casual reading this morning that it has been stated in another place that this bill as it passed the House of Representatives reduced the expenditures of the current year $800,000; and it has been stated as one of the great evidences of the economical disposition which prevails elsewhere that they have been able, in a bill involving over $20,000,000, to make a reduction of over $800,000. I wish to call attention to the items of that $800,000 for a moment in order to illustrate a little more fully the particular provision here.

Of that $800,000 reduction $100,000 comes from the reduction in expenses in the two Houses of Congress, made because of the next session being three months instead of seven; in other words, every off-year the expenses of the two Houses are $100,000 less, in round numbers, than they are for the year when we have a long session.

Mr. HALE. This appropriation bill provides for the short session.

Mr. ALLISON. I thank the Senator for calling my attention to that. This appropriation bill provides for the short session of Congress.

Another item of reduction which it is claimed is a reduction of $217,150 is in the Pension Office. That reduction was specifically made by the law passed March 3, 1885, and this Congress, in neither branch of it, is entitled to any credit for that reduction. It was made by the last Congress in the appropriation act for the year 1886.

Two hundred thousand dollars of the reduction of which we hear is made in the expenses connected with the Internal Revenue Department; and yet the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and the Secretary of the Treasury if I understood him correctly, both say that the $200,000 additional which the Senate has already put on the bill is absolutely essential to collect the revenue of the Government and protect its business and the people against moonshiners and illicit distillers.

Seventy-seven thousand dollars of this reduction of which we hear comes from a single omission to appropriate $77,000 for the mint at San Francisco, when, as I explained the other day, that $77,000 which has failed to be appropriated in this bill will be taken out of the permanent appropriations under the silver act of 1878.

Fifty-seven thousand nine hundred dollars of this reduction comes from another act which we passed in 1885, reducing by a positive rule and statute the expenses in the Quartermaster-General's department with reference to claims under the act of 1864.

So of the reduction which is claimed elsewhere to have been made by the House of Representatives I have included items aggregating $652,050, and the remainder of the items of reduction are the small items such as are now being discussed in the bill, cutting down and scaling here and there the salary of an officer below the salary paid during the fiscal year just ended, and here and there knocking off a clerk or two in the Dpartments. But the whole reduction of clerks in this bill as compared with the law passed March 3, 1885, in numbers, as the bill came to the Senate, is only fourteen. It is true they are able to show nominally the number of one hundred and seventy-one in the Executive Departments, because of the one hundred and fifty-nine which had already been cut off by the law which we passed on the 3d day of March, 1885. So when we come to the question of economies I desire that these questions shall be tested by the law and not by the statements of men made elsewhere.

When this bill came to us from the House of Representatives it only reduced fourteen clerks as compared with the law which we passed on the 3d of March, 1885, and as it was reported by the Senate Committee on Appropriations to this body it reduced only one clerk. In other words, the Senate Committee on Appropriations did not increase the number of employés, but differed from the House as to thirteen.

Of course I can not state as to the condition of the bill under the amendments which have been already agreed to in the Senate, but taking all the amendments together we have increased the bill very little in the Senate. That is all I wish to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] asks me if the increases or changes made in the Senate were made by a party division. I do not so understand. They have been made here upon the independent judgment of Senators on both sides of the Chamber acting with reference to their responsibility to the country and to the Senate itself.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then the radical Republican majority here has not forced upon a reluctant and suffering Democracy something that they did not want.

Mr. ALLISON. So it appears.

Mr. BECK. Allow me to say as one of the minority of the Committee on Appropriations that I am not able to recall for the last five years any political question in the committee. I voted for some of the increases, as some gentlemen on the other side did; and we have endeavored as far as I know to keep all our bills out of politics. There was a time when we had reconstruction and soldiers and marshals at the polls, when we had to deal politically; but in the last four or five years I am not able to recall a single instance where we have had any political division in regard to service of this kind. I desire to have that distinctly understood.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am glad to hear the Senator from Kentucky say that, as I was sure he would, because we all know it is true; and he will therefore in public and everywhere where the question is alluded to declare that the Senate, although it happens to be Republican in point of majority, is not in his judgment extravagant in its appropriations and trying to force upon the House of Representatives and the Democratic administration an unjust expenditure of the public money.

Mr. BECK. So far as I am advised, in no appropriation bill that has come from the House to the Senate have I seen the slightest disposition to do that on the part of any member of the committee on either side.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am glad to hear it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HALE. This is not a case where the amendment is an increase of the statute salary, and I do not call for the yeas and nays.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment was, in line 1121, in the appropriations for the office of assistant treasurer at Boston, to increase the appropriation for salary of the assistant treasurer from $4,500 to $5,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How does that stand? I wish to know how it has been in former appropriation acts?

Mr. BECK. The amendment corresponds with the law in the Revised Statutes. Five thousand dollars is the amount in the Revised Statutes.

Mr. EDMUNDS. How does it correspond with the appropriation of last year and so on?

Mr. BECK. We make it correspond with the appropriation of last year, that being $5,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. So this is not an increase above the former appropriation?

Mr. BECK. It is not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment was, in line 1227, in the appropriations for the office of assistant treasurer at Saint Louis, to increase the appropriation for salary of the assistant treasurer from $4,000 to $4,500.

Mr. HALE. That is not an increase beyond the statute really.

Mr. BECK. It is not. It lacks $500 of what the statute provides for the fiscal year just ended.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment was, in line 1237, in the appropriations for the office of assistant treasurer at San Francisco, to increase the appropriation for salary of the assistant treasurer from $4,500 to $5,000.

Mr. BECK. That is what we gave for the fiscal year just ended, and it is $1,000 below the law in the Revised Statutes.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment was, in line 2092, in the appropriations for the Pension Office, to increase the item for compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions from $4,000 to $5,000.

Mr. BECK. We gave him $5,000 for the fiscal year which has just closed.

Mr. HALE. The Revised Statutes, chapter 5, section 470, make this provision:

> There shall be in the Department of the Interior a Commissioner of Pensions, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall be entitled to receive a salary of $4,000.

In some of the years of late appropriations have been made of $4,500 and in a few cases $5,000, but the law has never been changed.

The Senate has already declared that the clause "in full compensation" is not general legislation and does not change the general law. The statute remains as I have read it.

The House of Representatives in making up this appropriation bill followed the statute and fixed the appropriation for this officer's salary at $4,000.

I am opposed under these conditions to any change from the House bill, and upon the question of concurring in this amendment I call for the yeas and nays. I do not want to take any more time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The yeas and nays are demanded upon concurring in the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BECK. All I have got to say is that we pay the Commissioner of Pensions $5,000 now, and his duties have doubled since the date of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. PLATT. I think perhaps it ought to be said that the appropriation in the act of March 3, 1883, was placed at $5,000, and in that act there is at the end a clause repealing all acts inconsistent. I do not find that that repealing clause has been inserted since March 3, 1883.

Mr. BECK. In the act of 1885 the same language, "in full compensation," was used, and that act gives the Commissioner of Pensions $5,000; and its third section repeals all acts and parts of acts inconsistent therewith. It was done in 1883 and again in 1885.

Mr. HALE. The Senate has already decided that that clause is not inconsistent with the prior law and that it is not general legislation. I supposed that question fell with the discussion and the vote of the Senate yesterday. I have no idea that the law has been changed.

Mr. CAMDEN. How long has the Commissioner of Pensions been paid a salary of $5,000?

Mr. BECK. For a number of years, how many I can not tell, at least three or four, perhaps eight or ten.

Mr. PLATT. He was paid $5,000 in 1883.

Mr. BECK. He was paid $5,000 in 1883 and in 1884, and so in 1885; and the business of the Pension Office has doubled, as everybody knows. He has the final decision of more important questions than any other officer in this Government. When he once grants a pension everything is gone. The present Commissioner may leave the office to-morrow, but the office ought to have a man at its head receiving $5,000.

Mr. TELLER. I was about to say that this is one of the most important offices under the Government. It deals with very important interests and very tender interests, that everybody in the country is appealing for and dealing with, and the sum that we pay is certainly not excessive if we pay him $5,000.

We have shown that we have the ability to disregard the statute, because a few moments since we fixed the appropriation for one officer at a thousand dollars less than the statute allowed him. If we have that power we can readily fix it a thousand dollars higher, if we think the officer ought to have it. The head of the Pension Office ought to have it. Any man who is fit to be Commissioner of Pensions ought to have $5,000 a year.

Mr. GEORGE. I have voted all along steadily in favor of the reductions of salaries. I believe they are too high, and I shall vote in the same way in regard to this salary. The yeas and nays have not been called all the time, but I have voted steadily in that direction. I think the salaries are too high, and if we are ever to commence reducing them we ought to commence now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired on all political questions with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. As this is not a question of that kind I will take the liberty of voting. I vote "yea."

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. DAWES (when his name was called). I have stated my pair with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE], but with the consent of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MCPHERSON], who has the matter in charge, it has been transferred to the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER], and I vote "nay."

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DOLPH. Upon the statement, which goes unchallenged, that for five years the Commissioner of Pensions has drawn a salary of $5,000——

Mr. HALE. Debate is not allowed.

Mr. DOLPH. I vote "yea."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], but upon advising with some of his friends I will undertake to record my vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. HALE. Does the Senator believe that the Senator from Nebraska would vote "yea?"

Mr. BLACKBURN. I will state that I conferred with the Senator who has charge of the pairs on that side of the Chamber, and it was upon that conference and his assurance, the result not being changed, that I voted. I speak of the present occupant of the chair.

Mr. HALE. Who is that Senator?

Mr. BLACKBURN. The present occupant of the chair [Mr. CULLOM]. My vote does not change the result, and it was after conference with that Senator that I voted.

Mr. HALE. Is there a Senator present who knows how the Senator from Nebraska would vote?

Mr. BLACKBURN. I do not know how the Senator from Nebraska would vote if he were here, and I should not cast my vote if it changed the result. I wish to say before the result is announced that if the recording of my vote changes the result, I shall ask to withdraw it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does not change the result.

Mr. HALE. I have no objection to the Senator voting on the statement that he conferred with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM], the present occupant of the chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair does not feel at liberty to make any statement from the chair.

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Beck,	Eustis,	Jones of Arkansas,	Vance,
Blackburn,	Gibson,	McPherson,	Vest,
Butler,	Gray,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hampton,	Pugh,	Walthall,
Camden,	Harris,	Ransom,	Whitthorne,
Dolph,	Hearst,	Teller,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—25.

Allison,	Blair,	Chace,	Conger,
Berry,	Cameron,	Coke,	Cullom,

Dawes,	Harrison,	Miller,	Stanford,
Edmunds,	Hawley,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Evarts,	Ingalls,	Riddleberger,
George,	McMillan,	Sherman,
Hale,	Maxey,	Spooner,

ABSENT—27.

Aldrich,	Gorman,	Manderson,	Plumb,
Bowen,	Hoar,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sabin,
Brown,	Jones of Florida,	Morgan,	Saulsbury,
Cockrell,	Jones of Nevada,	Morrill,	Sawyer,
Colquitt,	Kenna,	Payne,	Sewell,
Fair,	Logan,	Pike,	Van Wyck.
Frye,	Mahone,	Platt

So the amendment was non-concurred in.

The next reserved amendment was, in line 2145, in the appropriations for the office of the Commissioner of Patents, to increase the appropriation for compensation of the Commissioner of Patents from $4,500 to $5,000.

Mr. HALE. The Revised Statutes, chapter 6, section 477, provide that—

The salaries of the officers mentioned in the preceding section—

That is, relating to the Patent Office—

shall be as follows:

The Commissioner of Patents, $4,500 a year.

At that salary the House fixed the appropriation in the bill. That is the law. As in the other case, which has already been passed upon by this body, there have been at different times other appropriations made; but the law, as in the case of the Commissioner of Pensions, remains as in the Revised Statutes the fundamental law fixing the compensation.

I am opposed to the increase proposed by the amendment, and upon this, as in the other case, for one ought to go with the other, I call for the yeas and nays, and I hope the Senate will do as it did in the other case.

Mr. PLATT. With relation to this amendment I should like to say a single word.

I propose to vote for the amendment, and I do so for the reason that I believe the salary of the Commissioner of Patents was intended to be raised last year by the appropriation act from $4,500 to $5,000, with a full knowledge of the fact that the salary as it stood before by the general statute was only $4,500. I believe that was done on the merits of the case. It may be remembered that I made a speech in which I spoke of the inadequacy of the salary of the Commissioner of Patents. I believe it is an office which ought to have a salary of $5,000.

I have scarcely an acquaintance with the present Commissioner of Patents, and I have nothing to say about his capacity, but the office ought to have that salary, and I think that in the appropriation act last year which repealed all acts inconsistent with that act it was made $5,000 with the understanding that it was to so remain. I shall therefore vote for the amendment.

Mr. BECK. The present law, which the Senator from Connecticut very properly says contains the provision "that all acts and parts of acts inconsistent or in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed," fixes the compensation of the Commissioner of Patents at $5,000. We are giving simply what he now has.

That is one of the offices not only temporarily important, because the work of the Pension Office may perhaps be diminished as time goes on, but it is growing in magnitude and importance every day. The funds necessary to supply the office and to obtain the ablest men in the country at the head of it are all furnished by inventors themselves. Not only enough is furnished to run the office, but a surplus is paid into the Treasury after all the expenses of the office are paid. Several hundred thousand dollars—the exact amount I do not know—are paid into the Treasury over and above the expenses of the office. The inventors of this country, the people of this country, are entitled to have in that office the services of one of the very best men who can be found in the country.

I take pleasure in saying, knowing the present Commissioner of Patents, that a more energetic, able, earnest, honest man can not be found than he; and having such a man we ought not to lose him, the inventors of the country ought not to lose him, and the people of the country ought not to lose him by cutting down his salary to what it may have been twenty years ago, when the office was not of half the importance that it is now. If I were in his place I would resign to-day, with the ability that I know he has, before I would work for a salary that was cut down below what it was, when the service he is rendering is worth a great deal more than that.

Mr. HALE. Before the Senator sits down I want to ask him whether he believes that this office, important as it is, requires more service and more labor and is more important in its duties or to the country than the Commissioner of Pensions whose salary the Senate have just agreed with the House in fixing at $4,000. As the House put it, the salary is $500 beyond that of the Commissioner of Pensions; and I certainly hope the Senate will not go back on its last vote.

Mr. BECK. I think the Senate did not do itself any credit in the vote which it just gave, if I am asked the question, in cutting down the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions to $4,000. That is the only answer I can give to that. That is my opinion, without reflecting on anybody. I was asked the question.

Mr. HALE. We did not cut it down. It is the law.

Mr. BECK. If we are stickling as to the law, we made the salary of the assistant treasurer at San Francisco at $5,000 when the law says he shall have $6,000. If we are to stick to the law, why not give the assistant treasurer there the $6,000 that the law gives him? On the contrary, whenever it suits gentlemen to cut down the salaries of officers below the law, that is all right. Whenever it does not suit gentlemen to give men a salary such as they ought to have with the work they are doing, then they go back to the Revised Statutes, which are entitled to no consideration unless it be a technical, legal consideration, because those laws in the Revised Statutes are simply compilations of former existing laws, nine-tenths or perhaps all of them being merely the amounts that happened to be then fixed in the appropriation acts. Although the Revised Statutes in some instances, especially in regard to the silver coinage of the country, did make a change, it was professed at least that they did not change a syllable of existing law, that they were simply a compilation of the laws which then existed, and the salaries which were found in the appropriation acts of that day were inserted because they were there. There was no such thing in regard to the Revised Statutes as a law passed making them the statutes of the country by a revision. There was nothing of that sort.

Mr. HALE. The Senator knows that that compilation is accepted as the standard law of the country; and why does he now talk about the Senate cutting down this service? All that is asked here is that the Senate shall fix this salary at what the House fixed it. The body that initiates these appropriations, the body that is in sympathy with this officer, the body that considers these subjects first and foremost, has left this salary at where the law fixes it, and the Senator should not talk about the Senate cutting down salaries in an unreasonable way when it is only proposed to follow the House and to follow the law.

Mr. BECK. I supposed that this body without referring to what the House has done exercised its own independent judgment as to what was right. The Senate did not think it right to give the subtreasurer at San Francisco $6,000, although that is the law. If the Senator from Maine is going to stickle for the law as found in the Revised Statutes, why not comply with it throughout? We thought $5,000 enough for that officer. The House thought $4,500 was enough. We voted $5,000 because that was fair in comparison with all the other salaries paid.

In regard to this officer, no man will deny that one of the very best lawyers in the country ought to be at the head of the Patent Office; and $5,000 for the services of a man who is fit to be Commissioner of Patents is not too much; it is hardly enough.

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator from Kentucky allow me to ask him a question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. DOLPH. Was the increase made in the last appropriation act the first increase of the salary of this officer?

Mr. BECK. I am not sure as to that. I am advised by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] that the increase made in the last appropriation act was not the first.

Mr. DOLPH. I make the inquiry because I voted "yea" on the amendment in the case of the Commissioner of Pensions——

Mr. BECK. I am told by the Senator from Missouri who has looked into it that it was not the first time that it was made $5,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky is reminded that his time has expired.

Mr. BECK. I beg pardon; I did not know it.

Mr. TELLER. Mr. President——

Mr. DOLPH. I hope the Senator from Colorado will allow me a moment. I was saying that I asked the question because I desired to know if this case stood on any different ground from the one on which the vote was just taken. I voted for the amendment in the case of the Commissioner of Pensions because I understood that for several years the compensation had been fixed at $5,000, and I desired to know whether the increase was for the first time in the last appropriation act for the Commissioner of Patents.

Mr. BECK. I am assured that it was not.

Mr. TELLER. Whether we have acted wisely or not with the Commissioner of Pensions in declining to appropriate for his salary as it has been for many years, is not a question now upon this proposition. Here is an officer charged with the discharge of very onerous duties. He leaves his law practice and accepts this office with the salary fixed and with every reason to suppose it was to be the salary for years to come. He becomes charged with a very important bureau, a bureau that does not run the Government in debt but pays a net sum into the Treasury of the United States taken from the inventors, a self-sustaining bureau; and is it proposed to say now that the Government, for the purpose of putting into its coffers the money that it has taken out of these men who have put their applications for patents into that office, for the sake of putting in $500, will decrease over last year the appropriation for this officer?

The Patent Office, as was said by the Senator from Kentucky, is a continuing office. It grows every day. If I had thought that this question would have been presented and that any opposition would have been made to the amendment, I should have taken pains to present a little statement which has been presented by the Commissioner of Patents in his report every year showing the increase in the business of the Patent Office year by year. As the number of people has increased so the buisness of the office has increased all the time. The inventors paying in their money demand of the Government the highest talent which the Government can secure for a proper discharge of the duties of the office, so that they may get their patents in time.

It does seem to me that in a matter of this kind it is unreasonable to say that because the House said there was some old statute which gave only $4,500, we shall give but $4,500. The argument of the Senator from Maine would simply leave the Senate without any discretion or judgment at all in the matter. Why did not the Senator from Maine and his committee adopt the bill as it came from the House if the Senate is to exercise no judgment on it at all?

Mr. HALE. We did try.

Mr. TELLER. You did not do it by a good deal. If that is to be the rule and if we are to surrender to the House the right to make the appropriations, all right; but when they have exercised their right to change some of them and change this, I do not see why we should not stand by the committee in that particular, and I do not see why this officer should not have as much as he is receiving this year and as much as his predecessors had.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I find it very difficult to understand the proposition when Senators here assert that a statute of the United States can continue to exist in the face of one, two, three, five, ten, or twenty years of new enactments providing a different compensation for officers, in full payment, which is manifestly entirely subversive and antagonistic to the law that provided at a former time a different compensation. How long shall this continue? A hundred or a thousand years? There is no decision and no agreement that a law once repealed can be revived again by implication. That has been exploded a hundred years ago, and no such proposition can be maintained.

Now, to depreciate and belittle the public service, to deprive the people of the services of men of character, is a contempt thrown upon them and upon republican government. To say that this officer, required to be of the highest ability as he is, of the greatest integrity and capable of commanding $10,000 and $20,000, shall be belittled and the public service belittled by a compensation that will drive him or any other respectable man from the position, is, in my opinion, a wrong to the people and a contempt of their interests.

To say the House has done this or that is not proper here. We are not allowed to be controlled by the judgment of the House. By our constitutional organization we are required to say what is our independent and distinct judgment in regard to every proposition, and we are not permitted in our duties to be governed by the action of the House.

Mr. MAXEY. Mr. President, ever since I have been a member of the Senate I have consistently opposed legislation on an appropriation bill. I remember very well when in 1876 that question came up, and the present occupant of the chair made what I regarded at the time as a very able speech against this system of legislating on an appropriation bill, and to the best of my ability I have followed on the same line. I have always believed that it was the most vicious and dangerous character of legislation, and that if vicious and improper legislation could succeed in getting through Congress it was upon an appropriation bill.

Having that view of the case, I made the point of order on the expression "in full compensation" as applied to salaries, &c., in the bill we are now considering. That point of order was by a vote of the Senate overruled.

I was asked a question during the discussion yesterday by the Senator from Vermont whether I would apply the same principle to an increase of salary above the amount fixed by the statute that I would to a decrease. I replied to him that undoubtedly I would; and I did do it in the vote for the increase of the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions, as I shall do in regard to the proposed increase of the salary of the Commissioner of Patents.

The statute fixed his compensation in 1870, and as far as I know it has not been changed. Section 477 of the Revised Statutes fixes the salary of the Commissioner of Patents at $4,500. This is not the other House fixing the salary, as was said by the Senator from Florida, but it is the law which fixes the salary, and the salary which comes to us in the House bill is the salary which the law has fixed. The Senate Appropriations Committee, assuming to change the law, increased the salary from $4,500 to $5,000. I say that if the salary is wrongly fixed in the statute, then the question should be submitted coolly and deliberately to the proper committee for investigation, and let them report an amendment of the existing law. Wherever the whole subject of salaries is submitted to the Appropriations Committee, no mortal man can tell how they are adjusted. It is like Selden's description of the court of chancery, which he said was dependent upon the conscience of the chancellor, and like his foot it might be a long foot or a short foot or an indifferent foot. So it depends entirely upon the character of the Appropriations Committee and their views yearly, and they are changing yearly as to what the salaries shall be; and thus the foundation and the principle of the law is blown up as if by dynamite. Permanency is one of the great principles of the law.

The other House is not departing from the law in regard to this salary. It sends to us a bill containing a salary for this officer precisely as the law fixes it, and it is not the House which changes it; it is not the law which changes it, but it is the Appropriations Committee of the Senate which sees proper to change it upon the face of the appropriation bill.

Believing, as I say, this character of legislation to be vicious, and having always so believed, acting consistently on that principle ever since I have been a member of the Senate and expecting to continue so to act as long as I am a member of the body, I shall vote against concurring in this amendment.

Mr. BECK. I wish to state to the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] that I have examined the statutes, and I find that for the last two years $5,000 has been the salary of the Commissioner of Patents.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Mr. President, I regret to interfere or appear to interfere with the work of the Committee on Appropriations on so elaborate a bill as this. I announced in the very beginning of its consideration that I was going to vote to keep salaries where they are and to keep the service just where it is, unless the heads of Departments shall state that they require additional force, in which case I shall always be ready to grant it as far as my vote will aid in doing it.

The Senator from Kentcky, the Senator from Texas, and the Senator from Florida, who have spoken in favor of this increase of salary, all three voted to economize in this bill to the enormous amount of $3,080, turning out from the Capitol two skilled laborers and one fireman whose aggregated salaries amount to $3,080. That is the whole economy of it so far as the bill stands up to page 88. Having done that, we are asked on page 88 to go beyond the statute and vote $500 on one salary. We were just asked to vote $1,000 on another salary.

The Senator from Kentucky says that the Senate does itself no credit by voting to refuse this increase because the Commissioner of Patents is such an efficient officer, a man of such high character, with such important duties to perform as that he is entitled to $5,000. I ask the Senator if the chief clerk of that office is not an efficient officer, if he is not a man of high character, if he is not a man qualified to perform the functions of his office, and if without the chief clerk there the Commissioner of Patents could possibly perform the functions of his office as efficiently as he is represented here to do? Yet you strike down from that chief clerk $500 of his salary and you undertake to give him back here in your italicized amendment $250 of it.

I will ask the Senator if the clerk of the commissioners of the District of Columbia, from whom you strike one hundred of his $1,200 salary and who sometimes has to work sixteen hours a day, is not as efficient an officer and a man of as high character? I ask him whether the skilled laborers are not men as efficient in their line of service as any man who stands at the head of a bureau? I ask him whether the fireman down yonder who heats this building or runs the engine to pump air into it on hot days is not as efficient in his line? Yet you strike down the men in some instances and the salaries in others, saving in the aggregate $3,080, and ask us to give it all back to the heads of bureaus who receive $4,000 and $4,500.

I think it does reflect credit on this body to say that these men shall have the salaries prescribed by law. Certainly it reflects credit on us when we find in this Capitol one party contending that we have too much revenue and that the money ought to be cast to the four winds of heaven, and another party claiming we have not enough revenue and that, therefore, we ought to economize in the expenditures of the Government.

Sir, it is the part of discretion to accept the latter theory, that we have not enough; but if the political friends of the Senator from Kentucky are right that we have not enough and it should happen that his friends also should claim that to have too much would be wrong, then we should make a great mistake in increasing any salary. We should wait until we ascertain whether we have enough before we undertake to expend one dollar that is not necessary and is not provided for by the law as it exists to-day.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. HALE. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CALL. I simply ask the consent of the Senate to read a few lines from a decision of the Supreme Court.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida, having spoken once, is not entitled to the floor again except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CALL. I merely ask to read a few lines from a decision of the Supreme Court.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Senator from Florida will proceed.

Mr. CALL. The Supreme Court in the October term of 1885, in the case of the United States vs. Langston, used this language:

While the case is not free from difficulty, the court is of opinion that, according to the settled rules of interpretation, a statute fixing the annual salary of a public officer at a named sum, without limitation as to time, should not be deemed abrogated or suspended by subsequent enactments which merely appropriated a less amount for the services of that officer for particular fiscal years, and which contained no words that expressly or by clear implication modified or repealed the previous law.

These words are words of that character which do expressly modify and repeal the previous law, and have been held to have that effect in former cases decided by that court.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH], but I am informed by his colleague that the pair need not apply to this vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. FRYE (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL].

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GRAY. I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 24, nays 19; as follows:

YEAS—24.

Beck,	Eustis,	Jones of Arkansas,	Teller,
Butler,	Gibson,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hampton,	Palmer,	Walthall,
Camden,	Harris,	Platt,	Whitthorne,
Colquitt,	Hawley,	Pugh,	Wilson of Iowa,
Conger,	Hearst,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—19.

Allison,	Coke,	Hale,	Miller,
Berry,	Cullom,	Harrison,	Riddleberger,
Blair,	Edmunds,	Ingalls,	Sherman,
Brown,	Evarts,	McMillan,	Spooner.
Cameron,	George,	Maxey,

ABSENT—33.

Aldrich,	Gorman,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sewell,
Bowen,	Hoar,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Chace,	Jones of Florida,	Morrill,	Vance,
Cockrell,	Jones of Nevada,	Payne,	Van Wyck,
Dawes,	Kenna,	Pike,	Vest.
Dolph,	Logan,	Plumb,
Fair,	McPherson,	Sabin,
Frye,	Mahone,	Saulsbury,

So the amendment was concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next reserved amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2047, before the word "inspectors," the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, struck out "three" and inserted "two;" so as to read.

Two inspectors of surveyors-general and district land offices, to be appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, at $2,000 each.

The amendment was concurred in.

The next reserved amendment was announced to be, in line 2296, in the appropriations for the office of the Director of the Geological Survey, before the word "thousand," to strike out "six" and insert "five;" so as to read:

For Director, $5,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask the chairman what the law now provides?

Mr. ALLISON. Six thousand dollars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What has the Government paid the last few years?

Mr. ALLISON. Always $6,000,

Mr. EDMUNDS. Then to be consistent we shall have to leave this at $6,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The next reserved amendment was, in line 2297, to reduce the appropriation for compensation of the executive officer of the Geological Survey from $3,000 to $2,500.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to call attention to the fact that the last two amendments acted on were disagreed to as in Committee of the Whole, and the result was to leave the bill to stand as it came from the House. Nothing could be reserved upon those points. However, the matter is settled as it was before; and so it may as well stand.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Both amendments were laid before the Chair as reserved amendments. However, the vote in the Senate is the same as in Committee of the Whole.

The next reserved amendment was, in line 2675, in the appropriations for the office of the Solicitor of the Treasury, to increase the appropriation for compensation of the Solicitor of the Treasury from $4,000 to $4,500.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is provided by the present law?

Mr. HALE. I have the statute here, which I propose to read. I read from title 8 of the Revised Statutes, section 349:

There shall be in the Department of Justice a Solicitor of the Treasury, an assistant solicitor of the Treasury—

And other officers, naming them—who shall be entitled to the following salaries: The Solicitor of the Treasury, to $4,000 a year.

That is the way the House has left it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was non-concurred in.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There are no other reserved amendments.

Mr. BECK. I move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate agreed to two amendments on page 14, lines 313, 314, and 315, inserting the names of John T. Chancey and C. W. Coombs in positions relative to the office of the Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Were those amendments agreed to or disagreed to?

Mr. BECK. They were agreed to, I understand, at first, and the reason why I make the motion to reconsider now is that quite a number of members of the other House have come to me, and I suppose to other members of the committee, individually, and complained that we are interfering by these amendments with their action, and I do not want to be censured in that way.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I agree with you entirely.

Mr. BECK. Therefore I move to strike out those names.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kentucky moves that the Senate reconsider its action in agreeing to the amendments named by him.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments which have been mentioned.

The amendments were rejected.

Mr. EDMUNDS. As a mere matter of phraseology, as this is followed along in all the bills, in section 2, line 4, I move to insert, after the word "watchmen," the words "at the rate of." This section seems now to give them an annual salary, while it is merely an employment at that rate. That would probably be the construction; but I want to have it so that it will go into future bills in that way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 4, after the word "watchmen," it is proposed to insert the words "at the rate of;" so as to read:

For assistant messengers, firemen, and watchmen, at the rate of $720 per annum each.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move the same amendment after the word "laborers," in line 5 of the same section; so as to read:

For laborers at the rate of $660 per annum each.

Mr. ALLISON. One amendment I omitted. In line 2004, before the word "dollars," I move to insert the words "two hundred;" so as to read:

One clerk at one thousand two hundred dollars.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What clerk is that?

Mr. ALLISON. A clerk in the office of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand it is the clerk of land patents.

Mr. ALLISON. It is in the Department of the Interior.

Mr. TELLER. That is the salary of the clerk now. It should be $1,200.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is he one of the classified $1,200 clerks?

Mr. ALLISON. He is one of the classified clerks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment moved by the Senator from Iowa.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now you want to change the total on page 83 to correspond.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary is already authorized to do that. The question is on ordering the amendments to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. SPOONER. I wish to move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate non-concurred in the amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations relative to the salary of the Commissioner of Pensions.

Mr. HALE. Is that in order after the bill has had its third reading?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion that it is not in order. The rule forbids any amendment after the third reading of a bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Then I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is in order. The Senator from Tennessee moves to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading.

Mr. EDMUNDS. We might as well have the yeas and nays on that and settle the question.

Mr. HARRIS. I am perfectly satisfied with that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays are demanded on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BLACKBURN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. If he were here, I should vote "yea."

Mr. COCKRELL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. GRAY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. DAWES. I wish to state that on this question I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE]. I do not know how he would vote, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. CAMDEN. I announce my pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 12; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Beck,	Conger,	Jones of Arkansas,	Teller,
Berry,	Cullom,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Vance,
Blair,	Dolph,	Palmer,	Vest,
Brown,	Eustis,	Pugh,	Voorhees,
Butler,	Gibson,	Ransom,	Walthall,
Call,	Hampton,	Sawyer,	Whitthorne,
Coke,	Harris,	Spooner,	Wilson of Md.,
Colquitt,	Hawley,	Stanford,	Wilson of Iowa.

NAYS—12.

Allison,	Evarts,	Ingalls,	Miller,
Cameron,	George,	McMillan,	Riddleberger,
Edmunds,	Hale,	Maxey,	Sherman.

ABSENT—32.

Aldrich,	Frye,	Kenna,	Payne,
Blackburn,	Gorman,	Logan,	Pike,
Bowen,	Gray,	McPherson,	Platt,
Camden,	Harrison,	Mahone,	Plumb,
Chace,	Hearst,	Manderson,	Sabin,
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Saulsbury,
Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Morgan,	Sewell,
Fair,	Jones of Nevada,	Morrill,	Van Wyck.

So the motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was ordered to a third reading was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. I now move to reconsider the vote by which the Senate non-concurred in the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 2092, before the word "thousand," strike out "four" and insert "five;" so as to read:

For compensation of the Commissioner of Pensions, $5,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote by which the Senate non-concurred in this amendment.

Mr. HALE. Let us have the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL]. If he were here, I should vote "yea," and I should like to do it.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired generally with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], but upon conference with the representative of pairs on the other side I have been advised by him that I may vote, provided it does not change the result. I record my vote and vote "yea," with the privilege of withdrawing my vote if I find that it determines the result.

Mr. CAMDEN. I have a general pair with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH]. I understand that I may vote upon this question, but for fear of a misunderstanding I shall not vote. His colleague [Mr. CHACE] is not in the Chamber, and in his absence I do not like to take the responsibility.

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 11; as follows:

YEAS—34.

Allison,	Conger,	McMillan,	Vance,
Beck,	Cullom,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Vest,
Berry,	Dolph,	Palmer,	Voorhees,
Blackburn,	Eustis,	Plumb,	Walthall,
Blair,	Gibson,	Pugh,	Whitthorne,
Brown,	Hampton,	Ransom,	Wilson of Iowa,
Butler,	Harris,	Sawyer,	Wilson of Md.
Call,	Hawley,	Spooner,
Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Teller,

NAYS—11.

Cameron,	Evarts,	Ingalls,	Riddleberger,
Coke,	George,	Maxey,	Sherman.
Edmunds,	Hale,	Miller,

ABSENT—31.

Aldrich,	Gorman,	Logan,	Pike,
Bowen,	Gray,	McPherson,	Platt,
Camden,	Harrison,	Mahone,	Sabin,
Chace,	Hearst,	Manderson,	Saulsbury,
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sewell,
Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Morgan,	Stanford,
Fair,	Jones of Nevada,	Morrill,	Van Wyck.
Frye,	Kenna,	Payne,

So the motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was non-concurred in was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question recurs on concurring in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I understand, as the rules of this body obtain, that I voted on the wrong side to make a motion to reconsider, but I will ask the unanimous consent of the Senate—I believe anything can be done here by unanimous consent—to allow me to make a motion to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the committee was concurred in, in line 124, reducing the number of skilled laborers in the Senate force from ten to eight.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia asks the unanimous consent of the Senate at this stage of the bill to move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment mentioned by him was concurred in. Is there objection?

Mr. ALLISON. I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection being made, the motion is not in order unless the Senator voted with the prevailing side.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I did not.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 3, 4, 9, and 10 to the bill (H. R. 5179) to prohibit the passage of local or special laws in the Territories of the United States; had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate numbered 5, 6, 7, and 8 to the said bill; and agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SPRINGER, Mr. HILL, and Mr. SYMES managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 9479) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 1st instant, approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 686) granting a pension to Charles N. Sebastian;

An act (S. 1304) granting a pension to William Reynolds; and

An act (S. 1486) to authorize the Denison and Washita Valley Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that the sundry civil bill be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a bill from the House of Representatives the title of which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. "A bill (H. R. 9478) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes."

The bill was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7480, being the river and harbor bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President——

Mr. MCMILLAN. If the Senator from South Carolina will permit me a moment, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this bill by paragraphs and that the amendments of the Committee on Commerce be disposed of before other amendments are received.

Mr. INGALLS. I object.

Mr. BUTLER. I believe I have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. BUTLER. I simply rose to ask the Senator from Minnesota if he would consent to lay aside this bill informally in order that we may proceed to consider Senate bill 980.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I insist on the regular order, Mr. President. I do not know what the bill of the Senator from South Carolina is, but I am going to stick to this bill.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the pending bill by paragraphs, disposing of the amendments of the Committee on Commerce as they are reached in the reading.

Mr. HARRIS. Dispensing with the first formal reading.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That I must object to.

Mr. INGALLS. And I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objections being made, it can not be done. The bill will be read at length.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill and read to the end of the clause in lines 225 and 226, appropriating $30,000 "for improving harbor at Brunswick, Georgia: continuing improvement."

Mr. BROWN. I am not certain that I understand the rule under which we are proceeding. I see no vote is being taken on the amendments proposed by the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is being read through.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The Senator from Georgia will understand that there was an objection interposed to the request to waive the formal reading of the bill.

Mr. BROWN. I was out at the moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading will proceed.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE HAHN.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, pursuant to notice heretofore given, I ask that the message of the House of Representatives in relation to the death of Mr. HAHN be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. PLATT in the chair). If there be no objection the reading of the pending bill will be suspended, and it will be laid aside informally, and the resolutions referred to will be laid before the Senate.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Of course I can make no objection to that request, owing to the nature of the resolutions of the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The river and harbor bill will be laid aside informally.

Mr. MCMILLAN. That is what I proposed to ask.

The Secretary read the following resolutions of the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the House have heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. MICHAEL HAHN, late a Representative from the State of Louisiana.

Resolved, That in the demise of our late colleague the country has suffered the loss of a wise legislator, a valuable citizen, and an able and faithful public servant.

Resolved, That as an additional mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the House, at the conclusion of these memorial proceedings, shall stand adjourned.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, I offer the resolutions which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolutions will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate receives with deep sensibility the announcement of the death of Hon. MICHAEL HAHN, late a member of the House of Representatives from the State of Louisiana, and tenders to the family and relations of the deceased the assurance of its sympathy in their bereavement.

Resolved, That the Secretary be directed to transmit to the family of Mr. HAHN a copy of the foregoing resolution.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, on the 14th of March, 1886, Hon. MICHAEL HAHN, a Representative from Louisiana, died in this city. Several of his former associates in the House of Representatives have in eulogies presented in detail the important incidents of his public career. It is not necessary for me to repeat what has been so well said by those who were brought into more intimate relations with him, and I will only briefly refer to his prominent identification with some of the important events in the recent history of Louisiana to illustrate the character of the deceased and to delineate his connection with measures of national importance. When he died the Democratic press in New Orleans united in paying a just tribute to his memory, which attested that Mr. HAHN enjoyed the respect and esteem of his political opponents. The bar and the court over which he presided as judge when he became a candidate for Congress passed resolutions expressing their profound respect for his judicial attainments and unimpeachable integrity, and as a last token of sorrow the governor, prominent State officers, and a large concourse of people and distinguished citizens irrespective of party attended the mournful cortege that bore his remains to the family tomb.

Mr. HAHN was a Bavarian by birth, but came to this country at an age so youthful that his opinions and convictions upon public questions were due exclusively to the associations he formed and to the education he received in the country of his adoption. Before the war he was an ardent Douglas Democrat, and after the disruption of the Charleston convention he addressed a large Union mass-meeting held in New Orleans on May 8, 1860, at which he made a strong Union speech and offered the resolutions which were adopted by the meeting. This outspoken declaration of his convictions foreshadowed his attitude of firm adherence to the cause of the Union. As a public official, after the State had seceded, he refused to take the required oath to support the constitution and laws of the Confederate States.

When the possibility of the emancipation of the slaves first dawned amid the rude shock of armed conflict, as early as November, 1863, Mr. HAHN, in a speech delivered in New Orleans, declared himself as the champion of their freedom, and advocated the abolition of slavery throughout the State of Louisiana. Hence, from an early period he gained the unreserved confidence of the colored people, not by any shallow pretense of undue solicitude for their welfare, but by reason of his sincere convictions upon the question of slavery. Their confidence he retained to the day of his death, for they knew that his labors for their educational, social, and material improvement were disinterested, and that no selfish consideration of personal advantage or political advancement induced him to profess to be their friend and benefactor.

Although recognized as a Republican leader, rather than appeal to race prejudices or engender race animosities he preferred to live in political retirement, asking for no rewards unless voluntarily tendered to him in grateful recognition of his ability and willingness to faithfully serve a trusting constituency. He could always rely upon the united and hearty support of the colored people, for to them he had been a friend, having never deceived them by flattering their prejudices or having never misled them to indulge false and exaggerated expectations. He honestly inculcated the teachings of good-will and good feeling between the races as most conducive to the prosperity and good order of society and the well-being of both races.

Mr. HAHN was a conspicuous figure in a memorable movement which had serious international significance during the war, but which has been obscured by the overshadowing prominence of the stirring episodes of that eventful period. Louis Napoleon was restrained from recognizing the Southern confederacy only by the obstinate refusal of the British ministry to co-operate with him in that direction, the British ministry itself being controlled by the force of public opinion in England. The oft-repeated assurances of Mr. Seward, that the war would be of short duration had lost their efficacy and had emboldened Louis Napoleon, who pointed to the fluctuating fortunes of the contending armies as indicating an uncertainty in the result, if not an indefinite prolongation of the struggle between the Federal and confederate armies.

Mr. Lincoln determined to offset this argument in favor of recognition, so urgently pressed by Napoleon upon the other courts, by making it appear that as Federal armies conquer territory civil government was being re-established with a view to the early reunion of the States. Louisiana, once a province of France, was selected as the field for this civil manifestation of restored Federal authority. This scheme of rehabilitating a seceded State amid the clash of arms was mainly designed to counteract the intrigues of Louis Napoleon. New Orleans and a few riparian parishes were the only territory in Louisiana actually and exclusively occupied by the Federal Army. A convention representing an insignificant fragment of the State was called. A constitution was formed and civil officers were elected, and Mr. HAHN was duly installed as governor-elect of the State of Louisiana.

So incompatible was this deformed civil government with the exigency of military occupation and military domination that Mr. Lincoln at once invested Governor HAHN with the powers of a military governor. To the European courts was to be presented the unexpected spectacle of a civil government being established by the sanction of Federal authority in a State that had seceded from the Union and of which Mr. HAHN was the chief executive. But this diplomatic effort to inaugurate a system of reconstruction, intended for the patriotic purpose of influencing foreign governments, was never sanctioned by Congress, and this anomalous and undefined civil authority of a military governor, so far as domestic government was concerned, had to yield to the undiminished supremacy of military rule. From different motives and for different reasons President Lincoln and Mr. HAHN equally rejoiced in this triumph of civil government.

The one because he successfully arrested the predetermined purpose of Louis Napoleon to recognize the Southern confederacy, which it was feared would form an alliance with the Latin Empire which Napoleon was establishing in Mexico, to be protected by France; and the other because by the aid and assistance of the President of the United States he was to wear civic honors of a high grade, representing, as he believed, the majesty of a seceded State restored to the Union.

Mr. HAHN treasured as a valued legacy the following letter written to him by Mr. Lincoln in connection with the events I have mentioned:

EXECUTIVE MANSION, Washington, March 13, 1864.

MY DEAR SIR: I congratulate you on having fixed your name in history as the first free-State governor of Louisiana. Now that you are about to have a convention which, among other things, will probably define the elective franchise, I barely suggest for your private consideration whether some of the colored people may not be let in, as, for instance, the very intelligent, and especially those who have fought gallantly in our ranks. They would probably help in some trying time to come to keep the jewel of liberty in the family of freedom. But this is only a suggestion, not to the public but to you alone.

A. LINCOLN.

When the Federal troops occupied New Orleans Mr. HAHN, by reason of his having been a Union man, was in a position to give good or bad advice to the military commanders, as regards the treatment of the people of that city. But he was a man entirely free from any resentful or vindictive feelings, and instead of persecuting any one he aided and befriended those whom it was in his power to assist. He always respected the convictions of his opponents, and never allowed any difference of opinion, even upon questions which he considered of vital moment, to prejudice him in his dealings and his intercourse with his fellow-men. In that respect he was truly remarkable for the kindly disposition of his nature.

To the poor and the lowly he always showed a feeling of deep sympathy, for he himself had risen from a very humble condition in life, unaided except by his own efforts and the opportunities afforded in this country to every one to gratify his ambition for advancement. I use no mere formal or conventional expression when I state that during his life he was a man respected and esteemed, and that his death was as sincerely regretted by his political opponents as by those with whom he had been politically associated.

Called upon to discharge the duties of many public offices, State and Federal, at the time that he surrendered these various functions no enemy, if he had any, could point to a stain upon his character. At the time of his sudden death he had re-entered upon a career of promising political activity and usefulness. Full of buoyant and hopeful expectations he was stimulated by a renewed ambition to devote his talents and his energies to the service of his State and country as a representative in Congress. Those who knew him best shared his confidence in his ability to attain signal distinction among his distinguished associates. Providence decreed otherwise; and it is to be hoped that he has reaped that rich reward in eternity for which his exemplary life on earth undoubtedly prepared him.

Mr. President, I move the adoption of the resolutions.

Mr. GIBSON. Mr. President, I rise to second the resolutions commemorative of the public life and services of Hon. MICHAEL HAHN, recently a Representative from the second Congressional district of Louisiana, who died in this city suddenly on the 15th of March last. I was absent on the day of his death and had not the opportunity to participate in the funeral obsequies or in the action of the Senate.

My acquaintance with Mr. HAHN dates from the Presidential contest resulting in the election of Abraham Lincoln as President of the United States. He was a supporter of Stephen A. Douglas. I remember distinctly the large and enthusiastic meeting held in the town of Thibodeaux during that campaign, and the strong and earnest speech delivered by Hon. MICHAEL HAHN. Thibodeaux is the capital town of La Fourche Parish, the center of a wealthy, intelligent, and cultivated population.

I have never known in my life in any land a community that was more distinguished for its polished manners, its sturdy character, its genuine hospitality, and charitable benefactions, and in which the poor and rich alike enjoyed in a larger measure contentment and happiness. It could boast of such citizens as Bishop Leonidas Polk, than whom no more striking character ever shone forth in the annals of the Christian Church in this country; George S. Guion, the model planter, the public-spirited citizen, the devout Christian, the knightly gentleman; Dr. James Scudday, an ornament to his profession, and beloved as widely as he was known; Braxton Bragg, whose name is forever associated with the history of the war of secession and of General Richard Taylor, as its senator in the State Legislature, renowned abroad as well as at home as one of the most, if not the most, accomplished gentleman and brilliant conversationists of the age, and second only to the foremost in military genius. The day Mr. HAHN came before the audience that had assembled on the occasion referred to he was quite unknown, but when he had closed his address there was not a person in it who had not become convinced that he was a sincere, upright, patriotic man, and an earnest and persuasive speaker.

The career of Mr. HAHN illustrates the beneficence of our institutions as well as how much may be accomplished under them by self-denial, hard work, inherent virtue, and earnestness of purpose. Young men may take courage from his example. Born in Bavaria November 24, 1830, he was brought to the city of New Orleans when ten years of age, one of five children under the care of a widowed mother, whose early death left him to the guardianship of friends and to his own unaided resources. He was fortunate, however, in living in a community quick to recognize merit and in falling under the kindly guidance and instruction of Hon. Christian Roselius, in whose office he was chiefly prepared for the practice of the law. Christian Roselius was for many years a leading lawyer at the New Orleans bar and educated more young men for the practice of the profession than any other lawyer of his generation, not only as the veteran professor of law in the University of Louisiana but he possessed great benevolence and never omitted an opportunity to aid any young man of merit who was struggling for admission to the bar or in the early years of his practice.

The active interest which Mr. Roselius manifested in all worthy young men I think was owing not only to his own experience in early life, for he himself had reached the head of his profession in the State of Louisiana by triumphing over all the difficulties that early poverty imposes, his only weapons being an invincible will and the highest order of intellect, but because the great lawyer had seen his own fondest hopes crushed in the death of his only son, attractive beyond all his compeers, a type of rarest manly beauty, and possessing every intellectual accomplishment, cut off at the very threshold of his manhood. There still dwells upon my memory the image of Conrad Roselius as he appeared when we first met at school, the fairest, brightest, and most gifted of the companions of my youth.

I will not recapitulate the successive steps by which MICHAEL HAHN won his way to the confidence and support of a large body of the people of Louisiana and to the respect of all. He was successively director in the public schools, editor of a newspaper, Presidential elector, governor of the State, superintendent of the mint, judge, representative in Congress, and founder of a village that bears his name. And, though I differed from him widely in political opinions, I never heard, even in seasons of political excitements, any aspersion upon the integrity of his character or the uprightness of his purposes. I believe he met every duty in life in a firm, conscientious, generous spirit. I remember reading some few years ago an address delivered by Mr. HAHN in the village of Gretna, in which he quoted the following passage from Festus, and I doubt not that the noble sentiments therein expressed found lodgment in his memory because his heart beat responsive to them and they inspired the aspirations of his life.

Let each man think himself an act of God—his mind a thought, his life a breath of God; and let each try by great thoughts and good deeds to show the most of heaven he has in him:

> Life is more than breath and the quick round of blood;
> It is a great spirit and a busy heart.
> The coward and the small in soul scarce do live.
> One generous feeling—one great thought—one deed
> Of good, ere night, would make life longer seem
> Than if each year might number a thousand days
> Spent as this is by nations of mankind.
> We live in deeds, not years; in thoughts, not breaths;
> In feelings, not in figures on the dial.
> We should count time by heart-throbs. He most lives
> Who thinks most, feels the noblest, acts the best.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the adoption of the resolutions.

The resolutions were adopted unanimously.

Mr. EUSTIS. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased I move that the Senate do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, July 3, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, July 2, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DANIEL, indefinitely, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina, for one day, on account of important business.

To Mr. STEELE, indefinitely, on account of important business.

To Mr. LE FEVRE, indefinitely.

To Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois, on account of illness.

To Mr. DAVENPORT, indefinitely, from July 3, on account of important business.

To Mr. FLEEGER, for six days, on account of important business.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. JACKSON, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, the papers in the matter of a petition for a pension to minor children of Robert H. Ramsey, presented in the Forty-seventh and Forty-eighth Congresses.

Mr. MATSON, by unanimous consent, obtained leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving a copy, the discharge paper of William H. Stolz, filed in connection with the bill granting a pension to Ella Stolz.

FILLING A VACANCY.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. BARBOUR], having obtained indefinite leave of absence and left the city, the Chair will appoint in his place, as one of the managers on the part of the House in the conference upon the disagreeing votes of the two Houses upon the bill of the Senate (S. 335) to provide for protecting the interests of the United States in the Potomac River flats, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CAMPBELL].

THE SUPREME COURT OF MONTANA.

Mr. TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 503, now on the Private Calendar, and that the bill be put upon its passage.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That hereafter the supreme court of the Territory of Montana shall consist of a chief-justice and three associate justices, three of whom shall constitute a quorum; they shall hold their offices for four years, and until their successors are appointed and qualified; they shall hold a term annually at the seat of government of said Territory: Provided, however, That no justice shall act as a member of the supreme court of said Territory of Montana in any action or proceeding brought to such court by writ of error, bill of exceptions, or appeal from a decision, judgment, or decree rendered by him as judge of a district court.

SEC. 2. That said Territory shall be divided into four judicial districts, and a district court shall be held in each district of the Territory by one of the justices of the supreme court, at such time and place as may be prescribed by law.

SEC. 3. That all offenses committed before the passage of this act shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. BENNETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to make objection to the consideration of the bill at this time, but I want to call the attention of the House to the fact that they are about to create another office, to be paid for out of the public Treasury of the United States, an office which, in my opinion, is not absolutely necessary for the proper accommodation of the people of that Territory. The majority of the Committee on the Judiciary, however, have taken a different view, and I simply desire to make my protest against the passage of this bill.

The SPEAKER. There being no objection, the question is on ordering the bill to a third reading.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call attention to the fact that the bill does not define the salary of the additional justice. I do not know whether there is a general law fixing the salaries of the justices of the Territorial courts. If there is not, I think the salary ought to be defined.

Mr. TOOLE. There is a general law.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to inquire of the chairman of the Judiciary Committee whether there is a general law fixing the salaries of the judges of the courts in the Territories. My impression is that the salaries of the judges in each Territory are fixed specifically, and not by any general provision of law.

Mr. TUCKER. I think, Mr. Speaker, that there is a general law which fixes these salaries; but I am not quite certain, because I did not have this bill in charge and did not give the matter any special attention.

The bill was ordered to a third reading; and it was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. TOOLE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

W. H. WARD.

Mr. JACKSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House from the further consideration of Senate bill 2158, and if I can have permission I wish to make a very brief statement in regard to it. The bill has been favorably reported unanimously by the House Committee on Patents. This is an application for the relief of Mr. Ward, which has been before Congress in some shape for several Congresses, ever since the Forty-third Congress, I believe. It has always been, I believe, unanimously reported by the different committees to which it has at different times been referred that he is entitled to this relief, and the officers of the Government who have investigated the matter have made a like report. This is not a bill giving him anything at all except permission to apply to the Court of Claims. In the Forty-seventh Congress a bill was passed giving that court jurisdiction, as was then supposed, and the court entered upon an investigation of the case, but it was found that the bill, through inadvertence, had been defectively drawn and was not broad enough to permit the court to fully examine the questions involved, and action thereon has been suspended to enable claimant to apply to Congress for an amendment of the original act. Bills were introduced in the Senate and in the House at the present session to amend the act under which the court was proceeding. The bill in the Senate was reported favorably and passed. The bill in the House was referred to a committee, and by it to a subcommittee, which agreed on a favorable report; but as the work of that committee is very large, and consideration of its report can not probably be reached by the House so near the close of the session, and as this bill has passed the Senate and is here, I now ask that the committee be discharged from the further consideration of the House bill, and that the Senate bill be taken up and passed. It has the unanimous approval of the committee to which this Senate bill was referred. It is simply a bill to amend the act under which the court has been proceeding. I will add that under the bill the court is simply to report the facts to Congress, not to render a final judgment.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which there will be opportunity for objection.

The bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MORRISON. Regular order.

Mr. JACKSON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the call for the regular order and allow the bill to be considered. It does not propose to settle any claim, but simply enables the Court of Claims to examine the matter and report to Congress what is justly due the claimant.

The SPEAKER. The regular order has been demanded.

INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGED FRAUDS ON THE REVENUE.

Mr. GLOVER. I rise to a privileged motion. I move to discharge the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department from the further consideration of a resolution of inquiry introduced June 21, 1886, addressed to the Secretary of the Treasury.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri as a privileged matter moves to discharge the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department from the further consideration of a resolution of inquiry referred to that committee more than a week ago.

Mr. GLOVER. I desire to be heard on that motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will proceed.

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, since that matter was submitted to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department nothing whatever has been done toward the consideration of it.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, is this the same old story?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri has the floor. Business will be suspended until conversation ceases. [A pause.]

Mr. GLOVER. Mr. Speaker, under the direction of the chairman of that committee I have attended upon two occasions; and on each occasion no action was taken to investigate this matter, and on neither occasion was a quorum of the committee present. Ten days have elapsed since the resolution was introduced. The difficulties which seem to attend the meetings of that committee are not likely by the progress of time to be less. I understand that there is very little likelihood that in the near future the committee will obtain a quorum; and under these circumstances I move that the committee be discharged.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion made by the gentleman from Missouri to discharge the committee.

Mr. GLOVER. I reserve the residue of my time.

Mr. LOWRY. Mr. Speaker, this is a case of "Monsieur Tonson come again." [Laughter.] On the morning of the day before yesterday the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department held a meeting for the express purpose of giving the gentleman from Missouri an opportunity of airing his grievances to the fullest extent, the committee having been immediately notified, in pursuance of the private notification I gave the gentleman upon the morning on which he before made this same motion. Immediately after the matter was brought to the attention of the House the notices were issued in pursuance of the previous purpose which I entertained in regard to calling the committee, and of which I gave the gentleman notice privately.

It so happened, Mr. Speaker, that one of the members of that committee had deceased; I refer to Governor Hahn, of Louisiana; and at this particular juncture three members of the committee are absent from the city on leave. On this being ascertained, however, I took steps on yesterday to have the vacancy occasioned by the decease of Governor Hahn supplied, by requesting the Chair to make an appointment to fill that vacancy, in order that we might have a quorum of gentlemen in the city who could attend upon the meetings of the committee. The Chair kindly and promptly filled that vacancy by the appointment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR], who was immediately notified.

Mr. GLOVER. Allow me——

Mr. LOWRY. Not at all.

Mr. GLOVER. I merely wish to say that I was not aware the appointment had been made. If it has been, I withdraw my motion.

Mr. LOWRY. I decline to be interrupted.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri states that he withdraws his motion.

Mr. GLOVER. I read the RECORD yesterday to see whether the gentleman had carried out the proposition to secure another committeeman, and I did not find any record of the appointment.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that his attention was called to the fact of a vacancy on the committee, and the Chair immediately appointed the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR] to fill the vacancy. The motion is withdrawn.

CORRECTION.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a privileged question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to have a correction made in the print of a report made by myself from the Committee on Military Affairs, numbered 2915, in regard to the bill (H. R. 3032) for the relief of Captain Ten Eyck. As printed the report states that the limit of the retired-list of the Army is eleven hundred, and is full. That, of course, is an error. The report, as written, stated that it was four hundred.

The SPEAKER. This is a correction of a report, not of the RECORD.

Mr. BRAGG. I rose to a privileged question on my own account as having been falsely reported in that publication.

The SPEAKER. But this is a correction, as the Chair understands, of a report.

Mr. BRAGG. The report as written is correct, but as printed it is wrong in the matter stated.

FORFEITURE OF CERTAIN RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to submit a privileged report from the Committee on the Public Lands on the amendments of the Senate to House bill No. 392, declaring forfeited certain grants of land made to certain States to aid in the construction of railroads.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's motion?

Mr. PAYSON. I desire the immediate consideration of the report. The committee recommend concurrence in the Senate amendments, and I ask that they be read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, on page 1, line 10, after the word "act," by inserting:

"Also, except so much of said act as relates to a grant of land in aid of a railroad from Brandon to the Gulf of Mexico, commonly known as the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad."

Also, on page 2, strike out after the word "domain" the following words: "and subject to entry and settlement, under the provisions of the homestead laws, by actual settlers only."

Mr. PAYSON. The report of the committee is brief, and I ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Public Lands respectfully report that they recommend that the Senate amendments be concurred in.

Mr. PAYSON. I move concurrence in the amendments of the Senate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope there will be a word of explanation in reference to this matter.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, the House will remember that this bill was under consideration and passed the House on the 27th day of January last. The bill proposes to repeal so much of the acts of Congress of August 11, 1856, and June 3,1856, and the act of March 3, 1857, as made grants of the public lands to aid in the construction of different railroads in the Southern States: The Tuscaloosa and Mobile Railroad, the Mobile and New Orleans, the Jackson and State Line Railroad, the Elyton and Beards Bluff Railroad, the Memphis and Charleston, the Savannah and Albany Railroad, the New Orleans and State Line, and the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad. These grants were made, as shown, in 1856 and 1857, and provided that these roads, in aid of which the grants were made, should be completed within ten years after the passage of the acts severally. No work whatever had been done with reference to any one of them since that time except the Gulf and Ship Island road. As to that road the work was begun about a year or two ago and is yet progressing. That grant in aid of that road was declared forfeited under the act as it passed the House. The Senate has stricken out of the House bill by the first amendment so much of the bill as forfeits the grant to this road. I may say, Mr. Speaker, in as far as it is proper to refer to proceedings in the other end of the Capitol, that the Senate is determined that this grant shall not be forfeited and the question is presented now as it was presented in January when the bill was under consideration, whether we shall avail ourselves of the right we have of declaring a forfeiture as to these seven roads, which will restore to the public domain about 7,000,000 acres of the public lands, leaving this other road, the Gulf and Ship Island road, to be the subject of a separate independent proposition which is pending before the committee.

As to that road the House will soon be called upon to act; and for myself, as I have repeatedly said, I am earnestly in favor of forfeiting all of these grants; but because, as the matter now stands, we can not get a forfeiture of the whole of them by reason of the Senate opposition to the forfeiture of the Gulf and Ship Island, I favor the amendment of the Senate which allows a forfeiture of all the remainder of them, leaving this question to be determined as an independent proposition hereafter.

Mr. FELTON. How long has it been in the conference?

Mr. PAYSON. With one exception all the members of the committee agree to the report. No conference has been had with the Senate.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. May I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. PAYSON. With pleasure.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Was any claim made on behalf of the Senate that the grant of this land is not forfeitable at all?

Mr. PAYSON. Not at all. That ground was not taken. But simply as a matter of policy they did not care to and will not interfere with the Gulf and Ship Island road as long as the construction of the road is going on in good faith.

Mr. HOLMAN. But would it not be better to have a conference with the Senate, so that an understanding can be reached, if possible; and if not, why then action can be taken by the House?

Mr. PAYSON. I think not, because this bill passed the Senate without a dissenting vote, passed unanimously as far as the RECORD shows, and was unanimously reported from the Committee on the Public Lands with but one dissenting vote in that committee, as I am informed.

Mr. HOLMAN. But will not the result of the passage of this bill be a confirmation of the lands to the Gulf and Ship Island road?

Mr. PAYSON. No, sir; unquestionably no. We have now pending before the Committee on the Public Lands a bill declaring the forfeiture of the lands granted to that road as an independent proposition, which will be presented to this body for action in due time.

Mr. WILLIS. And there is nothing in this that affects that?

Mr. PAYSON. Nothing whatever. It is simply a forfeiture of the grants to seven roads, naming them. If this bill passes with the Senate amendment the grant to the Gulf and Ship Island road does not appear one way or the other.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think it would be better to have a conference.

Mr. PAYSON. If we have a conference the delay may result in not getting the forfeiture of any of these grants; and as the opportunity is presented of getting back 7,000,000 acres of the public domain by simply turning our hands over and not endangering or affecting in the least the status of the other grant, I think we should concur. It is the old proposition of taking seven-eighths of a loaf rather than not getting a mouthful.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I understand the gentleman to say there is a bill pending to forfeit that grant?

Mr. PAYSON. There is, and it will be reported from the Public Lands Committee.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Soon?

Mr. PAYSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, addressed the Chair.

Mr. PAYSON. If the gentleman from Kansas desires to be heard I will reserve the balance of my time. And I may say I am willing to answer any questions on any point on which I have not given a sufficient explanation.

Mr. GILFILLAN. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. It is whether any of these lands proposed to be forfeited by this bill have been earned by any of the companies?

Mr. PAYSON. As I said before, there never has been any attempt at compliance with the conditions of the grants by any of these corporations affected by the bill as it stands with the Senate amendments. There has not been a spadeful of dirt turned, nor a map of definite location filed with reference to one of them.

Mr. RYAN. Has work been begun on the Gulf and Ship Island road?

Mr. PAYSON. It was commenced two years ago, as I am told by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON].

Mr. REED, of Maine. Are these the lands which the Judiciary Committee of the Forty-seventh Congress proposed to forfeit?

Mr. PAYSON. They are the same as were proposed to be forfeited in the bill which the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED] reported from that committee

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. As I do not concur in the report of the Committee on the Public Lands on this proposition, I desire to state very briefly the reasons why. The presentation of the case as made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] is certainly strong. It is this, that here is an opportunity of recovering and restoring to the public domain 7,000,000 acres which had been granted to these Southern roads.

This bill as introduced in the House embraced also the forfeiture of the grant to the Gulf and Ship Island road. It was reported by the Public Lands Committee with an amendment that the Gulf and Ship Island grant be excepted; and it will be remembered that the House refused to except that road.

Mr. HOLMAN. On a yea-and-nay vote, I believe?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. And after discussion the House passed the original bill by a strong vote and sent it to the Senate.

Now, the Senate substantially says this: Here are 7,000,000 acres which we are willing that you should restore to the public domain; but here also is the grant to this Gulf and Ship Island road which you shall not restore to the public domain.

Mr. HOLMAN. Standing on the same footing?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. On precisely the same footing. The facts as to the Gulf and Ship Island grant are that away back in 1856, I think, or somewhere thereabout, a corporation of that title was created, and a grant made which by its terms expired, I believe, in ten years. Not a stroke of work was done. And more than that, that Gulf and Ship Island Railroad Company died. After the war the lands were restored to settlement; and then a few years ago, in 1880 I believe, an entirely and absolutely new and different company was formed called the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad Company, and it laid claim to this grant, which by its terms had died years before this new company was formed.

And the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Teller, made a withdrawal of those lands in favor of this new company, which was really making a new grant. That is all there is in it.

Now the Senate says to us simply this: Either you shall not have the 7,000,000 acres at all or else you shall not forfeit that Gulf and Ship Island grant.

Mr. RYAN. May I ask my colleague a question?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes, sir.

Mr. RYAN. I ask my colleague whether when this bill passed the House during the present session it was admitted by its friends on the floor of the House that up to that time ground had not been broken at all.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Certainly. There had not been a particle of dirt turned.

Mr. PAYSON. The gentleman from Kansas, of course, intends to be accurate.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Most undoubtedly.

Mr. PAYSON. Construction began in 1882 on the Gulf and Ship Island road, such as it was. For myself, I believe it was only colorable; but there was a survey and a map of definite location, and work was begun in the way of grading, &c., as long ago as 1882.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Now, there are two reasons why I could not in committee give my assent to concurring in the Senate amendments. The first was that to my mind this Gulf and Ship Island grant ought to be forfeited. It is one of the most glaring cases that I know of. The second reason was that I wished the country to distinctly understand the position in which the Senate oftentimes, if not generally, places us on these forfeiture bills.

Mr. LONG. Will they not understand it now?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I am, for one, not ready to have a thumbscrew put upon me by the Senate or by any conceivable form of railroad power saying, "Either you shall take what we will give you or you shall have nothing." Gentlemen say that half a loaf is better than no bread. That depends precisely on whether you are hungry or not.

Mr. PAYSON. We are pretty hungry.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. If you have had a full dinner a half loaf in not better than no bread.

But there is a much broader issue at stake in these procedures. It is whether this House, acting upon its own judgment and its own ascertainment of facts, coming to its own conclusions, voting to restore to the public domain lands which ought to be forfeited, shall keep, maintain, and defend that position, or on the other hand shall give place to the railroad power in the Senate. That is the point. Now, Mr. Speaker, presenting this as my friend from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] presents it, that probably the Senate will not pass the bill unless we agree to this amendment, and therefore that probably we shall not get the 7,000,000 acres, that presentation as a practical proposition will appeal strongly to the judgment of many gentlemen here, but for myself, having stated these facts to the House, I will not vote to concur in the Senate amendment. I would much rather that this bill should go to a committee of conference for the purpose of contesting the question whether this House is to be backed down from action which it took after discussion and in a very strong manner simply because railroad attorneys and the railroad power in the Senate say that if we refuse to do this we shall not have anything. Rather than to submit to that I would consent to see those gentlemen either where it is very warm, or else seated on the top of the north pole, naked, in January. [Laughter.]

Mr. GILFILLAN. Will the gentleman state what recommendation he would make as a solution of the difficulty?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Simply to pass the bill again as the House passed it before, to say that we will not except the Gulf and Ship Island grant, but that we will vote to forfeit that grant, and go to a conference.

Mr. GILFILLAN. And if we can not get that, not take anything?

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Yes; if we can not get that, not take anything. The sooner it is emphasized to the people of the Southern States, where these 7,000,000 acres are, the sooner it is italicized and printed in great black "caps" that the railroad power will not permit the forfeiture and restoration of lands, which all men concede should be restored to the public domain, the sooner the country, in all its area, sections, and counties, shall understand the force, the malignity, the ingenuity, the hellishness of that power, the sooner will begin and the sooner will be brought to a conclusion the struggle that must come between the rights of the many and the demands of justice on the one hand and the malice, the ingenuity, the "boodle" of corporations on the other. [Applause.] For that reason I would like to see this bill repassed as the House passed it before. I would like it to go into a conference committee, and if I were on that committee (which I do not want to be and will not be) I would see the other gentlemen very happy before I, for one, would surrender this point.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, I think that under the circumstances this bill had better go to a committee of conference. This is the point of contest in the bill that passed the House. There is no contest over anything else. There is no dispute about the facts in the case. There is simply a determination that a land grant which has been forfeited shall not be declared forfeited by the Congress of the United States; and right here is a good place for us to make a stand. This House will never get a better one. Therefore, I am in favor of sending this bill to a conference committee, and I indorse most emphatically the remarks made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I concur in the conclusion to which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] has come, although I certainly do not take any part in the strong, and it seems to me the violent, statements which he has made. I know nothing about "boodle." I know nothing about railroad "ingenuity." I simply know that the representatives of the part of the South where these lands lie are interested in having this railroad go on, and in having this grant made in order that it may go on. But this House ought to understand that there is no distinction in principle between the cases of the six railroads which the committee wants to visit with forfeiture and the case of the seventh railroad which the Senate wants to except from the forfeiture. The House ought to understand, it seems to me, that this after all is a question of making a new grant. This railroad may be a valuable and desirable one, but I think the bill ought to go to a conference before we commit ourselves to the principle that we will now, in any case, make a new grant for the construction of a railroad, however meritorious the enterprise may be. True it is, the committee have under consideration a bill forfeiting this particular land grant, but who knows when that bill will come before the House? Although the committee may have the right of way, it is near the end of the session, and I doubt much whether that proposition will be able to get consideration in the House unless as a part of this bill.

Again, if that separate bill comes before the House and goes to the Senate precisely the same question will have to be settled between the Senate and the House as is to be settled now.

Mr. PAYSON. But if my colleague will permit me, in the case he now assumes, if the Gulf and Ship Island forfeiture bill shall pass the House as an independent proposition and go to the Senate, we will meet the same difficulty as to that particular case that we now meet as to it, but in the mean time if the recommendations of the committee as to this bill are concurred in, we shall have restored to the public domain 7,000,000 acres of land that is now tied up in the contest over the Gulf and Ship Island forfeiture case. I submit, therefore, that simply as a matter of practical legislation one course has a great advantage over the other.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I admit the practical force of what my colleague says, but I see the consequence of the principle involved. Here are seven railroads and seven land grants, all in precisely the same position.

Mr. PAYSON. Except that one road is being constructed, and as to the others there has been no attempt at construction.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. The colorable construction to which my colleague refers as having taken place in the one case was long after the time when the land grant became forfeitable.

Mr. PAYSON. Precisely.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. And when it had expired.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Yes; after it had expired. Therefore, in reference to forfeitability or non-forfeitability these seven land grants are in precisely the same position. The question then is whether, when we forfeit the land grants of seven railroads at one time, we shall permit the other branch of Congress, whatever their motives may be (and I say nothing as to that, for certainly I do not share in the language or reasoning of the gentleman from Kansas), to make an exception in one case when there is no exception to be made in point of law or principle.

Mr. PAYSON. Does my colleague think that by concurring in this amendment this House, or either body, commits itself to any right of the Gulf and Ship Island road? Not at all. The grouping of these eight railroads in this bill was simply a matter of convenience. I may say to my colleague, for his information, that the bill in its present shape was reported as long ago as the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress; and for five years, Mr. Speaker, we have been playing battledoor and shuttlecock with this case—first in one House and then in the other—to get it to this point. For the last five or six years we have been in just this predicament. That is all I care to say.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. The question is whether we shall jump a bridge before we come to it. We have not come to the bridge at all. The question simply is whether the House, in the first instance, shall concur, or shall send the matter to a conference committee. I yield the floor.

Mr. ROWELL. I understood my colleague [Mr. PAYSON] to say there had been no maps of definite location on these six roads.

Mr. PAYSON. None whatever.

Mr. ROWELL. Has the land been withdrawn from the market?

Mr. PAYSON. As to one of them there was a withdrawal and a restoration some years ago. As to the others the lands stand withdrawn to-day for the reason that Congressional action is pending. The Secretary of the Interior for the last six years has refrained from interfering with reference to the status of any of these grants, because through all these six years some bills have been pending in the same condition with this one now.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I understood the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] to say in his first remarks that the Senate seemed determined that this land grant should not be forfeited.

Mr. PAYSON. I have no doubt about that, and I stated so to the House.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Now, concurrence by the House will be a confirmation on our part of that purpose on the part of the Senate; will be so understood by the country and so regarded in the future to the extent——

Mr. PAYSON. Not at all. It is merely a recognition of an existing fact. It does not bind anybody nor interfere with the validity or invalidity of the grant one way or the other.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. But it is a practical confirmation of the grant.

Mr. PAYSON. Not at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to call the attention of my friend from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] to the fact that there are two amendments, one striking out the Gulf and Ship Island road, and the other striking out the provision inserted by a large vote of this House declaring that the lands shall be disposed of to actual settlers only——

Mr. PAYSON. Under the homestead law.

Mr. HOLMAN. Under the homestead law. By one of these amendments that provision is struck out. Now, I submit that as to this amendment at any rate there should be non-concurrence.

Mr. PAYSON. Let me say to the gentleman that the reason the committee recommend concurrence in that amendment is that a bill has already passed the House repealing the pre-emption and timber-culture acts, under which two acts alone any lands affected by these grants could be taken. The Senate has also passed the bill embodying those propositions, and it has come back to this body, has been referred to the Committee on Public Lands, and this morning that committee has taken action which will result in a conference between the Senate and House, so that the bill will become a law——

Mr. HOLMAN. It may not.

Mr. PAYSON. It will, as we hope.

Mr. HOLMAN. Does not my friend remember how signally that measure failed last session? I think we should take no chances in that matter. Here are several million acres of land which can be disposed of under the homestead law by the provision of an act of Congress. That much is saved anyhow; and in view of the experience of last session it does seem to me that if this were the only point of difference between the two Houses a conference ought to be had.

Mr. RYAN. Will the gentleman from Illinois yield to me a moment?

Mr. PAYSON. Certainly.

Mr. RYAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], in response to a question, stated that work had been commenced some four years ago on this road.

Mr. PAYSON. That is as I recollect.

Mr. RYAN. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the debate which was had on that particular point when this bill was under discussion:

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. With the permission of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ADAMS] who now holds the floor, I wish to ask the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. VAN EATON] why that matter can not just as well be settled on the pending amendment as on the original bill. I desire also to inquire how many miles of this road have been actually constructed.

Mr. STRUBLE. And when it was commenced.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Yes; the gentleman can state also when it was commenced.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I have yielded to the gentleman from Iowa to ask his question, and I yield also to the gentleman from Mississippi [M. VAN EATON] to answer if he chooses.

Mr. VAN EATON. Will the gentleman from Iowa restate his question?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I wish to ask the gentleman why the rights of that company can not be just as well determined by a vote on the amendment now pending as by a vote on the other bill. Secondly, I ask him how much work has been completed on that line of road, when it was commenced, and when did the work cease?

Mr. VAN EATON. I will answer the gentleman's question. The reason the bill can not be considered upon its merits now is that the committee are considering it and have not yet reported upon it. The only report they have made with reference to it is the amendment they recommend to this bill, that this forfeiture be stricken out of this bill. They are now considering the other bill and will report; and the friends of the measure are only discussing the merits of the proposition to drop this road out of the present bill, in order that we may present the matter more fully and more fairly before the House when the report of the committee comes in.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. There is one part of my question which the gentleman has not answered. How many miles have been completed?

Mr. VAN EATON. I am perfectly frank to say—none. I have never contended there were. I did say, however, that work has commenced and that hands are at work on the line of the survey.

So it seems to have been admitted by the friends of the Ship Island road in that discussion that ground never was broken for the commencement of the work on that line at all.

Mr. PAYSON. The grading had commenced and some little trestle-work had been put in, as I stated in answer to interrogatories of the gentleman from Kansas at the time, getting the information which I gave from the gentleman from Mississippi himself, through whose district a part of this line extends.

But of course, Mr. Speaker, these are questions only germane for consideration when the question of the forfeiture of the Gulf and Ship Island road is presented. I was in favor of that, and am still in favor of it; but as to that there is a difference of opinion. All the committee now asks is to eliminate that question from this bill, and declare the forfeiture of this immense body of land, as to which there is no possible question, leaving the other to be determined hereafter.

Mr. HOPKINS. Let me ask my colleague a question. Was that work commenced before any bills were introduced in Congress looking to the forfeiture?

Mr. PAYSON. No, sir; the work was commenced subsequently.

Mr. BARKSDALE. Mr. Speaker, in response to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANDERSON] as to the time the work was commenced on the Gulf and Ship Island road, I wish to say that that is entirely immaterial in the consideration of the proposition here presented; but I will make a statement to the House in that connection, and it is that the work is now actively and efficiently progressing, and probably as many as 50 miles are in progress of construction. It matters not when the work commenced. The question for the House to consider and the fact which it ought to know is that the work is now progressing with a large force on the road and with every prospect of early completion.

Now, it occurs to me, if the House is in earnest in respect to its proclamation of declaring a forfeiture of unearned railroad lands, that its true policy will be to accept the Senate amendments, leaving out for the present the consideration of the question as to the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad, for otherwise the action which has already been taken by the House looking to the forfeiture of some 7,000,000 acres of the public lands heretofore granted to railroads will avail nothing. The measure that has already passed declaring the forfeiture of this immense body of land will be lost if a disagreement between the two Houses is permitted to occur.

A bill for the extension of the time of the grant for the construction of the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad is now pending before the Committee on Public Lands. That bill will be reported. The friends of the road, and those who are in favor of extending the grant, propose to meet the question of forfeiture on its merits, as a practical question when it comes up, and there can be no objection to an arrangement of this sort; for I insist that if the House intends to expedite the policy it has already declared, of making a forfeiture of unearned lands, its true course is to accept the amendments of the Senate forfeiting all of the lands which are covered by the bill, and take up the other proposition, for extending the grant of the Gulf and Ship Island road, upon its merits as a distinct proposition.

I have nothing to say in vindication of the course of those Senators who have insisted upon making an exception in favor of the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad lands. They need no vindication. I wish to say further that the action of the Senate was unanimous, and the charge of the gentleman [Mr. ANDERSON] that Senators were dominated by railroad corporations is without justification——

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. BARKSDALE. Certainly.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I did not refer to any particular Senator.

Mr. BARKSDALE. But the declaration was wholesale, and the charge was unjust.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Then permit me to correct him if the gentleman has an impression of that kind. I intended to specify no Senator and had no one in my mind. The Senators from Mississippi or the Southern States were not in my mind at all in making the statement, and I had reference only to the extent of the railroad power that exists in the Senate.

Mr. BARKSDALE. I understood the gentleman, of course; but what I meant to say is that his charge was too sweeping, and entirely unwarranted. The Senators acted upon their own unbiased judgment, and I simply meant to protest against the indiscriminte censure indulged in by the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. COBB. We have generally experienced this difficulty in passing these land-grant bills. I am not going to make any reflection upon any one; but here is the practical question which is presented to the House: whether or not we will accept the Senate amendment to forfeit 7,000,000 acres of land, or whether we will reject the Senate amendment, which would forfeit all but about a half million of acres, and thereby lose the 7,000,000 acres which would otherwise be restored to the public domain by this bill. The Senate passed, as has been said, this amendment by a unanimous vote. Every particle of information that the Committee on the Public Lands has upon the subject is that the Senate will not agree to the forfeiture of that grant now. This bill, with the Senate amendment, leaves that forfeiture out. It proposes to forfeit the other 7,000,000 of acres, as I have said, and leaves the half million to be the subject of an independent proposition; and the Committee on the Public Lands have agreed to the Senate amendment, which leaves the question practically this: Shall we accept the 7,000,000 forfeiture and let the other remain to be determined hereafter, or will we, by rejecting the Senate amendment, lose the whole? Now it seems to me that is the practical question presented. I am satisfied from the information I have been able to gather that there is no possible chance of getting through the Senate a bill for the forfeiture of the Gulf and Ship Island road at this time. Let us then take the practical question presented, pass this bill, and hereafter take up and consider, and, if proper, pass the independent bill for the forfeiture of the Gulf and Ship Island lands. I believe that grant ought to be forfeited. They have not earned it in any legal or equitable sense; but the Senate appears not to agree with us upon that point.

I think, Mr. Speaker, the House fully understands the question, and as this has already occupied considerable time I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] to move the previous question.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I hope I will have a few minutes on this.

Mr. MORGAN. I want to ask a question——

Mr. PAYSON. I demand the previous question on the report.

Mr. MORGAN. Before that is done I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana a question——

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Certainly there will be no objection I hope to allowing me two or three minutes on this.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Illinois has demanded the previous question.

Mr. SINGLETON. I hope the gentleman will withdraw the demand for the previous question.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Let us vote it down.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is, Will the House concur in the Senate amendments?

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe the question is divisible. There are two amendments.

The SPEAKER. The question is divisible. Separate votes can be had.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. The motion is to concur in the Senate amendment. If that is voted down, we non-concur?

The SPEAKER. A refusal to concur is equivalent to non-concurrence.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Would a committee of conference then be appointed?

The SPEAKER. Not unless asked for and ordered by the House.

The Clerk read the first amendment of the Senate, as follows:

Page 1, line 10, after the word "act," insert "also except so much of said act as relates to a grant of land in aid of a railroad from Brandon to the Gulf of Mexico, commonly known as the Gulf and Ship Island Railroad."

The question being taken on concurring in the Senate amendment, the Speaker stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I call for a division.

The House divided: and there were—ayes 102, noes 25.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER].

Mr. PAYSON. I demand the yeas and nays. That is the shortest way to decide it.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. All right; let us have the yeas and nays.

Mr. PAYSON. I withdraw the call for the yeas and nays.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 154, noes 27.

So the first amendment of the Senate was concurred in.

The Clerk read the second amendment of the Senate, as follows:

Page 2, strike out all after "domain," in line 11, down to and including "only," in line 13.

Mr. HOLMAN. Let the portion proposed to be stricken out be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

And subject to entry and settlement under the provisions of the homestead laws by actual settlers only.

The SPEAKER. It is proposed by the amendment to strike these words out. The question is on concurring in the Senate amendment.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 90, noes 29.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. HOLMAN, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. PAYSON.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I would like to have the amendment again reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks that the amendment be again reported. Is there objection?

Mr. JACKSON. I object.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The question being taken on ordering the yeas and nays, the affirmative vote was 22.

Mr. HOLMAN. Count the other side.

The negative vote was counted, and there were noes 150.

So (the affirmative not being one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were not ordered.

The SPEAKER. The tellers will proceed with the count.

The House again divided; and there were—ayes 130, noes 33.

So the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to reconsider the vote just taken.

Mr. PAYSON. And I move to lay the motion to reconsider on the table.

Mr. HOLMAN. I believe I had the floor, and I desire to be heard on the motion to reconsider.

The SPEAKER. The vote was taken under the operation of the previous question, and under those circumstances a motion to reconsider is not debatable. If the motion to reconsider is carried, then the original question under the practice of the House is divested of the operation of the previous question and is debatable.

Mr. HOLMAN. Is not the previous question exhausted by the vote?

The SPEAKER. It is not. The gentleman from Indiana moves to reconsider the vote by which the House concurred in the second Senate amendment. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] moves to lay the motion to reconsider on the table. The question is on the latter motion.

The question being taken, the Speaker stated the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I call for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 114, noes 29.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. No quorum.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. WEAVER, and the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. PAYSON.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 146, noes 19.

So the motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PUBLIC-LAND LAWS.

Mr. COBB. I desire to make a privileged report. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands to report back the bill (H. R. 7887) with Senate amendments, and to move that the House non-concur in the Senate amendments and agree to the request of the Senate for a conference.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7887) to repeal all laws providing for the pre-emption of the public lands, the laws allowing entries for timber-culture, the laws authorizing the sale of desert lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. PETERS. I make the point of order that that is not a privileged report. If it is a privileged report it comes in under the order which was adopted on the 14th April, which reads as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Public Lands shall have leave at any time during the present session, after the morning hour and the hour for the consideration of bills reported by committees, to consider, in the order in which they stand on the Calendar, bills for the forfeiture of land grants to railroad and other corporations, bills preventing speculations in the public lands, and bills for the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual bona fide settlers; the same not to interfere with prior orders, revenue or general appropriation bills.

Substantially the same provision is contained in the rules of the House. Now I claim that a bill which repeals the pre-emption and timber-culture laws does not come within the provisions of this order; that this bill is not a bill for the purpose of preventing speculation in the public-land laws, and that it is not a bill for the preservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual bona fide settlers, and that if it does not come under one of these heads then it is not a privileged question and the report is not a privileged report.

Now, I submit the proposition that although some of the incidental benefits arising from this bill may tend to prevent speculation in the public lands or may tend to preserve public lands for the benefit of bona fide settlers, yet if that is not the main object of the bill it does not come within the provisions of the order. Certainly a bill which repeals the pre-emption law and the timber-culture law does not prevent speculation in the public lands. While, as I have said, incidentally, under those laws there may have been speculation in public lands, yet to prevent that is not the object of the bill. The object of the bill is to repeal the pre-emption law and the timber-culture law. Now, any law that would tend to punish any party who would speculate in the public lands would undoubtedly come within the provisions of this order.

But that law has been enacted and as incidental to that law and in violation of its provisions speculation in public lands has been carried on. I say that does not come within the provisions of the law.

Then, in relation to the second provision, bills for the reservation of public lands for the benefit of actual bona fide settlers, it is a question of which the Speaker of course will take judicial notice. Under the pre-emption law public domain can only be acquired by bona fide residence upon the land. In other words, if the party is not a bona fide settler upon the public land he can not acquire title to the public domain under the pre-emption law.

But aside from this, Mr. Speaker, while I admit under the timber-culture act no actual residence on the land is necessary, and while I also admit if this bill is to repeal the timber-culture law standing alone it would come within the provisions of the order and would be a privileged report, yet as I understand parliamentary law and especially the rule governing this House the entire report must be privileged. If only a portion of it is privileged it does not come within the rule. Therefore it is, while the repeal of the timber-culture law, a law which does not require a bona fide residence, might be privileged in its character and nature if the bill alone provides for the repeal of that law, yet, having coupled with it a provision repealing the pre-emption law, the entire subject-matter of the bill not being privileged, it cannot come within the rule. I desire also to call the attention of the Speaker to Rule XX.

The SPEAKER. What rule did the gentleman indicate?

Mr. PETERS. To Rule XX. I simply call the attention of the Speaker to that rule at present. I think perhaps that rule might apply more pertinently to the point of order made when the question of considering the report comes up. As I am on the floor I will simply call the attention to it at this time. It is as follow:

Any amendment of the Senate to any House bill shall be subject to the point of order that it shall first be considered in the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union if, originating in the House, it would be subject to that point.

Mr. PAYSON. Mr. Speaker, as a matter of parliamentary practice, irrespective of the argument the gentleman from Kansas makes, it has been the invariable rule when Senate amendments are made to a House bill and that bill is referred with those Senate amendments to a committee of this House and they are reported back with the recommendation a conference be agreed to it has always been held to be privileged.

Mr. DINGLEY. And when the Senate asks for the conference.

Mr. PAYSON. And especially in a case like this, where the Senate asks for a conference and names its conferees and that proposition with the Senate amendments is referred to the House committee, it is a matter of parliamentary courtesy to the other Chamber which has always been extended and has been frequently so held in this Congress as a matter of privilege when the committee shall report it back to the House.

But, sir, irrespective of that, and on the general merits of the question, if any bill can possibly be imagined which shall come within the provisions of section 49, Rule XII, this is that bill. I take it this will go without saying.

The Speaker of the House, like the judge of a court, is bound to take judicial notice of the statutes of the United States, and, going a step further, of the official reports also of the executive officers of the Government, and while it would be a question as to whether or not the statute law back of the pre-emption, the timber-culture, and the desert-land acts, as they now stand, would facilitate speculation in public lands, it is enough to say it has been the uniform judgment of the executive officials of this Government for the last four years those laws not only would, but in their practical operation would result in doing so. So far as this has gone the Secretary of the Interior recommended to the House the repeal of these laws on account of the fact they result in speculation in the public lands.

For that very reason this section of the rule was adopted providing that, on account of these alleged irregularities conceded to exist, the Committee on Public Lands should be privileged to report bills which should have the effect of preventing speculation in the public lands and bills for the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual bona fide settlers. An examination of this bill will show that, if its provisions shall become law, the only general laws remaining on the statute-book by which the public lands can be acquired will be the homestead law and the modified desert-land act. Of course everybody knows that under the homestead law actual acceptance for a given length of time is necessary in order to acquire any right or title. Under the timber-culture law no residence is required. Any person is allowed to take 150 acres of the public domain by simply plowing a given amount of it and setting out some trees, without any occupancy at all. So with the desert-land act as it stands now.

By looking at the seventh section of this bill it will be seen that it contains a provision for the appropriation by actual settlers of mountainous and arid land (a large proportion of the public lands being of that character now), which is not in the existing law. That is to say, this bill, as it comes to us from the Senate, provides for the subjection to homestead settlement of arid and mountainous land which is now taken only under the provisions of the desert-land act. For these reasons, so apparent on the face of the bill, it seems to me that the very statement of the proposition itself is its strongest argument, and I think the point taken by the gentleman from Kansas should be overruled.

Mr. HOLMAN. Gentlemen have discussed this as legislation which will affect a given section of the Union only. I ask the committee to look at it for a moment as it applies to the five land States of the South. The public lands in those States are subject to disposal by sale at $1.25 an acre and, subsequent to being once offered, they are subject to be entered at $1.25 an acre. This applies, for instance, to the lands covered by the bill declaring a forfeiture of a land grant in the South, acted upon to-day. It is not the timber-culture law nor the homestead law nor the pre-emption law that is to be considered; it is the general law, the whole system, as applicable to all the States, by which lands are subject to be disposed of at the minimum price of $1.25 an acre after being once offered. So it will be seen that even if the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] is right as to the public lands in one section of the Union he is entirely wrong as to the lands in other sections, because the whole of these lands in the South are subject to be disposed of under the old system.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the first point made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON], that the Senate has asked for a committee of conference, I desire to say that this is not a conference report. The Senate amended the bill sent to it by the House, and before the House had disagreed to the Senate amendments the Senate in advance asked for a committee of conference. The bill came to this House and was referred to the Committee on Public Lands. That committee considered the amendment made by the Senate and agreed to a certain report in relation thereto, and they now offer to report the bill back to the House, claiming that it is a privileged report. I say that this proceeding has not yet got far enough to come under the usual rule that applications for a committee of conference are privileged and entitled to the right of way at any time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to ask the gentleman a question. Under the present law is not the entire land in the five land States of the South open to sale and to speculation? Is there any law devoting that land to homestead or pre-emption?

Mr. PETERS. For the purposes of the argument I am willing to concede that point, but it does not obviate the point of order I have made, that the entire bill must be a privileged subject or else no portion of it can be considered privileged. I concede that so far as the desert-land act and the timber-culture act and perhaps other provisions of the bill are concerned, if the question depended upon those alone, it might be a privileged report; but it also includes an attempt to repeal the pre-emption law.

Mr. PAYSON. Will the gentleman yield for a question at that point?

Mr. PETERS. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYSON. Would it not be a sufficient answer to the gentleman's objection if the substance of the bill had that object in view, even though, incidentally, other matters of legislation were connected with it?

Mr. PETERS. But the gentleman from Illinois will concede at once that the material substance of this bill is the repeal of the pre-emption law. That is one of its three main provisions.

Mr. PAYSON. Under which law it is alleged these frauds that are complained of exist. I do not say whether the allegations are true or not, but they are made.

Mr. PETERS. That, Mr. Speaker, is an inference. The main purpose and object of the bill is not the prevention of those alleged frauds. The main purpose and object of it is to repeal the pre-emption law. Now, perhaps there might be some force in the argument of the gentleman if this was a bill to prevent or punish frauds committed under color of the pre-emption law. In that case I concede the position of the gentleman would probably be correct. But this is not a bill to prevent the commission of frauds under the provisions of the pre-emption law. It is a bill to repeal the provisions of that law; and the Speaker will bear in mind that under the laws in relation to pre-emption there is required a bona fide settlement and residence of six months.

I desire further to call the attention of the Speaker to the last paragraph on page 417 of the Digest:

A privileged question or motion can not be amended by adding thereto matter not privileged or germane to the original question.

I think now, Mr. Speaker, I have made all my points as clearly as I am able, and I submit the question.

The SPEAKER. The resolution which the gentleman from Kansas has read and which was adopted during the present session was intended to apply, and by its terms does apply, to those bills which have been reported from the Committee on Public Lands and gone upon the Calendar, requiring such bills to be taken up in the order in which they stand upon the Calendar. It therefore has no application to the question of order now made.

The forty-ninth clause of Rule XI provides that—

The following-named committees shall have leave to report at any time on the matters herein stated, namely.

And the Chair will state that, according to the uniform practice of the House, when a committee having the right to report at any time submits a report the report comes up for consideration at the time it is made, unless, upon the question of consideration being made, the House decides not then to consider it.

The clause of the rule just referred to then proceeds to enumerate the several committees having the right to report at any time:

The Committee on Elections, on the right of a member to his seat; the Committee on Ways and Means, on bills raising revenue; the committees having jurisdiction of appropriations, the general appropriation bills; the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, bills for the improvement of rivers and harbors; the Committee on Public Lands, bills for the forfeiture of land grants to railroad and other corporations, bills preventing speculation in the public lands, and bills for the reservation of the public lands for the benefit of actual and bona fide settlers.

The gentleman from Kansas makes the point that this is not a bill to prevent speculation in the public lands or a bill to forfeit land grants to railroads or other corporations or a bill to reserve the public lands for actual bona fide settlers. Of course, if the bill in its main purpose comes within either of these descriptions it is privileged by the express terms of the rule. The Chair has examined the bill (somewhat hastily, of course) while this argument on the point of order has been progressing, and from the provisions of the bill it appears that if it be passed and become a law there will be no statute in existence under which the public lands of the United States can be acquired except under the homestead law by actual settlers. This being the actual and only effect of the bill—to reserve all the public lands of the United States for actual settlers under the homestead law—the Chair thinks that it comes within the terms of the rule and that the report is privileged.

The committee recommends that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in, and that the House agree to the request of the Senate for a conference.

The question being taken on agreeing to the recommendation of the committee, it was agreed to.

Mr. COBB moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. COBB, Mr. STONE of Missouri, and Mr. PAYSON as the conferees on the part of the House.

LOCAL OR SPECIAL TERRITORIAL LAWS.

Mr. SPRINGER. The Committee on Territories, to whom was referred, with the amendments of the Senate, the bill (H. R. 5179) to prohibit the passage of local or special Territorial laws in the Territories of the United States, have directed me to submit the report which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The Committee on the Territories, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5179) to prohibit the passage of local or special laws in the Territories of the United States, and the Senate amendments thereto, having had said Senate amendments under consideration, recommend that the House concur in said amendments numbered respectively 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 9, and 10, and that the House non-concur in amendments numbered respectively 6, 7, and 8, and recommend that the request of the Senate for a conference on the said amendments be granted.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is a unanimous report of the Committee on Territories.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. SPRINGER moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the appointment of Mr. SPRINGER, Mr. HILL, and Mr. SYMES as the conferees on the part of the House.

ANN E. COONEY.

Mr. WINANS submitted the following report; which was agreed to:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 4544) granting a pension to Ann E. Cooney, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

EDWIN B. WINANS,
W. P. TAULBEE,
MARTIN M. HAYNES,
Managers on the part of the House.
H. W. BLAIR,
PHILETUS SAWYER,
W. C. WHITTHORNE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

MR. HANNAH BABB HUTCHINS.

Mr. WINANS also submitted the following report; which was agreed to:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3463) granting a pension to Mrs. Hannah Babb Hutchins, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

EDWIN B. WINANS,
W. P. TAULBEE,
MARTIN M. HAYNES,
Managers on the part of the House.
H. W. BLAIR,
PHILETUS SAWYER,
W. C. WHITTHORNE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

ADDIE L. MACOMBER.

Mr. WINANS also submitted the following report; which was agreed to:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1462) granting a pension to Addie L. Macomber, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment.

EDWIN B. WINANS,
W. P. TAULBEE,
MARTIN M. HAYNES,
Managers on the part of the House.
H. W. BLAIR,
PHILETUS SAWYER,
W. C. WHITTHORNE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

MANHATTAN PICKETT.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, in behalf of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SWOPE], my colleague on the committee, I submit the following privileged report:

The Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill of the House 7165, to increase the pension of Manhattan Pickett, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment providing for increase from $36 to $50 a month, leaving the bill as it passed the House.

JOHN A. SWOPE,
H. B. LOVERING,
E. N. MORRILL,
Managers on the part of the House.
H. W. BLAIR,
PHILETUS SAWYER,
W. C. WHITTHORNE,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

The conference report was adopted.

CARTER W. TILLER.

Mr. TAULBEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask to submit a privileged report from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, to be printed in the RECORD and to go over, to be called up some time in the future.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The report is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the veto message of the President of the United States on the bill (H. R. 4002) granting a pension to Carter W. Tiller, having considered the same, submit the following report, and submit herewith said bill and House report thereon, No. 682, and said message.

There are but two points of objection to the bill raised by the veto message of the President, to wit: First, that of capture and subsequent death of soldier being due to and resulting from his military service in line of duty; and, second, that of dependence of the claimant, Carter W. Tiller, on the soldier for support. The first objection is based on the charge of desertion in the military history of the soldier. The second objection is based on the ability of claimant to provide a competent support, and contributions of soldier to support of his father prior to enlistment or during his military service.

On the first ground of objection the committee find the following state of facts:

On the muster-rolls of Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, for the months of September and October, 1863, dated October 31, 1863, and signed by William E. Benson as captain of said company, the following entry, namely, "Deserted September 20, 1863."

The report of Adjutant-General shows company and regiment stationed at Stevenson, Ala., during September, October, and November, 1863.

Report of Adjutant-General United States Army, copy of which is hereto attached, shows that soldier died at Andersonville, Ga., while a prisoner of war, on 21st day of July, 1864.

Affidavits of William E. Benson, late captain of Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers; J. A. Weatherford, late second lieutenant of same company and regiment; John Martin, late captain Company D, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, and B. H. Bottger, late civil employé of same regiment, copies of which are hereto attached, show the fact and circumstances of capture of soldier.

While the date of the capture is not given, the detail and fact are clearly set forth in such a manner as to leave in the mind of the committee no shadow of doubt that the soldier was captured while in line of duty on the 20th day of September, 1863, or soon thereafter, and that he was held as a prisoner of war until July 21, 1864, when he was committed to the hospital at Andersonville, Ga., where he died, as shown by the records of the prison hospital.

The charge of desertion was doubtless entered on the muster-roll of the company because the captain at the time of making the roll had no official information as to the capture of the said soldier. He subsequently testifies that he had "not a personal knowledge of the capture, but was so informed at the time by reliable persons, and has no doubt of the capture and death of said soldier," and "that said Tiller was sent out on some duty when he was captured, but he does not now know what duty."

The Commissioner of Pensions seems to have arrived at this conclusion, as the application of the claimant for pension was rejected solely on the ground that claimant was not dependent on the soldier for support. The decision is here given, and is as follows:

"Rejected on the ground that claimant was not dependent upon the soldier, as he has supported himself by the income from his occupation since prior to the soldier's death."

On the question of dependence of claimant upon soldier, attention is called to affidavits of Capt. William E. Benson, Lieut. J. A. Weatherford, Capt. John Martin, affidavits of claimant, Dr. J. C. Metcalfe, the official certificate of J. A. Krack, city assessor of Louisville, Ky., and the written statement of Hon. A. S. WILLIS, a member of the Forty-ninth Congress from Kentucky, copies of which are hereto attached.

Your committee also submit herewith letters from acting Adjutant-General, United States Army, dated June 28, 1886, and July 1, 1886, respectively. Latter is addressed to Hon. W. P. TAULBEE, a member of the committee.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill, the President's veto to the contrary notwithstanding.

[House of Representatives, Forty-ninth Congress, first session Ex. Doc. No. 288.]

Message from the President of the United States, returning without his approval House bill No. 4002, entitled "An act to grant a pension to Carter W. Tiller."

June 22, 1886, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and ordered to be printed.

To the House of Representatives:

I return without my approval House bill No. 4002, entitled "An act granting a pension to Carter W. Tiller."

The records of the War Department show that George W. Tiller, the son of the claimant, enlisted in a Kentucky regiment on the 8th day of October, 1861, and that he deserted on the 20th day of September, 1863; that he was captured by the confederates afterward, but the time and circumstances are not given. On the 21st day of July, 1864, he was admitted to the Andersonville hospital, and died the same day of scorbutis.

The father filed his claim for a pension in 1877, alleging his dependence upon the deceased soldier. It is probably true that the son while in the Army sent money to the claimant, though he appears to have been employed as a policeman in the city of Louisville ever since his son's death, at a fair salary.

The claim thus made was rejected by the Pension Bureau on the ground that the claimant was not dependent upon his son.

I am entirely satisfied of the correctness of this determination, and if the records presented to me are reliable, I think the fact which appears therefrom, that the death of the soldier occurred ten months after desertion, and had no apparent relation to any service in the Union Army, is conclusive against the claim now made.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 19, 1886.

[House of Representatives, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, Report No. 682.]

February 24, 1886, committed to the Committee of the Whole House and ordered to printed.

Mr. TAULBEE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, submitted the following report (to accompany bill H. R. 4002):

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4002) granting a pension to Carter W. Tiller, having carefully considered same, submit the following report:

George W. Tiller enlisted as private in Company A, Twenty-eighth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, October 8, 1861; was captured while in line of duty near Bridgeport, Ala.; was confined at Andersonville, Ga., where he died July 21, 1864. He was sound at enlistment and capture, and is shown by records of War Department to have died of diarrhea. He never was married. His mother died in February, 1864. The claimant and beneficiary of this bill is his father, who filed claim for pension as dependent father December 31, 1877, which was rejected August 19, 1879, "on the ground that claimant was not dependent on the soldier, as he has supported himself by the income from his occupation since prior to the soldier's death."

Claimant is shown by the record to have been a very poor man ever since prior to the enlistment of his son, and never at any time since his son's enlistment to have owned more than $250 in property or other thing; that he was dependent on his son for support at enlistment, and that his said son did contribute to his father's support prior to enlistment and during his service in the Army. The father is also shown to have been a cripple and unable to perform manual labor since 1864, and is now more than sixty-five years old and in very destitute circumstances, and would doubtless have been driven to seeking aid from charity but for the fact that on account of his high character as a man, and the esteem in which he was held by the city authorities of Louisville, Ky., he was given a position on the police force of that city, by which he has been able to make for himself a bare support. He is now old and badly afflicted, and your committee think it is the duty of Congress to place his name on the pension-roll.

Your committee therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

H. R. 4002.

In the House of Representatives, January 18, 1886, Mr. WILLIS introduced the following bill:

A bill granting a pension to Carter W. Tiller.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Carter W. Tiller, dependent father of G. W. Tiller, late a private in Company A, Twenty-eighth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, Washington, D. C., January 31, 1878.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt from your office of application for pension No. 234784, and to return it herewith with such information as is furnished by the files of this office.

It appears from the rolls on file in this office that George W. Tiller was enrolled on the 8th day of October, 1861, at Louisville, Ky., in Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteers, to serve three years or during the war, and mustered into service as a private on the 10th day of October, 1861, at Louisville, Ky., in Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, to serve three years or during the war. On the muster-roll of Company A of that regiment, to August 31, 1863, he is reported present, September and October, 1863; private; deserted September 20, 1863; name not borne on subsequent rolls to April 30, 1865, May and June, 1865; dropped as a deserter on muster and pay rolls of October, 1863; received official notice of his dying in prison at Andersonville, Ga., July 21, 1864. Muster-out roll of company makes similar report.

Prisoner-of-war records show George W. Tillar, or Tiller, said company and regiment, admitted to hospital at Andersonville, Ga., July 21, 1864, and died same day of "diarrhea A;" capture not given.

This report is accepted as referring to George W. Tiller, Company A, Twenty-eighth Kentucky Volunteers.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. M. BENJAMIN,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

The COMMISSIONER OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, Washington, D. C., March 23, 1878.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt from your office of application for pension No. 234784, and to return it herewith, with such information as is furnished by the files of this office.

It appears from the rolls on file in this office that George W. Tiller was private in Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment of Kentucky Volunteers. On the muster-roll of Company A of that regiment for the months of September and October, 1863, he is reported: Private; deserted September 20, 1863; regimental return for September, 1863, same report at Stevenson, Ala. (the station of the company). No evidence of company or regiment being in action on or about September 20, 1863, nor of command in which regiment served during that month. "This man was captured near Bridgeport, Ala.; date and circumstances under which captured not stated; was admitted to rebel hospital at Andersonville, Ga., July 21, 1864, and died same day, of scorbutis."

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

S. W. BENJAMIN,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

The COMMISSIONER OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C.

STATE OF KENTUCKY, County of Jefferson, ss:

William E. Benson, a resident of the county and State aforesaid, being duly sworn according to law, upon his oath declares: That he is the identical W. E. Benson who was a captain of Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Infantry Volunteers, and that George W. Tiller was a private of the aforesaid organization, and that on or about the 1st day of December, 1863, the said George W. Tiller, while in the line and discharge of duty, was captured by Wheeler's rebel cavalry at Whiteside Station, Tenn., and died in prison at Andersonville, Ga. Affiant has not a personal knowledge of the capture, but was so informed at the time by reliable persons and has no doubt of the fact of the capture and death of said soldier. There is no commissioned officer who can testify from personal knowledge of the capture of said George W. Tiller, as no commissioned officer was with him at the time. Affiant was sent with his company to guard a wagon-train from Stevenson, Ala., to Point Rock, near Huntsville, Ala., and it was during his absence that George W. Tiller was captured. Said Tiller was left in camp and did not accompany him to Point Rock. He was legally excused from going, but he can not now remember the cause of his remaining behind. Affiant has a knowledge that George W. Tiller sent money to his father twice by Lieut. John A. Weatherford, of said Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteers, and he was a dutiful son to his father and a good soldier. Affiant learned when he came back from Point Rock that said Tiller was sent out on some duty when he was captured, but he does not now know what duty.

Affiant has no interest in the matter.

(Officer's signature:) WILLAM E. BENSON.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 26th day of June, 1879; and I certify that the party whose name appears signed to the foregoing affidavit is the person he represents himself to be, and a good and credible witness, and that the contents of the foregoing affidavit were duly read and fully made known to affiant before making oath to the same, and that I have no interest in this matter.

(Official signature:) WM. E. LORAN,
Clerk Jefferson County Court.

STATE OF KENTUCKY, County of Jefferson, ss:

On this 27th day of December, 1877, before me, Ch. M. Thruston, clerk of the county court, within and for the county and State aforesaid, personally came and appeared John A. Weatherford, aged forty-eight years, a resident of the city of Louisville, in the State of Kentucky, who, being by me duly sworn according to law, on oath declares that he was formerly second lieutenant of Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry; that he was well and intimately acquainted with Carter W. Tiller, father of George W. Tiller, deceased, late private Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry. Said George W. Tiller was captured near Stevenson, Ala., and died while a prisoner of war at Andersonville prison, Ga., on or about July 21, 1864. That said George W. Tiller was in the habit of sending the most of his pay home to his father, Carter W. Tiller, while he was in service; he sent twice by this affiant $50 each time, and probably oftener; but he sent home to his father by this affiant as much as $100. Said George W. Tiller was a very dutiful son, and did all he could toward the support of his father, Carter W. Tiller. The mother of said George W. Tiller, deceased, namely, Mrs. Sophronia Tiller, is dead; she died in February, 1864, in Louisville, Ky., and this affiant was one of the pall-bearers at her funeral. That said Carter W. Tiller is a very poor man, did not own any real estate or other property on which he could derive an income at the date of his son's death or at any time since up to the present time. Said Carter W. Tiller is now about sixty years old. This affiant has no interest in the claim of said Carter W. Tiller for pension.

J. A. WEATHERFORD,
Late Second Lieutenant Company A,
Twenty-eighth Regiment Volunteers.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 27th day of December, in the year 1877; and I hereby certify that the affiant is a respectable and credible person, and resides as stated; that I have no interest in this matter.

I further certify that the foregoing affidavit was read over, fully explained to, and understood by the affiant before the signing and execution thereof; and also that the affiant is the identical party represented as making the affidavit.

CH. M. THRUSTON,
Clerk Jefferson County Court.

CITY OF LOUISVILLE, ASSESSOR'S OFFICE,
Louisville, Ky., December 27, 1877.

This is to certify that Mr. C. W. Tiller is listed on the books of this office for the following property for the various years, to wit:

1863—Improvement S. Wal. Flo. and Prest.; value, $200.
1864—Improvement S. Wal. Flo. and Prest.; value, $150.
1865—Improvement S. Wal. Flo. and Prest.; value, $200.
1866—Improvement S. Wal. Flo. and Prest.; value, $250.
1867—Improvement S. Wal. Flo. and Prest.; value, $250.

For the years 1868 to 1877 inclusive, I find no assessment against the said C. W. Tiller.

J. A. KRACK, City Assessor.

STATE OF KENTUCKY, County of Jefferson, ss:

On this 14th day of March, 1878, before me, Ch. H. Thurston, a county court clerk within and for the county and State aforesaid, personally came and appeared B. H. Bottger, aged thirty-five years, a resident of the city of Louisville, in the State of Kentucky, who being by me duly sworn according to law, on oath declares that he was with the post baker at Stevenson, Ala., with wagon-train and sutler's wagon; he was in company with George W. Tiller (now deceased), private Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and when they arrived at Whiteside's Station, Tenn., on the Chattanooga Railroad, they were both captured by Wheeler's rebel cavalry. Ten barrels of flour were left at Whiteside's Station, and he (affiant) and said George W. Tiller were left at Whiteside's Station, Tenn., to guard said flour until the wagons came back to take it (said flour). The wagons were overloaded and the flour was left for the reason that the wagons had to lighten up. Wheeler's cavalry captured both this affiant and George W. Tiller. Affiant and Tiller were taken first to General Longstreet's headquarters, and from there, via Atlanta, Ga., on to Richmond. Said George W. Tiller was taken to Libby prison, Richmond, Va., and this affiant to Castle Thunder, Richmond, Va. Affiant has no interest in the claim of Carter W. Tiller, father of said George W. Tiller, deceased, for pension.

B. H. BOTTGER.

Sworn to, &c., and certificate of credibility of witness, by

CH. M. THURSTON,
Clerk Jefferson County Court.

STATE OF KENTUCKY, County of Jefferson, ss:

On this 28th day of June, 1879, before me, Wm. E. Loran, clerk county court within and for the county and State aforesaid, personally came and appeared Dr. J. C. Metcalfe, aged 54 years, a resident of the city of Louisville, in the State of Ky., who being by me duly sworn according to law, on oath declares that his post-office address is S. E. cor. Preston and Market, Louisville, Ky., county of Jefferson, and he has no interest in this claim; that he was the family physician of Carter W. Tiller, father of George W. Tiller, deceased, late private Co. A, 28th Regt. Ky. Vols., for twenty years commencing about the year 1851, and ending about 1871; that said Carter W. Tiller was shot through the left arm near the shoulder, and said shot passed entirely through his body; said shot was received by him in 1864, or 15 years ago; said wound has always (since he received it) been a source of great disability to him, said Teller. He is also generally debilitated. He has been disqualified from doing manual labor by reason of said wound from 1864 to the present time; said Carter W. Tiller was a plasterer by occupation, and he has been a member of the police force of the city of Louisville, Ky., for the past twenty years; his average wages or earnings have been from 1863 to the present time as much as sixty dollars per month.

The present wages of a policeman in this city is one and $\frac{5}{10}$ dollars per day. Affiant knows that Sophronia Tiller, mother of the deceased soldier, is dead. She died in Louisville, Ky., as much as fifteen years ago, but this affiant can not fix the exact date, although he was family physician at the time she died. Affiant knows that George W. Tiller, the deceased soldier, was never married. He knew George W. Tiller from his infancy, and knew he was the child of Carter W. Tiller and Sophronia Tiller. That said Carter W. Tiller has had no means of support other than pay for services as a policeman from 1863 to the present time. He has no property or anything from which he can derive an income. He lives in a rented house, for which he pays a rent of ten dollars per month.

J. C. METCALFE, M. D.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 28th day of June, 1879; and I hereby certify that affiant is a respectable and credible person and worthy of full faith and credit.

WM. E. LORAN,
Clerk Jefferson County Court.

[Single affidavit.]

STATE OF KENTUCKY, County of Jefferson, ss:

On this 27th day of December, A. D. 1877, before me, Ch. M. Thurston, clerk of the county court within and for the county and State aforesaid, personally came and appeared Carter W. Tiller, aged sixty years, a resident of the city of Louisville, in the State of Kentucky, who being duly sworn according to law, on oath declares that he is the father of George W. Tiller, deceased, late private Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and is the claimant for pension by reason of his said son's services and death while in service from starvation while in Andersonville (Ga.) prison. He (affiant) was to a great extent dependent on his said son, who was a very smart, intelligent boy. That while his said son was in the Army he sent him all his pay, with the exception of a little for personal use. The property mentioned in the certificate of Assessor Krack was a small, old frame three-room house, built on leased ground, and he sold said house in 1867 for one hundred and fifty dollars ($150); said house is all the property he had at the time of his son's death. He never had any income in his life from any source. His occupation has been that of a policeman in the city of Louisville, Ky.

CARTER W. TILLER.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 27th day of December, in the year 1877; and I hereby certify that the affiant is a respectable and creditable person, and resides as stated; that I believe his statements are correct and worthy of full faith and credit; that I have no interest in this matter. I further certify that the foregoing affidavit was read over, fully explained to, and understood by the affiant before the signing and execution thereof; and also that the affiant is the identical party represented as making the affidavit.

C. M. THURSTON,
Clerk Jefferson County Court.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., June 28, 1886.

DEAR SIR: Responding to your inquiry of this day in regard to Carter W. Tiller, whose bill for pension has recently passed the House, I desire to say that I have been personally acquainted with Mr. Tiller for twenty years. He is recognized by our citizens generally as a man of probity, good demeanor, industrious, and worthy in every respect. He was for many years on the police force of Louisville, Ky., acting as a detective, and, although quite aged, was retained there because of his valuable services in the past. As far as I know, and I think I am competent to answer advisedly of the fact, his reputation is beyond reproach both as a man and an officer. The municipal administration at Louisville was changed on January 1, 1885, and immediately thereafter Mr. Tiller's services were dispensed with. Since that time my information (which I deem perfectly reliable) is that he has had no occupation whatever, but has been supported by benevolent organizations of the city.

Very truly, yours,

ALBERT S. WILLIS.

Hon. WILLIAM P. TAULBEE,
House of Representatives.

ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE, WAR DEPARTMENT,
June 28, 1886.

In the case of George W. Tiller, a private in Company A, Twenty-eighth Kentucky Volunteers, pension claim No. 234784, records of prisoners of war furnish no additional information other than that shown in report to honorable Commissioner of Pensions, dated March 23, 1878.

In the case of B. H. Bottger, citizen, affiant in said case, prisoner of war records show B. Botcher, citizen of Prussia, B. H. Botcher, baker, field hospital, Reserve Corps, or in Major-General Granger's corps; captured at Whiteside Station, Tenn., September 25, 1863; committed to Castle Thunder, Richmond, Va., October 10, 1863, by Captain Alexander; discharged by General Winder, order No. 61; delivered to Major Turner March 11, 1864, to be treated as a prisoner of war; confined in Confederate States military prison, Richmond, Va., March 11, 1864; again committed to Castle Thunder, date not given, and discharged September 5, 1864, to be treated as a prisoner of war; confined in Confederate States prison same day, and paroled at Vienna, Va., September 24, 1864.

Said records also show the following members of the Twenty-eighth Kentucky Volunteers captured at or near Stevenson, Ala., on or about September 20, 1863, namely:

Frederick Bayer, Company E, Twenty-eighth Kentucky Volunteers; captured at Stevenson, Ala., October 10, 1863; confined at Richmond, Va., November 7, 1863; paroled at City Point, Va., March 7, 1864.

Also show Michael Mahan, Company H, Twenty-eighth Kentucky Volunteers; captured at Cowan's Station, Tenn., October 9, 1863; confined at Richmond, Va., November 7, 1863; paroled at City Point, Va., March 15, 1864.

John W. B. Shirley, Company E, Twenty-eighth Kentucky Infantry; captured at Stevenson, Ala., October 10, 1863; confined at Richmond, Va., November 7, 1863; sent to Andersonville, Ga., March 23, 1864, where he was admitted to hospital May 10, 1864, and died June 14, 1864.

Patrick Gallager, Company H, Twenty-eighth Kentucky Volunteers; was captured at Cowan's Station, Tenn., October 9, 1863; confined at Richmond, Va., November 7, 1863; admitted to hospital No. 21, Richmond, Va., November 25, 1863, and died there December 29, 1863.

The company roll for September and October, 1863, reports George W. Tiller, Company A, Twenty-eighth Kentucky Volunteers, deserted September 20, 1863.

J. C. KELTON,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

WAR DEPARTMENT, ADJUTANT-GENERAL'S OFFICE,
Washington, July 1, 1886.

SIR: In reply to your verbal inquiry, I have the honor to inform you that the records of this office show that Frederick Boyer, private, Company E, Twenty-eighth Kentucky Infantry, is reported on company muster-roll dated Victoria, Tex., December 14, 1865, with remark: * * * "Deserted January 23, 1863; Clarksville, Tenn., returned September 28, 1863; restored to duty, date of order unknown; deserted October 9, 1863; returned April 7, 1864; restored to duty by S. O. No. 199, headq'rs 2nd Div., 4th A. C.; deserted December 9, 1864, at Nashville, Tenn.; returned January 7, 1865; tried by G. C. M., sentenced to be dishonorably discharged from service with loss of all pay and allowances and confined in military prison during war; discharged by G. O. No. 8, M. D. Tenn.; stoppages due U. S. for one Spencer rifle and accouterments complete, $35.50."

John W. B. Shirley, private same company, is reported on company muster-out roll dated Huntsville, Ala., January 26, 1865: "Deserted October 6, 1863; not apprehended." "Was captured at Stephenson, Ala., October 10, 1863; confined in rebel prison at Richmond, Va., November 7, 1863; sent to Andersonville, Ga., March 7, 1864; admitted to prison hospital at Andersonville, Ga., May 10, 1864, where he died June 14, 1864, of diarrhea."

Patrick Gallagher, Company H, Twenty-eighth Kentucky Infantry, is reported on roll for September and October, 1863, dated at Stevenson, Ala., October 31, 1863: "Captured by the enemy at Tunnel Hill, near Cowan Station, Tenn., October 9." Record of events on said roll shows "company in action at Tunnel Hill October 9, 1863, and compelled to retreat to Cowan Station." Company muster-out roll, dated Nashville, Tenn., May 4, 1865, reports him, "Died at Richmond, Va., December 24, 1863."

I am, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

THOMAS WARD,
Assistant Adjutant-General.

Hon. W. P. TAULBEE,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

ANDREW J. WILSON.

Mr. SAWYER. I ask, also, to submit from the Committee on Invalid Pensions a report on the veto message accompanying House bill 7108, granting a pension to Andrew J. Wilson, which I ask to be printed in the RECORD and go over to some other day.

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The report is as follows:

[House of Representatives, Forty-ninth Congress, first session. Ex. Doc. No. 299.]

Message from the President of the United States, returning House bill No. 7108 with his objections thereto.

June 25, 1886.—Referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions and ordered to be printed.

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill number 7108, entitled "An act granting a pension to Andrew J. Wilson."

It appears that this man was drafted and entered the service in February, 1865, and was discharged in September of the same year on account of "chronic nephritis and deafness."

In 1882 he filed his application for a pension, alleging that in June, 1865, from exposure, he contracted rheumatism. Afterward he described his trouble as inflammation of the muscles of his back, with pain in the kidneys. In another statement, filed in December, 1884, he alleges that while in the service he contracted diarrhea, and was injured in one of his testicles, producing a rupture.

Whatever else may be said of this claimant's achievements during his short military career, it must be conceded that he accumulated a great deal of disability.

There is no doubt in my mind that whatever ailments he may honestly lay claim to, his title to the same was complete before he entered the Army.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 23, 1886.

The President in his message returning this bill to the House with his objections thereto, after speaking of the claimant's discharge from the Army and the cause thereof and the statements of the claimant as to his disabilities, states as follows:

"Whatever else may be said of this claimant's achievements during his short military career, it must be conceded that he accumulated a great deal of disability.

"There is no doubt in my mind that whatever ailments he may honestly lay claim to, his title to the same was complete before he entered the Army."

The fair construction of the above is that the President places his veto upon the ground that the claimant's disabilities, whatever they may be, existed prior to his entering the service of the United States.

Believing that the President has unintentionally, through a misapprehension of the facts, done injustice to a worthy man, your committee desire to make a further report of the facts in the case as they appear from the papers now on file in the Pension Office in this case.

The claimant entered the service of the United States as a drafted man in February, 1865, to serve for one year, and was assigned to Company F, Ninety-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers. (See certificate of discharge.)

So that it can not be claimed that the soldier was endeavoring by the concealment of any disability he might have to be received into the service of the United States and thereby securing to himself any large bounty.

Further it appears by the affidavits of George W. Bedell and S. S. Spencer that the soldier when drafted claimed that he was exempted from the draft and made an effort to avail himself of such exemption.

Mr. Bedell in his affidavit of the date of February 17, 1886, states:

"At the time said Wilson was drafted into the military service I was serving as deputy provost marshal and was in attendance at the office of Dr. Backus in Rochester, N. Y., the examining surgeon who examined said Andrew J. Wilson on his claim to be exempt from service on account of deafness and defective sight. He made no claim on account of rheumatism or disease of his back or kidneys. I had known said Wilson for several years, resided near him, and saw him often, and I interested myself in his case. Dr. Backus gave Wilson an apparently thorough personal examination and then said: 'Wilson's eyesight and his hearing would not be sufficient to exempt him from draft; he is sound as a nut; he will make a good soldier.'"

Mr. Spencer in his affidavit of the date of February 22, 1886, states:

"I am well acquainted with Andrew J. Wilson, of the town of Barre, in said county of Orleans, late a private in Company F, Ninety-sixth Regiment New York Infantry, in the war of the rebellion, and who is a claimant for a pension. That at the time said Wilson was drafted into the military service of the United States at the provost-marshal's office in Rochester, N. Y., I was one of the war committee of Orleans County, appointed by the board of supervisors of Orleans County, to see to procuring volunteers and filling the quota of said county, and was also the duly appointed agent of the said town of Barre to fill its quota. That said Wilson was drafted into the military service of the United States in February or March, 1865; that I was present when said Wilson was examined by Doctor Backus, the examining physician at said provost-marshal's office on said draft; that I prepared for said Wilson papers claiming exemption from military service on the ground of deafness and defective eyesight, which papers were presented to said Backus on such examination. Said Backus examined said Wilson and stated in substance that he would make a good soldier and accepted him.

Henry Brink, in his affidavit of February 20, 1886, states: "I know he [Wilson] was hard of hearing, and had a twitching or spasmodic motion of his eyes, which I supposed was natural to him."

So that it appears that the soldier did not only not voluntarily enter the service of the United States, but did, on the ground of his disabilities, deafness, and defective eyes, claim his exemption; and that the Government, by its officers, disregarding his objections, pronounced him sound after medical examination, and compelled him to enter its service and assigned him a position in its armies; and, the idea of fraud being excluded, the committee think that the Government ought to be estopped from now claiming existing disability at the time of the draft.

But the committee think that there is no evidence of the existence of any other disability at the time of the draft than the deafness and defective eyes.

Dr. H. W. Lewis, a physician of over thirty years' practice, and whose character is fully indorsed at the Pension Office, in his affidavit of date of May 9, 1883, states "that he has been acquainted with the said Andrew J. Wilson for twenty-five years; that before his enlistment "he was sound and healthy."

In his affidavit of March 9, 1882, he states: "I knew Andrew J. Wilson for several years before he went into the Army in 1865. I was his family physician from 1864 to 1874. He was sound and healthy before he went into the service, in my judgment."

In his affidavit of November 27, 1885, he states: "I am quite sure he was sound and well before he went into the Army, except his eyesight and hearing, which were defective."

G. W. Bedell, heretofore quoted in the same affidavit, further states: "I am well acquainted with Andrew J. Wilson. I know Wilson had been a hard-working man at his trade of mason and plasterer, and I never knew or heard he had rheumatism or kidney disease or any disease or lameness before he went into the Army, except the difficulty with his eyes or ears. I never heard Wilson say he had a lame back or rheumatism before he was drafted, and from my knowledge of him he was sound except his eyes and ears."

S. S. Spencer, in his affidavit heretofore quoted, says: "I was well acquainted with said Wilson at the time of such examination and had been for several years previous, and supposed he was sound and well with the exception of his hearing. I never heard that he then claimed to be troubled with rheumatism or any difficulty with his back or kidneys, and at the time he entered the military service of the United States I believed he was sound and healthy with the exception of his hearing and eye-sight."

Henry Brink, in his affidavit above quoted, says: "I have known Andrew J. Wilson intimately for more than thirty years. I am by trade a mason and plasterer. Before said Wilson was so drafted he and myself had for several years frequently worked together as masons and plasterers (he being a mason and plasterer by trade) and I know he followed the business of laying stone walls and plastering. When we were so laboring together said Wilson was accustomed to do any kind of work pertaining to his trade, such as handling heavy stone, plastering ceilings and walls, and sometimes lifting heavy hods of mortar, and I never, before he was so drafted, heard him complain of lame back, disease of kidneys, or rheumatism, or speak of his having any disease or ailment except of his eyes and ears. Otherwise from an intimate acquaintance with him, seeing him work, I think and believe when he was so drafted and always before that time he was an able-bodied and healthy man, never troubled with rheumatism or kidney disease and never had such diseases."

George B. Smith, in his affidavit of February 22, 1886, states: "I have been well acquainted with Andrew J. Wilson for thirty-two years, and during most of that time I have lived near him and seen him often. Before he was drafted into the military service of the United States he frequently labored for me as a stone mason and as a laborer on a farm. When he was so at work for me he was a strong and healthy man apparently, prompt and ready at any work in which he was employed. I remember his working for me at various times for a number of years, and at no time did I hear him complain of having rheumatism, lame back, kidney disease, or any other ailment, except defective sight and being hard of hearing."

The claimant states in the most unequivocal terms that he never had, or claimed to have, the rheumatism or disease of the kidneys before he was drafted.

The only evidence there is showing or tending to show that the soldier had any such difficulties before or at the time he was drafted is found in the certificate of discharge bearing date September 21, 1865, which states, over the signature of the first lieutenant commanding, "During the last two months said soldier has been unfit for duty sixty days by reason of chronic disease of the kidneys, partial deafness, and a disease in the eyes;" and over the signature of R. W. Brady, surgeon of the regiment, further states: "I find him incapable of performing the duties of a soldier because of chronic nephritis and deafness. The soldier was drafted for one year, and was afflicted with these difficulties before his entry into service. He has great difficulty in making water, together with pain in the back, in the region of the kidneys. His general health is so much affected that, together with the difficulty of hearing, he is totally unfit for the duties of a soldier."

There is no evidence in the case, not the slightest, that this surgeon ever saw or knew the soldier before he was drafted, nor does he intimate in any way upon what he predicates his opinion that the soldier had these disabilities before he was drafted. It should be borne in mind that the claimant makes no claim for pension by reason of deafness or defective eyesight.

It seems clear to the committee from the evidence that aside from the deafness and defective eyesight, for which he makes no claim, whatever disability, such as rheumatism, disease of the kidneys, or nephritis, he may have had at the time of his discharge he must have incurred in the service. The affidavit of the soldier shows how he contracted his disabilities, by sleeping on the ground when it was raining, unprotected by tent or rubber blanket, and that he was treated therefor in hospital and by regimental surgeon. It further appears that the soldier was assigned to a company of strangers, many of them Germans, and that he was unable to speak their language; that his captain was sick and away from his command most of the time.

Two of his comrades, one of whom was his bunk-mate and the other attending him in his sickness, in their affidavits state the fact of his sickness and of his treatment in the hospital.

The injury to his testicle and to his side resulting in hernia is shown to have been by an accident from the breaking down of a flight of stairs upon which he, with his comrades, was ascending. The fact that the soldier when he reached home immediately after his discharge was suffering from "rheumatic disease involving the muscles of the back," which "has extended to the kidneys," is fully described by Dr. Lewis, who attended him till 1875, in his affidavits. The continuation of these difficulties is fully shown by the affidavit of Dr. R. W. Smith, whose character is fully indorsed at the Pension Office and who has treated him and been his family physician for about eight years. The existence of these disabilities at his return from the Army and their continuance is also shown by the said Brink and Smith whose affidavits have been heretofore quoted.

The records of the Adjutant-General's Office show the claimant absent from his company sick for July and August, 1865, and that the company records for August and September show him absent sick since August 24. Nature of sickness not stated, and that the regimental hospital records are not on file.

Dr. H. C. Tompkins, by whom the claimant was examined by order of the Pension Office, in his certificate dated March 8, 1882, describes his disabilities and rates him total.

The Buffalo examining board, before whom he appeared by order of the Pension Office, in their certificate of July, 1884, fully describe his disability and rate him total.

The Rochester examining board, before whom he appeared by a like order, in their certificate, dated January 31, 1883, give him no rating.

I. H. Hobbs, acting chief board review, in his statement of October 17, 1885, states:

"The point is, as stated by Mr. Murphy, whether what was called nephritis at discharge and described is the same as the disability for which it is now proposed to allow pension as rheumatism. In my opinion the evidence will not warrant any other conclusion than the nephritis of record and the rheumatism claimed for are either identical or so intimately associated as to make it impracticable to admit the one and reject the other. You may therefore reject claim for rheumatism on the ground that the record shows disability claimed for to have existed before claimant entered the service."

And Dr. Campbell, at the head of the medical division of the Pension Office, states:

"I am of the opinion that lumbago or rheumatism of the muscles of the back existed, if not fully described, when the soldier was discharged."

Mr. Van Mater, chief of the board of review, under the date of September 19, 1885, states:

"I do not see anything in the opinion of the medical referee to justify rejection."

Thus the existence of rheumatism at discharge is fully admitted, but the fact of its existence before entering the service is opposed to the opinion and action of the examining surgeon who pronounced him sound when drafted; is opposed to the rule fully recognized at the Pension Office, that every man is presumed to be sound when received into the service, and is opposed to the evidence of the physician who had treated him before he entered the service, and the testimony of his intimate associates for years, and is based solely upon the statement of a surgeon who does not apper to have known the claimant or his physical condition at the time he so entered the service of the United States.

The application for pension was made in February, 1882, and finally rejected in March, 1886.

This bill merely places the soldier upon the pension-roll, but does not fix the rate of pension, but leaves that to be determined subsequently by the examining surgeon of the Pension Office.

The member of the committee to whom that bill was referred, and who has known the claimant for nearly forty years, states that said claimant has always resided in the town of Barre, in the county of Orleans, New York, and that for forty years no such person as Dr. R. W. Brady, the surgeon of the Ninety-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers, has resided or practiced medicine anywhere in the vicinity where said claimant has resided.

Your committee, believing that the soldier from the evidence is clearly entitled to this relief, recommend that the bill do pass, notwithstanding the President's objections thereto.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order of business is the call of committees for reports for reference.

Mr. BURNES. I move to dispense with the morning hour for to-day.

The motion was agreed to, two-thirds voting in favor thereof.

The SPEAKER. For the moment the Chair forgot this is Friday, and the regular order is the consideration of two bills coming over by order of the House to be disposed of immediately after the reading of the Journal this morning.

Mr. BURNES. I move to postpone those two bills until next Friday.

The SPEAKER. They have to be disposed of one at a time.

Mr. BURNES. Then I move to postpone the first bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. I will not interpose objection if that bill will come up next Friday in the same position it has to-day.

The SPEAKER. That is the McMinnville bill.

Mr. BURNES. I move to postpone it until next Friday with the same privileges it has to-day.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. BURNES. I now move to postpone the further consideration of House joint resolution 72, to provide for the settlement of accounts with the Mobile and Ohio Railroad Company.

Mr. OATES. I am opposed to the postponement of that bill. It has been postponed about a dozen times. It was postponed about two weeks ago on the express understanding there should be a vote on it to-day. That bill has been reported by the Committee of the Whole and the previous question ordered on it. There is nothing to do but to take the vote.

The SPEAKER. The previous question has been ordered on the engrossment and third reading but not on the passage of the bill; nor have the yeas and nays been ordered. On the McMinnville they have been.

Mr. SPRINGER. As it is intended to have the yeas and nays, we had better get through the appropriation bills this week and let it go over until next week.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 98, noes 34.

So (two-thirds having voted in the affirmative) the motion was agreed to and the bill went over.

Mr. BURNES. I move to dispense with private business to-day.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I ask if this motion be adopted by the House that Monday and Tuesday evenings be set apart, from 8 o'clock until 11, for the consideration of private bills. We have a large amount of private business to dispose of, and we should say to those who have claims against the Government either we will consider them or that we do not intend to pay any of them. I ask that there shall be sessions Monday and Tuesday evenings, beginning at 8 o'clock and ending at 11, for the consideration of private bills to which there shall be no objection.

Mr. BRAGG. I object.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Would it be in order to move this as an amendment to the motion of the gentleman?

The SPEAKER. It would not. The House can only order a recess in advance by unanimous consent or by a suspension of the rules.

The question being taken on the motion to dispense with private business, it was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 102, noes, 22.

Mr. BURNES. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. HAMMOND in the chair).

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The Clerk will report the first bill on the Calendar.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9726) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for prior years, and for other purposes.

Mr. BURNES. I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first formal reading of the bill.

There was no objection.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill of ten or twelve thousand items, and I am unable to see any ground for a general debate upon it. I ask unanimous consent, therefore, that we proceed to the consideration of the bill by sections under the five-minute rule.

Mr. McCOMAS. With a single understanding I readily agree with the purpose of not having general debate; but there are here and there in the bill special subjects wherein there should be very brief discussion, and with the understanding that my colleague in charge of the bill will permit upon these several items when reached a short debate, if desired, I shall assent to his request.

Mr. BURNES. The request of my colleague from Maryland is eminently fair, and in that spirit of fairness that characterizes him I feel sure that he will make no unreasonable demands.

Mr. REAGAN. Is it to be understood as agreed upon that there shall be this privilege of general debate at any time in the bill without specifying the items?

Mr. BURNES. It relates to items that are not in the bill rather than to items we recommend in it. All debate of course will be under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BLOUNT. That had better be clearly understood in advance.

Mr. BRAGG. Before unanimous consent is given I desire to state to the House——

Mr. BURNES. I understand the gentleman from Maryland desires debate under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BRAGG. There are certain amendments, all of which will be covered by one discussion, which my colleague upon the other side of the House from Wisconsin and myself desire to make to this bill; and I am unwilling to consent that there shall be no general debate on the bill, unless it be understood that we have debate if we desire, not to exceed thirty minutes, upon that branch of the bill.

Mr. CANNON. That is right. It relates, as I understand it, to the Fox River improvement.

Mr. BURNES. I think it but fair to say to the committee that the gentleman from Wisconsin ought to be allowed thirty minutes upon the item of amendment which he proposes to offer to the bill; and I have no objection, if the committee will assent, that he shall have thirty minutes if he desires it upon that point. That debate may be had at any time to suit his convenience, after we get through with the bill or before.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri as stated? The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill by sections.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill and reached the provisions under the head of "Department of State."

Mr. CANNON. I understand that these items of deficiency for the State Department will be passed over with an agreement to return and insert amendments in the proper places. I have no objection to that if the gentleman desires it, otherwise I shall desire to offer an amendment to follow line 28 of the bill.

Mr. BURNES. I will answer my colleague by saying that in the latter part of the bill there are some items of appropriations for the State Department, and that his amendments can as well come in there as here. I have no objection that he shall introduce them at that place.

Mr. CANNON. I do not know of any place but the first part of the bill where these items would be apt. This is the proper place to present them, and I prefer it here.

Mr. BURNES. I would suggest to my colleague on page 111 of the bill for instance.

Mr. CANNON. I would prefer that we pass these items over for the present. The amendments to which I refer more legitimately belong here, and when my friend from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], to whom I understand the courtesy of passing this over is to be extended, returns, then the amendments may be offered.

Mr. BURNES. I will consent to pass over these items for the State Department, to return to them hereafter.

Mr. CANNON. To return to them when Mr. BUTTERWORTH returns from the committee of conference?

Mr. BURNES. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection to this arrangement.

Mr. GILFILLAN. To what extent does this apply?

The CHAIRMAN. That portion of the bill from line 9 to line 154, inclusive, will not be read now, but passed over to be returned to hereafter. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GILFILLAN. I desire to offer an amendment to line 122, if I can have the privilege of doing so hereafter.

The CHAIRMAN. Of course when we return to this part of the bill that would be in order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the accounts of A. P. Loud, assistant agent at the seal fisheries in Alaska, for traveling expenses, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1885, $282.66.

Mr. McCOMAS. There is an item to which I desire to call the attention of my colleague on the committee in charge of this bill for the payment of George Wardman. It is an item which was before the committee, but I think in making up this bill it was inadvertently omitted. It relates to the same subject of the seal fisheries, and I therefore move the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 298 insert as a new paragraph:

"To pay George Wardman, late an assistant agent at the seal fisheries in Alaska the salary from the date of his removal to the date of his arrival home and traveling expenses incurred by him in proceeding to his home, $696.25."

Mr. McMILLIN. I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. BURNES. Did I understand my colleague on the committee [Mr. McCOMAS] to say that that item was before the committee?

Mr. McCOMAS. Yes, sir. The item as I understand was adopted and was inadvertently omitted.

Mr. BURNES. The word of the gentleman on that point is sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. What is the point of order?

Mr. McMILLIN. The point of order is that this amendment changes existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. What law?

Mr. McMILLIN. There is no law authorizing the payment of this amount.

Mr. BURROWS. What provision is there in this bill that does not change existing law?

Mr. McMILLIN. The deficiencies are to meet the legal obligations of the Government.

Mr. BURROWS. And they change existing law.

Mr. McMILLIN. The gentleman can make his point of order on any clause of the bill if he chooses.

Mr. BURROWS. I was merely suggesting to the gentleman that all these deficiencies change existing law.

Mr. McMILLIN. I do not think that is the fact. If any do the gentleman has the right to point them out. A month's extra salary is not provided for after the man's term of office ceases, nor is there provision for traveling expenses on his return. This is not a current obligation of the Government, but is a gratuity proposed to be given.

Mr. BAYNE. If the Chair has any doubt as to the point of order I would say this is in pursuance of existing law and to fulfill an obligation of the Government, and is in accordance with decisions by the Solicitor of the Treasury, the Comptroller, and all the officers who have given decisions on these points. This case is precisely analogous to the other two appropriations in the bill, and is to supply a deficiency for services rendered.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is not informed as to the condition of the law—whether or not there is any law providing for this payment.

Mr. McMILLIN. There is no law.

Mr. BURNES. There is an annual appropriation of $2,400 for the purpose of paying the traveling expenses of these gentlemen who go out there to Alaska. In consequence of a change the money appropriated was consumed, and this party failed to get his share under the law. The provision is as follows:

For necessary traveling expenses of agents actually engaged in going to and returning from Alaska, not to exceed $600 per annum, $2,400.

This is the appropriation of last year. Now this deficiency happens by reason of the change to which allusion has been made.

Mr. McMILLIN. But the gentleman from Missouri overlooks the fact, I think, that this pays a salary after the official had been removed.

Mr. BAYNE. There is where the mistake of the gentleman from Tennessee comes in. The point is just this. This assistant agent and the other two were engaged in their occupations as assistant agents at the seal fisheries of Alaska. They were superseded, and they have not yet received the pay which they were entitled to receive from the time of the appointment of their successors up to the time they were advised that they were superseded; and this covers that period of time with reference to all these cases.

It has been held by the Solicitor of the Treasury, by the Secretary of the Treasury, by the Supreme Court, by all the legal authorities, that in cases of that kind, where an officer is appointed to supersede another, the salary of the one superseded runs on until he is apprised of the fact, till he is superseded; and the new officer who is appointed to fill his place is not entitled to a salary till he goes to the place and actually takes charge of the office and does the work.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has some difficulty about this matter because of the wording of the amendment. It is that the salary of this agent dates from the date of his removal till the date of his arrival at home. But the Chair will assume that the decisions as given would cover this, and holds the amendment is in order.

The question being taken on the amendment, it was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph, under the head of "Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting:"

To pay amounts found due by the accounting officers on account of freight, being for the service of the fiscal year 1884, $2,605.54.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 633 insert the following:

"For payment of bills as follows: Being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1885, June 10, 1885, Old Colony Steamboat Company, for transportation of enlisted men from New York to Newport, $127; May 27, 1885, Old Colony Steamboat Company, for transportation of enlisted men from New York to Newport, $162; June 1, 1885, Pacific Mail Steamship Company, transportation of enlisted men from New York to San Francisco, $493.50; June 24, 1885, Pacific Mail Steamship Company, transportation of enlisted men from San Francisco to New York, $4,935; April 7, 1885, Pacific Mail Steamship Company, transportation of enlisted men from New York to Aspinwall (Panama expedition), $1,600; May 20, 1885, Pacific Mail Steamship Company, transportation of enlisted men from Aspinwall to New York (Panama expedition), $1,170. Total, $8,487.50.

Mr. CANNON. These items are submitted through the Secretary of the Treasury by the Secretary of the Navy for a deficiency. The expenditure was authorized under section 3732 of the Revised Statutes, which provides, in substance, that the Secretary of the Navy or the Secretary of War, where there is no appropriation for the service, may in certain classes of cases incur liability. Transportation is one of those matters. Clothing and subsistence are other items for which the proper official may make expenditures or may make contracts without reference to prior appropriation.

This is no doubt a very wise provision of the law, because in the ordinary expenditures of the Government Congress can not well foresee all the demands that may be made upon the Executive during vacation. One of these items is for transportation of men from New York to Panama. Gentlemen will recollect the trouble we had in enforcing the rights of the United States, under the treaty of 1846, under the present administration.

Others of these items are for transportation of seamen discharged at San Francisco and who, under the law, had to be transported back to the place of enlistment at New York. So all these items are authorized by this section of the Revised Statutes. The service has been performed over a year ago, at the request of the present Executive. The money is due, and I see no reason why it should not be paid. I know of no reason why these items were not inserted in the bill or should not now be inserted by the Committee of the Whole, unless it be upon the ground that private parties who performed services for the Government of the United States at the request of President Cleveland more than twelve months ago are to be denied payment because we have the power to withhold the money and shall thereby be so much ahead.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I have but a word to say in reply. The property of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company was greatly imperiled, and at the earnest and urgent solicitation of the company the President of the United States, in order to protect their property, sent a force down to the isthmus. The complaining company transported the troops who were sent down there for the purpose of protecting its property. They were sent down to serve the company, and they discharged that duty. We thought, under the circumstances, that the Government should not pay the expense thus incurred. That is all I have to say.

Mr. LONG. That does not apply to the Old Colony Railroad Company.

Mr. CANNON. One word more, Mr. Chairman, and I will yield the floor. There are some items that come later in the bill upon which the criticism of the gentleman from Missouri, if it be a just one, can be made. There is one item only of those contained in the present amendment for transportation of troops to Panama, and that is $1,600. The other items are for transportation of our seamen, who were discharged at San Francisco and other points, to the place of enlistment, under the general provision of law.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. What is the total amount of the item?

Mr. CANNON. The total amount is $8,487.50. As to the point made by the gentleman from Missouri, I understand the fact to be that the United States in 1846, long before the Pacific Mail Steamship Company existed, made a treaty with New Granada and other South American countries, under which treaty it assumed certain responsibilities and made certain guarantees for the protection of the railway across the isthmus, looking toward the assertion of the sovereign power of the United States in protecting our citizens, and going further and looking toward protecting the general interests of the Government from the time of making the treaty down to the present, and in future, upon that isthmus.

The gentleman says that the Pacific Mail Steamship Company had some property down at the Isthmus of Panama, that in consequence of a revolution that property was endangered, and that, because it was endangered, the Pacific Mail Steamship Company should not be allowed any compensation for the transportation of troops to that point.

Mr. HAYDEN. There were American merchants there, too.

Mr. CANNON. Of course there were American merchants there, and there was the railway that crosses the isthmus, and I am sorry to hear one of the principal leaders in this Democratic House, under this Democratic administration, say here, in reply to a proposition to make an appropriation of $1,600 to pay for the transportation of troops, to pay for service rendered at the request of President Cleveland, that that service is the price which private citizens of the United States have to pay for the protection of their rights guaranteed under solemn treaty. If that is to be the doctrine, let us understand it.

I am glad the gentleman has frankly avowed it. I want to see whether or not citizens of the United States down there, or citizens of the United States in any part of the world, when their rights under the laws and the treaties that extend to every man, woman, and child of the sixty millions of our people are invaded, whether they must first put their hands in their pockets and furnish the money with which to enforce their rights before they can be protected. I trust the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] will withdraw that statement from the RECORD, for it does no credit to him and no credit to the House.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LONG. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois whether there was not a contract made with these transportation companies by which the price was fixed.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, yes.

Mr. LONG. A contract was made by the Government, which was aware of the purpose for which the troops were sent to Panama, and the price agreed upon.

Mr. CANNON. Certainly; $10 for privates and $20 for officers is the price agreed upon.

Mr. LONG. Then I understand, Mr. Chairman, that this is a deficiency appropriation to pay expenses incurred by the Government under a contract which the Government made, knowing the purpose for which the troops were to be transported, and which was made by authority of the statute to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] has referred. Now, it seems to me that there is no reason why this indebtedness which the Government has incurred by a contract made under authority of law should not be paid.

Mr. BURNES. I will say to my friend from Massachusetts that if any contract was made for the transportation of these troops I have not been able to find it, and I would be glad if the gentleman who asserts that there was such a contract would furnish some evidence of it.

Mr. LONG. The gentleman from Illinois assures me that it is the fact.

Mr. CANNON. I will remind the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] that an officer of the Navy Department was before us, and stated that the contract price as fixed and agreed upon was $10 for each private and $20 for every officer, being the same as in a case which appears elsewhere in the bill where a memorandum of a similar contract in the case of the Marine Corps is set out.

Mr. BURNES. I have but a few words to say in opposition to the amendment proposed by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Illinois. In the first place, I might well claim that this is not a deficiency either under the law or under any former appropriation. If entitled to consideration at all, it is only so entitled as a private claim.

But I will say further to my friend from Illinois that I am greatly surprised at his proposition to pay this claim of the Panama Steamship Company. If I were invited to the gentleman's hospitable and elegant home—and being not half so ferocious in social intercourse as he seems to be in his public utterances, he would make a visit exceedingly pleasant; and if the gentleman were to meet me at the depot and tender me a ride to his house (which he would be sure to do if he knew I was coming), and should then turn around and charge me fare, I would not be more surprised than I am at his present proposition.

While thousands of meritorious claims are pending upon our Calendars, it is proposed that we rush in frantic haste and pay a steamship company a claim for the transportation of men who, upon the eager demand of the company to the Government, were sent down to protect their property.

It may be that this is a meritorious claim; but I submit to my friend from Illinois that the representative of the Navy Department did not say there was a contract made for the transportation of these men. He said that the prices charged were the ordinary prices charged to private parties for transportation—$10 in the steerage and $20 for cabin passage.

I have no feeling in this matter, no wish except to do justice to all parties. This looks to me like an unconscionable and indecent claim on the part of this steamship company. Therefore I oppose its payment, at any rate on this appropriation bill, whatever may be its merits when it comes to be considered by the House as a claim.

Mr. HAYDEN. I wish to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] to the fact that at the time referred to there were American merchants on the isthmus demanding to be protected by the United States Government. The United States Navy had not protected them; they had lost their property, and they demanded that the United States should send down troops there for the protection of their property. The fact was that by the neglect or the want of ability of the commanding officer of the United States steamship Galena, which was down there, a great amount of property was destroyed. In consequence of this the demand was made that United States troops should be sent down there to afford protection; and the Navy Department had to send down a distinguished naval officer, Commander McCalla, with a naval force, for the purpose of protecting the property not only of the Panama Railroad Company but of the merchants who were properly there and who were entitled to protection.

Mr. BURNES. I will ask the gentleman this question: Did he ever know merchants at any place to object to the sending of troops or masses of men of any sort to that place; and is it not likely that these merchants made about as much by the troops going there as they would have lost if the troops had not gone?

Mr. HAYDEN. I will say in reply that I know of merchants who lost hundreds of thousands of dollars of property there, who only asked to be protected, and who are now urging the State Department to investigate the matter and bring to some conclusion the claims which they have against the Colombian Government. Under these circumstances, it seems to me that for the protection of these merchants (leaving out of consideration the railroad company) this was a necessary expense.

Mr. HOLMAN. This subject was considered by the Committee on Appropriations, and this item was not thought to be a proper one, at least for this appropriation bill. If there was a contract in the regular way for the transportation of these troops, it is clear that it would be covered by the ample appropriations made for the current year; and there is no necessity for coming to Congress about the matter. On the other hand, if such was not the case, if the transaction was an irregular one, the claim for compensation stands upon the same footing as any other claim. While it is our rule to refer to the Committee on Claims all claims of private parties, I see no reason why we should make an exception with reference to a quasi-public organization such as the Pacific Mail Steamship Company. I think Congress should not make a discrimination in favor of the more powerful as against the less powerful.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand that this deficiency arose by reason of the Department not having funds to pay the expenses incident to transporting troops to the isthmus. Is not that true?

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no definite statement of that kind.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It is true, however.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am not aware of that definite fact.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Does not my friend know that these bills should be paid?

Mr. HOLMAN. If the expense was actually incurred by the Government in a legitimate way it ought to be paid. If the troops were sent down by the Government upon its own volition, very good. If sent down there at the instance and in the interest of the Pacific Mail Steamship Company, upon the ground of the duty of the Government to protect the right of transit across the isthmus, then a very interesting question would arise, how far the Government should pay for the transportation of troops shipped at the instance of the corporation whose rights were to be protected?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It is an obligation resting on this Government to protect the rights of our citizens wherever our flag floats.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are important interests on both shores. Troops went there. Their expense seems to be reasonably established. At any event, coming to the other point, is not this a private claim against the Government, which under our rules should go to the Committee on Claims?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Not at all. The gentleman will not say the President usurped authority in dispatching this force of the United States to protect the rights of American citizens? If a single man had been unlawfully and against his right taken from the deck of an American steamer the President of the United States would, if necessary, have summoned the whole power of the Government to demand redress. The President was bound to protect the rights of our citizens who were upon the isthmus. In this case he was especially charged with that duty by virtue of treaty stipulations.

In the discharge of his duty the Executive dispatched a force to the point of danger, and in executing that order of the President of the United States the Pacific Mail Company carried troops to the isthmus and now presents its bill to the Government for payment, and strangely enough we gravely refuse to pay that bill.

If it had been a British line that carried the troops no objection would have been raised. Not a particle, sir. If it had been a Mexican line there would have been no objection raised. If it had been a Brazilian line, or a French line, or any other line but an American line of steamers there would have been no objection raised on this floor. But because American citizens, our own countrymen, have transported American troops for the protection of the rights of American citizens in recognition of and response to a demand made under obligation devolved upon us by treaty stipulations, we refuse to pay the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I want to add only a word. We place ourselves in a humiliating position before the world by refusing to pay this just demand upon us.

Mr. SPRINGER. The only question presented here is whether this matter belongs to this appropriation bill or not. It certainly, in my judgment, ought to be ruled out on the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. We did not reserve the point of order.

Mr. LONG. The question is on the merits of the measure.

Mr. SPRINGER. I thought it was upon the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I will send up to be read by the Clerk section 3732 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I wish the gentleman from Illinois would state whether these bills have been properly audited and passed upon?

Mr. BURNES. I will answer that they have not.

Mr. CANNON. I will answer the gentleman's question as soon as the section of the statute has been read.

The Clerk read as follows:

No contract or purchase on behalf of the United States shall be made, unless the same is authorized by law or is under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment, except in the War and Navy Departments, for clothing, subsistence, forage, fuel, quarters, or transportation, which, however, shall not exceed the necessities of the current year.

Mr. CANNON. Now, in reply to the question of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ADAMS] I will say, as he knows, so far as the auditing of accounts in the Treasury is concerned, they can not be audited until two years after the money has been covered into the Treasury, or two years after the claim has accrued. It is not necessary these accounts should be audited by the Treasury Department. Here is a contract to do certain work authorized by that section of the statute just read, entered into by the Executive of the United States. After the work has been done in pursuance of contract made under that law the Secretary of the Navy forwards a statement to that effect through the Secretary of the Treasury and asks for an appropriation to pay the bill we have incurred. That is the whole case.

I wish to add only a word. If the money is not to be paid, then you should turn around and instead of making an implied censure of the Executive there should be a censure of the President in express terms. This was his expenditure, made under the law for the protection of American citizens, and now after the expense has been incurred under the order of the Executive you propose to try to cheat, and I measure my words, the men who furnished this transportation to the Government in its time of need. I do not hold myself as bound to defend the Executive, but I do say this expenditure was made in pursuance of law, and in my opinion it is not honest to refuse to pay the bill. Why is it that gentlemen will insist on a course of action touching public matters that they would scorn to adopt as unconscionable between man and man? Is this reform?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 76, noes 42.

Mr. BURNES. I do not make the point of no quorum, but give notice I will demand the yeas and nays on this amendment in the House.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment to W. H. Dice for boxing and packing instruments for the Nautical Almanac Office, $14.56.

Mr. DOCKERY. I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, a few days since while the House was engaged in a discussion of a proposition to repair the dry-dock at Brooklyn the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] manifested seeming solicitude in behalf of our Navy, and desired to know from the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs "if there was any intention to do anything toward building a navy this or next year."

Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to reply to this question, and I have only referred to it in this connection because it suggested the fact that the present deplorable condition of our Navy is due to the indifference and mismanagement of the Republican party. During the long period in which that party dominated our national politics liberal appropriations were made for the support of this great Department of the Government. From 1866 to 1885 inclusive the Government expended for the maintenance of the naval establishment $419,512,058.17; and that the House and country may know that I have not misstated the amount I will give the annual appropriations for the period in question.

Year.	Amount.	Year.	Amount.
1866	$43,285,662 00	1877	$14,958,035 61
1867	31,074,965 90	1878	17,664,958 25
1868	26,270,426 39	1879	14,827,854 14
1869	19,862,613 29	1880	13,536,521 28
1870	22,206,591 64	1881	15,686,671 66
1871	19,867,529 36	1882	15,024,316 33
1872	21,729,924 53	1883	15,291,169 33
1873	23,730,815 89	1884	17,293,167 47
1874	30,859,347 46	1885	16,021,461 52
1875	21,400,655 43
1876	18,919,970 69	Total	419,512,058 17

In other words, the Government has appropriated for the support and maintenance of the Navy an annual average of $20,975,602.95. Not only this, Mr. Chairman, but of the above enormous total of $419,512,058.17 it is estimated by the Secretary of the Navy that $90,000,000 can and must properly be charged to the construction, repair, and equipment of vessels, being an annual average of $4,500,000.

At a recent discussion in another body the declaration was made that not one-twentieth of the entire cost of our naval establishment had been expended in the construction, repair, and equipment of vessels. The official figures that I here present are from the books of the Naval Department, and clearly demonstrate the incorrectness of the statement, and show that instead of one-twentieth, about one-fifth of the total amount has been expended for the construction, repair, and equipment of vessels.

Now, Mr. Chairman, in view of these facts—and I challenge their successful contradiction—it is proper that the House and the country know the present condition of our Navy as contrasted with its condition in 1866. Permit me, in this connection, to read the following letter from the Secretary of the Navy:

NAVY DEPARTMENT, Washington, May 25, 1886.

SIR: Replying to your telegram of this date I have to say that there were three hundred and twenty vessels of all classes on the Navy list in January, 1866, including those being built, laid up at the several stations, and those in commission for service. During the previous year (1865) three hundred and forty-nine vessels were disposed of by sale, and twenty-six lost or transferred from the Navy to owners or to other branches of the Government.

There are at present on the list eighty-seven vessels of all classes, including those being built, laid up, and those in commission for service, and of these only thirty-seven are considered serviceable.

Very respectfully,

W. C. WHITNEY, Secretary of the Navy.

Hon. A. M. DOCKERY,
House of Representatives.

To recapitulate, Mr. Chairman, in 1866 the Navy consisted of three-hundred and twenty vessels. In 1885, notwithstanding a total expenditure of $419,512,058.17 in its behalf, $90,000,000 of which was expended for the construction, repair, and equipment of vessels, the navy-list only shows eighty-seven vessels, thirty-seven of which are considered serviceable.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Naval Academy:

For deficiency in appropriation for expenses of the Board of Visitors to the United States Naval Academy in June, 1885, $363.61.

Mr. BURNES. I desire to call the attention of my friend from Illinois to the paragraph which has just been read.

Mr. CANNON. Well I do not know, Mr. Chairman, that I can shed any more light on that clause than the gentleman from Missouri himself. I think that there are some documents, perhaps some papers, that the gentleman from Missouri has by his side which may furnish the necessary light, and he can use them, if he desires, better than I.

I believe that a criticism upon, or rather an explanation of that item, for the particular item is all right, would come more aptly from him than from myself, because if I were to make it it might perhaps be held that I was guilty of partisanship; and as the expenditure was made which led up to this deficiency under the present administration, and being an expenditure which I think he and I both agree was largely uncalled for, I will leave to the gentleman from Missouri the explanation of the same.

Mr. BURNES. I wanted to call the attention of my colleague to the paragraph for the reason that it seems to me he is much more delighted with speech or a chance of speech than myself. I felt that it was the duty of one or both of us to call the attention of the committee to this item, and I shall not hesitate to do so.

The committee is aware that we annually, I believe, send a Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy at Annapolis. Three of that board for this year were members of this House. No blame can be properly attached to these gentlemen, nor can any charge against either one of the Representatives be made. They knew nothing about the matter to which I now desire to call attention; nothing whatever. It did not come under their observation. They were entitled to mileage for going to Annapolis and returning. Fifteen hundred dollars were appropriated to pay the expenses of the Board of Visitors, including mileage to and from Annapolis. The mileage amounted to some $360.

That $1,500 so appropriated was spent in riot and debauchery or worse; not riot and debauchery on the part of the members of the House and Senate who attended the exercises at Annapolis, but on the part of the disbursing officer, who expended the $1,500 without paying one cent of the mileage due to the members of Congress who attended; and now he comes and asks that this deficiency be approved. The $1,500 is gone and $360 additional is required, which latter amount was justly due to the members of the House and Senate who attended to and discharged faithfully the duties for which they were selected. I repeat, they knew nothing of the expenditure, and I now ask the Clerk to read a list of the items of expenditures submitted by this disbursing officer.

The Clerk read as follows:

Itemized statement of expenditures of the appropriation for mileage and expenses of the Board of Visitors, Naval Academy, fiscal year of 1885.

Subvoucher	1. J. S. Hopkins	$23 70
	2. Cushings & Bailey	6 59
	3. R. Courtney & Bro	11 44
	4. Shirley & Son	59 02
	5. Hamilton Easter & Sons	4 39
	6. Adolph Robeck	44 50
	7. E. G. Webster & Bro	72 25
	8. G. Chipman & Co	4 00
	9. J. H. Vansant	$39 75
	10. Joseph Beardmore	30 51
	11. A. & E. R. R. R. Co	5 55
	12. J. S. M. Basil	15 89
	13. Naval storekeeper	2 95
	14. Jacob Lerian	66 80
	15. W. H. Keister & Co	66 05
	16. S. R. Scoggins & Sons	28 65
	17. Commissary department, Naval Academy	158 18
	18. R. Courtney & Bro	277 41
	19. Servants	122 00
	20. Naval Academy Club	27 50
			$1,067 13

MILEAGE.

Voucher No.	212. William G. Sumner	47 36
	213. O. M. Poe	105 44
	214. J. N. A. Griswold	35 52
	215. J. S. Grinnell	63 04
	216. A. M. Craig	152 64
	217. William Reed	5 44
			409 44
			1,476 57
Balance deposited to credit of appropriation "Board of Visitors, Naval Academy, 1885"			23 43
			1,500 00

No. 1.—Bought of J. S. Hopkins, Baltimore.

1885.
May 28.	1 ice-crusher	$6 00
	1 fish kettle	2 50
	1 butter kettle	3 00
	1 milk kettle, 50 cents, $1	1 50
May 29.	1 saucepan, 75 cents, 85 cents, $1, $1.10	3 70
	2 saucepans, $1.25	2 50
May 30.	1 meat saw	2 50
	1 cleaver	2 00
		23 70

No. 2.—Bought of Cushings & Bailey, Baltimore.

May 26.	Paper and envelopes	$3 95
June 9.	Assorted lot gum bands	1 64
	2 boxes thumb tacks	1 00
		6 59

No. 3.—Bought of R. Courtney & Co., Baltimore.

May 29.	2 dozen beer, $1.30; 2 dozen Bass ale, $3.80	$5 10
	2 dozen ginger ale, $2.50; 1 bottle St. Croix rum, $1.25	3 75
June 1.	4 bottles Congress water	60
	1 bottle of Angostura	75
June 2.	2 dozen beer	1 30
June 3.	1 quart Cognac brandy	1 30
	1 quart of cooking wine	40
	2 dozen appolinaris water	3 60
June 5.	2 dozen ginger ale	2 50
		19 30
June 8.	By ½ dozen beer returned	$0 98
	By 1 1/12 dozen appolinaris water	2 55
	By 1 dozen Bass ale	1 90
	By 1 1/12 dozen ginger ale	1 98
	By 3 bottles Congress water	45
		7 86
		11 44

No. 4.—Bought of Shirley & Son, Baltimore.

May 30.	½ dozen ewers and basins, at $10.50	$5 25
	½ dozen slop jars, at $10.50	5 25
	½ dozen pitchers, at $2.25	1 12
	½ dozen chambers, at $8	4 00
	½ dozen water carries, at $7.50	3 75
	4 dozen plates, at $2.11	8 44
	4 dozen plates, at $1.85	7 40
	4 dozen plates, deep, at $1.67	6 68
	6 dozen plates, deep, at $1.35	8 10
	3 dozen plates, at $1.50, $2.25, $2.11	5 86
	½ dozen waiters, 2 at $5.50 per dozen, 4 at $6.75 per dozen	3 17
		59 02

No. 5.—Bought of Hamilton Easter & Sons, Baltimore.

May 23.	Piece 10-4 New York Mills, 33¾ yards, at 13 cents	$4 39

No. 6.—Bought of Adolph Robeck, Annapolis.

June 1.	2 gallons cream	$4 00
	4 pounds cake	2 00
	1 gallon cream	2 00
June 2.	4 gallons Blambier, $3; 3 pounds cake, $1.50	4 50
	1½ gallons cream, $3; 1 gallon cream, $2	5 00
June 3.	1 gallon Blambier, $3; 3 pounds cake, $1.50	4 50
June 4.	1½ gallon Sherbet, $3; 1½ gallon Roman punch, $4.50	7 50
	1 gallon vanilla, $2; 4 pounds cake, $2	4 00
June 5.	2 gallons vanilla cream, $4; 1 gallon chocolate, $2	6 00
	2 pounds cake	1 00
	1 gallon Blambier, $3; 2 pounds cake, $1	4 00
		44 50

No. 7.—Bought of E. G. Webster & Bro., New York.

May 26.	3 dozen S. H. med. knives, square handle, $3	$9 00
	3 dozen S. H. dess. knives, square handle, $2.75	8 25
	3 dozen French med. forks, $7.25	21 75
	3 dozen French dess. forks, $6.25	18 75
	4 dozen French teaspoons, $3.62½	14 50
		72 25

No. 8.—Bought of George Chipman & Co., Baltimore.

May 28.	1 clothes-basket	$2 75
	1 market-basket	1 25
		4 00

No. 9.—J. H. Vansant, Annapolis.

June 8.	To carriage hire and hauling from May 25 to June 6	$39 75

No. 10.—Bought of Joseph Beardmore, Annapolis.

May 29.	1 quart cream	$0 25
May 30.	1 gallon cream, $1; ½ gallon milk, 37 cents	1 37
	1 dozen eggs	2 20
May 31.	½ gallon cream, 50 cents; 1 gallon milk, 25 cents	0 75
June 1.	3 quarts cream, 75 cents; 1½ gallons milk, 37 cents	1 12
June 2.	1½ gallons cream, $1.50; 2 gallons milk, 50 cents	2 00
	1 dozen chickens, $6; 11 dozen eggs, $2.20	8 20
June 3.	2 gallons milk, 50 cents; 1½ gallons cream, $1.50	2 00
June 4.	2 gallons milk, 50 cents; 1½ gallons cream, $1.50	2 00
	10 dozen eggs, $2; 2 gallons milk, 50 cents	2 50
June 5.	1½ gallons cream, $1.50; ½ gallon cream, 50 cents	2 00
June 6.	½ gallon milk, 12 cents; 1 dozen chickens, $6	6 12
		30 51

No. 11.—To Annapolis and Elk Ridge Railroad Company.

May 27.	2 boxes, 1 can, crackers	$0 25
May 28.	1 box, 1 cask	25
	4 packages meat, 1 case chickens	30
May 29.	1 can turtle, 20 boxes, 4 barrels 2 crates, 1 bag, 1 box	3 75
	9 boxes	1 00
		5 55

No. 12.—Bought of J. M. Basil, Annapolis.

May 26.	½ ton coal, No. 3	$2 75
	¼ cord kindling wood	3 50
	Ice from May 28 to June 5, 6,425 pounds	9 64
		15 89

No. 13.—Bought of naval storekeeper's department, Naval Academy.

May 25.	Soap, $1.50; lt. papers, 78; blacking, 15 cents; matches, 52 cents.	$2 95

No. 14.—Bought of Jacob Lerian, Baltimore.

June 2.	145 pounds beef, at 20 cents	$29 00
	73 pounds lamb, at 20 cents	14 60
	16 ducks	9 60
	24 spring chickens	10 00
	6 old chickens	3 60
		66 80

No. 15.—J. P. Loomis, board-house, bought of William H. Keister & Co., Baltimore.

May 29.	2 boxes tomatoes	$6 50
	1 box onions	2 25
	2 boxes oranges	4 00
	1 lemons	4 50
	2 bunches bananas	4 00
	2 bushels new potatoes	7 00
	2 crates strawberries, 64 boxes, at 20 cents	12 80
	1 barrel apples	4 00
	1 box peas	2 15
	4 boxes beets, at $1.25	5 00
	1 box beans	1 75
	1 box egg-plant	2 00
	1 box squash	1 00
	8 bunches asparagus	1 10
	2 dozen cakes	75
	20 heads lettuce	50
	1 barrel turnips	2 00
	25 pine-apples	3 00
	½ box raisins	1 75
		66 05

Received payment,

WM. H. KEISTER & CO.

JUNE 13, 1885.

No. 16.—J. P. Loomis, board-house, bought of S. R. Scroggins & Sons, Baltimore.

May 29.	17 pounds boiling-rock, at 20 cents	$3 40
	11 pounds sheepshead, at 15 cents	1 65
	12 pounds roe shad, at 10 cents	1 20
	25 pounds white perch, at 15 cents	3 75
	5 dozen frogs, at $1.50	7 50
	6 dozen hard crabs, at 25 cents	1 50
	10 dozen large soft crabs, at 50 cents	5 00
	31 pounds green turtle, at 16 cents	4 65
		28 65

Paid June 13, 1885, to J. C. Scroggins, one of the firm of S. R. Scroggins & Sons.

No. 17.—Board of Visitors, Naval Academy, 1885, to commissary department, Naval Academy, dr.

May 30.	48 yards toweling, $8.70; 6 bottles olive oil, $4.50	$13 20
	20 pounds cut sugar, $1.80; 20 pounds powdered sugar, $1.80	3 60
	20 pounds granulated sugar, $1.80; 20 pounds brown sugar, $1.40	3 20
	18 cans sardines, $3; 2 pounds mustard, 60 cents	3 60
	2 dozen cans tomatoes, $2.50; 2 pounds black pepper, 60 cents	3 10
	1 gallon maple sirup, $1.75; 1 bottle cayenne pepper, 60 cents	2 35
	35 pounds lard, $3.50; 2 gallons vinegar, 60 cents	4 10
	50 pounds salt, 50 cents; 30 pounds butter, $15	15 50
	25 pounds corn-meal, 50 cents; 20 pounds soap, $2	2 50
	20 pounds bacon, $2 40; 3 cans yeast powder, $1.50	3 90
	10 pounds oat-meal, 60 cents; 4 packs toothpicks, $2	2 60
	10 pounds hominy, 60 cents; 10 pounds wheat grits, 60 cents	1 20
	22 dozen eggs, $6.10; 98 loaves bread, $5.88	11 98
	29 dozen rolls, $2.90; 65 quarts strawberries, $13	15 90
	2 bushels potatoes, $4; 110 pounds flour, $4.40	8 40
	4 gallons milk, $1.20; 20 pounds beef, $5	6 20
	10 pounds rice, $1; 107 pounds fresh fish, $10.70	11 70
	25 dozen soft crabs, $10; 40 dozen hard crabs, $6	16 00
	6 bushels peas, $6.75; 40 pounds veal, $4.40	11 15
	10 bunches asparagus, $1.50; 15 bunches lettuce, $1.50	3 00
	Laundry work	15 00
	Total	158 18

Received payment.

J. PORTER LOOMIS,
Paymaster U. S. Navy, and Commissary, N. A.

No. 18.—Paymaster J. P. Loomis, board-house, purchased from R. Courtney & Brother, Baltimore.

May 27.	300 Pedro Murias londres, at $13, $39; 350 Golden Eagle conchas, at $11, $28.50		$77 50
	3 cases XXX C. H. whisky, at $18, $54; 3 cases Chillingsworth sherry, at $30, $90		144 00
	3 3-pound plum puddings, at 75 cents, $2.25; 6 2-pound cans plum pudding, at 50 cents, $3		5 25
	6 bottles old Hennessey, at $2.50, $15; 6 cases R., C. & B. claret, at $6, $36		51 00
	1 case Appolinaris, $7.50; 30 pounds print butter, at 45 cents, $13.50		21 00
	1 pound E. breakfast tea, $1; 1 pound Imperial tea, $1		2 00
	15 pounds roasted Java and Mocha, at 30 cents, $4.50; 1 tin Albert buscuit, $1.76		6 26
	1 tin cream crackers, $1.24; 1 pineapple cheese, $1.10		2 34
	1 Edam cheese, $1.25; 2 bottles Parmacan cheese, at 60 cents, $1.20		2.45
	5 pounds P. S. almonds, at 35 cents, $1.75; 5 pounds pecans, at 25 cents, 75 cents		2.50
	6 glasses currant jelly, at 30 cents, $1.80; 2 bottles French mustard, at 25 cents, 50 cents		2.30
	2 bottles Worcestershire sauce (pints), at 50 cents, $1; 2 bottles anchovy, at 90 cents, $1.80		2.80
	2 bottles walnut catsup, at 60 cents, $1.20; 6 bottles capers, at 75 cents, $4.50		5.70
	2 bottles tomato catsup, at 15 cents, 30 cents; 6 bottles Queen olives, at 60 cents, $3.60		3.90
	3 jars English pickles, at 60 cents, $1.80; 12 cans mushrooms, $3.50		5 30
	2 pounds chocolate, at 45 cents, 90 cents; 2 whisk brooms, at 50 cents, $1		1 90
	2 blacking brushes, at 40 cents, 80 cents; 1 jar French blacking, 50 cents		1 30
	6 beef tongues, at 85 cents, $5.10; 26½ pounds ham, at 20 cents, $5.25		10 35
	1 case Appolinaris, $7.50; 100 Golden Eagle conchas, $11		18 50
	50 Carolina conchas, $6; 1 case Pommery sec, $30		36 00
			402 35
	By 5 bottles Hennessey, $12.50; 8 cans mushrooms, $2.34	$14 84
	5 bottles sherry, $12.50; 1 case XXX C. H. whisky, $18	30 50
	3 bottles olives, $1.80; 1 case Appolinaris, $7.50	9 30
	2 bottles Parmesan cheese	1 20
	2 cases R., C. & B. claret	12 00
	1 case sherry, $30; 2 bottles anchovy, $1.80	31 80
	2 bottles walnut catsup, $1.20; 5 bottles claret, $2.50	3 70
	3 jars pickles, $1.80; 2 3-pound cans plum pudding, $1.50	3 30
	4 2-pound cans plum pudding, $2; 6 bottles capers, $4.50	6 50
	6 glasses currant jelly, $1.80; 4 bottles Pommery sec, $10	11 80
			124 94
			277 41

Received payment,

R. COURTNEY & BRO.

JUNE 10, 1865.

No. 19.—Pay-roll of board-house servants.

No. 1.	Charles Davage, steward	$20 00
2.	P. Galatzo, cook	25 00
3.	H. Davage, assistant cook	15 00
4.	Delia Johnson, dish washer	9 00
5.	Harriet Gross, chambermaid	14 00
6.	M. A. Johnson, chambermaid	13 00
7.	Charles Parker, waiter	7 00
8.	James Chew, waiter	5 00
9.	Samuel Davage, waiter	5 00
10.	I. Simpkins, waiter	5 00
11.	E. Coventry, hall boy	4 00
		122 00

No. 20.—To Naval Academy Club.

1885.

June 4.	11-12 dozen champagne, at $30	$27 50

No. 212.—Professor William G. Sumner.

June 20.	Mileage from New Haven, Conn., to Annapolis and return, 592 miles, at 8 cents	$47 36

No. 213.—Lieut. Col. O. M. Poe, United States Army.

June 20.	Mileage from Detroit, Mich., to Annapolis, Md., and return, 1,318 miles, at 8 cents	$105 44

No. 214.—J. N. A. Griswold.

June 20.	Mileage from New York, N. Y., to Annapolis, Md., and return, 444 miles, at 8 cents	$35 52

No. 215.—James S. Grinnell.

June 20.	Mileage from Greenfield, Mass., to Annapolis and return, 785 miles, at 8 cents	$63 04

No. 216.—A. M. Craig.

June 20.	Mileage from Galesburg, Ill., to Annapolis, Md., and return, 1,908 miles, at 8 cents	$152 64

No. 217.—William Reed.

June 20.	Mileage from Baltimore, Md., to Annapolis and return, 68 miles, at 8 cents	$5 44

[During the reading of the foregoing remarks the hammer fell.

Mr. SPRINGER took the floor and yielded his time to have it read.

Before the reading was concluded the hammer again fell.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to have the remainder of that printed in the RECORD.

Mr. GROSVENOR. I wish some one would explain the purchase of Appolinaris water on that expedition. The rest of it I think we can understand.

Mr. FELTON. I would like to ascertain the number of gentlemen who were on this trip, because it would give some sort of illustration of their absorptive power.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out the last word.

I ask, to save time, unanimous consent that the whole of that document be printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? The Chair hears none.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I object. [Cries of "Too late!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee objects.

Some time subsequently,

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR said: As a corrective of such expenditures in future I withdraw my objection, so that the public may know of such things.

The document is printed above in full.]

Mr. CANNON. I desire to say a single word in addition to what the gentleman from Missouri has said. This was an appropriation of $1,500 for the purpose of defraying the expenses of the Board of Visitors at the Naval Academy——

Mr. DINGLEY. How many were there?

Mr. FELTON. That is what I wanted to get at.

Mr. CANNON. Six or nine; I do not know exactly the number.

Mr. DINGLEY. How long were they engaged?

Mr. CANNON. Some three or four days, I think.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. What difference does that make?

Mr. FELTON. It shows their capacity for absorption, at least.

Mr. CANNON. I wish to say, in justice to the three gentlemen who were appointed by the Speaker of the House to attend the commencement exercises at the Naval Academy, that they went there in pursuance of law; that they did not expend one cent of this money; it was expended by the authorities there; they had no power to expend a cent of it or to control its expenditure. The $1,500 was taken up by this kind of expenditures; and the pay, or the mileage rather, of these members of the House which the law allows them was not paid. Hence this deficiency was asked.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I understand that the members of the House who were appointed on the committee are in no wise subject to criticism for this expenditure?

Mr. CANNON. Not in the slightest degree in the world; they had nothing to do with it.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. It is only to carry out the new doctrine that a public office is a public trust.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Missouri has already stated, and I repeat in simple justice, that not one iota of blame attaches to any one of these gentlemen who were appointed on the part of Congress to attend at this academy. They had nothing to do with the expenditure of the money. The person to whom the blame attaches is first the officer at the Naval Academy who expended the money, and secondly it rests with the accounting officers of the Treasury who audited the account and the Department officer who submits this account here.

Mr. BURNES. Let me interrupt my colleague to say that it does not appear that this account has been audited by the accounting officers of the Treasury. It is a fact that it has not been. This deficiency is submitted because it is a matter that is due to these parties for mileage; but the accounting officers of the Treasury have not settled with this officer at Annapolis and probably will not. I hope they will not.

Mr. CANNON. Anyhow it is a deficiency. I was under the impression it had been audited by the accounting officers of the Treasury; and I think if the gentleman will inquire he will so find. But whether that be true or not, this is a deficiency submitted because the money has been used up.

Mr. DINGLEY. I desire to offer an amendment.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] a question. I find there is a great deal of misunderstanding about this matter. I would like to know to what purpose it is alleged in this document or voucher that these materials were applied? What use does it appear was made of these provisions?

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. They were used in the entertainment of the Board of Visitors.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Where were these materials used?

A MEMBER. They were absorbed, most of them.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Let us deal with this matter in a serious way. I want to understand it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I move to strike out the last word. I am free to say I do not understand this matter and want to do so, and I presume other members do. It appears a voucher has been rendered by the disbursing officer at the Annapolis Naval Academy which contains various items, such as "sardines," "dishes," "spoons," and various articles of food which he has charged to the account of the fund provided by Congress for the entertainment of the Board of Visitors to the Naval Academy.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It is not charged that the Visitors brought the spoons away with them, is it?

Mr. BOUTELLE. If the gentleman will permit me, I desire to present my own ideas as to this matter in a connected way. As I understand, the law provides for a Board of Visitors at West Point and for a Board of Visitors at Annapolis Academy, to go there annually and inspect the graduating exercises, and for other purposes. I have never been a member of the Board of Visitors at Annapolis; I have been a member of the Board of Visitors at West Point. When I was there I was informed, and I believe, that there has been very different provision made for the entertainment of the Boards of Visitors at these two Government schools. At West Point the provision of law, if I recollect, is that each member of the board shall be entitled to mileage and to his expenses, not exceeding $5 per day. And the members of the board provide themselves with entertainment at the hotel and pay their own bills. I was informed at the time, and I believe, although I have not examined the statutes carefully, that a different custom, I suppose based upon law, exists at Annapolis; that at Annapolis there has been a building erected for the express purpose of the entertainment of the Board of Visitors—a building which I believe is used during the rest of the year for other purposes, but one of the primary uses of which has been for the accommodation and entertainment of the Board of Visitors.

Therefore at Annapolis, if I am correct, the board are not quartered at a hotel, they are not provided for at a hotel, and instead of paying their own bills out of the allowance of mileage and the $5 per day, the fund appropriated by Congress is used to provide entertainment in this building for the Board of Visitors. In other words, the Government of the United States, or the authorities at Annapolis, conduct a hotel temporarily for the benefit of the Board of Visitors. Is that correct?

Mr. BINGHAM. Oh, no. There is a building owned by the Government and assigned for that purpose.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And the Board of Visitors are lodged and have quarters in that building. Where do they get their food?

Mr. BINGHAM. The food is furnished.

Mr. BOUTELLE. By whom?

Mr. BINGHAM. I do not know.

Mr. BOUTELLE. By the Government, I suppose. If I am correct in this assumption, every item in that voucher which is a legitimate item of entertainment of the guests is beyond criticism. If there are items which ought not to be provided for the sustenance of members of the board, then those items are subject to criticism and reproach. But the mere fact that there was so much saleratus and so much potatoes and all this iteration of a provision list, which might as pertinently be produced from any hotel bill of fare to bring ridicule on a member for having consumed so much beef-steak or potatoes or strawberries and cream, as the case might be, seems to me entirely aside from any question legitimately before the House.

I may be wrong in my supposition, but if I am correct in my view that the system prevails under the law and by force of law at the Naval Academy of providing for accommodations and food of the Board of Visitors under the direction of the Government officers and out of funds appropriated by Congress for that purpose, then a great deal of this criticism would fall to the ground as without any substantial basis.

Mr. HERBERT. The gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] is correct in his statement that in regard to the entertainment of the Boards of Visitors there is a difference between Annapolis and West Point. At West Point the Visitors like the Visitors to Annapolis get no salary. The theory is, their expenses only are paid.

I desire to state this matter in my own way. It is a very simple matter. Neither the Visitors to West Point nor the Visitors to Annapolis get any salary whatever. A Visitor to West Point gets $5 a day and 8 cents mileage. The Visitors to Annapolis (of whom ten are appointed, five citizens, three members of the House, and two Senators) do not get $5 a day in lieu of expenses, but they are accommodated in a building belonging to the Government.

Mr. CUTCHEON. How long are they there?

Mr. HERBERT. They are usually there for at least a week. They are entertained in a building belonging to the Government, so that nearly all the items in this list are proper. There may be some things in it that perhaps ought not to have been supplied, but I ought to say, in justice to the officer in charge there and acting the part of host, that it would be a somewhat indelicate matter for him to deny his guests whatever they might desire. That is the system that has heretofore prevailed as to the Visitors to Annapolis. The Committee on Naval Affairs, having before them a portion of these accounts, and seeing that scandals like this might arise, concluded it would be better to change the system and make provision for the Visitors to Annapolis like that made for the Visitors to West Point. So the naval appropriation bill, which you all voted for not two weeks ago changes the existing system, and makes it exactly the same as that in reference to Visitors at West Point. Fifteen hundred dollars is appropriated to pay the expenses of the Visitors, limited to $5 a day each and mileage. That is the whole matter.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. I had not a very important question to ask the gentleman, but it seemed to me that, for some reason or other, this matter was exploited here, and, as the country is sufficiently eager for scandals against Congress, I was afraid that perhaps the explanations of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. BOUTELLE] and the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HERBERT] might spoil a scandal.

Mr. HERBERT. I hope the gentleman's fears are relieved.

Mr. CUTCHEON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama whether a good many of the articles enumerated in that bill are not of permanent value?

Mr. HERBERT. I do not undertake to justify the purchase of all the articles in this list. In order to reform the system, we have made in the naval appropriation bill the change I have stated.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I think we have debated this matter long enough.

Mr. DINGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have offered a substantial amendment to which I ask the attention of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will regard the formal amendment as withdrawn, and the Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman from Maine [Mr. DINGLEY].

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no part of this sum, or of any other appropriation by Congress for the expenses of the Board of Visitors, shall be used to pay for intoxicating liquors.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Who will pay for the liquors that are drunk if that amendment is adopted? [Laughter.]

Mr. HERBERT. One word more, Mr. Chairman, in order that this matter may be properly understood. Since the naval appropriation bill passed here I have learned that it is quite possible we may have to go back to the old system, for the reason that there is no sufficiently good hotel at Annapolis to accommodate the Visitors. I do not know whether that is the fact or not, but if it is, we shall probably have to return to the old system. However, any limitations that the House may see proper to put upon an appropriation of this kind is of course proper.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York (to Mr. DINGLEY). You do not seriously press that amendment, do you?

Mr. DINGLEY. I do press it very seriously.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I am surprised.

Mr. DINGLEY. Are you opposed to the amendment?

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Oh, certainly. I shall vote against it. [Laughter.]

Mr. LORE. I desire to say, Mr. Chairman, in reference to what has been stated by the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs that the effect of the provision in the naval appropriation bill will be that no man will accept an appointment on the Board of Visitors to go to Annapolis. As it has been in the past there has been an appropriation of $1,500, so much money in hand, and with that money proper accommodations have been provided for Visitors; but the provision now in the naval bill will compel them to go out and find board at a hotel or elsewhere as best they may in the city of Annapolis, which is greatly crowded at that time, and where there is very inadequate hotel accommodation.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Better move the academy up to Newport.

Mr. LORE. Move it where you please, I do not believe that any gentleman will accept an appointment to go as Visitor to Annapolis and go round seeking to find accommodation upon such a sum of money as is allowed here. I think a great Government like ours when it sends a Board of Visitors to either of these national academies ought to provide decent accommodation for them while they are there.

Mr. SPRINGER. Such as we have in the bill just read here.

Mr. LORE. I beg the gentleman's pardon; there is a mistake about that; the Naval Committee did not have information before them to ascertain what was correct.

Mr. COMPTON. I wish to correct my friend from Delaware [Mr. LORE], who is certainly not familiar with the condition of things in the city of Annapolis. I undertake to say he will find there as good a hotel as he will find almost anywhere in this country.

A MEMBER. And a good bar?

Mr. COMPTON. A first-class bar, since local option was defeated. [Laughter.]

Mr. LORE. A first-class bar, and that is all.

Mr. COMPTON. Besides the hotel accommodations there are good boarding houses.

Mr. BURNES. I desire to read the paragraph in the last appropriation bill by which $1,500 was appropriated. It is—

For expenses of Board of Visitors to Naval Academy, $1,500.

Now I will call attention to the law authorizing the appointment of this Board of Visitors. It is a provision in the act of February 14, 1879:

That from and after the passage of this act there shall be appointed every year, in the following manner, a Board of Visitors, to attend the annual examination of the academy: Seven persons shall be appointed by the President, and two Senators and three members of the House of Representatives shall be designated as Visitors by the Vice-President or President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives, respectively, at the session of Congress next preceding such examination. Each member of said board shall receive not exceeding 8 cents per mile traveled by the most direct route from his residence to Annapolis, and 8 cents per mile for each mile from said place to his residence on returning.

Now, Mr. Chairman, as it has been suggested that the accounting officers of the Treasury Department have passed upon the bill the items of which have been read, I desire to have placed upon record a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury to the chairman of our committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, June 5, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to forward herewith an itemized statement of the expenditures made from the appropriation for expenses of Board of Visitors, Naval Academy, for the last fiscal year, prepared by the Fourth Auditor in response to your telegram of the 4th instant.

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Acting Secretary.

Hon. SAMUEL J. RANDALL,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
House of Representatives, United States.

Mr. BURNES. I hope that now the debate on this paragraph will close.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] will state who audited the bill which has been read.

Mr. BURNES. It has not been audited by anybody.

Mr. SPRINGER. Then who incurred those expenses?

Mr. BURNES. That report of expenditures comes, I understand, from the quartermaster of the United States Navy at Annapolis.

Mr. SPRINGER. Can you give me his name?

Mr. BURNES. I can not.

Mr. SPRINGER. I would like to put it "on my list."

Mr. BEACH. He "would not be missed." [Laughter.]

Mr. FINDLAY. Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a single word about this matter. However extravagant or however moderate the items in this bill may appear to be, there can be no doubt that the men who furnished these provisions or these liquors upon bona fide orders from an officer of the Government ought to be paid. That is one question. When they have been paid, then there may arise another question—how far the officer who gave these orders was justified in such an extravagent expenditure. But surely nobody will question that charges fairly made for these things by the persons who furnished them upon the order of an officer of the Government ought to be paid, let the consequences be what they may so far as concerns the officer who assumed to give the order. If the bill itself is a fair and moderate one, we have no right to refuse payment simply because the officer who ordered the expenditure may have traveled outside of the rules of propriety.

Mr. DINGLEY. I will ask the gentleman whether any officer of the Government is warranted in purchasing liquors to be paid for by the tax-payers.

Mr. FINDLAY. I can only answer that question by saying that I suppose there has been a uniform custom to order such things; and whether the custom be good or bad, the men who furnished the articles upon the order of an officer of the Government have a perfect right to do so and are entitled to payment.

Mr. DINGLEY. The custom had better be broken up now.

Mr. FINDLAY. Then break it up in some other way. The proper way to break it up is not by repudiating an honest bill. Break it up, if you please, by constitutional amendment in favor of prohibition, or break it up by any other appropriate method.

Mr. DINGLEY. The officer may be personally responsible; but this is not an indebtedness which should be borne by the tax-payers.

Mr. BEACH. I have understood that members of the Board of Visitors are in the habit of taking their families and their friends with them to the academy, and that a large portion of the expense arises in this way. Is that so?

Mr. FINDLAY. I do not know a single thing about it.

Mr. BEACH. As you come from that part of the country, I supposed you might know.

Mr. FINDLAY. I do not know and I do not care anything about it. That is not the question I am raising. I was not one of the Board of Visitors; and I am not interested in any of the things furnished.

Mr. BEACH. I understand it has always been the practice of the Boards of Visitors to take their families and their friends with them.

Mr. FINDLAY. I can not say how that is; I never was on one of those boards at all. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BRAGG. We seem to be adopting the usual rule to avoid observations of our acts by making an attack upon an officer at the Naval Academy. Those gentlemen whom we sent there from the House and from the other branch and citizens to act as the members of the Board of Visitors have been, ever since that board has been appointed, treated as invited guests by the officers of the academy. I do not think any officer at the academy has ever paid for things they did not want, and if there is any attack to be made by the House in reference to the supply of Appolinaris water, beer, or brandy to the Board of Visitors the attack should be upon the board that ordered those articles and not on the officer who supplied them in obedience to their order.

This $1,500 pays the expenses of the board. That means the expenses not only at Annapolis but the expense of their travel from their respective places of residence to Annapolis and from Annapolis back to their homes.

Mr. BEACH. The gentleman is in error, as the Board of Visitors receive mileage.

Mr. BRAGG. That covers all the expense, mileage and all. For the Military Academy at West Point the appropriation is $3,000. During the present year of the Board of Visitors one came from New Orleans, one from San Francisco, one from Georgia, one from South Carolina, and one from New England. They were entitled to draw mileage at 8 cents a mile coming and going. This is the way this $1,500 is disbursed, the difference between West Point and Annapolis being that the Government owns its own building at Annapolis and they have provided for the expense in that Government building. If they are to supply them with what they are to eat they must of course buy plates to eat it off.

Then, sir, while the criticism is pleasant and quite amusing there is nothing in it except overhauling grocers' accounts, butchers' accounts, laundresses' accounts, and all the other accounts which go to make up the accounts of this Board of Visitors.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, the mode of paying and entertaining the Board of Visitors at Annapolis and West Point up to five or six years ago was the same, to wit: There was a gross sum of money out of which was paid the mileage fixed by law, and the balance was used in entertaining the Board of Visitors. At West Point complaint was made there was extravagance in the provision for the Board of Visitors, and the fund for their entertainment was superseded by a per diem provision. The Government has no building at West Point, as has been already stated, for their accomodation.

When this gross sum was allowed wine was provided, but not in excess. I never heard of any indecorum there. It was usual at West Point, but I never heard of any excess. I never heard of anything of the kind.

At Annapolis the Government has a building provided with rooms and bedding for the entertainment of the Board of Visitors and members of the families who come along with them. Their entertainment is paid out of that fund.

That is the situation. I do not understand this particular bill could have anything to do with the expense. These gentlemen are entitled by law to payment of mileage. We have nothing to do with their entertainment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Maine, which will be again read.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. FINDLAY. Let me ask, Mr. Chairman, if that applies to the present appropriation bill?

The CHAIRMAN. Gentlemen must determine for themselves as to the scope of the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 58, noes 32.

Mr. HILL. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. DINGLEY and Mr. BURNES were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 79, noes 47.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking the gentleman from Missouri a question as to the character of the amendment which has just been adopted. As I understand from him, the item of expense that is herein provided for is simply for the mileage of the Board of Visitors to Annapolis which has not been paid, amounting to some $360?

Mr. BURNES. That is its object.

Mr. BLOUNT. The amendment of the gentleman from Maine provides that no part of the money herein approved for expenses of the Board of Visitors shall be used in payment for intoxicating liquors. Is not that simply a declaration which goes to the effect that that money, the $360, shall not be used to buy any wines or liquors with?

Mr. BURNES. In answer to the gentleman from Georgia I will state that this item is expressly provided here to pay three members of the House their mileage for visiting the academy at Annapolis; and this amendment has no place here whatever. Of course it is just thrown in for the purpose of giving gentlemen a chance to express their feelings and opinions on the whisky question.

Mr. BLOUNT. The only effect of it, if it be operative at all, then would be upon the gentlemen who get this money in their pocket, that they shall not use it to pay for wine or liquor?

Mr. BURNES. Of course that is all it does.

Mr. REAGAN. But how does it happen, let me ask the gentleman, that they have a liquor bill there to be settled?

Mr. BLOUNT. That is not my question at all. The language of the amendment is that no part of the money herein appropriated shall be used for paying for wines or liquors for any Board of Visitors.

Mr. BURNES. It can not operate.

Mr. BLOUNT. Of course it has no operative effect whatever.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then let us make it so that it will be operative.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If they want whisky let them pay for it themselves.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I wish to ask a question of the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. There is nothing pending before the committee.

Mr. LONG. I call for the regular order.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I move to strike out the last word.

I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri if the amount originally appropriated has been used by the officers in charge of this appropriation——

Mr. BURNES. I understand the gentleman's inquiry to be——

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I have not completed it. The question I desire to ask is: Has the amount that was originally appropriated for the expenses of the Visitors to Annapolis been expended; and, if so, was it expended, or any portion of it, in purchasing intoxicating liquors for the Visitors; and, if so, is there any way to make the persons who did it responsible for expending it in that way instead of expending it in the payment of mileage?

Mr. BURNES. I would suggest, in answer to my friend from Mississippi, that the report goes to show that $1,863.61 were expended by this quartermaster for the expenses of this visiting board, and that $363.61 of that sum remain unpaid for the mileage of three members of this House who made that visit. Now, according to the quartermaster, he has not only expended the $1,500 but needs $364 more to complete the performance.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Has the committee the items of the account for that $1,800?

Mr. BURNES. The items have been read from the desk.

Mr. REAGAN. Has the liquor been paid for?

Mr. BURNES. It has not been paid for and will not be paid for until the account of this officer has passed through the regular channels and been approved and gone to the accounting officers of the Treasury and been allowed there.

Mr. BYNUM. I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The regular order is being proceeded with. The gentleman from Mississippi has offered an amendment, to strike out the last word.

Mr. BYNUM. Can that amendment be offered after the section has been passed?

The CHAIRMAN. The section is still open for amendment.

Mr. BYNUM. But can the section, after it has been amended and passed, be reopened for amendment, except in the House, on a motion to reconsider?

The CHAIRMAN. Only certain words of the section have been agreed to. The section itself is still open for amendment.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, the point to which I wish to emphasize my dissent here is this: That when an appropriation is made of a specific amount to be legitimately expended to pay the expenses of the Board of Visitors or anybody else, if a part of that amount be squandered by the officer to whom that appropriation is committed in the purchase of intoxicating liquors, or any other misappropriation of that fund, that he shall be permitted to come here, and instead of making it good himself ask Congress to appropriate the money again to such purpose; when if he had appropriated it originally to a legitimate purpose there would have been enough to defray all of the expenses.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. You cheat the grocer if you do not pay him.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I would let that be a question between the quartermaster and the grocer. If the quartermaster undertakes to incur grocers' bills for which this Government is in no way responsible, let that be a matter between him and the quartermaster.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. How is he to know?

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Every grocer in this country ought to know that intoxicating liquors are not necessary expenses of a board of visitors.

Mr. BRAGG. Does the gentleman think the members of Congress should sue the quartermaster for their mileage?

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. No, sir. But if we give the quartermaster money sufficient to pay the legitimate objects of the appropriation I think the thing should stop there.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I understand this appropriation was made in the last Congress. The only question here is the appropriation of three hundred and odd dollars to pay the mileage of the Board of Visitors who visited Annapolis Academy.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I wish to ask whether as a matter of fact this mileage has not been paid, and whether this is not an attempt on the part of the quartermaster to get in his liquor bills under the guise of a legitimate appropriation?

Mr. MCADOO. In reply to the gentleman's question I will say that the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BALLENTINE], a member of the Board of Visitors, told me he had not been paid his mileage.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. And that is so as to all of them.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I think some process should be instituted by which this quartermaster should be made responsible to the Government for his deficiency.

Mr. BURNES. The remedy is with the President of the United States, and he undoubtedly will apply it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

The Clerk read the following paragraph, under the heading "Marine Corps."

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 741 insert the following:

"Transportation and recruiting, Marine Corps: For payment to the Pacific Mail Steamship Company for transportation from New York to Aspinwall and return to New York of the naval force under command of Commander B. W. McCalla, United States Navy, sent to the Isthmus of Panama to enforce the rights of the United States secured by the treaty of 1846 with New Granada, United States of Colombia, as follows: From New York to Aspinwall: Twelve officers, Marine Corps, per City of Pará, April 3, 1885, at $20 each, $240; two hundred and two men, Marine Corps, per City of Pará, April 3, 1885, at $10 each, $2,020; fourteen officers, Marine Corps, per Acapulco, April 7, 1885, at $20 each, $280; two hundred and fifty-nine men, Marine Corps, per Acapulco, April 7, 1885, at $10 each, $2,590. From Aspinwall to New York: Fifteen officers, Marine Corps, per Colon, arrived May 16, 1885, at $20 each, $300; two hundred and forty-nine men, Marine Corps, per Colon, arrived May 16, 1885, at $10 each, $2,490; thirteen officers, Marine Corps, per Acapulco, arrived June 3, 1885, at $20 each, $260; one hundred and forty-five men, Marine Corps, per Acapulco, arrived June 3, 1885, at $10 each, $1,450. In all, $9,630."

Mr. BURNES. I make the point of order on the amendment. I submit, first, this is an expenditure in excess of any appropriation of which I have any knowledge. Secondly, it is a claim which is unascertained by any authority under this Government. It is true it is reported to us by the authorities of the Navy Department; it is not true there has been any such accounting or settlement or disbursement as leaves this amount a proper thing to be appropriated for. In other words, it is a claimand ought to go before the Committee on Claims.

Mr. HOLMAN. And, Mr. Chairman, it is not germane to this bill.

Mr. CANNON. In reply to the point of order made by the gentleman from Missouri I desire to call to the attention of the Chair, and have read, section 3732 of the Revised Statutes.

The Clerk read as follows:

No contract or purchase on behalf of the United States shall be made, unless the same is authorized by law or is under an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment, except in the War and Navy Departments for clothing, subsistence, forage, fuel, quarters, or transportation, which, however, shall not exceed the necessities of the current year.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say, in addition to that, that the chairman of the Committee of the Whole must take notice of such public acts of the Executive as are required by law. The Chair, if he will examine the amendment, will see that it provides for these expenditures as—

Secured by the treaty of 1846 with New Granada, United States of Colombia, as follows.

The estimate is regularly submitted by the Secretary of the Navy through the Secretary of the Treasury as the ascertained deficiency for the service therein referred to.

It is like a half dozen other items in this part of the bill and stands on precisely the same ground, so that it is an expenditure authorized under the section of the law which has just been read—section 3732. It is to pay this money which is due under the contract made. There is the act.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will please send to the Chair the Revised Statutes. Does the gentleman desire to be heard further on the point of order?

Mr. CANNON. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. The section cited by the gentleman from Illinois simply allows the War and Navy Departments to contract for certain things without a previous authorization by law. Among those things named is "transportation." But this amendment covers much more than that. It is an amendment to appropriate for "transportation and recruiting Marine Corps," and covers many other things.

Mr. CANNON. That expression is merely descriptive of the estimate. I will strike out the words "and recruiting." This is for transportation pure and simple, as the Chair will see if he will examine the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Very well; that comment of the Chair may not have been a just one. But the mere fact that the Department is authorized to make a contract for transportation without a previous appropriation would not necessarily make this in order in a deficiency bill, because, as the Chair understands, a deficiency bill is to supply deficiencies in the former authorized expenditures of the Government, and it does not appear that this expenditure was authorized under any statute of the United States.

Mr. CANNON. If the Chair will indulge me a moment——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will.

Mr. CANNON. If the Chair will indulge me a moment, I would suggest that that is a matter for the House to determine.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, after argument, is inclined to think that the amendment is in order, but will hear the gentleman from Missouri if he desires to be heard further on the point.

Mr. BURNES. I do not.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the amendment will be considered in order.

Mr. CANNON. Now, Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word upon the merits. This indebtedness was incurred by the Secretary of the Navy for the transportation of certain officers and men of the Marine Corps from New York to the Isthmus of Panama in 1885, and their transportation home again after they were no longer required there. This transportation was done at an exceedingly low rate, as gentlemen can see, $20 for officers from New York to Aspinwall, and $10 for privates, and the same for the return trip. A naval officer who was before the committee stated that the rate was exceedingly low. The money has been already due for a year. It draws no interest, and it is right and proper that the bill should be paid, like other items touching the Marine Corps on the same expedition that have been allowed without objection.

The question was taken on the amendment, and the chairman declared that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. CANNON. I ask for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 49, noes 57.

Mr. CANNON. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint to act as tellers the gentleman from Illinois, Mr. CANNON, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BURNES.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 84, noes 80.

So the amendment was agreed to.

For pay of employés of the Round Valley Indian agency, California, being for services rendered during the fiscal years 1885 and 1886, namely: To G. W. Cummins, $532.18; C. M. Brown, $486.04; J. W. Hannah, $131.65; P. G. Tuttle, $609.73; A. Odell, $280.80; S. B. Larimer, $473.89; N. C. Salisbury, $336.30; D. W. Reardon, $123.41; in all, $2,974.10.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, to come in after line 921.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After line 921 insert:

"Flora Skinner, widow of Dr. Gilbert A. Skinner, deceased, $400, being the amount of salary due said Dr. Gilbert A. Skinner as Government physician at said agency at the time of his death; in all, $400."

Mr. BURNES. I make the point of order that that is not an expenditure provided for by law.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the point of order, I wish to say that Dr. Skinner was the Government physician at this agency, and this amendment provides to pay his widow the amount of the salary due him for the months of January, February, March, and April, 1879. It is the regular salary prescribed by law and no doubt would have been inserted by the committee had I called attention to that fact. I introduced a separate bill for this payment, not fully comprehending that it ought to be provided for in this bill. The committee has examined the bill and reported favorably upon it, but I am satisfied that this is the proper place for the allowance instead of by a separate bill, and I hope there will be no objection to it. Dr. Skinner was the physician at the agency and was accidentally shot through the head by an Indian, with a Winchester rifle, while the Indian was engaged in slaughtering cattle. Dr. Skinner first resigned, but was unable to leave the agency, and was restored to the rolls as agent, and remained there until his successor was appointed about four months later. The Indian Bureau allowed the salary during that time, but for some reason the Treasury Department failed to pay it, and this is simply to provide for paying the amount due to the widow of the decedent. There is no question at all about its being due.

The CHAIRMAN. Was the salary due before the man's resignation?

Mr. BYNUM. He first resigned, but was unable to be taken away from the place, and he was then restored to the rolls by order of the Department and retained there four months until his successor was appointed.

The CHAIRMAN. And this salary is for the time while he was there officially?

Mr. BYNUM. This salary is for the time while he was there officially.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt of the justice of the claim, but it is a claim and nothing more. If it were a valid claim under the law the accounting officers of the Treasury Department would have sent it down to us in the nature of a deficiency. It has not been passed upon by the accounting officers of the Treasury, but has been brought into the House of Representatives as a claim. That is all I desire to say about it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that the fact that the claim has not been properly brought before the committee may be a reason for voting down the amendment, but it is no reason why the amendment is not in order if this is a deficiency on a current salary. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Ship, steamboat, and way letters: For amount expended by postmasters in excess of appropriation, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1885, $301.11.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Missouri whether there were deficiencies in this same service for the fiscal year just closed.

Mr. BURNES. There was no deficiency submitted at all.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do I understand that there have been no deficiency estimates submitted for compensation of postmasters for the fiscal year just closed? Is the gentleman quite sure he is right? Is there no estimate for a deficiency in compensation of postmasters for the fiscal year which closed June 30, 1886?

Mr. BURNES. None, so far as I know. There has been no deficiency of that kind reported to us for the year just closed.

The Clerk read as follows:

The foregoing sums for the postal service shall be payable from the postal revenues of the respective years to which they are properly chargeable.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I move to amend by inserting as an additional clause, what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay the Mississippi Central Railroad Company the balance due upon drafts given them in settlement of accounts, which drafts remain unpaid, $1,636.01.

Mr. HOLMAN. I reserve a point of order on this amendment.

Mr. BURNES. I beg to say that I promised my associates on the committee, or a portion of them at least, that I would object to the reservation of any point of order. When such a point is made, let it be considered at once, so as to facilitate the progress of business.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBERTSON] may be permitted to be heard.

Mr. BURNES. I presume he does not wish to be heard on the merits before the point of order is decided.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri will state his point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I suggest to the gentleman from Kentucky that this amendment will more properly come in when we take up a later portion of the bill—that relating to audited claims.

Mr. ROBERTSON. The same point of order would be raised then.

Mr. CANNON. That is true; but the part of the bill to which I refer would be a more appropriate place for the amendment, and I suggest to the gentleman that he had better defer it.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I will do so.

Mr. BINGHAM. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the following:

To pay the amounts set forth in House Executive Document No. 245, first session, Forty-ninth Congress, to postmasters for stationery used during the fiscal year 1883, $1,476.31.

Mr. Chairman, by a reference of the Speaker, Executive Document No. 245 was sent to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, by which committee I have been directed to ask that this amendment to the present bill may be accepted by the Committee on Appropriations. The Postmaster-General, in his letter to the House, states:

In order to settle their accounts, which have since remained unclosed, it will be necessary to make an appropriation of the amount due to them, or they must be required to pay the money which they have properly expended in the public service. The appropriation will require no money to be disbursed, but its effect will be simply to authorize credit to be given to the postmasters for the several amounts their due in settlement of their accounts by the Auditor.

Inasmuch as these claims appear to be entirely just, I recommend their allowance.

The amount which the amendment proposes to appropriate covers some sixty-two offices. I trust the gentleman from Missouri will accept it.

Mr. BURNES. If a mistake had not been made in the reference of the Executive Document to which the gentleman from Pennsylvania has referred this item would no doubt have been incorporated in the bill, as I think it ought to have been. While I am not authorized by the committee to admit it, I will say that it ought to be voted in.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE.

To pay amount found due by the accounting officers of the Treasury on account of investigating the history of insects injurious to agriculture, being for the service of the fiscal year 1884, $2.82.

Mr. BURNES. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the following:

For payment of employés for labor performed in the month of June, 1886, for the improvement of grounds, $969.10.

I will simply state that certain men were employed in the service during the month of June last. At the close of the month there was found to be a deficiency of the amount named in the amendment; and they are at present without their pay.

Mr. CANNON. Under what law was that expenditure authorized?

Mr. BURNES. The expenditure was made under an appropriation in the last appropriation bill under the head "employés: improvement of grounds."

Mr. CANNON. But when the appropriation was exhausted did not the work cease?

Mr. BURNES. The appropriation did not reach to the end of the month, but the work went on during the whole of the month. There was probably an inadvertence on the part of the Commissioner in not knowing the money would run short before the month expired.

Mr. CANNON. Does the gentleman think this is a wise way to appropriate?

Mr. BURNES. I do not; but here are twelve poor men who have worked for the month, and who I think ought to be paid. Certainly they ought to be paid, if we recognize the rights of laboring men at all.

Mr. CANNON. I agree that the laborers should be paid, but does not the gentleman think there ought to be a vote of the House censuring the Commissioner of Agriculture for making this expenditure in the teeth of the law?

Mr. BURNES. I will answer the gentleman. I do not think the Commissioner of Agriculture should be censured. The failure to appropriate $969 more for this purpose in the last appropriation bill is the cause of these men being unpaid. Probably the Commissioner by extraordinary vigilance might have discovered that the appropriation would not pay all the men for the month of June; but the amount was so nearly sufficient that he estimated there would be enough, and when he reached the end of the month he found there was a deficiency of $969. It was an oversight.

Mr. CANNON. So I understand. I want to get that admission. Here is an appropriation for doing such work by the Commissioner of Agriculture in the city of Washington when he has a disbursing officer and other officers all on one square of ground, who, in the teeth of law and without any warrant of appropriation, goes on and hires people to the extent nearly of $1,000, and yet the committee come in and recommend it and we vote for it. And having said that much I will leave the subject.

Mr. BURNES. I beg leave to say, Mr. Chairman, that the Committee on Agriculture overlooked or miscalculated about the extent of the funds on hand. If we could reach him by not appropriating this money I would be against appropriating it, but in view of the fact these men who did this work are to suffer, I do not propose they, having acted innocently in the matter, shall be refused payment they are entitled to for the work they have done.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I will say to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] that a number of members on this side of the House have to be away to-morrow, and they would like to have some understanding in reference to the items in the first part of this bill.

Several MEMBERS. Who are they?

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] is one, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] is another. The desire is that the gentleman from Missouri should consent to turn back and dispose of those items in the first part of the bill at this time.

Mr. BURNES. I should like to accommodate my colleague on the committee, and also the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE], but it is not convenient just now to turn back in this bill.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Since I conferred with the gentleman from Illinois, I wish to say so far as I am concerned an arrangement has been made which is satisfactory to me.

Mr. CANNON. I wish also to say the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Affairs [Mr. BELMONT] has to be away, and it was to accommodate him as well as the other gentleman to whom I have referred I made the appeal to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES].

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I ask the gentleman from Illinois to permit me to interrupt him to say it was not to suit my private convenience the suggestion was made, but I was called away to attend the subcommittee on appropriations considering the fortification bill for the purpose of hearing testimony relative to our coast defenses.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BELMONT] is going away and is anxious these items in the former part of the bill should be disposed of while he is here.

Mr. BURNES. My friend from Ohio knows I would accommodate him at any time, but it is impossible for me to do so now.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fees of commissioners: For fees of commissioners, and justices of the peace acting as commissioners, $50,000. And hereafter the whole of the compensation and fees paid a commissioner, and to which he may be entitled, for services in the examination of criminal charges, shall not exceed $800 per annum, or exceed that rate for any time less than a year: Provided, That for issuing any warrant or writ, or for any other necessary service, commissioners may be paid the same compensation as is allowed to clerks for like services, but they shall not be entitled to any docket fees.

Mr. BRAGG. The point of order I desire to make on that paragraph is that it makes a new enactment of law, which we prohibited on appropriation bills and especially deficiency appropriation bills.

Mr. BURNES. If the gentleman from Wisconsin will yield to me, I will say to him the committee is perfectly conscious this limitation is subject to the point of order. But in making that statement I am authorized and instructed by the committee to say if this point of order be made and sustained, as undoubtedly it will be if made, then the committee will propose to strike out the appropriation, because without this limitation in this bill the Treasury of the United States would be depleted to the amount of hundreds of thousands of dollars beyond any necessary expense. I believe I am authorized to say the committee on this proposition is absolutely unanimous.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and a message was received from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries. It further announced that he had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

Joint resolution (H. Res. 196) to provide temporarily for the expenditures of the Government;

An act (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes;

An act (H. R. 4836) for the relief of James McBride;

An act (H. R. 308) granting a pension to Mary Sullivan;
An act (H. R. 421) granting a pension to Jesse B. Scudder; and
An act (H. R. 464) granting a pension to Robert McAlexander.
The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BRAGG. I made the point of order simply for the purpose of reminding the committee of what the rules of the House are, to prevent their getting into the very bad habit which they are likely to lapse into, and which formerly prevailed in that committee; but as they recognize the fact and file a cognovit and a plea in avoidance, I will withdraw the point of order. [Laughter.]

Mr. HOLMAN. I trust the gentleman from Wisconsin——

Mr. BRAGG. Oh, if you insist upon it I will make the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. No, it is withdrawn and that ends it; but I wish to call my friend's attention to the importance of such a provision in these bills.

The Clerk read as follows:

For fees of commissioners, and justices of the peace acting as commissioners, being a deficiency for the fiscal year 1885, $24,856.22.
Fees of witnesses: For fees of witnesses, United States courts, $50,000.

Mr. McCOMAS. I move to strike out the last word.

I do this only for the purpose of calling the attention of the committee, in passing, to the appropriations heretofore made on that subject; and I think a comparison of the amounts heretofore appropriated is important enough to be given in this connection.

I now find that we are required here to make an additional appropriation of $50,000 for witness fees under the head of the Department of Justice. Heretofore the appropriation for this purpose was $550,000 in the annual appropriation bills. In the early part of this session of Congress, at the instance of the Attorney-General, there was a further appropriation of $135,000, and that item at that time was placed upon the urgent deficiency bill, and was made with the expectation, I have no doubt sincerely, on the part of the Department of Justice that it would be ample. Everybody supposed it would be enough. Now, we are required by the pressure and needs of that Department to add $50,000 more.

It is proper, I will say briefly in passing, to bring the mind of the committee to the fact that for years it has been the choice point of declamation and invective on the part of Democratic orators on this floor against Republican administrations that for the summoning of witnesses and for the bringing of jurors into the courts there had been excessive extravagance; that jurors were summoned as a matter of favor, and that witnesses were brought in order that their traveling expenses might be paid to and from the towns where the courts sat. The most striking and conspicuous example of extravagance and political confusion was found in this very item.

Now, it is due to that administration, it is due to the cause of truth and history, that under the five-minute rule the attention of the House should be drawn to four or five facts which make plain how utterly wrong and unjust such charges were. I find that the fees of jurors in 1881 amounted to $440,000; in 1882 to $470,000; in 1883 to $450,000; in 1884, $510,000; in 1885 to $450,000; and, for 1886, $525,000, under the present administration, have been provided.

Turning now to the fees of witnesses in 1881, I find that the appropriations were $580,000; in 1882, 670,000; in 1883, $601,000; in 1884, $660,000; in 1885, $604,000; and now, in 1886, we have a total of $735,000.

My friend from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER] on yesterday said that this administration was just beginning. This administration, Mr. Chairman, to-morrow morning will have spent one-third of its whole course, and here we are compelled to appropriate far more money than was ever before appropriated under these items in the series of years to which I have referred of Republican rule. Such is retrenchment, such their reform.

Now, sir, the explanations that have been sought to be made of this difference have not explained. We have elsewhere in this bill the item of allowance for the unpaid witnesses' fees. If we do not now make the appropriation, as the committee has rightly done, the witnesses who are compelled to go to these courts may perchance here and there find the courts closed, as they have been recently closed, for want of appropriations.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HISCOCK and Mr. BURNES rose.

Mr. HISCOCK. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. BURNES. If I can be recognized I will yield to my colleague on the committee.

Mr. McCOMAS. I thank both the gentleman from New York and my colleague on the committee.

The Committee on Appropriations were in this dilemma: If we did not make the appropriations then there would be the danger that under the section of the Revised Statutes preventing the assignment of claims against the Government a witness forced from home a long distance might go to the office, and finding no money there be compelled to sell his claim in order to get funds to return home; but under the ruling of the Department he would not be permitted to do that. He could not sell it, because it is not assignable. So in the interests of public justice and for the proper order of procedure in the courts of the country the committee were constrained in their action.

But under the present head of the Department of Justice, himself not long ago a member of that body yonder at the other end of the Capitol, this enormous increase of appropriations for witnesses, jurors, and the like ought not to pass unnoticed, especially when we have found one-third of the tenure of "retrenchment and reform" has fled, and the increase of appropriations, the opposite of retrenchment, goes on, but reform may possibly come after a while. [Applause.]

I yield back to my colleague on the committee the remainder of the time, if he desires it.

Mr. BURNES. I desire to confirm what my colleague has said, and call attention in doing so to the similarity between the expenditures and deficiencies between the fees of marshals and the fees of witnesses, because they run together, the marshals disbursing the funds for both.

In 1881 the appropriation was $650,000; and there was a deficiency of $172,600, making a total for the year of $822,600.

From that time on we began to decrease, because the year 1881 was an expensive year. In the year 1882, the succeeding year, the appropriation with the deficiency was $650,000 as against $822,000. In 1883 the appropriation was $600,000 without any deficiency. In 1884 it was $600,000 with a deficiency of $90,753; a total of $690,753. In 1885 there was an appropriation of $600,000 with a deficiency of $124,447; making a grand total of $724,447. For the past year, closing on Wednesday last, the appropriation was $675,000, and this bill provides for a deficiency of $20,000, which will make a total of $695,000 as against a total of $724,000 the preceding year.

The pro forma amendment was withdrawn.

Mr. CANNON. I renew the pro forma amendment for the purpose of saying that notwithstanding the extraordinary increase, considering the profession on the other side of the House, especially for witnesses, this appropriation bill does not recommend enough money either to pay the witnesses, or the marshals, or the jurors for the last fiscal year of 1886. And I might add to that the miscellaneous expenses. There is to come in for these different items a further deficiency all the way from $150,000 to $250,000 in the aggregate to be appropriated for next year.

It may be asked why the appropriations are not more liberal in this bill.

Mr. BRAGG. If the gentleman from Illinois will allow me I will call his attention to the fact that the speech he is now making is on another bill. This is a deficiency for last year, not an appropriation bill for this year.

Mr. CANNON. I am speaking of this deficiency bill for the year 1886, which closed on the 30th day of June last; and I might in that same connection speak of the sundry civil bill which we passed only yesterday, in which the aggregate amount is less for these expenditures by hundreds of thousands of dollars than was provided for in the year 1886 in the regular bill and in these deficiency bills. And there is more to come for the service of 1886.

While I am speaking about this matter I may refer to the hardship of not in the first instance appropriating money enough to carry on the courts. So far as the year 1886 is concerned that is passed and gone. We are in part paying the people to whom we owed money in 1886 by this bill.

On yesterday, if I had had an opportunity, I would have spoken of the insufficient provision made by the sundry civil bill for these items. What is the effect of it? The effect will be for this year of 1887 as it has been for 1886 and 1885, that before the fiscal year closes the courts will be closed because there is no appropriation to pay the fees of witnesses and to pay the fees of jurors. Very well; who is hurt by that? The people who are demanding trial of their causes are hurt. The people who are accused of crime and are presumed to be innocent until they are proved to be guilty are hurt, because they are compelled to lie in jail at a great expense.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURNES. I do not rise to controvert what the gentleman from Illinois has said, so much as to call attention to a great abuse in the management of the Department. It is not the fault of the present head of the Department, but of the system which has been in existence in this Government for many years.

This money appropriated for witnesses goes out to the different marshals, sixty-five in number, I believe, and goes out necessarily on a blind division on requisitions made by each marshal, and each marshal is trying to get as much as possible for witnesses. Now, if you appropriate too much money the accounting officers or the Comptroller making the division will naturally divide it all up, and it goes out to the sixty-five marshals; it is in the hands of the marshals, and one marshal has too much, while another perhaps has not enough.

But when these remittances are reported back by the marshal it is found on the marshaling of assets there is enough. While one has got too much another has received not quite enough, and those who have the excess in returning the money will make good the deficiency in the accounts of many other marshals. It is that system which necessarily makes mistakes and errors and deficiencies too. If you give a marshal

$2,000 when he ought to have but $1,000 he will spend it all if he has any reasonable chance of doing it.

Therefore, as this money has to go out blindly, in this one Department it is far better to have deficiencies than to have excessive appropriations; because it is parted with by the Government blindly without knowing how much will be needed to pay the witnesses by a particular marshal. This system ought to be changed. Perhaps it will require a law to change it; but it ought to be changed, and if the head of the Department of Justice has the power to do it he ought to do it at once. If he has not, we ought by law to regulate the manner of furnishing the marshals money to pay fees of witnesses and jurors.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out the last two words. I do it for the purpose of saying that the gentleman from Missouri does not understand this matter or I do not. It is true that the marshals do make requisitions upon this fund, and in answer to those requisitions, so far as the Attorney-General sees proper to answer them, the funds are given to them and they disburse them in the payment of witnesses and of jurors. But I do not understand there is a surplus in the hands of any marshal in the United States. On the contrary, the gentleman from New York [Mr. ADAMS] called my attention when this bill was being considered the other day to the fact that in the district of New York in which he resides there is a large amount, many thousand dollars, due to witnesses and to jurors for services in 1886, and no money to pay them, and after this appropriation which we provide in the deficiency bill is exhausted they will still go to a large extent unpaid. And so it is throughout the length and breadth of the country.

Mr. BURNES. I would ask my colleague if he does not know that of course New York does not get enough and that it will always be wanting a little more. [Laughter.]

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. She got $1,500 last year.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, in reply I have this to say. I am for enforcing the law as we have it. The proper way, the honest way, is to walk up and provide adequately for the public service. When you fail to provide for the service, who suffers? Take it in this matter of witness fees alone. You subpœna a man and take him hundreds of miles from his home to appear in court as a witness. Being subpœnaed in a criminal case he must go, without reference to whether he gets his fees or not. After having left his business, after having spent his time, after having spent his money for his subsistence, he is informed at the end of his service as a witness that there is no money to pay him. He goes back to his home without his money, and if, perchance, under the spur of necessity, he sells that claim against the Government for less than its face or for any other sum, there comes in your statute which prohibits such a sale, and the assignee can not get a cent.

There are claims here to-day in this estimate which have been refused to be provided for by the Committee on Appropriations because they have been assigned. Now, I say that is not an honest enforcement of the law, and I say that when we go out of our way to make some cheap claptrap reputation about making small appropriations and oppress the hundreds of poor men in this country who are dragged from their homes to testify in cases in United States courts, by refusing them the poor pittance which is their due, the money being in the Treasury to pay them—when we do that, it is an outrage and a fraud upon a class of our own citizens who are poorly able to bear it. I did not feel, Mr. Chairman, that my mind would be freed unless I bore this testimony, and now I have borne it and you can go on in this bill and other bills to follow the precedents that you have set heretofore, if you choose.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I hardly know how we can do otherwise than accept and follow a committee which has based its action on the estimates of the heads of the Department, but I confess that I sympathize largely with the expressions just submitted by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. They are absolutely true. They are not true of the present administration alone, but they are true of past administrations. Lying before me right now is a lettter from the First Comptroller of the Treasury inviting the attention of this House to the fact that nearly $100,000 in assigned claims outstanding prior to 1883 have passed into the hands of persons who have bought them under the circumstances indicated by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. Let me illustrate this matter by a simple case which has recently fallen under my own observation.

A blind man in my own district was so unfortunate as to have passed upon him counterfeit money. He applied to the Federal authorities and had the man arrested, and the witnesses were summoned to support the charge. They were taken to the Federal court. The blind man, like his witnesses, was poor, but he was better off than the witnesses, and when the case had been disposed of, the marshal having no money to pay them, the witnesses were left 65 miles from home without a dollar to pay their expenses or their way back to their homes. They sold their certificates to the blind man in order to get home, and now when he asks the Comptroller to pay him he is met by this provision of the statute which says that the assignment is void and he can not get his money. This system has been going on, by virtue of this statute and the failure of Congress to appropriate sufficient money to administer the law, for the last six or eight years.

Now, the explanation given by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] is not creditable to any administration. When we intrust the distribution of this money to the officers of the Government the supposition is that they have information enough from the past records of the different districts to enable them to make a proper distribution; and when we are told that some marshals will have a surplus while others will fall behind, I had rather have some official statement for that, because I have yet to learn of any marshal ever turning any money back into the Treasury. I know one thing, the deficit occurs; it occurs every year. I know another thing; I know that this system is neither economical nor honest. In my own State the Federal court, sitting in my own town, exercising Federal jurisdiction over the whole Indian country, was compelled to adjourn, with a large number of prisoners in jail, who were left there to be taken care of at the expense of the Government.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. REED, of Maine, was recognized, and yielded to Mr. ROGERS.

Mr. ROGERS. I say, Mr. Chairman, that this system is neither economical nor honest. The cheapest way to dispose of a prison full of prisoners under these circumstances is to run the courts until they are either convicted or discharged. Let me say another thing. It is not only not economical nor honest on the grounds I have stated, but, in my judgment, it is oppressive and cruel for the Government to pass a statute which stands in the way of a witness selling one of these claims when it has been regularly issued and approved by the court and turned over to a witness by authority of law, unless the Government makes arrangement to pay it itself then and there.

The witness does not become the creditor of the Government by choice. He obeys the process of the court on penalty of contempt, and then he is to be turned out, away from home, penniless, to starve or walk back. You forbid his selling the certificate you give him, and you neglect to provide for its payment. The whole business is wrong, and, I submit, utterly indefensible upon any theory. The Government has a surplus, and it ought to be honest and pay its debts. If we will not pay out the surplus on the public debt and stop the interest on the bonded debt, we can at least pay our current expenses, especially when in doing so we return it to the people from whom it should not have been taken. One of two things ought to be done: we ought either to appropriate money in sufficient sums to administer the law, or we ought to repeal this statute. The Departments are not to blame. They administer the laws we make. The blame is with us, and we ought not to shift it to the Departments.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I do not believe the statute refers to any case which you have presented here.

Mr. ROGERS. It makes no difference whether it does or not. That is the construction of the Comptroller of the Treasury, and it binds these men just as much as if it were the law.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Is not that a recent construction?

Mr. ROGERS. No, sir; it is not.

Mr. REED, of Maine. I have heard that the statute was so construed by the present Comptroller.

Mr. ROGERS. It is by him, but it was also by his predecessor. As shown by this official statement, there are outstanding claims of this character arising prior to 1883 to the amount of over $100,000; and I have no doubt that a large amount of such claims existed prior to that time, and will continue to exist as long as we fail to make adequate appropriations and permit this statute to stand.

Mr. REED, of Maine. So that under the present system of appropriations the Government will neither pay the bills nor let the parties get the money by mortgaging them.

Mr. ROGERS. That is the sum and substance of it. The Government will not pay the man the money, nor will it allow him to dispose of the certificate which it issues to him.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. But is it not true that the provision of law forbidding the sale of these certificates was adopted for the purpose of preventing an old fraud, the purchase of the certificates by persons representing the officers and hangers-on around the court?

Mr. ROGERS. Assume that to be true; still we are left in the attitude of not paying our debts—of compelling parties by process of law to leave their homes to attend court, and yet making no provision for their compensation. I repeat, it is neither economical nor honest for the Government to pursue the policy it has pursued in this regard.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. If I understood the statement of the gentleman in charge of the bill, it was that some of the marshals returned a surplus on hand. Now I will ask the gentleman from Arkansas whether it is not the rule and practice of the Department of Justice that the marshal of the court must make his requisition upon the Department of Justice, setting out the amount of funds that will be required for witnesses, for jurors, and for the ordinary running of the court; and this for each term, and before the commencement of the term?

Mr. ROGERS. I am not sufficiently familiar with the routine work of the Department to answer that question.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. That is the rule.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I have listened to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], trusting to hear from those gentlemen or some other member of the committee some explanation of this immense increase of $131,000 for witness fees in the year 1886 as compared with the preceding fiscal year, and an increase of $75,000 for pay of jurors. It looks as if there were "something rotten in the state of Denmark." I trust that the Committee on Appropriations have seen fit in their wisdom to investigate this increase, and are able to tell us the cause of it—whether there has been an increase of court business, an increase of litigation, or an increase of terms. The fact presented is something strange; and in view of the business habits of the gentleman who has charge of this bill I doubt not he will be able to furnish some explanation of it. An increase of $75,000 for pay of jurors, and $131,000 in witness fees in one year, as compared with the preceding year, is something startling. I know we all hear about these abuses which gentlemen have spoken of; but they do not account for this remarkable increase.

What testimony has been taken upon this subject? What members of the Department have been called before the Committee on Appropriations to explain this matter, to give a schedule of the judicial districts in which this increase has transpired, showing an increase of business in those courts which justified this vast increase of expenditure?

I trust that before this matter is disposed of the distinguished gentleman who has charge of this measure will give some little information to the committee. Two hundred and six thousand dollars is a large sum for court expenses in two branches of the service. It looks as if jobs had been "put up," as if witnesses had been subpoenaed for purposes of speculation, and men summoned as jurors without proper necessity. There are other members of the Committee on Appropriations present. I appeal to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] whether this wonderful increase does not startle him and whether he or some one ought not to be able to furnish some sort of explanation of it.

Mr. BRAGG. Will you permit me to ask a question which may perhaps furnish the explanation?

Mr. HISCOCK. You may ask me any question you please.

Mr. BRAGG. Are not the principal part of these officers—all the subordinates and a great many of the chiefs—still Republicans——

Mr. HISCOCK. That question is unworthy of the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin. I care not whether they are Democratic officials or Republican officials; that has nothing to do with the question. Here is this marked increase to which the gentleman from Maryland has called attention—an increase of $131,000 for witness fees in one year as compared with the preceding year. We know, sir, that there has been no such growth of legal business during the year just closed as to justify this increase. Here are these startling figures. I say to the gentleman from Missouri this is not a question of politics, it is a question of business; and gentlemen of the committee themselves must have been startled by this exhibit.

Mr. BURNES. I desire to say to my friend from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] that now and then there are extraordinary and surprising expenditures. It would probably be as difficult for me to account for the extraordinary increase in the appropriation for payment of witnesses as it would be impossible for the gentleman from New York to account for the extraordinary expenses of marshals in 1881, reported in a deficiency bill from the Committee on Appropriations of which he was at that time chairman.

Here was a deficiency of $172,600 over the bill which preceded it and everything that has followed it. I presume there was something wrong in that deficiency. I might presume so if I wanted to be ugly or wanted to be partisan or unfair. But, sir, I do not intend to be either.

The fact is the deficiency over the appropriation of $172,600 was larger than in reference to any other appropriation which has followed it, with but one exception—indeed it was three times more than any deficiency which has occurred in the last five years.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to say to the gentleman——

Mr. BURNES. Allow me to proceed without interruption.

Mr. HISCOCK. Allow me to interrupt you.

Mr. BURNES. Allow me to proceed.

Mr. HISCOCK. I am not talking about deficiency, but——

Mr. BURNES. I can not yield at this moment. I say, Mr. Chairman, this is an extraordinary expenditure for 1881. I suppose it is fair. I am not here to say there was anything unfair about it. I am not here to charge there was any improper expenditure in that year by the marshals of the country.

I am here, however, to admit these extraordinary expenses have occurred in the last year, I suppose because there has been an extraordinary number of witnesses, because there has been a great increase of business in the courts. I suppose so. I do not suppose any gentleman on the floor would charge there has been any improper practices in this expenditure by the Attorney-General at the head of the Department of Justice or by any of his subordinates. We have appropriated extraordinary amounts for the fees of witnesses. We have appropriated for the past year $550,000; and we have appropriated by the urgent deficiency bill and by this bill for the same year a deficiency of $185,000, making in all for last year $735,000. For the preceding year the amount appropriated was $604,406; for 1884, $660,000; for 1883, $601,000; 1882, $670,000; and for 1881, $580,000.

I grant $735,000 is an extraordinary appropriation for the fees of witnesses. Who is to blame? I believe it is the system, and, notwithstanding the suggestion of the gentleman from Arkansas, I have satisfactory information, so far as I am concerned, from gentlemen connected with this Department, when this expense is canvassed in some places it will be found to be too large and in some places not large enough, and that what now seems to be a great deficiency will be found to be less when the facts are all known.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. BURNES. I now move the committee rise for the purpose of extending the session for half an hour.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. SPRINGER having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9726) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BURNES. I now move that the House adjourn.

Mr. HEPBURN. This is the evening for pensions——

Mr. BURNES. Then I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening, in accordance with the special order.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. What is that for; pension business?

Mr. BURNES. Yes, sir.

The motion of Mr. BURNES was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The recess having expired, the House (at 8 o'clock p. m.) was called to order by the Chief Clerk, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 2, 1886.

I hereby designate Hon. COURTLAND C. MATSON to preside at the session of the House this evening as Speaker pro tempore.

JNO. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Mr. MATSON accordingly took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

J. H. THORNBURG.

Mr. MORRILL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the bill (S. 2692) to amend and correct the act approved June 1, 1886, granting a pension to J. H. Thornburg.

This bill was approved by the President on the 1st day of June, but by an error on the part of the printers the final letter of the name was printed "y," so as to read "Thornbury."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The bill will be read.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the act approved June 1, 1886, granting a pension to J. H. Thornbury, is hereby amended and corrected so as to read: "That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of J. H. Thornburg, late of Company D, Eighth Regiment of Iowa Cavalry Volunteers."

SEC. 2. That the pension shall commence from the date of the approval of the original act.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask to take up the bill, which is to simply correct that error, and put it upon its passage.

There being no objection, the Committee of the Whole was discharged from the further consideration of the bill, which was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. MORRILL moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

MRS. MARIA WALKER.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole from the further consideration of the Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. 6311) granting arrears of pension to Mrs. Maria Walker, for the purpose of moving concurrence in the Senate amendments. This does not add a dollar to the bill; it only changes the phraseology.

The amendments of the Senate were read.

Mr. BYNUM. I would like to hear some explanation of this bill.

Mr. MILLS. The bill has passed the House, and the Senate amendment only changes the phraseology but does not affect the amount covered by it.

Mr. BYNUM. It has not been the policy to grant these arrears.

Mr. MORRILL. We discussed this very fully, and this bill met the concurrence of the committee.

There being no objection, the Senate amendments were concurred in.

Mr. MILLS moved to reconsider the vote by which the Senate amendments were concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TAULBEE. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the consideration of the special order.

The amendment was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Private Calendar, Mr HATCH in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole for the consideration of bills upon the Private Calendar, under the order of the House, and the Clerk will report the unfinished business coming over from last Friday evening's session.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2192) granting a pension to Abby L. Burbank.

Mr. MATSON. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside for the present.

Mr. STRUBLE. Before giving consent I would like to know the number of the bill, as there is one of them that I wish to have recommitted to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the Senate bill numbered 2192.

The being no objection, the bill was informally passed over.

Mr. MATSON. I ask consent that the members present be allowed to call up such bills as they see proper out of their regular order, and I will ask as far as they possibly can they will only call up such bills as will not provoke discussion, clear bills, of which there are many on the Calendar.

Mr. CANNON. That is right.

There being no objection, the request of Mr. MATSON was agreed to.

IRENE GOOGINS.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota, called up the bill (H. R. 8635) granting a pension to Irene Googins; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Irene Googins, late a private in Company B, Seventh Regiment of Minnesota Volunteers.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. O'HARA) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8635) granting a pension to Irene Googins, have considered the same, and submit the following report:

The claimant, Irene Googins, is the widow of Oscar L. Googins, late a private in Company B, Seventh Regiment Minnesota Volunteers, who enlisted August 19, 1862; discharged November 21, 1864; died of pneumonia and meningitis May 18, 1882. Claim for a pension for chronic diarrhea was, on soldier's application, allowed by the Pension Office November 12, 1883, after soldier's death, and the amount due paid to claimant as the widow of soldier; widow's claim rejected on the ground that soldier's fatal diseases were not the result of disease for which he was pensioned, nor of his military service.

Franklin Staples, M. D., testifies as follows:

"I attended the late Oscar L. Googins, private, of Company B, Seventh Minnesota Volunteers, in his last illness. He died of pneumonia and meningitis. I had known the said soldier for several years previous to the time of his death, and had prescribed for him many times. I can not state as to what years or months. He suffered all the time during my acquaintance with him after his discharge from the Army until the time of his death from chronic diarrhea and its effects. In my opinion, his last sickness was largely the result of the chronic diarrhea, his system being reduced, and that the pneumonia was merely the termination of his chronic disease."

Drs. J. R. McGaughey, W. S. Morrison, and J. Q. A. Vale all testify as to soldier's sufferings and reduced condition from the effects of the disease for which he was pensioned. There can be no hesitancy in arriving at the conclusion that the disease for which claimant's husband was pensioned was the primary cause of the fatal diseases that ended his life, if the medical testimony in this case be believed, and as the character and professional standing of each physician who testified in this case are admitted to be good by the Pension Office, your committee are of the opinion that this soldier's widow is entitled to the pension asked, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. WALLACE (from his seat). I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I desire to know why it is that the bill which was pending in the last evening session is not under consideration.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. On the request of the gentleman from Indiana, by unanimous consent of the House, the Chair will recognize members present to call up such bills on the Calendar as they desire out of their order.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. That is not in order. There was a bill on which a discussion, unfortunately of a political nature, sprang up, granting a pension to this old lady whose son was shot down in battle.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that the gentleman from Illinois will be recognized hereafter to call up that bill.

MARTIN V. CURRY.

Mr. CABELL called up the bill (H. R. 9457) granting a pension to Martin V. Curry; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Martin V. Curry, late a private in Company G, First Regiment United States Volunteers, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have the report read:

The report (by Mr. ELLSBERRY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9457) granting a pension to Martin V. Curry, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Curry enlisted in Company G, First United States Volunteer Infantry, a regiment composed of confederate prisoners, June 18, 1864, and was discharged May 21, 1866, because the services of these troops were no longer required.

His claim for pension, on account of injury to shoulder and left hip and rheumatism, was rejected by the Pension Office on the ground of insufficiency of evidence to establish origin in service and line of duty.

Officers and others of the Forty-fifth Regiment of North Carolina Volunteers, confederate, in which claimant served from April 1, 1862, until May 30, 1864, testify to his soundness at capture by the Union troops.

Comrades William Spencer, John McHone, and Jacob Metcham testify from personal knowledge that in the winter of 1865 claimant, while stationed with his company at Fort Ripley, Minn., accidentally fell on the ice and dislocated his left shoulder and injured his left hip. Affiants assisted in carrying claimant to hospital, where he was confined for some time. He subsequently contracted a severe cold which resulted in rheumatism in the injured parts, from which he has suffered ever since.

James Holt, A. S. Holt, and others testify that upon his return home from the Union service claimant walked lame and complained of rheumatism in leg and injury to arm received while in the service.

There is also medical evidence of treatment for rheumatism since discharge, but not covering the whole period. One physician testifies to treatment for rheumatism of left leg and shoulder in June, 1866.

The witnesses are shown to be men of good reputation. Medical examination shows the following:

Partial loss of power in left side, left arm almost useless for manual labor, flexor muscles of left hand flexed, and finger flexed on palmer surface of hand; left leg about 1 inch shorter than right; muscles of toes contracted; the great toe can not be made to touch the floor when standing; can scarcely walk upstairs; disability, total.

The records of the regimental hospital are not on file in the War Department. The officers of the company can not be found.

The officers of Henry County, Virginia, where claimant has resided since his discharge, certify that from their knowledge of him they are certain that his claim is made in good faith, and believe him honestly entitled to a pension.

Considering all the evidence in the case, your committee are of opinion that the claim is meritorious, and therefore report favorably on the bill, amended, however, by striking out all after the word "volunteers" in line 7, and ask that it do pass as amended.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment submitted by the committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Before the question is put from the Chair I desire to ask a question of the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. CABELL] who has called up this application for a pension. It appears to come from a questionable source. A man who has served on both sides leaves us in doubt as to where he got hurt. Is the gentleman from Virginia personally acquainted with the facts of this case?

Mr. CABELL. I have seen this man. He passes for a very respectable citizen. I did not myself know the facts of the case until I saw them stated in the report. I introduced the bill and turned the papers over to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, who reported the bill favorably.

For the first time, to-day I saw the report, and until then I knew nothing of the facts. But I received from the county of Henry, in Virginia, where this man resides, a certificate from the judge of the circuit court, the judge of the county court, the clerks of the two courts there, and several worthy citizens, saying that the claimant is a worthy man. They certify also that they are of opinion that he incurred his disability in the service of the United States, and that he ought to be pensioned. That is all I know about the case.

Mr. MCMILLIN. His service appears to have been principally on the confederate side.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Did this applicant make any sympathetic impression on the mind of the gentleman from Virginia when he saw him?

Mr. CABELL. I saw the man. He is, I think, a cripple. He does not live in my county. But from the certificate which I filed with the Committee on Invalid Pensions it appears to me the man is entitled to a pension, and that his disability came to him while in the service of the Government. If the Government accepted his services and he was disabled in its service, then the man is as much entitled to a pension as another.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have no desire to deprive a man whose record is such as is presented here of any lawful right he may have. And although I think a case of that kind is one that merits particular scrutiny, I have no further question to ask.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I wish to know, as it seems the principal service of this soldier was in the confederate army, if it is certain as to which army his disability was incurred in?

Mr. CABELL. It is stated in the report that his disability was incurred in the service of the United States Government. A part of the service was after the war and a part during the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment submitted by the committee.

The amendment was adopted.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] on the left is recognized.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I rise to a question of order. When the committee rose last Friday evening there was a bill pending——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has already stated that he will recognize the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND] in his turn. The Chair will recognize gentlemen alternately on the right and on the left. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] on the left is recognized.

LEWIS A. CRONKHITE.

Mr. CANNON. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 8352) for the relief of Lewis A. Cronkhite.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Lewis A. Cronkhite, late a private in Company E, Eighty-sixth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In line 4, strike out "Lewis" and insert "Levi."
Also amend the title so as to conform to the bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. NEECE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8352) for the relief of Lewis A. Cronkhite, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

Cronkhite served as private of Company E, Eighty-sixth Indiana Volunteers, from August 15, 1862, to June 6, 1865. He applied for pension July 29, 1871, alleging that he contracted measles in November, 1862, in consequence of which he is suffering from disease of eyes. The record of the War Department shows that he was absent, sick, from October, 1862, to February, 1863, but the Surgeon-General reports the absence of the medical records which cover the period of aforesaid treatment.

Two comrades testify to claimant's sickness after enlistment, but can not now recall the nature of the disease.

Dr. Asa Bigelow testifies that he treated claimant for measles on November 21 and 24, 1862, also on December 4 and 11, 1862, as shown by his books. Claimant was then at home on furlough.

Assistant-Surgeon Van Vorhis, of claimant's regiment, testifies that, at New Hope church, May 27, 1864, claimant received an injury to eyes by explosion of shell; was taken to the rear and affiant examined him. Found that dirt and gravel had been thrown with great violence in his face, injuring his eyes very much; remained under treatment for about three weeks, but returned to duty and suffered with impaired eyesight during remainder of his service. Claimant is now (August, 1882) almost blind in right eye, with vision of left eye much impaired. Affiant does believe that this condition is due to the injury above mentioned.

Joseph Jones, late surgeon of the regiment, testifies that claimant had an attack of measles after his enlistment; that he took cold while convalescent, which greatly impaired his eyesight, but continued to do duty until he was stunned and blinded by the explosion of a shell in May, 1864, while in battle, after which he became so disabled in his sight that he was transferred to the Pioneer Corps.

Medical examination in August, 1881, showed asthenopia, which the examining surgeon states was undoubtedly caused from the effects of measles.

Doubts as to claimant's soundness before enlistment were thrown in the case by information furnished the office tending to show that claimant, prior to his enlistment, was slightly near-sighted, and the case was specially examined. The examination was concluded in December last, the case being returned to the Pension Office, with the special examiner's recommendation for admission. In April last claimant was again examined by an oculist, who pronounced the defective vision the result of hypermetropic astigmatism, which is probably congenital. Upon this finding the claim was rejected by the medical referee.

There may have been some defect in claimant's sight prior to his service, but he was not disqualified in any way to perform military duty until after he suffered from an attack of measles, and still later, when he received a more serious injury to his eyes, as is shown by the unimpeached testimony of both the surgeon and assistant surgeon of the regiment.

He is now in a deplorable condition, and in the opinion of this committee should receive the benefit of whatever doubt may exist in the case.

The Commissioner of Pensions, in a recent letter to this committee, says:

"The action of rejection was based on the opinion of the medical referee of this bureau, who was unable, on the testimony on file, to accept that the disease of eyes alleged by claimant was caused by, or due to, his army service. In my opinion, it is an equitable case, worthy the consideration and action of your committee."

Concurring in this view of the case, we recommend the passage of the bill, amended, however, by striking out the word "Lewis" in the title of the bill, and also in line 4, and inserting therein the word "Levi."

The amendment reported by the Committee on Invalid Pensions was adopted.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. To call up a bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The pending bill has not been disposed of. If there be no objection, the bill as amended will be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WALLACE. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill as amended be laid aside and reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass?

The question being taken, the Chairman stated that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. WALLACE. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 65, no, 1.

So (further count not being called for) the question was decided in the affirmative; and the bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

CATHARINE WATERS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now call up the bill (H. R. 325) granting a pension to Catharine Waters. The bill was read at the last sitting of the committee, and the report also was read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws of the United States, the name of Catharine Waters, mother of Thomas Waters, deceased, late steward of the steamer Benefit, at the rate of $8 per month.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions recommended the following amendment:

In lines 7 and 8 strike out the words "at the rate of eight dollars per month."

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. NEECE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 325) granting a pension to Catharine Waters, have had the same under consideration, and beg leave to submit the following report:

The claimant is the mother of Thomas Waters, who was killed by the enemy while serving as steward on the steamer Benefit while going up Red River in April, 1864.

Her claim has been rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the son at time of his death was not in the military or naval service of the United States.

It appears from the evidence on file that Thomas Waters served as officers' steward on the United States steamer Sovereign from December 11, 1862, to February 25, 1863. He then acted in like capacity on the General Lyon, operating on the Mississippi River, and afterward on the steamer Benefit on its trip up Red River, having on board Lieutenant Terry, United States Navy, and about one hundred and fifty marines and sailors for the Red River fleet. The steamer was chartered by the Government as a dispatch boat, as appears from the certificate of Admiral Porter, who also states that Lieutenant Terry (now commander, United States Navy), was ordered to pass a battery, and in doing so his vessel (the Benefit) was much cut up and a number of men were killed. This occurred at Grappe's Bluff, Louisiana. All the men on board of the steamer were engaged in the fight. Claimant's son was struck by a solid shot from the enemy's battery and instantly killed. The claimant was employed as laundress of the boat at the time of her son's death.

Although not a war vessel of the United States the steamer Benefit was by reason of its employment by the Government a part of the Mississippi fleet under the command of Admiral Porter, and exposed to the same damage from confederate attacks as vessels of the Navy.

The claimant was dependent upon the son for years before his death, being left a widow about 1850, without property or other means of support. She is old, and as stated by Hon. Mr. TOWNSHEND, of this House, is compelled to earn her subsistence by washing.

While it is true that the pension laws do not confer any benefit upon this claimant, because her son at time of his death was not directly connected with the naval service of the United States, yet it is equally true that he was killed in an engagement with the enemy while on board of a vessel under the immediate control of the highest officer of the Mississippi River fleet, and we therefore believe that Congress should grant the relief asked for.

Your committee recommend the passage of the accompanying bill, amended, however, by striking out all after the word "Benefit," in line 7.

Mr. NEECE. Mr. Chairman, as I made the report in this case, I rise to suggest that there is an error in the bill which ought to be corrected. This man was not a soldier, although he was killed while serving in the capacity of a soldier, but as he was not actually in the service the bill ought to fix the rate of pension, or else this old lady will get nothing. I therefore move to amend the bill so as to fix the rate at $12 a month.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to inquire of the gentleman from Illinois if this party was ever enlisted in the military or naval service of the United States?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. He was not.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Then, if he was not, I shall object to this bill and call a quorum on it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. On last Friday evening the gentleman from Louisiana was in his seat and heard this bill discussed. The facts are that this man was steward of a dispatch boat of the United States which was on the way up Red River loaded with soldiers. While the boat was on its way up the river it was attacked by the confederate forces, and this man, in battle with a gun in his hand, was shot down and lost his life. It is true that he was not a soldier and was merely the steward of the boat, but he was in the service of the Government of the United States, and was acting as a soldier when he was killed. These facts were known to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] last Friday night, and although he made a very eloquent speech here, he made no objection to the bill on this ground, and I think it is rather late for him now to come in with an objection.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, this bill was not put to a vote on last Friday night. Here is a proposition to grant a pension to a party who was not in either the military or the naval service of the United States. Now, sir, I think it is stretching our pension prerogatives too far to place upon the pension-rolls of the country a man who was not in either the naval or the military service, but was merely a civil employé of the Government, and I serve notice now that I intend to call a quorum upon this bill and all similar bills.

Mr. ROWELL. If the gentleman will permit a question, I will ask him whether it is not true that civil employés who serve with the Army on the frontier are pensioned although they are not enlisted men, and is there any difference in principle between serving with the army out among the Indians and serving on a Government boat on the Red River?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will answer that question by saying that the Pension Bureau of the United States Government has rejected this claim upon the ground that the man was not enrolled in either the military or the naval service of the United States. That is the ground of the rejection.

This man was in the civil service of the Government. The case is not pensionable under any law, and, while I have not called a quorum upon cases where the parties were in the civil or the military service of the Government, I will never consent, as long as I am a member of this House, to the passage of a bill like this.

Mr. MORRILL. Can not the gentleman let this case go over and have a vote taken upon it in the House?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I have no objection to that, but certainly no bill of this sort shall ever pass unless there be a quorum present.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The facts in this case are briefly these: Her son was on this steamboat as a steward, and she was on the same boat as a laundress. The boat was in the employ of the Government, chartered by the Government, and was on its way up the Red River, loaded with soldiers. An engagement occurred between the soldiers on the boat, some one hundred and fifty in number, and a land force of the enemy. When the hour of battle came this man took his gun and stood in the front rank, and was shot down while fighting for his country.

Since then this old woman has had no means of support except her own labor, and she has been maintaining herself by taking in washing and doing other drudgery. She has no friend on earth that is of any value to me. So far as I am concerned, she is merely an object of charity, and now in her old age, if this bill fails, she will have to go into the poor-house. And why? Because she gave her son to her country, and in doing so gave up the only means upon which she could rely for support in her old age. In order to save that mother from the poor-house I have introduced this bill, and after a careful investigation by the Committee on Pensions they have brought in this report.

Mr. BURROWS. How old is she?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I do not know exactly, but, judging from her appearance when she called upon me at a hotel where I was stopping and begged me to aid her in procuring a pension, I should say that she must be nearly eighty years of age. She can not live long to enjoy a pension; indeed she ought to have arrears, because she has been asking for a pension ever since the close of the war but has never until now had an opportunity to obtain it. And I tell you now, gentlemen, I know if this bill is not passed and she is not pensioned she will be compelled to seek shelter and food and raiment in the paupers' house of Marion County, Illinois.

Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago a bill was under consideration here having application to a case where a man had fought on both sides during the war. I did not raise my voice against that bill; and I think it does not come now with good grace from the gentleman from Louisiana to raise objection to pensioning this old mother who gave her son to the country. She is just as meritoriously entitled to a pension as any person who ever received one; and I should fail of my duty if I did not insist and demand that there be action upon this bill before any other bill is disposed of to-night. If the gentleman from Louisiana intends to insist here that a quorum shall vote upon this bill, then, before I consent that this woman shall be driven into the poor-house, I will stay here all night insisting that a quorum shall come and that her case be disposed of. [Applause.]

Mr. GOFF. Mr. Chairman, I will detain the committee but a moment. It seems to me this is a meritorious case. The very reason that the gentleman from Louisiana cites as the basis of the action of the Pension Department in rejecting the claim—the fact that there is no existing law by which this old woman can receive a pension—is the very reason why Congress should act in her case. It was perfectly proper that the Commissioner of Pensions should reject this application. Why? Because under existing law unless the party on account of whose service the pension is asked was mustered into the Army or Navy of the United States the application can not be granted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. The gentleman will allow me to state in connection with what he has just said that at this session a bill has been passed, I understand, pensioning a woman under circumstances similar to those presented here, and that bill having passed both Houses has been signed by the President.

Mr. GOFF. Further than that, I want to call the attention of the gentleman from Louisiana to the fact that this is not the first time we have had a case of this kind. He intimates that this is something wonderful, something unheard-of before in our pension legislation. He is mistaken. For years past men who without being mustered into the service had partaken of the perils of that service, and incurred disability by reason of wounds or exposure, have received pensions. I know of men in my own State who were scouts in the armies of the United States who were never mustered into the military service, but who to-day draw pensions. They were exposed to all the dangers of battle, all the hardships of the service; and every point which the gentleman from Louisiana urges here to-night was urged when their cases were considered by this House a dozen years ago. Why should they not have pensions? It is just as essential that there should be scouts, telegraph operators, teamsters, and wagon-masters as that there should be soldiers in the field with guns in their hands.

Unless we have all these other essentials the soldier can not prosecute properly the campaign on which he is sent nor can the armies of the country succeed in their undertakings. When men have suffered in this manner, have incurred wounds in this manner, have gone down to death in this manner, the applications for pensions in such cases are as much entitled to the favorable action of this House as the cases of men who wore the blue and carried muskets in their hands.

One word in conclusion. It is a shame, a crying shame, that a member of this Congess should rise on this floor as the gentleman from Illinois has done to-night and say that one of these old gray-haired mothers of men who rendered military service on behalf of the Union is without a pension; and I hope this House will not hesitate to pass this bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, the Congress of the United States has never yet embarked upon the policy of granting pensions to the civil employés of the Government.

Mr. PERKINS. Will the gentleman allow me to ask a question?

Mr. BLANCHARD. It is rather early for a question, but I will yield.

Mr. PERKINS. I do not wish to interrupt the gentleman, but I would like to ask whether he is aware that under a law which was in force until 1874 if this man had been wounded as he was wounded and had not died, he could have obtained a pension in consequence of that injury?

A MEMBER. Under a general law.

Mr. PERKINS. Under a general statute of the United States which was in force until 1874.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Then, Mr. Chairman, while that law which is cited by my friend from Kansas was in existence this party who is to-night a claimant for a pension should have filed her application.

Mr. CUTCHEON. It did not cover her case.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, two weeks ago to-night the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER] presented a case almost exactly similar to this. In that case a civil employé of the Government had lost his life during the war and an application was made to Congress for a pension.

Mr. GOFF. You are mistaken there.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And this House voted down that application, notwithstanding the fact there were but forty members present. But here to-night is the case of another civil employé of the Government on account of whose death a pension is asked at the hands of Congress. Now, where parties have been in the military or naval service of the United States as soldiers or seamen and their cases have been rejected at the Pension Office, I am in favor of granting pensions in proper cases by special act of Congress. But if we are going to embark upon a policy of granting pensions to civil employés of the Government, let it be known right here and now.

Mr. Chairman, most of us have stood on this floor for years asking that the veterans of the Mexican war, whose service in a foreign land shed glory and honor upon the American flag, and whose valor added a principality to the American Union, should be pensioned, and while the lower House of the American Congress has passed such a bill, it has failed in the other House. When Congress has refused tardy justice to the veterans of the Mexican war why should we be called to vote pensions to the civil employés of the Government?

When they appeal to us for charity it is another matter. We would all like to relieve suffering and distress wherever we find them, but if we open the doors of that kind of legislation, in God's name where is it going to stop?

I have no objection in any proper case where a party was in the military or naval service of the United States, and has been wounded or contracted disease in the service, that party or his widow or dependent relative should have the pension which the law allows. But I shall object in every single case where a party applying for a pension is a civilian. I therefore enter my solemn protest against the passage of the pending bill, and give notice if it shall be insisted on and pushed to a vote to-night I shall demand a quorum of the Representatives of the people to vote upon it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I ask the gentleman to yield to me for a question.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I yield to the gentleman for that purpose.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Was not this man in the military service? Was he in the civil service at the time? What did he lack of being in the military service? As I understand, although a civilian, he lacked only the formality of muster in. He was killed in actual battle.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The report says this party never entered the military service, but was employed as a steward in the civil service.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. He was never mustered in, to be sure, but he was nevertheless killed in battle.

Mr. BLANCHARD. He served as a steward on this vessel which was not then a vessel of war.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It was a vessel of war; it was a Government dispatch-boat.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If we are to set a precedent here to-night by the passage of this bill in favor of pensioning civil employés I wish it to be distinctly understood I intend to call for a quorum. Unquestionably I will do it. I have never yet done so, and while I would not do it in any proper case calling for a pension, as this is the case of pensioning a civil employé I am compelled by sense of duty to demand the presence of the people's Representatives to pass such a bill.

Mr. BURROWS. The gentleman then proposes to stand alone.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Yes, I am willing to assume that responsibility, and if necessary I shall stand alone in resisting the establishment of such an uncalled-for precedent as the pensioning of a civil employé.

Mr. BURROWS. He was killed in the defense of the flag.

Mr. MATSON. In order to expedite the business of the House I ask the gentleman from Louisiana whether he will not consent to have this bill reported to the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Favorably.

Mr. MATSON. With the understanding it shall be voted on next Friday by a full House.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I am opposed to that unless the report shall be read and the bill shall be properly debated in the House and voted on with a quorum of the people's Representatives present.

Mr. BINGHAM. Let it go to the House.

Mr. MATSON. Very well; let the agreement also include fifteen minutes of debate on either side.

Mr. BURROWS. And let the report be read.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If we can have the report read and fifteen minutes' debate on either side and the bill voted on with a quorum present, I am content.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana asks the pending bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it be voted on next Friday after the report has been read and there has been fifteen minutes' debate on either side. Is there objection?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Why postpone it until next Friday? Why not vote on it to-morrow?

Mr. MATSON. To-morrow is not private bill day, and next Friday is.

Mr. McMILLIN. I suggest to the gentleman from Louisiana and the gentleman from Illinois also that an agreement entered into in committee can not bind the House.

Mr. MATSON. I suppose an agreement entered into between gentlemen will bind gentlemen.

Mr. McMILLIN. But all the gentlemen are not here, and others may come in and make objection to such an arrangement.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Tennessee that unanimous consent is asked that this bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation suggested. That recommendation, if adopted by the House, will bind the House.

Mr. McMILLIN. I was only stating that the committee could not bind the House.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. MORRISON. I object to the thirty minutes' time. We know all we will know after thirty minutes' debate on this bill, and I do not think at this stage of the session that the House can spare the time.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I know nothing of this claimant save by the facts as we gather them from the report made by the committee to this House. I do know, sir, and wish to state for the benefit of the gentleman from Louisiana, and the fact may have escaped his attention, that a party—a civilian—may be pensioned, and that his dependent parents in case of his being killed in battle may be entitled to a pension, although the civilian never was mustered into the service of the United States or the militia of any State.

Now, sir, I desire to call the attention of the committee to this fact, that had this young man been upon a gunboat or war vessel in the Mississippi fleet and killed, as he was, in battle, although not an enlisted man, that the dependent mother would be to-day entitled to a pension. By a mere technicality she is unable to obtain that pension in the Pension Office, and why? Let us look at the facts.

Mr. CURTIN. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. CURTIN. His mother was there with him at the time he was killed.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Yes, sir; she was there with her boy.

But I wish to appeal to the sense of fairness of the gentleman when I state that this young man, though not upon a gunboat or war vessel, was upon a boat which was impressed into the service by the Admiral of the Mississippi fleet, the highest officer of the naval service. The boat was a part of the Mississippi fleet. It was under the command of the Admiral as much as though it had been technically called a gunboat. It was, in fact, actually a part of the fleet.

I desire to call the attention of the committee to the language of section 4693 of the Revised Statutes, in which, after providing that the persons entitled to pensions under the statutes are as follows, &c., the second provision is as follows:

> Any master serving on a gunboat, or any pilot, engineer, sailor, or any other person not regularly serving upon any gunboat or war vessel of the United States, disabled by any wound or injury received or otherwise incapacitated while in the line of duty from procuring his subsistence by manual labor.

That is to say, that any such person is entitled to the benefits of the pension laws. The vessel on which this widow's boy was serving was, as I have said, a part of the fleet; he was killed in battle, but he was not an enlisted man. That is the case in a nutshell.

I would ask the gentleman from Louisiana was not this vessel in which this young man was acting in the capacity of steward in fact a war vessel? Did it not at the time bear the commander of the fleet upon the Mississippi? Was he not there in person directing the movements of that vessel? Did not the young man who was shot in the presence of that commander lose his life in the defense of his country? It is the barest, sheerest technicality by which he is deprived of his pension.

Now, sir, I think we should approach this question outside of any mere technicality. It is a just case where the old mother—then dependent upon her son, now old and in poverty—appeals to the Congress of that country her son gave his life to save for a pension that her last days shall not be spent in the poor-house.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Does that act provide among the beneficiaries dependent relatives?

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I read from sections 4692 and 4693, the first of which sections provides that every person specified in the several classes which are enumerated in section 4693, who has been disabled under the conditions stated, shall upon proof of the fact be entitled to be placed on the list of pensioners. But if you turn to section 4707 you will find that in addition to the persons embraced in the sections I have first named that it goes on and makes provision for dependent relatives. The section provides in express terms for dependent relatives. If the vessel on which the claimant's son was killed had been technically a gunboat or a war vessel, then she would have received her pension long since through the Department.

I think, sir, the purpose of these evening sessions should be to consider, among others, just such cases as this. Here is a case in which, under the technical rules of law which bind the office, the Commissioner of Pensions can not grant the pension. But by every right and justice, by every sense of duty to the dependent mothers of those who fell in defense of their country, this woman is entitled to the pension sought. It is just such a case as appeals for Congressional action; just such a case as certainly we should act upon, and act promptly.

I am not here, sir, specially depicting the poverty of this mother or her suffering; but I am here as one of those who believe that it is an everlasting shame, a blot upon the honor of this nation, that any man who risked his life in the defense of his country, or, as in this case, the poor mother of a boy who fell in battle, should be permitted to look out at the prosperity of this nation through the dingy bars or windows of the almshouses of the country. I do not envy the reputation that any man may make, live where he may in this Union, by calling a quorum or obstructing legislation when a just case such as this is presented.

I believe, sir, the sense of justice, the sense of right, the sense of gratitude of the American people from the East, the West, the North, and the South will say amen to this Congress in passing this bill, and will condemn obstruction, come from whom it may.

I yield as much of my time as he may require to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL].

Mr. CURTIN. Will the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ROWELL] allow me to suggest to him, in view of the demand of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] for a quorum, what is the use of wasting time in making speeches?

Mr. ROWELL. I should not for a single moment detain the House with discussion but for the fact that the gentleman from Louisiana has given notice that he intends to make the point of no quorum upon this bill. When the gentleman makes that point it stops all legislation here to-night, because we know there is no quorum. That being the fact, I know of no more profitable way of passing the evening than in discussing these questions.

The gentleman from Louisiana tells us to-night that he has no objection to a meritorious case that might have been passed by the Commissioner of Pensions, and has not been passed through erroneous judgment, going through this House.

It is not many weeks, Mr. Chairman, since we had another view presented by the gentleman from Louisiana. Then it was that no case ought to be passed here if it was a proper case to be considered by the Commissioner of Pensions and had been by him rejected; that the only proper cases to be presented here for Congress to act upon were cases not within the purview of any pension law. The gentleman from Louisiana and the gentleman from Arkansas both presented those propositions but a few weeks ago.

Now, then, we have a case of that kind, one that does not come within the technical law; and we are told that it is not a case which can be passed in Congress; that the only cases that we should consider are such as may be presented under existing law and where we decided that the Commissioner of Pensions has judged erroneously.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. ROWELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. What position is it you are attributing to some gentleman from Arkansas?

Mr. ROWELL. I am attributing to you, that you took the ground only a few weeks ago that the cases which should be passed on under existing law in the Pension Department ought not to come here, but only such cases as did not fall within existing law.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That is right.

Mr. ROWELL. And now to-night the gentleman from Louisiana says that cases which do not fall within existing law can not pass this House, and only cases such as we decide upon appeal that the Commissioner has wrongfully decided.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman has stated my position correctly.

Mr. ROWELL. The position of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] is that the only kind of cases that ought to be allowed here are such cases as the one presented to-night. The gentleman from Louisiana took the same position a few nights ago. Now he changes ground and says that only cases which come here before a high court of appeal to reverse the judgment of the Commissioner of Pensions in a case within the pension law can go through this House without a quorum.

Now, it is well known to everybody that for many years on these Friday nights members of Congress, under the leave of the House, have assembled here to act upon these bills, and it is to be presumed that those who do not come consent to the action of those who do. It is a well known fact, further, that in every case where the body of men who assemble on Friday night have not been able to pass a case through, when it has been submitted to the whole House, the whole House, by an overwhelming majority on roll-call, have passed it. So that we do know that cases which those who assemble here are not willing to take the responsibility of passing, the House when full, upon a yea-and-nay call, has been in the habit of passing.

I undertake to say that a man not enlisted, but in the presence of enlisted men, and in the presence of an enemy and compelled to do service by the officers in command, and losing his life while in such service, stands precisely, in morals and in equity, in the same position as a man who had enlisted. I have before me now a case where the dependent relative of a man not an enlisted man, wounded in battle in the war of 1812, was pensioned by an act of Congress. During the present session the bill was introduced by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], passed by both Houses, and approved by the President of the United States. The case is the case of Ellen P. Jacobs, and the report is Report 1607. It is just exactly such a case as this, and had the indorsement of the House, the indorsement of the Senate, and the indorsement of the President of the United States, and the approval, by his introducing the bill, of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

This is only one of those cases. That was a soldier of 1812. This is a soldier of 1861–'65, serving upon a boat. As has been well said by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], had he served aboard a gunboat, not being enlisted, or on a war vessel, not being enlisted, he would be entitled to a pension if wounded and his mother would be entitled to a pension if he was killed.

Now, this did not happen to be a gunboat or a war vessel owned by the United States, but it was a vessel taken into the service, taken into battle, with soldiers upon it, and with sailors upon it, commanded by a naval officer, and this man was killed at his post defending the flag and the honor of his country. Yet we are now told that because there are not quite enough members of Congress here this evening to make a quorum this bill can not pass, and, therefore, that no other bill can pass to-night, because, forsooth, this boat did not happen to be named a war vessel, although it was a vessel used in war!

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. ROWELL. Certainly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I would like to ask the gentleman if it is not best, if we propose to transact any business to-night, to quit talking and move a call of the House. If the gentleman will permit me I will move a call of the House.

Mr. ROWELL. I said a little while ago, Mr. Chairman, that when the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] gave notice of his intention to call a quorum upon this bill it was equivalent to giving notice that no business could be transacted here to-night, because the gentleman in charge of this bill had said that if this bill did not pass he proposed to stand by it until it did.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Well, let us have a call of the House.

Mr. ROWELL. A call of the House never got a quorum in the middle of the night.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I will stay here until we do get a quorum, if the gentleman from Illinois is willing to stay as long.

Mr. ROWELL. So will I; but my experience is, and it is the experience of everybody, that when we start to get a quorum at this hour of the night we never succeed. If we try to get a quorum now we shall not get one before 11 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Well, I am willing to stay here until we do get a quorum; and if you do not start to get a quorum you will never get one.

Mr. ROWELL. That is true, but you will not get one if you do try.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have often seen a quorum brought in.

Mr. ROWELL. I never saw a quorum obtained at night. I think we shall succeed in convincing the whole House, including the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], that this bill ought to pass.

Mr. MATSON. Are you willing to try to get a quorum?

Mr. ROWELL. I am, in a moment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let us try now.

Mr. ROWELL. The dropping of the rain finally wears away the hardest stone, and I am in hopes that every man in this House, including the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD], will yet find it consistent with his duty to vote to lay this bill aside with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. How much time does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY] want?

Mr. DOCKERY. Two minutes.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I will yield two minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion before he yields?

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Certainly.

Mr. CANNON. I doubt whether we can get a quorum by staying here all night, but we can certainly do this; we can take a recess until to-morrow at 10.30, and thus continue this session over. I think we can have unanimous consent to take a recess until 10 o'clock or half past 10 to-morrow.

A MEMBER. We shall have no quorum then.

Mr. CANNON. But we can run right along to-morrow until we dispose of these bills. We can extend this legislative day into to-morrow.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DOCKERY].

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I have no disposition to discuss at length the merits of this bill. I am not just in the frame of mind for a calm discussion of it. I understand that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] places his objection to this bill on the ground that this applicant was not, technically, enlisted in either the military or the naval service of the United States, and yet, Mr. Chairman, the report which has been read at the desk reveals the fact that this applicant was shot in his tracks, with a gun in his hand, fighting in defense of the Government of the United States.

Mr. BOUTELLE. And in the waters of Louisiana.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Killed in battle.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman will find that it is not so stated in the report.

Mr. DOCKERY. It has been stated in this debate.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And it is an absolutely unquestioned fact. Although that exact statement may not be made in the report, it is stated in the report that this man was shot down in battle.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Will the gentleman permit me to read the report?

Mr. DOCKERY. At any rate, I understand it to be the fact——

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will send the gentleman the report.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not know whether it would be said that under such circumstances the man was technically in the military service; I do not care how that may be. This man lost his life in defense of the Government; and I believe this bill to pension his dependent mother is a just and meritorious measure, and, for one, I am willing to stay here until we get a quorum and pass it. [Applause.] This House as I understand has passed a measure of like character.

Mr. TOWNSHEND and others. Several.

Mr. DOCKERY. Some gentlemen may apprehend that the President would veto such a bill as this.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. He has signed a bill similar to it.

Mr. DOCKERY. I do not expect such a result as the veto of a bill like this. Until the fact is demonstrated I shall never believe that the President of the United States or a quorum of either House will interpose an objection to a proper pension in the case of any man who lost his life in the defense of the Government, no matter whether he was technically enlisted in the service or not.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TOWNSHEND].

Mr. BURROWS and others. Let us have a vote.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. If the House is ready to vote, I will not discuss the question further. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. BLANCHARD. I would like to say a word before the vote is taken.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I will yield the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I have reread the report of the committee, and I do not see in it any statement that this soldier was killed while fighting on behalf of the Union.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let the Clerk read the report. I raise issue with the gentleman on the statement he has just made.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I will read the report myself:

The claimant is the mother of Thomas Waters, who was killed by the enemy while serving as steward on the steamer Benefit while going up Red River in April, 1864.

Her claim has been rejected by the Pension Office on the ground that the son at time of his death was not in the military or naval service of the United States.

It appears from the evidence on file that Thomas Waters served as officers' steward on the United States steamer Sovereign from December 11, 1862, to February 25, 1863. He then acted in like capacity on the General Lyon, operating on the Mississippi River, and afterward on the steamer Benefit on its trip up

Red River, having on board Lieutenant Terry, United States Navy, and about one hundred and fifty marines and sailors for the Red River fleet. The steamer was chartered by the Government as a dispatch boat, as appears from the certificate of Admiral Porter, who also states that Lieutenant Terry (now commander, United States Navy) was ordered to pass a battery, and in doing so his vessel (the Benefit) was much cut up and a number of men were killed. This occurred at Grappe's Bluff, Louisiana. All the men on board the steamer were engaged in the fight.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. "All the men on board of the steamer;" that included this man.

Mr. BLANCHARD. There is a general statement that "all the men on board of the steamer were engaged in the fight."

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And this was one of "the men on board of the steamer."

Mr. BLANCHARD. But the statement has been made here that this man was killed while fighting with a musket in his hand.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. And I repeat it.

Mr. BLANCHARD. But there is no such statement—only the general statement that "all the men on board of the steamer were engaged in the fight."

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. If the statement were made that this particular man was engaged in the fight, would it be any stronger than it is now?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Unquestionably it would be stronger. There is no evidence that this man was killed "with a musket in his hand," as stated by gentlemen here.

Mr. FELTON. If all the men on board were in the fight, how could this man be out of it?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I now yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, what is the difference between a soldier having "a gun in his hand" in battle and an officer on the field with a sword by his side? Both are in the line of duty. I say the main question to be determined here is whether this man was in the line of his duty—not whether he had "a gun in his hand." Is not the pilot who directs the movement of the vessel in action to be considered as a part of the military force in the engagement?

Mr. LOUTTIT. Many a general never had a musket in his hands.

Mr. MILLS. When the captain stands on the quarter-deck of a vessel directing the engagement, though he has not "a gun in his hands" or a sword by his side, is he not in the discharge of his duty? The surgeon who is ready on deck to attend to the wounded as they fall in action, is he not in the discharge of his duty? Why is it demanded that a man shall have "a gun in his hands" to entitle him to the gratitude of his country for the discharge of duty?

Here was a man whose humble occupation was that of a steward. The duties of a steward on a vessel must be performed as well as those of the commander of the fleet, as well as those of the gunner who draws the lanyard and fires the fatal shot, or the lieutenant who stands at the breach of the gun and directs the engagement of his battery.

Mr. Chairman, what does it matter in the case of this poor fellow who fell in the discharge of his loving duty to his country in that engagement whether his lips had taken the oath to serve his country faithfully or not? [Applause.] Was his service less acceptable to his country, was the offering of his life for his country less meritorious because he had not taken the oath of allegiance? The farmers who fell at Lexington, Mass., in the first engagement of the Revolution, which sounded the knell of British tyranny and oppression from one end of this land to the other—had they taken the oath of allegiance to any country? Had those whose heroism is commemorated by the monument at Bunker Hill sworn allegiance to any government? No, sir; their offering was that of patriotic devotion to the land which they loved. That was what this poor boy gave, because he loved his country. He did not ask whether he ought to be sworn or not. He went where the flag of his country was to be defended; he fell like a brave and noble man; and his poor mother is entitled to the gratitude of the country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. MILLS. Give me a little more time. [Cries of "Yes!"]

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I will give the gentleman a portion of my time.

Mr. MILLS. Now, Mr. Chairman, it is said this is a civil pension. I am afraid we do not draw the proper distinction between a military and civil pension. The military pension is granted for military service and civil pension for civil service. England grants civil pensions to its judges and other civilians. We have been opposed to the granting of civil pensions and I hope we will always continue so. It is true, however, that in a sort of a way we have begun to pension our judges by allowing them to resign and be retired when they have reached a certain age. That is a practice we ought never to have allowed to grow up.

We have some civil pensions in this country which gentlemen seem to forget. There are a number of people who say they would starve; that they could not carry on their industries; that they would be ruined unless they were permitted to impose taxes on all other people to support them. [Derisive laughter and applause.] They come here and plead in forma pauperis. My friend who sits on my right brought in a bill to reduce the burdens of taxation upon the people, and yet four Representatives from Louisiana came up here to the counter and took sugar in theirs. [Great laughter and applause.] These are civil pensioners. Louisiana, by her four votes, said on this floor their sugar-planters could not be sustained unless the Government supported them.

If we can do that, Mr. Chairman, can not we afford to take care of this old woman whose son died in battle; can not we take care of her for the remaining years of her life by putting her upon the pension-roll? [Applause, and cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. One minute. It has been said this man was not engaged in battle. What does the report of the committee say: "All of the men on board the steamer were engaged in the fight. Claimant's son was struck by a solid shot from the enemy's battery and was instantly killed." In the conclusion of the report it is further stated, "Yet it is equally true that he was killed in an engagement with the enemy while on board of a vessel under the immediate control of the highest officer of the Mississippi River fleet." That is all I want to say. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. TUCKER. I have nothing to say about this bill except it seems to me it is a bill we ought to vote for. I have only this further to say, it seems to me if we are to have a call of this House let us have it now. [Applause, and cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I will yield to the gentleman to make that motion. [Cries of "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question next recurs on reporting the bill to the House with the recommendation it do pass.

Mr. BLANCHARD demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 75, noes 1.

Mr. BLANCHARD. No quorum has voted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I move there be a call of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. We are in committee, and that motion can not be recognized.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, we are threatened with a call of the House, and I never knew such a proceeding to result in anything practical except once, long ago, when I was fined two dollars and a half for being late. [Laughter and applause.] I came to the House to-night to see if I could not have a pension granted to a very meritorious claimant, and unless some one relents—backs down—I do not see how I am going to get it done. [Laughter.]

I think the claim under consideration is a good one and should be allowed. The gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD] does not think so. He believes that the man who was a steward on the boat and not enlisted in the Army or Navy is not to be put on the same footing with the soldier, or that the man who wielded the frying-pan is not to be put on the same plane as to pensions with him who wielded the sword or the musket. [Laughter.] The gentleman from Louisiana has a right to his opinion. He is the equal of any of us here and has his duty to perform, and performs it, I doubt not, as conscientiously as the rest of us. If I am not mistaken, I have witnessed here an inclination to much talk of great sacrifices in the war, and by some who sacrificed little themselves much clapping of hands, which takes the place or answers for a failure or neglect to grant pensions.

I objected some time ago to this matter going into the House, that time should there again be given for debate upon it. It has already been very fully considered and discussed in the committee; and at this late day of the session we have not the time for further unprofitable discussion. Time has been liberally granted to the consideration of special pensions, and they have been liberally granted. We have given the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions, who was himself a most gallant soldier, all the time he has ever asked for special pension cases. Still I would rather give up the half-hour for further talk. I want some compromise, and will back down myself if no one else will. Can we not go into the House with this bill and take a direct vote upon it without the waste of more time in discussion?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I am perfectly willing to compromise on that basis.

Mr. MORRISON. How much time does the gentleman from Louisiana desire?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I certainly do not wish to be placed in the position of an obstructionist to pension legislation. I never rise with any such purpose.

Mr. MORRISON. And I have not so placed the gentleman.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I grant you that you have not. I am willing to accept any reasonable compromise. I simply ask that time be allowed in a full House, so that this report shall be read and ten minutes' debate on each side be given, and that will be entirely satisfactory to me.

Mr. MORRISON. I have no objection.

Mr. TUCKER. Mr. Chairman, in order that this arrangement may be made in the House, where it must be made in order to be binding, I move that the committee rise so that it may be perfected.

Mr. McMILLIN. I will suggest to my friend from Virginia that the bill is in the committee, and some provision will have to be made to get it before the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I want it to be laid aside with a favorable report.

Mr. TUCKER. That is the object I have in view—to get the action of the committee ratified by the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Let it be done when the committee rises after disposing of other bills to-night.

Mr. TUCKER. Very well; I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. MATSON. I think there will be no objection if the gentleman from Louisiana will agree to that understanding, so that we may go on now with other matters, and when we rise to go into the House this agreement can be carried out.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It being understood that a favorable report is made from the committee.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Not a favorable report. Let it go to the House with the understanding that when we have a full House present then the report shall be read and ten minutes' discussion had, after which a vote will be taken on the bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. It is to go into the House with a favorable report.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Let it go without recommendation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana as the Chair understands it. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent that this bill be laid aside and reported to the House with the recommendation that it be taken up on Friday next immediately after the reading of the Journal, and a vote had in a full House with ten minutes' debate on each side.

Mr. ROWELL. Under the previous question.

The CHAIRMAN. That, the Chair thinks, would be the understanding, that the previous question should be ordered.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And, in addition to the ten minutes' debate, let the report be read.

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; the report read and ten minutes' debate on each side. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

JESSE CAMPBELL.

Mr. MORRILL called up the bill (H. R. 8150) granting a pension to Jesse Campbell; which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the restrictions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jesse Campbell, late of Company C, Eighteenth Regiment of Ohio Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

Claimant was a private in Company C, Eighteenth Regiment Ohio Volunteers, and on November 5, 1878, filed his application for pension, alleging that on "January 1, 1863, at Stone River, Tennessee, from exposure in battle was taken with pneumonia, resulting in bronchial consumption." His claim was rejected November 25, 1881, because—

"This man's hospital history of thirteen months' duration, with no diagnosis of disease of the respiratory organs, completely negatives the lay testimony as to the character of the disease with which he suffered before going to hospital. Claimant states his inability to furnish any medical testimony as to condition prior to 1874."

Claimant was in several hospitals continuously from June 27, 1863, to September, 1864, when he was discharged, under treatment for diarrhea, hemorrhoids, rheumatism, and debility.

It is shown by the evidence that at the time of his enlistment claimant was a strong, hearty, vigorous man, a blacksmith by trade.

Capt. Johnson M. Welch testifies that—

"Claimant was disabled in the line of duty by severe exposure, overwork, and exhaustion during and for two days preliminary to the battle of Stone River, and contracted a violent cold, hoarseness and coughing, resulting in fever and inability for duty. That said ailment grew worse, coughing increased, flesh greatly reduced, great weakness, and followed with chronic bronchial consumption. * * * Said soldier left camp on 26th December, 1862, with his regiment for Murfreesborough, Tenn. Heavy rains set in, no tents for ten days after. The battle of Stone River followed, and four days' fighting and exposure. During this exposure and overwork said soldier took a violent cold, which settled in his lungs. He was an unusually dutiful and conscientious soldier, and never saved himself when duty called by shirking or half duty."

Col. C. H. Grosvenor, now a member of this House, testified in 1881 as follows:

"That at the time of his enlistment said Jesse Campbell was an able-bodied man in all respects. I was not at Stone River fight. I can state that soon after the Stone River fight I know said Campbell was sick; had cold, sore throat, lungs, and chest, and so continued as long as I knew him."

There is abundant evidence of the continuance of the disability from discharge to present time. Thomas Comby testifies—

"That he knew claimant intimately at enlistment; that he was a strong, robust man; that he saw him when he was discharged, and that he was a wreck of his former self; that the first year after he came out he could perform no manual labor."

Dr. John W. Walters testifies to treating claimant in 1864 and 1865; that he had a severe cough and was very much debilitated. Albert and Robert McKinley testify that they have known claimant since discharge; that he was very much debilitated and was suffering with a severe cough, and that he has never recovered.

Dr. John Y. Simpson testifies to treatment from 1873 to 1883 for bronchial consumption.

The only cause for rejection of this claim that your committee can discover is that the hospital records do not name the disease for which claimant asks pension. It appears that claimant served faithfully for nearly two years before he went to hospital at all. In June, 1863 (the hospital records show), he was admitted for diarrhea, hemorrhoids, and debility. It seems that he remained in the hospital ten months, and was then transferred to another. The only record seems to be the simple statement of his admission for the diseases above named.

It is assumed by the Department that this record "completely negatives" the lay evidence of bronchial disease. This seems to your committee illogical and unreasonable. For nearly ten months no record was made in the hospital of the treatment the soldier received, and this absence of a record, we are told, is positive proof that the disability did not exist, though there is strong lay and medical testimony to prove that it did. The case was rejected in 1881.

Hon. C. H. GROSVENOR, of this House, submitted the following statement:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Washington, D. C., May 27, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to state that I knew Jesse Campbell for many years prior to the war. He was then a man of notable and unusual physical strength, was in all respects able-bodied.

I knew him upon my return in 1865, and since up to a few years ago. He has been a broken-down man ever since the war. He is a worthy man in every way.

Yours, truly,

C. H. GROSVENOR.

Hon. C. C. MATSON,
Chairman Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Your committee, after a careful examination of the papers in the case, conclude that claimant has fairly established his claim and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

EMILY THREADGILL.

Mr. JOHN M. TAYLOR called up the bill (H. R. 7418) granting a pension to Emily Threadgill.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emily Threadgill, widow of Nathaniel Threadgill, who was a private in Company B, Third Tennessee Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. TAULBEE) is as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7418) granting a pension to Emily Threadgill, widow of Nathaniel Threadgill, late of Company B, Third Tennessee Cavalry, having examined the same, submit the following report:

Claimant alleges soldier died of small-pox at Danville, Va., January, 1864.

Soldier's name is not borne on the rolls of Company B, Third Tennessee Cavalry, and for that reason was rejected.

M. V. Wilson and W. H. Cariness, comrades of soldier, testify that soldier was enlisted about October 1, 1863, and before he was mustered in was captured at Como, Tenn., October 7, 1863, and taken to the prison at Danville, Va., where he died of small-pox April 26, 1864. That they were enlisted, captured, and in prison with soldier when he died. Said company was never organized after the capture, but the members thereof attached themselves to other military organizations.

In the opinion of your committee the claim is meritorious, and recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MICHAEL FITZPATRICK.

Mr. PAYNE called up the bill (H. R. 8963) granting a pension to Michael Fitzpatrick.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Michael Fitzpatrick, late a private in Company A, One hundred and fiftieth New York Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. PINDAR) was read, as follows:

The soldier enlisted September 3, 1862, and was discharged June 8, 1865. His declaration for pension was filed December 4, 1880, on account of injury to head and back by the fall of a tree while building breastworks at or near Pine Knob, Ga., 1864, resulting in deafness of left ear and rheumatism.

The claim was rejected upon the ground that he has not been disabled for manual labor by the alleged rheumatism, injury to head and back, or deafness since the date of filing his claim.

The records of the Adjutant-General's Office furnish no evidence of alleged injuries and disabilities; "regimental hospital records not on file."

Claimant testifies that before enlistment he was a farmer; that since his discharge he has resided at Millbrook, Dutchess County, New York, and that he claims pension for injury to head and back, rheumatism, and deafness of left ear, from injuries received at Pine Knob, Ga., about June 19, 1864; and that he was treated from time to time to the present by Dr. C. N. Campbell, of Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and at no time since his discharge has he been able to perform hard manual labor, and half time since has been totally disqualified for any manual labor.

William H. Bartlett, lieutenant and captain, testifies that he was well acquainted with claimant; that he was a sound man at the time of enlistment, and free from rheumatism, deafness, or any injury to back; that while building breastworks, June 19, 1864, at Pine Knob, Ga., soldier was struck by a stick of timber and injured thereby about the head and back, which produced deafness, and that about the same time he contracted rheumatism; has seen soldier frequently since his discharge, and knows that his disabilities still exist; knows the facts from being sergeant of the company, and present and on duty with the company at the time and afterward; that he remembers his being laid up at the time, and that his injury was cause of sickness.

Dr. C. N. Campbell testifies that he is a regular practicing physician of thirty years' standing, and that since the soldier's discharge he has treated him more or less every year for deafness and rheumatism. He can not give dates, as soldier being poor he made no charge; that soldier is incapacitated thereby for performing many kinds of labor. He also testified that he examined soldier at time of his enlistment, and that he was then a sound man, free from any deafness and any symptoms of rheumatism, and remained so until he was injured in 1864, while in line of duty, by being struck by a falling tree near Pine Knob, Ga., which cut and bruised his head severely; that he treated him at the time, and kept with his regiment; that shortly after this soldier began to be hard of hearing and dizzy, and also at times rheumatic and lame.

James L. Places (comrade) testifies that he and claimant were carrying a log to throw up breastworks near Pine Knob, Ga., when a shell from the rebel battery killed private Stone and wounded others, and same time severing a limb from a tree, striking claimant on the head and injuring him, rendering him unconscious; that it affected his hearing and rendered him deaf in left ear, which continued while in service; that soldier complained immediately after of his head and back, and did not recover therefrom; that he thereafter also had rheumatism, and has been permanently disabled three-fourths for manual labor; that affiant was present and an eye-witness to the accident.

N. H. Whaley (comrade) testifies substantially to same facts as stated by Comrade Places, as above.

Dr. C. H. Tripp testifies to claimant's being treated several years, at different times, for rheumatism by Dr. J. L. Thrim (affiant's preceptor).

George P. Tompkins and Thomas Raddington testify that deafness increases, and that he (soldier) is unable to hear ordinary conversation, one ear being entirely deaf; that rheumatism also increases disabling him more or less since his leaving the army from active labor a large share of the time.

D. H. Cand and Oliver D. Odell testify that they have known the claimant for past twenty-five years; that before enlistment he was perfectly sound and healthy; and since his discharge he has been troubled with deafness and rheumatism, which unfits him for manual labor, prevents him hiring out by the month, &c.

Felix Simmons and Nelson A. Pond, neighbors, testify to soldier's soundness prior to enlistment and since his discharge to his affliction, corroborating other witnesses before named. Mr. Pond adds that he has noticed closely chaimant's physical condition and ability to labor, and that he is disabled three-fourths, and that he can not be mistaken as to his disability.

John Kraver, neighbor, testifies substantially same as Simmons and Pond.

F. T. Carpenter and Stephen McKeough testify to claimant's sickness and inability to labor.

"That claimant is totally deaf in left ear; can hear very loud talking with right; says he suffers greatly with his head, frequently becoming so dizzy that he is compelled to hold on to something to prevent his falling. His actions indicated at times during his examination an unsound mind. He claims that the trouble of his head and deafness were produced by a tree falling on his head and shoulder. This incapacitated him total. There is enlargement of heart, with feeble action, and intermitting about long sixth beat. I examined his urine; found its specific gravity 10°; reaction slightly acid; no albumen; no sugar; color light. This incapacitates him one-half. I find disability as above described to entitle him to two-thirds third grade."

Subsequent examination by R. Lougham, W. D. Hasbrouck, and George C. Smith, board of examiners:

"We find no deposits, deformity, stiffness, contractions, pain, swelling, or redness in any joint, tendon, or muscle. Heart sounds regular and distinct. No evidence of vesicular lesions. No scar or other evidence can be found of any injury to head or back. He seems to be totally deaf in left ear. We find the ear filled with hardened wax, but other than this can discover no abnormal conditions. We think deafness due to wax, and not of twenty years' standing, and therefore think him not entitled to rating."

Hon. J. H. KETCHAM makes the following statement:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Washington, D. C., June 10, 1884.

MY DEAR SIR: Referring to H. R. 8963, about which we have conferred, I have to say that I knew Michael Fitzpatrick before he enlisted in 1862; saw him frequently during the war, he having been a member of my old regiment (One hundred and fiftieth New York Volunteers), and have seen him often since, as he resides near me. He was to all appearances sound when he enlisted. I know he was a good soldier, and that he returned home with his health and capacity for earning a livelihood greatly impaired. He is now and has been for years almost incapacitated for manual labor by reason of deafness, rheumatism, &c., and is entitled to a pension. I earnestly hope that you can report the bill for his relief favorably.

Yours, very truly,

J. H. KETCHAM.

Hon. JOHN S. PINDAR.

The evidence of incurrence of injury while in line of duty is complete; also that he was a sound and healthy man at the time of enlistment; that since his discharge he has suffered from rheumatism and deafness, and still so suffers, there can be no doubt, as the evidence of treatment by doctors and that of comrades and neighbors all prove, as is also shown by the statement of Hon. John H. Ketcham, who is personally acquainted with claimant before and during the war, and that soldier served in his regiment (One hundred and fiftieth New York Volunteers), and that he has known him ever since the war, and resides near him.

Your committee believe from the facts that soldier was sound at enlistment; that he was injured in the service in line of duty, resulting in deafness and rheumatism, disabling him from a full performance of manual labor; and recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

FRANCIS SORRELL.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 8950) to remove the political disabilities of Francis Sorrell, of Roanoke County, Virginia.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That Francis Sorrell, of Roanoke County, Virginia, be, and he is hereby, relieved of all political disabilities imposed upon him by the third section of the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, and the same are hereby removed.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. This bill is recommended by the Judiciary Committee, and I suppose there will be no objection to it.

Mr. TUCKER. It is unanimously reported by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

THEODORE DUNMIRE.

Mr. LOUTTIT. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 8057) for the relief of Theodore Dunmire.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Theodore Dunmire, late of Company E, First Regiment United States Veteran Engineers (claim No. 413718), subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. LOUTTIT. To save the time that would be occupied in reading the report permit me to say that this bill simply places the applicant on the roll, and he is then required to appear before the examining board and receive such rating as the board may think proper.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let us have the report read.

The report (by Mr. LOUTTIT) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 8057, submit the following report:

The soldier in this case enlisted in Company D, Fifteenth Missouri Volunteers, served continously from September 29, 1862, until July, 1864, when he was transferred to the First United States Veteran Volunteers, and was discharged from Company E, of that organization June 24, 1865. He presented his claim to the Pension Office December 22, 1880, claiming a pension for injury to back received June 20, 1865. The examinations in this case, three in number, by United States examining surgeons, disclose the present disability from the cause alleged.

The records in this case go to show that the soldier was a good, active, brave, and gallant soldier; his position was at the front, and his duties as civil engineer called him away from the body of his command. Before the battle of Stone River, or Murfreesborough, as it was known by the rebel and Union forces respectively, he had charge of, directed, and superintended the erection of the breastworks that later proved so valuable to the Union forces in that hotly-contested battle. That after the completion of his work there and before its use for the purposes designed he was ordered forward to prepare and guard the way beyond. While on this duty, and during the time he was in charge, he incurred a disability which to-day renders him unable to pursue the ordinary avocations of life.

Like many others, he has listened to the whisperings of pride and patriotism, and has sought to live through this narrow span of life without appealing to the justice, charity, or magnanimity of that Government for whose very existence and perpetuation he fought and endangered his life; but with the growing ills that cast their gloom over all as the shadows lengthen toward the east, necessities have compelled him to ask for national aid. His skill as an engineer, his reputation as a soldier, and his word as a citizen, have never been doubted or called in question. He has advertised in the public press for the whereabouts of the comrades who were with him at the immediate time of the incurrence of the disability and whose presence at that time are attested to by the records of the War Department, seeking to obtain their testimony in corroboration of his own statement and of those in civil life, having knowledge of all the facts save that of actual and immediate origin, but has been unable to find them.

Like many others, the applicant in this case realizes that over the dark river comes no echo from whose voice facts and data can be obtained to substantiate his title.

He is shown to have been at the time of his enlistment, in physique, a typical American, strong, stalwart, lithe, and active, the perfect picture of health, and a thorough representative of American manhood; his habits have ever been good. The examination, had under the supervision of the United States examining surgeons, shows him to be a physical wreck—nothing left of him but the same indomitable will and energy that inspired him, in the hour of trial and danger, to face the crisis and show his patriotism.

His present condition is further vouched for by the Representative of his State, Hon. GEORGE G. SYMES, and members of the Senate. The evidence of John Burt, a credible witness, who, after an acquaintance of thirty years, covering a period prior and subsequent to the war, is so plain, straightforward, direct, complete, and reasonable that, in the judgment of your committee, it supplies the want of more direct and certain testimony as to origin of a disability which is shown to have had no existence at the time of enlistment, but has been shown to exist from the hour of soldier's discharge to the present date.

A soldier with record showing so much of bravery, discretion, martial gallantry, and useful labor and service rendered ought not to be required to prove by any set number of witnesses and beyond the peradventure of doubt that his disability was contracted during service, and with exact certainty the spot and moment of incurrence, when previous soundness, disability at discharge, and every presumption to be drawn from evidence shown would warrant this assumption, and reasonably lead to such conclusion. The humane policy of the criminal law yields to the accused the presumption of innocence, and resolves all reasonable doubts in his favor. The gallant soldier should not be treated more harshly.

Your committee therefore recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CAPT. JOHN F. MORRIS.

Mr. RANDALL. I call up for consideration the bill (H. R. 9052) granting an increase of pension to Capt. John F. Morris.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to increase the pension of John F. Morris, late captain of Company B, Eighty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, $100 per month.

The Committee on Invalid Pensions reported the following amendment:

In line 6, strike out $100 and insert $72.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. SWOPE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 9052) granting an increase of pension to Capt. John F. Morris, respectfully report:

Capt. John F. Morris enlisted August 25, 1861, in Company B of the Eighty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was discharged September 15, 1862. In the battle of Gaines's Mill, June 27, 1862, he received three wounds, one in the hip, one in the side, and a shell wound in the lower portion of his spine.

Soldier was granted a pension of $20 per month from September 15, 1862, upon the report of the examining surgeon, John T. Ray, dated April 29, 1863, which is as follows:

"Captain Morris was wounded in the back by a musket-ball which has never been extracted, also in the side and lower portion of the spine by a fragment of shell. This wound has produced paralysis of left leg, rendering him unable to walk without the assistance of crutches, and then only for a short distance, accompanied by pain and a shrunken condition of the muscles of the thigh and leg."

His pension was increased as his disability became greater, as follows: May 12, 1882, to $24 per month; by act of March 3, 1883, to $30 per month; and to $50 per month March 6, 1885, upon the report of the examining surgeon, dated June 14, 1882, which states:

"I find shell wound over the lower part of sacrum, also over the right nates; scar of minie ball in front of trochanter major on right side, also on about opposite the lower dorsal vertebra and to the right of spine 1 inch; shell wound over sacrum very tender and painful; it also extends to foot of left side, especially along the course of sciatic nerve; left limb is atrophied, is 2 inches less in circumference than right around thigh, and 1½ inches less above knee; the temperature is 2 degress less than right.

"First and second toes were amputated at the metatarso-phalangeal articulation last August on account of gangrene. Foot is œdematous; general health very poor, and he is now obliged to take four grains of morphine per day to keep down the pain, and he requires an attendant most of the time. He came very near dying this spring; is a little better now. Since last sickness he has a feeling of suffocation at times, or dyspnœa; the increased disability has not been caused by any vicious or imprudent habits. Disability is much greater than if whole limb had been amputated and was without pain. I find his disability to entitle him to total first-grade degree of disability."

At a special examination held March 8, 1883, at Meadville, Pa., the board of examining surgeons reported:

"We find wounds by shell and ball, the ball passing through or rather between the eleventh and twelfth ribs. This ball has never been extracted. As it passed very near the spine it evidently has affected spinal and sciatic nerves on left side. We find atrophy of left hip, thigh, and leg, with paralysis of same. The degree of vitality has been so low that great and second toes have had to be amputated by reason of gangrene. Captain Morris is and has long been known to each member of this board. We can certify to his intense suffering day and night for years past, his pains only relieved by large subcutaneous injections of morphia, with all supplemental means that could be devised by his physicians. Captain Morris is entirely unable without constant attendance to care for himself, and requires at all times watchful care, from paralysis of the lower portion of the bowels. They are never moved except by use of injections. We would therefore recommend in this case an increase to $50 a month."

Your committee here append the petition of soldier asking the increase by Congress, together with the affidavits of his attending physicians; also a petition from his comrades:

To the honorable Members of the House of Representatives:

Your petitioner, Capt. John F. Morris, of Company B, Eighty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, would state that he enlisted in the service of the United States August 25, A. D. 1861. He served with the Army of the Potomac during all its campaigns up to the battle of Gaines's Mill, June 27, 1862. In that conflict he received three wounds—one in the hip, one in the side, and a shell wound in the lower portion of his spine; the latter caused paralysis of the lower limbs, whilst the ball from the gunshot still remains lodged under the spine, producing pains to such an extent that it impaired his eyesight to such a degree that it is impossible for him to read or write or perform any duties whatever. He has been bed-ridden for months, and now gropes his way along on crutches.

His sufferings are intense, relieved only by hypodermics of morphine injected in his limbs, and with no hope for any relief, as he is growing worse, and at times even morphia does not relieve him. He is in need, as he can not support his family, has exhausted means in medical attendance that he had accumulated in his younger days. He made application for an increase some years ago; it was made from $20 to $24; then from that to $30, and as his disabilities increased to $50 a month. This does not cover the medical attendance and incidentals consequent upon his constant illness and suffering.

JOHN F. MORRIS.

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA, County of Crawford, ss:

Personally came before me, clerk of the court in and for the county aforesaid, John F. Morris, late captain Company B, Eighty-third Pennsylvania Volunteers, who, being duly sworn, says that the above and foregoing statement is just and true to the best of his knowledge and belief. And I hereby certify that I have no interest direct or indirect in the prosecution of this claim.

Witness my hand and official seal this 20th May, A. D. 1886.

[SEAL.]

A. B. EDSON,
Proth'y and Clerk of Court of Common Pleas.

MEADVILLE, PA., May 20, 1886.

I have known intimately John F. Morris, formerly captain Company B, Eighty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, for nearly thirty years, and have been his physician for nearly twenty years. Have attended him professionally for gunshot wound received in the service of United States. The injury was to his spine and left leg. Left sciatic nerves diseased, consequently circulation very feeble, so much so that two toes had to be removed for gangrene. The pain resulting from this condition has been the most intense I have ever known. After these long years of suffering his general health has given way, and now he is a physical wreck, unable to care for himself in many ways, and in my opinion requires and should have a constant attendant.

I have been in active practice of medicine and surgery for twenty-four years. Have no personal interest in claim for his pension.

T. B. LASHELE, M. D.

Sworn to before me this 20th day of May, 1886.

[SEAL.]

JAMES GRAHAM, Clk.

Affidavit of physician or surgeon.

STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA, County of Philadelphia, ss:

In the pension claim of Capt. John F. Morris, late of Eighty-third Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, personally came before me, a deputy prothonotary, clerk, in and for the aforesaid county and State, Alf. W. Green, a citizen of Meadville, in the county of Crawford and State of Pennsylvania, whom I believe to be reputable and entitled to credit, and who, being duly sworn, declares in relation to the aforesaid case as follows:

That he is a practicing physician, and that he has been acquainted with said soldier for about thirteen years, and that for that length of time have known the aforesaid Capt. John F. Morris intimately; although not his regular physician, have seen him frequently professionally; he has been to my certain knowledge one of the greatest sufferers I have ever met with, the result of wounds received at Gaines's Mill. He is unable to dress himself and can only limp around with the aid of a crutch and cane; he is totally unable to perform manual or other labor.

He further declares that he has been a practitioner of medicine for forty years, and that he has no interest, either direct or indirect, in the prosecution of this claim.

ALF. W. GREEN,
Late Surgeon P. R.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 20th day of May, A. D. 1886, and I hereby certify that the affiant is a practicing physician in good professional standing; that the contents of the above declaration, &c., were fully made known unto him before swearing, including the words erased and the words added; and that I have no interest, direct or indirect, in the prosecution of this claim.

F. H. SMITH,
Deputy Prothonotary.

We, the undersigned, members of the Grand Army of the Republic, would respectfully petition the honorable members of the House of Representatives to a special act for the increase of pension for Capt. John F. Morris, of Company B, Eighty-third Regiment of Pennsylvania Volunteers.

We feel that it would be no more than justice to a suffering comrade to grant him the pension he is now applying for.

We subscribe ourselves, respectfully,

Chas. C. Johnson, Thos. A. Stebbins, Chas. W. Lane, S. F. Nelson, C. Van Horne, F. N. Clark, B. F. Smith, J. H. Dickson, R. B. Burns, Sam'l B. Dick, J. D. Gill, E. H. Bernhoft, O. H. Hollister, I. E. Myers, H. H. Davis, S. C. Beach, T. L. Flood, J. W. Cainer, Almond Delamater, H. P. Marley, F. E. Underwood, Wm. Roberts, E. G. Taylor, Lloyd E. Ridle, Benjamin Emerson, John Porter, Frank Shippen, W. P. Porter, A. B. Edson, J. G. Lindeman, John J. Henderson, S. C. McDowell, , Sturges T. Dicks, Geo. F. Davenport, H. J. Humes, Geo. A. West, H. E. Wilson, R. Michael, John F. Bruner, M. R. Jenks, F. H. Davis, Robt. Andrews, John Hull.

The evidence as to the condition of this claimant for increase of pension as detailed above has been further supplemented by inquiries made of gentlemen of character whom your committee have consulted concerning this case.

They are therefore fully satisfied that the soldier is suffering as is claimed; that he is practically totally disabled; that he requires the almost constant ministration of others; and that cost of medicines and medical treatment are a heavy tax upon the pension which he now receives.

They therefore report this bill favorably, with an amendment, striking out the words "one hundred," in line 6, and inserting the word "seventy-two," and as thus amended recommend that it do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MATSON. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, I think this bill ought not to pass. This man is now receiving a pension of $50 a month. He is receiving as much as any other person who is so disabled as to require the regular aid and assistance of any person. He has reached that condition since June, 1878. He did not reach that condition until quite recently. There are several hundred persons that are in the same position he is in; and I do not think it is right to select him out and raise his pension to $72 while the others in the same condition are receiving only $50 a month.

Mr. RANDALL. But how are you to reach the others?

Mr. MATSON. By general law.

Mr. RANDALL. There is no general law.

Mr. MATSON. There is not anything in this case that justifies its being selected out from the others.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I will state that I have introduced a bill which if passed will provide such a general law.

Mr. MATSON. The point I make is that it is wrong to select a case of this kind when there is nothing that shows it is a strongly exceptional case. There are many now receiving $50 a month who are in worse condition than this man is.

Mr. RANDALL. Then bring forward the cases of those who are in worse condition, but do not strike this man down because others do not get what they ought to have. The report states that he requires constant attendance.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask the gentleman from Pennsylvania is this man receiving $50 a month?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLANCHARD. And you propose to increase it how much?

Mr. RANDALL. To $72.

Mr. BLANCHARD. How many are now getting $72 a month?

Mr. RANDALL. I am not able to answer that question.

Mr. BINGHAM. Only those who have been protected by special legislation.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Is not this the second time a special act has been invoked in behalf of this applicant?

Mr. RANDALL. The report states the facts.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I think I gathered that from hearing the report read. It seems to me the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MATSON] is right in the position he takes that those who have similar disabilities should receive the same rate of pension.

Mr. RANDALL. And so I think. I do not say anything to the contrary of that. Bring in your bills, but do not strike down this man because some one else has not yet got what he claims.

Mr. CURTIN. He is getting worse all the time.

Mr. MCMILLIN. He is receiving now exactly the pension given to others in a similar condition.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I thought I heard the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] say that nobody got $72 except by special act. The way I understand it is this: The law was passed in 1878 raising from $50 to $72 all those who were then under a certain degree of disability.

Mr. MATSON. And in addition to that there is a law that those who have lost both eyes, both hands, or both feet shall receive $72.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. A discrimination thus exists between certain pensioners who were on the roll for certain disabilities at a certain date and those who were under precisely the same disabilities but who were not fortunate enough to have got their cases through at that date. I think we should pass this and every other bill like it, and also pass the general law when we reach it.

Mr. RANDALL. I have no objection to a general law, but I do not want my soldier stricken down because there is not a general law.

Mr. MORRISON. Nobody proposes to strike him down, but you are trying to strike him up.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word by way of protest against the principle announced by the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions [Mr. MATSON], that unless a general law is passed, individual cases ought not to receive advantages by special legislation.

Mr. MATSON. Unless they have special merit.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Now we agree, when the gentleman adds, "unless they have special merit." I should vote with a good deal of reluctance for a general pension bill increasing the rate for prescribed disabilities, under which bill persons who are rich or poor, persons who are meritorious or unmeritorious, persons who have the disability in a very bad form, or persons who have it barely enough to be able, by the aid of a skillful pension agent and still more skillful witnesses, to swear inside of the class, would all be benefited alike.

I should feel a good deal of reluctance in voting for that sort of a bill; but I do not hesitate to say that it is the duty of Congress in any special case, not as a matter of charity, not upon any argument about the poor-house, or with any idea commingled with what we do that there is any charity about it, but purely as an act of justice growing out of a contract, to vote that measure of relief which the case seems to demand at our hands. It is upon that principle that I have voted to put certain elderly ladies, the widows of soldiers or sailors who have performed meritorious service and left their widows in indigence, upon an increased allowance, and have refused to vote like pensions in other cases because it did not seem to me that their merits were such as to demand special relief.

So, upon all these cases I reserve the privilege, as a Representative, to do what seems to me to be in each given case the justice demanded by the facts of that case, and I do not think we ought to hesitate to do justice in any given case because there does not happen to be a general law to cover it. I do not know whether the case now under consideration would come under the rule or not. Listening to the report as well as I could, it seemed to me that possibly we might vote this claimant in by a scratch, but that it would be just by a scratch.

Mr. RANDALL. I have called this bill up for my colleague [Mr. FLEEGER], who is absent. He knows all about the case, and he has described it to me as a most meritorious one. This soldier resides at Meadville, in the western part of Pennsylvania, and he is well known in that community as a man of high character, who would not make any representations that were not strictly correct.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PHŒBE H. MEECH.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call up Senate bill 1112, granting a pension to Phœbe H. Meech.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Phœbe H. Meech, widow of Horace J. Meech, late a second lieutenant in the Second Regiment New York Volunteers, in the Mexican war, and to pay to her, from and after the passage of this act, a pension at the rate of $15 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The CHAIRMAN. It is a Mexican war pension.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] that this bill has already passed the House and also the Senate, and that in passing it now we shall act merely in confirmation of the action of the Senate.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that be indefinitely postponed.

EMMA J. HALLOWAY.

Mr. BYNUM. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call up the bill, No. 578, for the relief of Emma J. Halloway.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Emma J. Halloway, widow of Henry C. Halloway, late a captain and commissary of subsistence in the United States Army.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MATSON) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 578, having had the same under consideration, beg leave to report as follows:

Emma J. Holloway is the widow of Henry C. Holloway, who served throughout the civil war. He was for some months a member of the Nineteenth Regiment Indiana Volunteers, and served as such in the Army of the Potomac and participated in all the skirmishes and battles in which his command was engaged during the time he was connected with said regiment. He was then appointed by President Lincoln an assistant commissary of subsistence with the rank of captain, and as such he served the remainder of the war.

Col. W. W. Dudley, late Commissioner of Pensions, testifies that he knew the said Holloway from his boyhood, and that he served with him in the Nineteenth Indiana Volunteers, and that afterward the said Holloway was serving in the same army and part of the time in the same division with him; that his acquaintance was intimate and that he remembers well that at the battle of Gettysburg the said Holloway was seriously injured by being thrown from his horse, which was shot under him and fell upon him; that he was not an eyewitness to the accident, but that it was a matter of common report in the command in which he was then serving and where Holloway had many warm friends, and that this was known to him very soon after it happened, and that said Holloway was seriously injured in the chest by said accident. He says that Holloway was a stout, robust man when he entered the service, and that he so continued until the time of said accident; that he then complained of said injury and that his health failed him, and that he continued to grow worse until his death, as said Dudley believes, was the result of said accident. A number of persons testify to the physical soundness of said Holloway prior and up to the time of his entering the Army.

Dr. J. K. Bigelow, a member of the board of pension-examining surgeons of Indianapolis, testifies that he began to treat said Holloway in 1866 for lung trouble, and continued his treatment for ten years for that disease, and also for chronic diarrhea.

This officer appears, from the testimony of those who served with him, to have been conspicuous for his gallantry, and although serving on the staff of general officers, in a capacity where he was not required to go into a general engagement, he never lost an opportunity to act as aide-de-camp, and could always be seen in the thickest of the fight.

He never applied for a pension, because he said he did not need one. He has, however, left his widow without property, and she having applied at the Pension Office, has met with a rejection of her claim upon the ground that the origin of his fatal disease in the service was not sufficiently proven.

This committee, after a careful review of the above case, feel justified in reversing the decision of the Pension Office, and without hesitation say that they believe that this officer died of an injury and disease contracted in the military service and in the line of his duty, and that his widow should be pensioned; and therefore report the bill to the House with a favorable recommendation, and ask that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. SARAH YOUNG.

Mr. CONGER. I desire to call up the bill (S. 2113) granting a pension to Mrs. Sarah Young.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he hereby is, authorized to place on the pension-roll, at the rate of $25 per month, the name of Mrs. Sarah Young, of Des Moines, Iowa, for and on account of services rendered as a nurse during the war of the rebellion.

Mr. WALLACE. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. CONGER) was read, as follows:

Mrs. Sarah Young joined the Union Army as a volunteer nurse June 9, 1862, and was at once assigned to duty with the One hundred and ninth New York Volunteers, then stationed at Belleville, Md.; went with this regiment to Falls Church, Va., and was soon thereafter assigned to duty with the general hospital of the Ninth Army Corps, serving constantly in the field and at the front at Mason Island, Alexandria, Fredericksburg, the Wilderness, Spottsylvania Court-House, North Anna, Cold Harbor, Petersburg, and City Point, remaining at her post until the last gun was fired, the last hospital tent struck, and her services no longer needed. She served her country and administered to its wounded sick and dying heroes for three full years, being off duty in all this time but eight days. She received in all for her labor and devotion but $216, an average of but $6 per month.

Early in her service she was given the name of "Aunt Becky," and by this name became loved and honored by the thousands of inmates of her hospitals, a name which still clings to her, and by which her praises are still sung in thousands of soldiers' homes throughout the country. Her services were of special merit and of unusual worth, because she had the special executive ability and untiring energy to make them so. With the tenderness of a child and courage like a god she moved about in efforts to soothe pain and relieve suffering, unflinching on the field of battle, and unappalled by carnage and death.

The testimony as to her valued service is overwhelming. We quote a few from the numerous testimonies.

G. W. Dunn, late major One hundred and ninth New York Volunteers, says:

"I see by the papers that Mrs. Sarah Young is asking Congress to stand between her and starvation for services performed as a nurse during the late unpleasantness. I know all about those services, and know that no money consideration will compensate her for the good work she has done. Many now living owe to her motherly, untiring care their lives and health, and many poor fellows passed to the grave have been comforted and cheered by that good old soul who left a good home to follow the fortunes of her boys. Give her all you can; you can not give her too much."

William Austin, of same regiment, says:

"She worked for three of the best years of her life in caring for those who were aiding in crushing the rebellion, performing labor clear beyond her strength and sex. Submit her case to our old regiment, and she would carry it by storm; submit it to any soldier who knew her in the service, and she would be voted a pension without a dissenting voice."

W. A. King, late quartermaster One hundred and ninth New York, says:

"For three years I served in the One hundred and ninth New York Volunteers, and know personally the great services rendered by this good old lady. She was pure gold, and nothing can ever repay her for the many hardships she endured, being always at her post of duty."

A. S. Patton, of same regiment, says:

"We, the members of the One hundred and ninth New York, can not say too much in favor of one whom we loved as a mother, who was with us during the war, never surrendering while one of her boys was in need of her help. I might fill a dozen pages with her noble deeds."

C. C. Van Kirk, a member of the Ninth Corps, and now of Ithaca, N. Y., writes:

"I beg leave to add my testimony to the untiring faithfulness of Mrs. Sarah Young as a hospital nurse in the Ninth Army Corps during the last years of the war. Too much can not be said in her praise. She never tired of efficient work for the suffering boys in blue, frequently exposing herself under fire. I can truthfully say that she saved my life and scores of others, to my own personal knowledge. If the tale of her services could be truthfully told, she would rank among the foremost of that band of heroic names who braved death and all the attending trials of that terrible campaign of 1862-'63 against the Army of Northern Virginia. God bless 'Aunt Becky,' is the earnest prayer of every Ninth Corps soldier."

Mrs. Young is of a military family. Her father was a soldier of the war of 1812. She had three brothers, one brother-in-law, three cousins, and one aunt in the late civil war, five of whom laid down their lives in the service.

She has had a hard struggle with life during all the years since her three years of sacrifice. Is now old, in broken health. She now lives in Iowa, a State in which there are seventy-seven thousand old soldiers, every one of whom knows "Aunt Becky," in person or by name, and by whom she is worshiped as one whose sacrifices and services for them, and their country, are above and beyond any earthly compensation. They have unitedly, by their Grand Army posts, petitioned Congress for a just recognition of her services. And the General Assembly of the State of Iowa have, by concurrent resolution, memorialized this Congress "to relieve her in her old age, and in part compensate her for the sacrifice she made for her country."

Mrs. Young writes that she was a strong, healthy woman when she entered the service, but that she has been in failing health ever since.

Dr. S. P. Sackett, of Ithaca, N. Y., where Mrs. Young lived for several years after she returned from the Army, says:

"After her return from the South as nurse in the Army I remember that she had a prolonged period of ill health, and that I prescribed for her during the years 1866 and 1867. I think that I also prescribed for her in 1865, but I have not now my written notes of her case, and can not state positively as to her condition, or the time that I commenced treating her. I remember that there was a bad state of her system generally, and I think malarial trouble."

Dr. James T. Priestly, of Des Moines, Iowa, testifies—

"That he has known Mrs. Young for ten years, and that she has chronic malarial poisoning, and has had all of the ten years of my acquaintance. She has progressively lost vigor and flesh and is now completely unfit for manual labor."

A member of this committee, and the writer of this report, has been personally acquainted with this remarkable woman for many years, and would believe any statement that she would make. He hereby certifies to her pure Christian character, to her extraordinary executive ability, to her devotion to the old soldiers, to her broken health, during all his acquaintance, and to her present disabled and helpless condition.

She is no ordinary woman. Had there been such rank among nurses she would have been a general officer of the highest grade, and she merits a place on the roll of honor side by side with grand old Mother Bickerdyke.

Your committee, in view of her long and distinguished services at the front and in the field, her meager pay, and her advanced age, broken health, and present need, are of opinion that Congress should hasten to make this public recognition of services, the value of which can never be measured nor compensated, and therefore earnestly recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I desire to ask the chairman of the Committee on Invalid Pensions on what ground the committee justify giving $25 a month to persons who merely acted as nurses during the war, while widows who lost their husbands in the war receive only $12 a month and until recently received only $8?

Mr. CONGER. The pension of $25 a month is proposed in this case simply because this lady earned it by reason of her valuable service and her disabilities incurred in the service.

Mr. MATSON. The general rule of our committee is to allow a pension of $12 a month in the cases of such nurses as we think ought to receive pensions. This case, it was insisted by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. CONGER], who had some personal knowledge of the matter, was exceptional. So far as I was concerned I was not disposed to agree to that proposition, but the committee thought differently. Our general rule, as I have said, is to give $12 a month in these cases.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move to amend the bill by striking out "$25" and inserting "$12." In support of this motion, I will state that I am wholly unable to see that one who serves in the Army as a nurse, however efficient and patriotic the service is, as I admit it to have been in this case, is on a higher ground in regard to a pension than the woman who, with dependent children, lost her husband and the children's father in the country's service. For one I do not propose by my vote or by my sanction to justify in any way a discrimination which is wholly incxcusable on any basis on which pensions are granted.

Mr. CONGER. In some cases nurses to whom pensions have been granted at the rate of $12 a month had received the same rate of pay during their service, and were not disabled in the service. This faithful nurse received as pay on an average not over $6 a month for her whole service; and she disabled herself in that service.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I suggest that if this woman is entitled to claim anything beyond an ordinary pension by reason of special services rendered, we should recognize such special service by voting a specific amount in money. In that form we would know just what we were doing, and would not be establishing an improper precedent.

Mr. CONGER. The gentleman must know that this is the only possible way in which we can vote this woman what she is entitled to.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. MCMILLIN, there were—ayes 15, noes 40.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I will ask tellers on this question unless the gentleman in charge of the bill is willing to consent to the reduction I have proposed. I submit it is entirely right to give this lady the same that other nurses have received.

Mr. PERKINS. I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that we have passed this session several bills giving nurses pensions at the rate of $25 a month.

Mr. MCMILLIN. But the rule has been $12; and if we have violated that rule in some cases it is time to stop. I make the point that no quorum voted.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. MCMILLIN and Mr. CONGER were appointed.

Mr. CONGER. Rather than delay legislation upon other meritorious cases I will assent to the amendment.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I do not wish to delay, and had no disposition to stand in the way of other meritorious cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again submit the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Tennessee.

The question being again taken, the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

WILLIAM H. F. LEE.

Mr. TRIGG. I ask to call up the bill (S. 2759) to remove the political disabilities of William H. F. Lee.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. (two-thirds of both Houses concurring), That all political disabilities imposed by the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States be, and the same are hereby, removed from William H. F. Lee, of Virginia.

The bill was laid aside to be reported favorably to the House.

JACOB S. BIDDLE.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Pennsylvania. I call up the bill (H. R. 4712) to place the name of Jacob S. Biddle on the pension-roll.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Jacob S. Biddle, late a member of Company M, Twenty-second Pennsylvania Cavalry.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. SWOPE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4712) granting a pension to Jacob S. Biddle, respectfully report:

Soldier enlisted February 28, 1865, in Company M, Twenty-second Pennsylvania Cavalry, and was discharged October 31, 1865. He alleges that while in service and in line of duty in the State of Virginia, in the spring of 1865, from exposure he contracted a severe cold, which settled in his head, forming an abscess which resulted in bronchial and nasal catarrh. His claim was rejected because there is no record of the alleged catarrh of head, and claimant's inability to furnish medical testimony showing treatment therefor in or since service.

As to prior soundness, Dr. William Burch testifies:

"That there were no symptoms of any bronchial disturbance or nasal catarrh existing in claimant's system before the spring of 1865."

Daniel Burkheimer, comrade, testifies—

"That claimant was with the regiment when on a raid through West Virginia, in March, 1865. The weather was very inclement, with some snow on the ground. We reached the south branch of the Potomac about midnight; halted there until near morning, and were obliged to lie on rails or anything attainable to keep from lying on the snow. Just before daybreak we crossed the river. It was bank full; the slush-ice was floating; the horses were obliged to swim; many were wet to the neck; the clothes froze on them. In this rain and from this extreme exposure claimant contracted a severe cold, and was sick for some time thereafter. He never was in sound health since. I know the above from being with claimant almost every day until discharged."

This witness is marked "good."

Dr. Charles Long testifies:

"I know claimant to be a sufferer from chronic nasal catarrh."

Henry H. Fisher testifies—

"That ever since claimant's discharge he has been afflicted with bronchial and nasal catarrh. I have known him to be afflicted with violent pains in his head, caused by catarrh."

The board of examining surgeons, Bedford, Pa., July 30, 1884, certify:

"Of bronchio-nasal catarrh the physical signs are: The nasal cavities, uvula, and fauces are of an abnormally dark-red color, very much congested, and covered with unhealthy mucus. Over large bronchial tubes there are dry rales. His eyes are slightly redder than normal; otherwise there are no physical signs of diseases of eyes. He says that he suffers pain in his head nearly all the time, and that when he gets up in the morning he expectorates a great deal. From the condition and history of the claimant it is our opinion the disability was first incurred in the service, as claimed. We find the disability to entitle him to three-fourths of total rating."

Your committee append the affidavit of N. R. Lynch, subscribed to April 1, 1886. This witness is certified to as being a practicing physician in good professional standing.

"Jacob S. Biddle came to me, just after the regiment returned from a raid, with a very severe cold. I gave him medical treatment for it for a short time, though he was confined to his tent about two weeks; when able to be out he came to me again. Upon examination I found the membraneous tubes greatly affected, and a case of nasal and bronchial catarrh, for which I gave him treatment. Headquarters of regiment was at New Creek, West Virginia."

This last testimony was not on file in the Pension Department.

Your committee are well convinced that this soldier did contract catarrh from exposure on the march, and that this catarrh has become chronic, and that he is a sufferer from it to this day. The bill will give him such a rating as his disabilities entitle him to receive.

Your committee therefore report it favorably and recommend its passage.

The question being taken on laying the bill aside to be reported favorably to the House, there were—ayes 38, no 1.

Mr. WALLACE. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the committee rise. It is apparent we can not proceed further. This bill was here last Friday night. The gentleman from Louisiana is not making objection to the bill for the purpose of securing an adjournment. He formed his opinion of it last Friday night. We will only be kept here without accomplishing anything.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Can we not have an understanding to pass this bill over for the present?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion that the committee rise.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 33.

So the committee refused to rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of no quorum having been made, the Chair will appoint as tellers Mr. WALLACE, and Mr. CAMPBELL, of Pennsylvania. The question recurs on the motion that the bill be laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

Mr. WALLACE. I give notice to gentlemen here that this case can not pass the House with my consent. We heard all the facts in reference to it on last Friday evening. It is one of the most absurd cases ever brought before this House, and that is saying a great deal. Pension cases of this character are a disgrace, and with my consent they can not pass. [Cries of "Order!"]

Mr. GOFF. Let a quorum be brought in then if a quorum is necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on reporting the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass; and the tellers will take their places.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 35, noes 7.

Mr. WALLACE. No quorum.

Mr. MATSON. I renew my motion that the committee rise.

Mr. PETTIBONE. Let us rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The vote is 35 in the affirmative and 7 in the negative. Does the gentleman from Louisiana insist on his point of no quorum?

Mr. WALLACE. I certainly do.

Mr. MATSON. I insist on my motion that the committee rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The motion to rise is not in order when the House is dividing. The point of no quorum is insisted on.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. I ask the gentleman to withdraw his demand so the House may proceed to business.

Mr. WALLACE. I shall certainly insist on my demand.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum appearing on the last division by tellers, the Clerk will proceed to call the roll.

The roll was called; and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Aiken,	Eden,	Landes,	Rowell,
Allen, C. H.	Eldredge,	Lanham,	Ryan,
Anderson, C. M.	Ely,	Le Fevre,	Sadler,
Arnot,	Ermentrout,	Libbey,	Sayers,
Atkinson,	Evans,	Lindsley,	Scott,
Baker,	Everhart,	Little,	Scranton,
Ballentine,	Farquhar,	Long,	Seney,
Barbour,	Findlay,	Lore,	Sessions,
Barksdale,	Fisher,	Louttit,	Seymour,
Barnes,	Fleeger,	Lovering,	Shaw,
Barry,	Foran,	Lowry,	Singleton,
Belmont,	Ford,	Mahoney,	Skinner,
Bennett,	Forney,	Markham,	Smalls,
Bland,	Frederick,	Martin,	Snyder,
Bliss,	Fuller,	Maybury,	Sowden,
Blount,	Gay,	McAdoo,	Spriggs,
Bound,	Geddes,	McComas,	Springer,
Boyle,	Gibson, C. H.	McCreary,	Steele,
Bragg,	Gibson, Eustace	McKenna,	Stephenson,
Browne, T. M.	Gilfillan,	McKinley,	Stewart, Charles
Brown, C. E.	Glass,	McRae,	Stewart, J. W.
Brown, W. W.	Glover,	Merriman,	St. Martin,
Brumm,	Green, R. S.	Millard,	Stone, E. F.
Buchanan,	Green, W. J.	Miller,	Stone, W. J., Ky.
Buck,	Grosvenor,	Milliken,	Stone, W. J., Mo.
Bunnell,	Hale,	Mills,	Storm,
Burleigh,	Hall,	Mitchell,	Strait,
Burnes,	Hammond,	Moffatt,	Struble,
Butterworth,	Hanback,	Morgan,	Swinburne,
Caldwell,	Harmer,	Morrow,	Swope,
Campbell, Felix	Harris,	Muller,	Tarsney,
Campbell, J. E.	Hayden,	Murphy,	Taylor, E. B.
Candler,	Haynes,	Negley,	Taylor, I. H.
Cannon,	Heard,	Nelson,	Thomas, J. R.
Carleton,	Hemphill,	Norwood,	Thomas, O. B.
Caswell,	Henderson, D. B.	Oates,	Thompson,
Catchings,	Henderson, J. S.	O'Donnell,	Throckmorton,
Clardy,	Henderson, T. J.	O'Ferrall,	Tillman,
Clements,	Henley,	O'Hara,	Turner,
Cobb,	Herbert,	O'Neill, Charles	Van Eaton,
Cole,	Hermann,	O'Neill, J. J.	Van Schaick,
Collins,	Hewitt,	Osborne,	Viele,
Compton,	Heistand,	Outhwaite,	Wade,
Comstock,	Hill,	Owen,	Wadsworth,
Cooper,	Hiscock,	Parker,	Wait,
Cox,	Hitt,	Payson,	Wakefield,
Crain,	Holman,	Peel,	Ward, J. H.
Crisp,	Hopkins,	Perry,	Ward, T. B.
Croxton,	Houk,	Phelps,	Warner, A. J.
Culberson,	Howard,	Pidcock,	Weaver, A. J.
Daniel,	Hudd,	Pindar,	Weaver, J. B.
Dargan,	Hutton,	Pirce,	Wellborn,
Davenport,	Irion,	Plumb,	West,
Davidson, A. C.	James,	Ranney,	White, A. C.
Davidson, R. H. M.	Johnson, F. A.	Reagan,	White, Milo
Davis,	Johnston, J. T.	Reed, T. B.	Whiting,
Dawson,	Johnston, T. D.	Reid, J. W.	Wilkins,
Dibble,	Jones, J. H.	Reese,	Willis,
Dingley,	Jones, J. T.	Rice,	Wilson,
Dockery,	Kelley,	Richardson,	Winans,
Dougherty,	Ketcham,	Riggs,	Wise,
Dowdney,	King,	Robertson,	Wolford,
Dunham,	Kleiner,	Rogers,	Woodburn,
Dunn,	Laird,	Romeis,	Worthington.

The committee then rose; and Mr. MATSON having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HATCH reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration the Private Calendar under special order of the House, had directed him to report sundry bills with various recommendations; and that having reached the bill (H. R. 4712) to place the name of Jacob S. Biddle on the pension-roll, the committee, finding itself without a quorum, had caused the roll to be called, and directed him to report the names of the absentees to the House for the purpose of being spread upon the Journal.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I move the House now adjourn.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 20, noes 22.

So the House refused to adjourn.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I ask, for information, whether without a quorum we can consider any of the bills on the table?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. It is impossible to do so. Only two motions are now in order—either to adjourn or that there be a call of the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Pennsylvania. I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There has been no call of the House ordered.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Several MEMBERS. The motion is not in order now.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I suggest to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that inasmuch as nothing is in order now but a call of the House or a motion to adjourn, and the motion to adjourn having been rejected and impossible of renewal without the intervention of other business, that he make, and the House vote upon, the motion for a call of the House, so that the motion to adjourn will be in order. It is evident that we can do nothing to-night, and it is now after 11 o'clock. The bills already reported from the Committee of the Whole can soon be acted upon hereafter.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. But the gentleman from New York has made a motion to adjourn.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The motion is not in order.

Mr. GOFF. I move that there be a call of the House.

Mr. HATCH. Pending that, by unanimous consent I ask the House to indulge me for a moment, as there is evidently a misapprehension in reference to the present condition of affairs.

There are but two motions in order when the House finds itself without a quorum, one to adjourn and the other for a call of the House. As long as the Journal shows the fact that a quorum is not present we can not transact any business.

A MEMBER. Not even by unanimous consent?

Mr. HATCH. Not even by unanimous consent or in any other way, because the Journal discloses the fact that there is no quorum present. If there is a call of the House and a quorum appears, then the Committee of the Whole must resume its sitting.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will cause former decisions to be read from the Digest which cover this point.

The Clerk read as follows:

Where the roll-call discloses the absence of a quorum, the Chair can not go outside of the record in deciding as to the presence of a quorum.

When a vote taken by yeas and nays shows that no quorum has voted, it is the duty of the Chair, under the Constitution, to take notice of that fact.

The House thereby becomes constitutionally disqualified to do further business except that business which the Constitution authorizes the House to do when a quorum is not present, i. e., to adjourn or order a call of the House.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I move that the House adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That motion can not now be entertained.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I wish by unanimous consent to make a statement. If the motion for a call of the House is voted down it will then be in order to move to adjourn. That motion is not now in order except by unanimous consent.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The motion for a call of the House is now pending.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. And pending that I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. GOFF. Let us have a vote on the motion for a call of the House.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. I insist on the motion that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I desire to inquire whether if the motion for a call of the House is made and carried and the House thereupon proceeds to execute that order—whether while it is in process of execution, and before it is completed, it would not be in order at any time to move to dispense with further proceedings under the call; and if that motion was carried would it not then be in order for the House to proceed to the transaction of business?

Mr. HATCH. But there is no call of the House ordered.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I would like to have a ruling on that point.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The present occupant of the chair holds that until a quorum is ascertained to be present no business could be transacted.

Mr. PAYNE. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question before the House is on the motion of the gentleman from West Virginia for a call of the House.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 13, noes 34.

So a call of the House was refused.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Has the Chair ruled upon my parliamentary question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated that in his opinion no business could be transacted without a quorum, the record having disclosed the fact that no quorum is present. Until a quorum appears the Chair thinks no business is in order except that prescribed by the Constitution.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 11 o'clock and 12 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARKSDALE: Petition of Mrs. Anna Hunt, of Jefferson County, and of Edward Jack, of Rankin County, Mississippi, asking that their war claims be referred to the Court on Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BLOUNT: Petition of Tilmon Nibbett, of Jasper County, Georgia, requesting that his war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

By Mr. F. A. JOHNSON: Petition of William J. Reed and 50 others, members of Leonard Bennett Post, No. 498, Grand Army of the Republic, of North Creek, and of S. W. Grant, C. R. Doty, M. N. Dawson, of William D. Brennon Post, No. 284, Grand Army of the Republic, of Malone, N. Y., for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LORE: Petition of John Williams, of Lewes, Del., for bill to remove the charge of desertion—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MAYBURY: Petition of Jane Blades, dependent mother of John Blades, for relief—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, petition of the Detroit Board of Trade to make Duluth, Minn., a port of entry—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR: Resolutions of the Cotton Exchange and Merchants' Exchange, of Memphis, Tenn., asking that no low bridges be built over the Ohio or Mississippi Rivers—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. WHEELER: Petition of F. D. Hunt, son and executor of William F. Hunt, deceased, of Jackson County; and of A. L. Wilkinson, for heirs of Laura E. Wilkinson, deceased, of Madison County, Alabama, asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WORTHINGTON: Petitions and resolutions of Timber Post, No. 432, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Illinois, for general pension law—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions:

The following petitions, asking for the passage of House bill 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts; of House bill 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants; of bill forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with; of House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma; of Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement; of bill prohibiting aliens from holding land in the United States; of bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery; and of bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired, were severally referred to the Committee on the Public Lands:

By Mr. C. H. ALLEN: Petition of W. H. Fadden and 63 others and of William H. Sleath and 61 others, of the eighth district of Massachusetts.

By Mr. ARNOT: Petition of Charles C. Case and 225 others, of C. C. Post and 107 others, of Edward Saxton and 112 others, of J. McRae and 105 others, of Edward O'Donnell and 73 others, and of E. Buckley and 42 others, citizens of the twenty-eighth district of New York.

Also, petition of J. A. Dempsey and 43 others and of Daniel Cronin and 142 others, citizens of the twenty-eighth district of New York.

By Mr. BINGHAM: Petition of William Hamilton and 85 others and of B. F. Whitecar and 91 others, citizens of first district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. BLISS: Petition of W. E. Numerick and 102 others, of John Lewellyn and 41 others, of Fred. Blomingburg, of John P. Kenna and 130 others, of J. R. Nichols and 55 others, and of G. Kesselmark and 45 others, citizens of the fifth district of New York.

By Mr. BRADY: Petition of J. Hurt and 136 others, of John Warren and 118 others, and of Alfred Freeman and 96 others, citizens of the fourth district of Virginia.

By Mr. BRUMM: Petition of T. Fletcher and 602 others, of J. J. Keating and 87 others, of John F. Mehan and 299 others, of D. O. Pritchard and 150 others, and of Matthew Currigan and 235 others, citizens of the thirteenth district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. CABELL: Petition of J. A. Brewer and 73 others, of James M. Clark and 150 others, of Harriet Bennet and 125 others, and of William Claberne and 100 others, citizens of the fifth district of Virginia.

By Mr. J. M. CAMPBELL: Petition of W. E. Mason and 65 others, of the seventeenth district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. T. J. CAMPBELL: Petition of Albert Caner and 288 others, of James Gibbin and 80 others, of Oliver C. Ayers and 366 others, of C. Walker and 139 others, citizens of the eighth district of New York.

By Mr. CURTIN: Petition of L. R. Paup and 122 others, and of George W. Winner and 119 others, citizens of twentieth district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. DINGLEY: Petition of Chester L. Burke and 23 others, of William Peterton and 71 others, and of John W. Blenn and 23 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Maine.

By Mr. ELY: Petition of W. P. Clark and 73 others, of G. F. Fuller and 20 others, and of Daniel Keating and 26 others, citizens of the fourth district of Massachusetts.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Petition of S. H. Smith and 332 others, of A. S. Beck and 371 others, of C. B. Wells and 90 others, of J. D. Haslett and 405 others, and of Charles S. Bellam and 35 others, citizens of the eighth district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. FINDLAY: Petition of J. F. Sellers and 32 others, of Phillip S. Beach and 66 others, of William F. Harvy and 139 others, of R. C. Burkhart and 89 others, of George W. Soner and 78 others, of S. C. Leonard and 77 others, of John H. Hawkins and 16 others, of Charles Erek and 93 others, of M. E. Brown and 97 others, and of H. G. Weddingfield and others, citizens of the third district of Maryland.

By Mr. GROSVENOR: Petition of P. W. Tampell and 200 others, of James Nagle and 63 others, and of A. J. Hubbard and 140 others, citizens of the fourteenth district of Ohio.

By Mr. HARMER: Petition of Frank Kane and 275 others, of H. Nelinger, of W. Walmsley and 270 others, of F. D. Vandergraft and 139 others, of E. C. Gadsby and 70 others, of James Skinner and 97 others, and of E. P. Worthington and 87 others, citizens of the fifth district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. HEMPHILL: Petition of James Hand and 224 others, of Goodwin Levine and 52 others, of S. T. Fuller and 30 others, and of F. McGrath, and of E. H. Kirby and 27 others, citizens of the eighth district of New York.

By Mr. HILL: Petition of W. J. Stewart and 200 others, and of George G. Rexroth and 190 others, citizens of the sixth district of Ohio.

By Mr. JACKSON: Petition of Emil Perbst and 92 others, of P. Murphy and 84 others, of Michael Boyle and 54 others, of William Calligan and 25 others, and of William Johnson and 64 others, citizens of the twenty-fourth district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. KELLEY: Petition of C. B. Boyle and 84 others, of David Bailey and 98 others, and of Blair B. Brooks and 254 others, citizens of the fourth district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. LIBBEY: Petition of R. Hawkins and 85 others, of W. A. Brown and 26 others, of R. L. Lilliston and 160 others, of C. Cooper and 262 others, of Thomas L. Darwin and 79 others, and of Joseph Lane and 462 others, citizens of second district of Virginia.

By Mr. LORE: Petition of James H. Shannon and 26 others, and of John T. Wilkins and 26 others, citizens of Delaware.

By Mr. McCOMAS: Petition of A. K. Syester and 189 others and of William Grimes and 24 others, citizens of the sixth district of Maryland.

By Mr. McKINLEY: Petition of William McNeal and 84 others, of Samuel Smith and 96 others, and of J. W. Grow and 135 others, citizens of the twentieth district of Ohio.

By Mr. MAHONEY: Petition of J. G. Woods and 117 others, of Miles McGowen and 104 others, of William A. Walters and 38 others, and of Charles Gatevan and 39 others, citizens of New York.

By Mr. MERRIMAN: Petition of John Doyle and 29 others, of Patrick Donahoe and 135 others, of James Murray and 558 others, of George W. Wylie and 110 others, of M. J. Flynn and 183 others, of Charles Regan and 38 others, and of James Dempsey and 16 others, citizens of the eleventh Congressional district of New York.

By Mr. NEGLEY: Petition of James P. Haney and 66 others, of Samuel F. Patterson and 86 others, and of Daniel Dirch and 30 others, citizens of twenty-second district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. CHARLES O'NEILL: Petition of Edward Burke and 105 others, of Samuel F. Greene and 425 others, of Robert Phiel and 79 others, of John Beadly and 62 others, of W. H. Parker and 25 others, of James Smidt and 28 others, and of Hugh McCrudden and 21 others, citizens of the second district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. J. J. O'NEILL: Petition of Thomas Benet, sr., and others, citizens of New Lisbon, Ohio.

By Mr. OUTHWAITE: Petition of R. H. Thompson and 34 others, and of E. C. Caylor and 127 others, citizens of the thirteenth district of Ohio.

By Mr. RANDALL: Petition of Joseph Shen and 401 others, of A. Candelet and 93 others, of F. Carter and 46 others, of Jacob Faulte and 112 others, of Edward Geiss and 31 others, and of Charles Murphy and 77 others, citizens of the third district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. RANNEY: Petition of Daniel J. Sweeny and 118 others and of James F. Reynolds and 250 others, citizens of the third district of Massachusetts.

By Mr. SEYMOUR: Petition of J. H. Riley and 86 others, of F. A. Robbins and 33 others, of F. Richards and 66 others, of George Nelson and 86 others, of C. R. Townshend and 36 others, and of John Purdy and 54 others, citizens of the fourth district of Connecticut.

By Mr. STAHLNECKER: Petition of Lafayette Henry and 51 others and of H. E. Bunting and 57 others, citizens of fourteenth district of New York.

By Mr. STORM: Petition of J. J. Graf and 198 others, of E. Conaghan and 85 others, of Joseph F. Jones and 203 others, of P. Hayes and 238 others, of J. H. Steel and 170 others, of H. Hollinger and 135 others, and of James Ginty and 27 others, citizens of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. SWINBURNE: Petition of T. W. Collins and 27 others, of John Cordon and 25 others, and of William Oliver and 25 others, citizens of nineteenth district of New York.

By Mr. J. H. TAYLOR: Petition of R. Doran and 90 others, of R. McCready and 152 others, of Walter Grim and 90 others, and of G. H. McWilliams and 86 others, citizens of the eighteenth district of Ohio.

By Mr. A. J. WARNER: Petition of E. H. Kroger and 80 others and of O. L. Sayre and 37 others, citizens of seventeenth district of Ohio.

By Mr. WEBER: Petition of George Cady and 131 others and of Charles W. Filler and 45 others, citizens of the thirty-third district of New York.

By Mr. WISE: Petition of C. H. Page and 369 others, of E. E. Jefferson and 126 others, of P. Austin and 185 others, of J. R. Lee and 61 others, of J. W. Harris and 150 others, of Joseph Brand and 24 others, of Richard Moore and 49 others, of W. Scott and 49 others, and of C. H. Jones and 37 others, citizens of third district of Virginia.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, July 3, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates for additional clerical force in that Department required on account of the French spoliation act; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Sante Fé, N. Mex., praying for the passage of the bill "to provide for ascertaining and settling private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona and the State of Colorado;" which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of John Cowden, praying for the passage of a bill to stop all payments of public money to James B. Eads, his associates or assigns, for past, present, or future work at the South Pass of the Mississippi River, until otherwise ordered by Congress; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented the petition of Richard Dondan and 216 other citizens of the first Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of W. Triplett and 138 other citizens of the twentieth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of W. H. Lynn and 45 other citizens of the twentieth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of E. H. Knight and 54 other citizens of the twentieth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of Charles Williams and 108 other citizens of the eighteenth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of William McGill and 125 other citizens of the eighteenth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of Joseph Hagerman and 92 other citizens of the seventeenth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of Frank Brown and 189 other citizens of the seventeenth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of Griffith Lewis and 36 other citizens of the sixteenth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of A. S. Campbell and 77 other citizens of the thirteenth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of Isaac Skerck and 126 other citizens of the tenth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of D. E. Davis and 135 other citizens of the fifteenth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of Lewis Heid and 295 other citizens of the eleventh Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of A. S. Matthews and 42 other citizens of the seventh Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of Horton J. Dugal and 128 other citizens of the sixth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of H. B. Wood and 39 other citizens of the sixth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of K. P. Cleveland and 221 other citizens of the fifth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of John C. Holldorhs and 120 other citizens of the first Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of K. F. Tuma and 520 other citizens of the twenty-first Congressional district of Ohio, and a petition of 460 citizens of Mount Carmel, Pa., praying for the passage at the present session of Congress of the following measures:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding land in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and prohibiting bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursements of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SEWELL presented the petition of Harry F. Adams and 39 others, citizens of the first Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of M. Fitzpatrick and 157 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of Joseph Anderson and 65 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of William O'Riley and 90 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of Jacob Gardner and 286 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of W. D. Davis and 270 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of George W. Harwood and 59 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of George Holzschect and 90 others, citizens of the fifth Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of W. Dunn and 47 others, citizens of the fifth Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of P. H. Risder and 46 others, citizens of the fifth Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of George A. Cosgrove and 120 others, citizens of the sixth Congressional district of New Jersey; and the petition of Lorenzo Castles and 56 others, citizens of the seventh Congressional district of New Jersey, praying for the passage of the following measures at the present session of Congress:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding land in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and prohibiting bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursements of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HARRISON presented the petition of S. Schulter and 120 other citizens of Indiana, praying for the passage of House bill No. 8328, known as the oleomargarine bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MANDERSON. I present a petition of the Santa Fé (N. Mex.) Board of Trade, certified by the signatures of the president and secretary, with the seal of that body, praying for the passage of the House bill to provide for settling private land claims in that Territory and in Arizona and Colorado, and urging it as most important to the interests of the Southwestern country. As the bill has been reported, I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MANDERSON presented a memorial of citizens of South Omaha, Nebr., remonstrating against the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. EVARTS. I present petitions signed by 77 citizens of the first, 42 citizens of the twentieth, 27 citizens of the twenty-fourth, and 86 citizens of the thirty-fourth Congressional districts of New York; also from citizens of many cities and towns in the same State, as follows: 2,460 citizens of New York city, 413 citizens of Brooklyn, 27 citizens of Albany, 29 citizens of Harlem, 11 citizens of Brewster, 389 citizens of Hoosick Falls, 78 citizens of Nyack, 151 citizens of Wilbur, 54 citizens of Sag Harbor, 180 citizens of Oswego, 244 citizens of Elmira, 33 citizens of Jamestown, 88 citizens of Buffalo, 46 citizens of Lancaster, 113 citizens of Rochester, 226 citizens of Horseheads, 74 citizens of Waterloo, 16 citizens of Marcellus, 24 citizens of Dolgeville, 39 citizens of Chadwicks, 56 citizens of North Greece, 66 citizens of Carthage, 103 citizens of Ballston, 162 citizens of Mechanicsville, 28 citizens of Cohoes, 41 citizens of Troy, 57 citizens of Broadalbin, 99 citizens of Corning, 44 citizens of Bolivar, 132 citizens of Newstead, and 44 citizens of Richburg, amounting to more than 5,000 in number, all praying for the passage at the present session of the following measures:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding lands in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursements of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

I move the referrence of the petitions to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. I present a memorial from property-holders in squares 729, 730, and 731, in the city of Washington, remonstrating against the condemnation of their property under a law for laying out highways in the District of Columbia.

I also, in their behalf, request that the memorial itself, without the names, may be printed in the RECORD.

The memorial was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Memorial.

To the honorable the Senate and House of Representatives:

The undersigned, your memorialists, respectfully represent that they are owners and interested in the houses and lots in square 729, 730, and 731, fronting the eastern park of the Capitol; that by reason of various acts of Congress they have suffered great inconvenience and are now liable to be dispossessed of their property without adequate compensation, under a form of law in violation, as they believe, of their constitutional rights.

In 1873, First street east, between B street north and B street south, and the connecting streets eastward, were cut down and the grade changed under an act of Congress, from 4 to 9 feet, leaving a large portion of the property on high embankments, without proper sewerage or proper conveniences for reaching the dwellings from the sidewalk.

In 1874, the eastern Capitol park was also reduced to conform to the streets, which left all approaches to the Capitol on the east for nearly two years in an unsettled and a portion of the time in an impassable condition, entailing great loss in rents and profits and in business upon the occupants of squares facing the eastern Capitol park.

In 1877, notwithstanding the injury sustained by the property-holders, heavy special assessments were levied by the District government against the property in the squares referred to, many of which remain as unjust liens against the property.

Subsequently to this arbitrary change of grade to accommodate the reduction of the eastern park bills were introduced in both Houses of Congress proposing an extension of the park to Second street east, with the view of securing accommodations for the Congressional Library.

The continued agitation of the proposed extension in Congress, coupled with the fear of an arbitrary condemnation of their property, has prevented the improvement of these eligible sites with fine and costly residences which would have been erected upon them after the eastern park was improved and beautified, thus working further serious injury to the property-owners in the squares fronting the eastern park.

An act was passed by Congress and approved by the President April 15, 1886, authorizing commissioners to negotiate with the property-holders for either of the three squares north of East Capitol street or the three squares south of East Capitol street between First and Second streets east, upon a basis of $550,000, a sum which had been fixed and placed in a bill several years previous, since which time valuable improvements had been made in these squares, and by reason of the largely increased population east of the Capitol, all property adjacent to the Capitol Park and the eastern section of the city had increased from 25 per cent. to 100 per cent., rendering the sum named totally inadequate to reimburse the property-holders for their property and the losses which would be sustained by them in surrendering their property for public uses.

This act further provided that if the commissioners were unable to purchase the property designated upon the basis prescribed, they should make application to the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia for a jury of condemnation in the manner provided for taking land for highways in the District of Columbia. Under this unusual proceeding, which was designed for securing the right of way or an easement, a jury of seven citizens, all of whom except one resided more than seven squares west of the property to be appraised and whose business had been such that they could have had but a slight personal knowledge of the value and advance in prices of the property which they would be called upon to appraise and condemn, were selected by a United States officer, to appraise and condemn the property in the squares named for the use of the United States.

The jury were instructed that they might receive evidence as to the value of the property from the owners, but no instructions were given the jury that gave the property-holders any right to submit evidence showing the damages that would be sustained by them by reason of taking the fee-simple of their property without their consent or as to its cash value to them.

Several of the largest property-owners and their attorneys appeared before the jury thus selected after they had been qualified and entered their objections to the form of law under which it was proposed to deprive them of their property, and the property-holders generally entered objections to the summary manner in which the jury excluded the record and evidence showing the awards to the property-holders for land and improvements previously condemned for the extension of the Capitol Park, the values which disinterested referees had placed upon portions of the property, and the testimony of persons thoroughly familiar with the market value of the valuable lots and improvements in immediate proximity to the finest capitol building and park in the world.

The award of the jury selected as before stated, and filed with the court on the 30th of June, 1886, has been forced within the $550,000 proposed for the purchase of the property in these squares when the lots and improvements were much less valuable than at the present time, although it is only fair to say that the courts instructed the jury that they were not to consider the said sum of $550,000 as conclusive of the value of the property. This sum is wholly inadequate to cover the damages sustained by the property-holders, and in many instances falls below the actual cost of the improvements, and if sanctioned by the courts and Congress will amount to an absolute confiscation in some instances of the land taken.

Three-fourths of the awards made by this jury under this form of law for laying out highways in the District of Columbia are from 25 to 50 per cent. less in proportion to the property taken than the awards made by the commissions appointed by the court to appraise and condemn the property for the extension of the east Capitol park north and south in 1872, or the commission appointed to condemn land opposite the west Capitol park in 18—, notwithstanding property has increased around the Capitol park and in every part of the city from 25 to 100 per cent. since the condemnation proceedings referred to were instituted by Congress.

In view of these facts and the great loss and injury which the undersigned are liable to suffer by the denial of their constitutional right to have the value of the property to be taken from them determined by a jury drawn in the usual way and subject to objection by either party, and before whom their right to submit proper evidence can only be denied by the presiding judge, whose decision is open to review, your memorialists respectfully and urgently request your honorable bodies to pass a joint or concurrent resolution authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to appoint a disinterested referee and allowing the property-owners, your memorialists, to select one other disinterested referee, who, with the referee appointed by the Secretary of the Interior, shall be authorized to appoint a third disinterested referee, and authorize the three referees thus appointed to examine into and report to Congress what just claims your memorialists have against the United States on account of damages sustained by them by change of the grades of streets and unjust special assessments levied on account of said change of grade; also what sums of money, if any, they are entitled to receive as damages beyond the amount awarded by the jury or viewers authorized by the act of Congress providing for the construction of a building for the national Library.

This proposition for arbitration is submitted with the view of securing a complete and fair adjustment of all claims against the Government, and if accepted and acted upon the undersigned are willing that the resolution authorizing arbitration shall contain a proviso that no claims shall be considered until the claimant shall execute and deliver to the proper officer of the United States a full and complete release of his or her right or title to all land and improvements in squares 729, 730, and 731; also to all damages by reason of the change of grade, special assessments, loss of rents, or other injury, except such as the proposed arbitrators may award and report as due them over and above the award of the jury before named.

Your memorialists do not desire to hinder or delay the proposed public improvement, but the appraisal recently made, as before stated, is so manifestly unequal, unjust, and cruel in many instances that even a despotic government could not afford to despoil its subjects of their property in such an arbitrary manner.

We therefore urge immediate relief, and for which, as in duty bound, we will ever pray.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented the petition of Robert Shields and 126 others, citizens of the ninth Congressional district of Iowa; the petition of Harvey Mann and 189 others, citizens of the ninth Congressional district of Iowa; and the petition of C. Follett and 81 others, citizens of the ninth Congressional district of Iowa, praying for the passage of the followlng measures at the present session of Congress:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;

2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;

3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;

4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;

5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;

6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding land in the United States;

7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and prohibiting bribery;

8. Bill directing disbursements of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I present the petition of Joel C. White and 159 other citizens of the second Congressional district of Virginia, the petition of E. Baker and 30 other citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Virginia, the petition of James A. Brewer and 73 other citizens of the fifth Congressional district of Virginia, the petition of J. F. T. Young and 25 other citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Virginia, the petition of Washington Scott and 49 other citizens of the third Congressional district of Virginia, the petition of John H. Allen and 104 citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Virginia, the petition of J. T. Dolan and 27 other citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Virginia, the petition of Robert A. Harris and 57 other citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Virginia, the petition of James M. Clark and 150 other citizens of the fifth Congressional district of Virginia, the petition of A. L. Keely and 65 other citizens of the sixth district of Virginia; and the petition of N. Jackson and 131 other citizens of the sixth Congressional district of Virginia, praying for the passage at the present session of Congress of the following measures:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;

2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;

3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;

4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;

5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;

6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding lands in the United States;

7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery;

8. Bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

These petitions all proceed from the order of the Knights of Labor. I move their reference to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I present a petition of citizens of Nansemond County, Virginia, and a very extensive petition of citizens of Iowa, praying for the passage of the oleomargarine bill. I move that the petitions lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, presented the petition of William Wilson and 56 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of Patrick Martin and 102 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of F. R. Bradbury and 23 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of Lewis Parker and 50 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of John E. McConley and 50 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of N. H. Frank and 146 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of James Rodey and 50 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of J. H. Haslam and 48 others, citizens of the fifth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of Andrew Main and 27 others, citizens of the fifth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of J. T. Coleman and 178 others, citizens of the fifth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of Samuel Wright and 53 others, citizens of the fifth Congressional district of Maryland; and the petition of Lewis Young and 101 others, citizens of the fifth Congressional district of Maryland, praying for the passage at the present session of Congress of the following measures:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding lands in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DAWES presented the petition of George S. Gregory and 24 other citizens of the eighth Congressional district of Massachusetts, the petition of A. A. Belcher and 73 other citizens of the second Congressional district of Massachusetts, the petition of Albert F. Barker and 33 other citizens of the second Congressional district of Massachusetts, the petition of J. Coe and 21 other citizens of the second Congressional district of Massachusetts, the petition of Robert Burns and 23 other citizens of the tenth Congressional district of Massachusetts, the petition of John Crosby and 246 other citizens of the twelfth Congressional district of Massachusetts, the petition of Frank D. Ladd and 158 other citizens of the tenth Congressional district of Massachusetts, the petition of Richard Finn and 27 other citizens of the sixth Congressional district of Massachusetts, the petition of Hugo E. Dick and 140 other citizens of the sixth Congressional district of Massachusetts, and the petition of G. M. Joll and 23 other citizens of the fifth Congressional district of Massachusetts, praying for the passage of the following measures at the present session:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding lands in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PLUMB presented the petition of Edward Harris and 209 other citizens of the third Congressional disirict of Kansas, the petition of L. E. Vaughn and 166 other citizens of the fifth Congressional district of Kansas, the petition of E. Davis and 23 other citizens of the third Congressional district of Kansas, the petition of William Newton and 117 other citizens of the first Congressional district of Kansas, and the petition of J. W. Bogan and 31 other citizens of the first Congressional district of Kansas, praying for the passage of the following bills at the present session of Congress:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding lands in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PALMER presented a memorial of 500 employés of the Detroit Bridge and Iron-Work Manufacturing Company and Hammond, Standish & Co., remonstrating against the passage of the bill taxing and regulating the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MILLER presented the petition of A. M. Miles, and 82 others, citizens of the ninth Congressional district of New York; the petition of John C. Gibbons and 56 others, citizens of the ninth Congressional district of New York; the petition of Paul Mauer and 143 others, citizens of the sixth Congressional district of New York; the petition of P. J. Murphy and 28 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of New York; the petition of George Brewster and 125 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of New York; the petition of G. W. Powell and 385 other citizens of the second Congressional district of New York; the petition of A. M. Hall and 93 other citizens of the twenty-eighth Congressional district of New York; and the petition of Otto F. Feisc and 96 other citizens of the twentieth Congressional dis- of New York, praying for the passage of the following measures at the present session of Congress:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding lands in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holdays, and punishing bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000, Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. INGALLS presented three petitions of citizens of Hepler, Kans., praying for the passage of the oleomargarine bill, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL presented a petition of citizens of Bates County, Missouri, praying for the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. COCKRELL. I also present a petition in the nature of a letter addressed to me from leading citizens of Clinton, Henry County, Missouri, praying for the passage of the oleomargarine bill. I move that the paper lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTHORNE presented the petition of James Woodruff, of Weakley County, Tennessee, praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PALMER presented the petition of H. H. Jones and 18 other citizens of Farmington, Mich., praying for the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HALE. By direction of the Committee on Appropriations I report with sundry amendments the bill (H. R. 8975) making appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

I hope to get the consent of the Senate to take up this bill perhaps on Tuesday next. That will depend upon the condition of business at that time. I shall call it up as early as possible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. GEORGE, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4811) to change the eastern and northern judicial districts of Texas, and for other purposes, reported it without recommendation.

Mr. SAWYER, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 8374) granting a pension to Mrs. Mary M. Gillham, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. CULLOM, from the Committee on Territories, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2615) to authorize the payment of certain expenses of the Territory of Utah, and to secure the payment of the indebtedness of said Territory to the United States, reported it with amendments.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred the bill (S. 102) to establish a United States court in the Indian Territory, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2692) to amend and correct the act approved June 1, 1886, granting a pension to J. H. Thornburg.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6311) granting arrears of pension to Mrs. Maria Walker.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the reports of the committees of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the following bills:

A bill (H. R. 1462) granting a pension to Addie L. Macomber;

A bill (H. R. 3463) granting a pension to Mrs. Hannah Babb Hutchins;

A bill (H. R. 4544) granting a pension to Ann E. Cooney; and

A bill (H. R. 7165) to increase the pension of Manhattan Pickett.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 392) declaring forfeited certain grants of land made to certain States in aid of the construction of railroads;

A bill (S. 1942) for the relief of J. M. Hiatt, only surviving partner of Hiatt & Co.; and

A bill (S. 2152) to amend chapter 218 of the acts of the first session of the Forty-second Congress, approved June 15, 1882.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. McMILLAN introduced a bill (S. 2799) granting arrears of pension to Frank B. Dorothy; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BECK introduced a bill (S. 2800) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers by the Ohio Valley Railway Company; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, introduced a bill (S. 2801) for the relief of William B. Campbell, of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. EUSTIS introduced a bill (S. 2802) to so further amend section 3362 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, and section 3363, as makes a distinction in the mode of packing and selling cut tobacco; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 2803) granting a pension to Michael Fitzpatrick; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, introduced a bill (S. 2804) for the relief of William Bagley, late Indian agent at the Siletz agency, Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 2805) to provide for the relief of claimants of pension under the general laws for time prior to the passage of special acts in their favor; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. COCKRELL introduced a bill (S. 2806) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be examined certain vouchers filed, or to be filed, by the State of Missouri, or her agent or agents, for sums claimed to be due from the Government of the United States on account of payments made by said State since April 22, 1882, to the officers and enlisted men of her militia forces for military services rendered to the United States in the suppression of the rebellion, as evidenced by the proper pay-rolls heretofore filed with, examined, and accepted by the Government of the United States, and to report to Congress; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

ADJOURNMENT FOR INDEPENDENCE DAY.

On motion of Mr. HAWLEY, it was Ordered, That when the Senate adjourn to-day it be to meet on Tuesday next.

AMENDMENTS TO SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BERRY, Mr. MITCHELL of Oregon, and Mr. DAWES submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. CAMDEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

Mr. McMILLAN. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Chief Clerk resumed and continued the reading of the bill to section 12.

Mr. BUTLER. I desire to give notice that at the proper time I shall move to strike out from section 2 down to and including section 12, upon the ground that it is general legislation on an appropriation bill. I reserve the right to make that point of order at the proper time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be open to amendment after it is read through.

The Chief Clerk resumed and concluded the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill having been concluded, the amendments of the Committee on Commerce will now be stated in their order.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce was, in section 1, after line 15, to insert:

Improving the channel in Back Cove, Portland Me.: Continuing improvement, $35,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 18, to increase the appropriation for "improving harbor at York, Me.," from $10,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 21, to increase the appropriation for "improving harbor at Portsmouth, N. H.: Continuing improvement," from $8,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 21, to insert:

Improving the harbor of refuge at Little Harbor, N. H.: Continuing improvement, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 25, to increase the appropriation for "improving harbor at Burlington, Vt.: Continuing improvement," from $15,000 to $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 39, to increase the appropriation for "improving harbor at Wareham, Mass.: Continuing improvement," from $10,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 48, to insert:

For the national harbor of refuge of the first class at Sandy Bay: Continuing improvement, $100,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 58, after the word "improving," to strike out "breakwater" and insert harbor;" and in line 59, after the word "continuing," to strike out "work on breakwater, $8,000" and insert "improvement, $20,000; of which $8,000 shall be expended on the breakwater and $12,000 on the inner harbor;" so as to make the clause read:

Improving harbor at Block Island, R. I.: Continuing improvement, $20,000; of which $8,000 shall be expended on the breakwater and $12,000 on the inner harbor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 64, to increase the appropriation for "improving harbor at Newport, R. I.: Continuing improvement," from $12,500 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 89, to increase the appropriation for "improving harbor at Dunkirk, N. Y.: Continuing improvement," from $10,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 91, to increase the appropriation for "improving harbor at Canarsie Bay, New York: Continuing improvement," from $5,000 to $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 92, after the words "New York," to strike out "continuing improvement, ten," and insert "for repairs, thirty-five;" so as to read:

Improving harbor at Charlotte, N. Y.: For repairs, $35,000.

Mr. MILLER. There is a mistake in the print there. The words "continuing improvement" should not be stricken out, but left in; and after that the word "and" should be inserted; so as to read:

Improving harbor at Charlotte, N. Y.: Continuing improvement and for repairs, $35,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the amendment to the amendment will be agreed to. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as amended.

Mr. BECK. This may be all right. The bill I believe is away up to about $17,000,000, and here are $100,000 added for Sandy Bay. I do not even know where it is. The House have allowed $10,000 for Charlotte Harbor and $25,000 are now added, and so it goes on until we have added $3,000,000. I should like to hear something about it. It may be all right.

Mr. MILLER. In regard to Charlotte Harbor I will say that Charlotte Harbor is the harbor of the city of Rochester.

Mr. BECK. Where is Sandy Bay?

Mr. MILLER. Sandy Bay is on the Massachusetts coast, and is a harbor of refuge which is being constructed.

Mr. FRYE. It is the most important one there is on the whole coast of the United States. It will cost three or four million dollars before we are through with it.

Mr. BECK. All right.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 1, line 99, to increase the appropriation for "improving harbor at Great Sodus Bay, New York: Continuing improvement," from $15,000 to $22,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 106, to increase the appropriation for "improving harbor at Oak Orchard, N. Y.: Continuing improvement by repairs," from $2,500 to $12,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 107, to insert:

Improving harbor at Olcott, N. Y.: Continuing improvement and repairs, $10,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 110, to insert:

Improving harbor at Wilson, N. Y.: Continuing improvement, $10,000,

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 124, to increase the appropriation for "improving harbor at Saugerties, N. Y.: Continuing improvement," from $10,000 to $15,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, to strike out the following clause from line 127 to line 133:

Improving harbor of New York at Gedney's Channel, New York: Continuing improvement, $150,000; of which sum $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be used by the Chief of Engineers and the Coast and Geodetic Survey to ascertain the best outlet to the ocean: Provided, That in the judgment of the War Department such survey is necessary.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Improving New York Harbor, New York: Continuing improvement to secure a 30-foot channel at mean low water at the Sandy Hook entrance of the harbor, upon such plan as the Secretary of War may approve, $1,000,000.

Mr. BECK. I wish to get at some explanation of that amendment, as to why the House of Representatives in dealing with and sending here a bill appropriating fifteen and a half million dollars, did not see fit to consider an item that requires a million dollars, and here is the Committee on Commerce now inserting that. Let us have some report about it, as to why $1,000,000 is added in one item to a fifteen and a half million bill, when every place in New York, so far as I can see, is added to. I should like to hear some report about it or have some reason given.

Mr. MILLER. Of course I can not undertake to state why the House did not put in this provision, and I shall not undertake to do so. The amendment, I judge, will commend itself to the Senate on the mere statement of the facts.

For a number of years past many of the large steamships coming to New York have been unable to enter or leave the port with a full cargo. The largest ships now can not leave the harbor of New York carrying much more than three-quarters of a cargo, and they are compelled always to wait for high tide to get out even with their light load.

There has been much discussion in regard to the matter, and a generally expressed opinion by all the commercial bodies of the city of New York, the Chamber of Commerce, the Maritime Association, together with the leading shipping merchants of New York, that the work should be undertaken in such a way as to secure a depth of 30 feet at low water over Sandy Hook bar.

The Secretary of War two years ago appointed a board of Army engineers to investigate this matter and to make a report. They have done so. They have reported that it is entirely feasible to erect permanent works at this point, and that the result will be a depth of 30 feet at low water, which will admit the largest steamers now engaged in the transatlantic trade to enter and leave the port of New York, and that at all times of the day without regard to the stage of water or the condition of the tides.

Wherever we have undertaken to deepen the principal harbors of the country of late on the Atlantic coast the committee have provided that an attempt should be made to secure at least 30 feet of water at low tide. This has been secured at the mouth of the Mississippi River, and the works which were projected at Galveston Harbor have been projected upon a plan to secure 30 feet of water at the entrance of that harbor; and so with other principal harbors of the country. New York Harbor has waited long and patiently for this improvement, and the board of Army engineers have finally developed a plan which General Newton, in his appearance before the committee, assured the committee could be carried out, and carried out effectually.

The provision as drawn here, however, has not confined the Secretary of War to the plan which has already been devised. It was thought wise to leave the Secretary of War larger discretion; and hence the language of the amendment leaves the plan to be approved by the Secretary of War in the progress of this work, or before its initiation, by the board of Army engineers if they shall in any way change the plan which they have already made and reported to Congress.

A very full report has been made upon the subject, and if the Senator from Kentucky will give it the time to examine it carefully I have no doubt he will be convinced as to the feasibility of the plan which has been devised; but whether the Secretary of War shall finally go upon that plan or upon any other which he may approve, the bill leaves him entirely at liberty.

General Newton stated to the committee that if he were furnished with money sufficient to carry on this work promptly and continuously, in three years' time he could produce a channel over Sandy Hook bar with 30 feet at low water.

The estimated cost of this work is between five and six million dollars. This is much less than it is costing to produce the same results at Galveston. The work at Galveston has been undertaken and is being pushed forward. Certainly if this work at New York is to be done, it should be done promptly, and money sufficient should be given to carry it on during the entire season of the year.

The amount appropriated here for the first year is $1,000,000. As the bill can not go into effect of course until it is passed, and as that will be beyond the beginning of the fiscal year, General Newton thought that $1,000,000 would be all that he would require for the first year, but if Congress should give him a larger sum he could expend it, and if it should give him a larger sum hereafter he would produce the desired result within three years of time.

I do not propose to go into any long debate. I do not desire to have the report read. It is not necessary that I should stand here in the Senate and talk upon the importance of the commerce of the city of New York, not only to New York itself but to the whole country, for it is through that port that nearly three-quarters of all the produce of this country which is shipped abroad goes; and it stands to reason that if the great steamships running out of there could go out fully loaded instead of going out with only three-quarter loads it would materially reduce the rate of freights upon the produce, grain, and other materials shipped from this country to Europe. I have no doubt that when this work is completed the saving in freight to the farmers of this country will very nearly if not quite equal the entire cost of the work. General Newton undertakes to say upon his standing as an engineer officer that this work can be done, and can be done successfully, if the money shall be furnished.

I do not think it is necessary that I should go into any lengthy statement. I do not desire to take up the time of the Senate in making a speech upon this question; but after full consideration by the committee, and after listening to General Newton in regard to the whole matter, the committee unanimously adopted this amendment, and I hope that the Senate will approve of it.

Mr. BECK. I only desired an explanation of this appropriation, because I thought it was wonderful that the House of Representatives in making up the bill should not insert, if there was any plan matured whereby the money would be carefully and properly expended, an item reaching New York Harbor when there are thousands of places to my mind of very little importance provided for. I wanted to understand why a bill made up as this was carefully in the House should have left out a million dollars for New York Harbor, which is one of the few things that clearly have merit, if plans were matured to show that the money could be properly expended. I supposed from the very fact it was left out that there must have been doubt somewhere as to the feasibility of the plan or as to its being matured in proper shape, or that there was some reason for the omission.

That is what I desired to learn from the Senator, and he has explained that the Chief of Engineers now believes it can be done. Of course it ought to be done. This is the harbor of all others that we ought to make as good as we can, and aid our commerce in every possible way by deepening this great harbor and making it safe. No one disputes that.

That is all I desire to say. I am entirely content with the explanation made.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to ask a question of the Senator from New York. It is stated, I suppose, on what is considered good authority, that there are letters from the city of New York stating that the city, by dumping the refuse of that city, garbage and things of that kind, the results of the sweepings of the streets, is actually filling up this channel faster than the Engineer Corps are cleaning it out.

Mr. MILLER. There has been a great deal said about dropping cinders and refuse into the harbor of New York. The State of New York has passed several acts forbidding it and inflicting very severe penalties both by fine and imprisonment. It has had, however, a great deal of difficulty in enforcing these laws, arising from the fact that these waters are under the control of the United States, and that the State of New Jersey also borders upon these waters, and that the line between the State of New York and the State of New Jersey is not upon the land, but is in the water. The State of New York has done what it could, however, to prevent the dumping of refuse into the harbor of New York, and to some extent it has succeeded.

I have introduced, and have now reported and upon the Calendar, a bill creating a commission for the harbor of New York of United States officers, and giving them full power to use patrol boats to police the harbor and to arrest and punish every person who may be found dumping anything into the harbor of New York. I hope I shall be able to secure the passage of that bill before the end of this session.

So far as Sandy Hook bar is concerned, the investigation made by the United States Engineers shows that in their soundings and borings at that point there is no evidence of cinders or refuse at all, and the surveys made last summer showed that the water over Sandy Hook bar does not vary 6 inches, if it does vary a particle, from the survey of 1854. In fact General Newton and the officers state that there is no appreciable difference in the depth of water on Sandy Hook bar to-day and at any other period since we have known it and have had accurate surveys.

This dumping, however, is doing great harm to the city. It is causing shoals in the harbor, but not upon the bar. It is undoubtedly creating bars within the harbor, which will eventually have to be dredged out by the United States Government. All this ought to be prevented; and we have put into this river and harbor bill a very stringent provision, a whole section, forbidding the dumping of anything into any harbors over which the United States Government has control and for which it makes provisions, and which requires the Secretary of War to prosecute and punish all offenders. That provision is very stringent, and if the Secretary of War is furnished with sufficient money to carry it out, I have no doubt he can prevent all this damage being done in New York Harbor, as well as in the other harbors of the country. But the statement that the water has shoaled upon Sandy Hook bar by this process is shown to be unqualifiedly false by General Newton's reports. The damage is not being done there, but is being done inside the bar and in the harbor itself.

Mr. PLUMB. It seems to me somewhat extraordinary that the people of the United States have to pay for the protection of the harbor of New York against the citizens of New York and the city of New York. If they are dumping refuse into the harbor and thereby shoaling it in such a way as the Senator from New York says, so as to require hereafter great appropriations for the purpose of cleaning it out, it seems to me before we appropriate any more money we had better have some understanding with the city of New York to buy them off or warn them off, or do something to prevent their doing this damage. They seem to have less concern about the harbor than the farmers of the West are expected to have. Every time an appropriation of this kind is wanted we are informed that the Western farmers want it, while the people who carry on business in these localities seem to have no interest except to get a little more money and make necessity for it by filling up the harbor.

Mr. MILLER. Of course the Senator knows, and we all know, that any steamship running into New York will take advantage of the present moment and will drop ashes into the harbor, if not prevented by a police force. The State of New York has expended a great deal of money, and is expending it now, in attempting to prevent this; but it has not succeeded fully. It has done very much to abate the nuisance, and in this appropriation bill we have given the Secretary of War absolute power to prevent it if he sees fit to carry out the law. Of course the United States Government must protect its own property against all its own citizens, whether they are in New York or in Maryland or in California or elsewhere. We know that vicious and selfish people will attempt to carry out their own ends, to make their own profits in business, even at the cost of the whole people of the United States; and it is for that reason that we have put into the bill the very stringent provision to which I have referred, which, if carried out, will do very much to abate this nuisance, if it does not entirely remove it. Certainly the Government must undertake to protect its own property against its own citizens, if necessary.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 143, to increase the appropriation for "improving harbor at Raritan Bay, New Jersey: Continuing improvement, from $30,000 to $50,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 143, to insert:

Improving harbor at Plattsburg, N. Y.: Continuing improvement, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 145, to insert:

For a more thorough and definite survey and examination of the harbor at Atlantic City, N. J., with a view to making a harbor of refuge at that point, $5,000; said examination and survey to be made by a board consisting of three United States engineers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 170, after the word "ice-harbor," to strike out "if in his opinion said piers be useless to the Government and their present condition be dangerous to navigation;" so as to make the clause read:

The Secretary of War is authorized to cede to the city of Chester, Pa., the upper and lower piers located in said city and extending into the Delaware River, and formerly used as an ice-harbor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 180, to increase the appropriation for "improving harbor at Baltimore, Md.: Continuing improvement," from $100,000 to $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 182, to insert:

For continuing the improvement of the Potomac River in the vicinity of Washington, with reference to the improvement in navigation, the establishment of harbor-lines, and the raising of the flats under the direction of the Secretary of War and in accordance with existing plans, $500,000: Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended upon or with reference to any place in respect of which the title of the United States is in doubt, or in respect to which any claim adverse to the United States has been made.

Mr. INGALLS. I am not an enthusiastic advocate of this bill and do not intend to vote for it, but I have to say concerning the amendment which is now pending that if the appropriation is to be of any benefit or advantage the proviso should be omitted. It is in these words:

Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended upon or with reference to any place in respect of which the title of the United States is in doubt, or in respect to which any claim adverse to the United States has been made.

Senators, I presume, are aware that there is an adverse claim upon a part of the 700 acres proposed to be reclaimed by the operations now going on in the harbor here, under what is known as the Kidwell patent, which covers a territory in round numbers aggregating 47 acres, which has already been raised, by the operations of the engineer, above what is known as the flood-level.

There are also certain asserted rights of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, what may be called riparian rights, that are brought into controversy by the proceedings that have been hitherto had and which would be excluded in case this proviso should be adopted.

So far as the Kidwell claim is concerned, having examined it as a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, and also as a member of the Committee on the District of Columbia, which has concurrent jurisdiction in these matters, I feel compelled to state that a more shadowy and insubstantial claim never was presented than that which is urged by the claimants under what is known as the Kidwell patent. There never was any public land of the United States within the District of Columbia upon which any pre-emption or homestead or other claim under the public-land laws could be enforced.

With regard to the claim of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company the situation is somewhat different. They have attorneys who are urging their rights against the United States, and I should regret very much indeed to see this amendment adopted with the proviso for two or three reasons. In the first place it will stop and retard the progress of the work, which everybody admits ought to be conducted as rapidly as possible to a conclusion; and, in the second place, which is more important, if the continuance of the work is prevented much that has already been accomplished will be rendered valueless; that is, the accumulations already piled on the flats are liable to be washed away by floods and a great deal of expense will be incurred by the removal of the plant and there will be expense to contractors.

The Committee on the Judiciary have already reported a bill which has been passed by the Senate and also by the House, providing that the Attorney-General shall institute proceedings at once to ascertain what adverse rights exist, and if any are found to exist under these different claims, to proceed to secure the same by condemnation or otherwise. It has not reached an agreement, as the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] suggests, because the bill as it went to the House was amended and has come back for concurrence in the amendments, which are now before a committee of conference. The reason of the delay is this: The claimants under the Kidwell patent have submitted a proposition to the Senate conferees to this effect, that they will relinquish by deed to the United States all right, title, and interest if the United States will agree that they may go into the Court of Claims, in the first place, to establish the validity of their claim, if they have any, and, in the next place, to ascertain, in case that shall be decided in favor of the claimants, what the value of the property was at the time when the United States took possession of it to make their improvements thereon.

It seems to me as one of the committee that it would be wiser to accept that proposition inasmuch as it would involve no implication of the rights of the claimants or the validity of their title, rather than to wait the slow and dilatory proceedings in the courts here, and thus allow the work to proceed.

The committee of conference of the two Houses have had one meeting already, and in consequence of the departure of the chairman of the House committee, Mr. BARBOUR, of Virginia, their further meetings have been delayed until the beginning of next week, a conferee having been appointed in his place.

For this reason, it seems to me that if this amendment is to be adopted the proviso should be omitted, and the work should be allowed to go on subject to the rights of these parties as they may be established in the proceedings that may be had hereafter and in view of the proposition which has been made by the claimants under what is known as the Kidwell patent.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I think as to this proviso in the amendment, that it ought to stay in. I am decidedly opposed to spending any public money on any property the title of which is in question, except in some extreme emergency; and Congress has been of that disposition since this matter of title came up hitherto and we thought we had provided for having that title speedily settled and disposed of in some way, so that everything would be clear; but by some, as it seems to me inexcusable delay, the matter stands so far as clearing up that cloud on the title, because these people have got a patent under the seal of the United States in regular form——

Mr. CONGER. The Senator will recollect that it was canceled by the Land Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. They hold the patent. It was issued by the Secretary of the Interior in all the forms. I am of opinion myself, and I believe every member of the Committee on the Judiciary was when he examined it last year, that that title is absolutely void, that there was no authority of law to issue that patent, that neither the Secretary of the Interior nor the Commissioner of the General Land Office nor the President of the United States had any more authority to grant a patent and allow these people to establish an apparent claim to this land than they would have to grant a patent to the land on which this Capitol stands. That was our opinion. But still the eminent legal gentlemen who have, it is said, bought up this Kidwell flats claim as one of the kiting operations of this District, maintain otherwise; and what a court of the United States will say when lawyers disagree, remains to be seen. I think it clear that the court will hold they have not got any title at all, but I can not demonstrate that until we get the final judgment of the court.

Beyond what I have now already said on the general question of the danger of spending money on property to which the title is in dispute, my recollection is that among the papers of the Committee on the Judiciary that I presume my friend from Kansas has in a bundle somewhere, obtained this year, is one wherein the engineer in charge has informed us that this work, so far as it is necessary for really going on with the general purpose and keeping up the plant and doing good to the river and to the land that is not in dispute, may go on without difficulty under this appropriation as it stands with the proviso, and we only stop dumping dirt on to this low land that is claimed by these people, and that the work can also go on this year without improving the other part of the property to which a pretension of claim is set up by the old canal company, the technical name of which I have forgotten—another trouble at the other end.

Mr. INGALLS. The Chesapeake and Ohio.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal. I am not speaking by the book, but I think it appeared somewhere in the papers we had before the committee in a letter from Major Hains in charge that the work could go on without spending any money upon these disputed places, and therefore the proviso will do no harm, but will only keep the money devoted to the objects that the United States clearly and indisputably has a right to devote it to, a property that will be the property of the United States when it is completed, and merely stops doing work on this particular section of the improvement until the thing can be determined.

For these considerations it appears to me, with great respect to my friend from Kansas, that it would be better to leave the proviso in.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, it is proper to state the reasons why the proviso is inserted in the amendment. The Committee on the Potomac Flats and the Committee on Commerce both adopted the proviso for this reason: The Senate at this session has passed a bill looking to the settlement of the questions of title to the Potomac Flats in which this very proviso is contained declaring that no money should be expended upon any part of the flats to which the title of the United States was disputed. In deference to that act already passed by the Senate, both of the committees thought that it was proper that this amendment should contain the proviso. I have just sent for the bill and as soon as I receive it I will read it to the Senate if that be desired. I introduced the bill at the beginning of the session and had it referred to the Judiciary Committee.

The Senator from Kansas will remember that the bill when first introduced and referred to the Judiciary Committee provided broadly that no money should be expended upon these flats until after the settlement of the legal questions. At the suggestion of my friend from Missouri [Mr. VEST], after conference with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS], who reported the bill, we had the bill amended as this proviso now reads, and this proviso is in strict accordance with the provisions of that bill, that no money should be expended upon the disputed part of the flats. As the Senator from Kansas has so clearly said, that bill is now pending between the two Houses in conference. I do not know, of course, what will be done with it.

Mr. VEST. I do not think that any lawyer, unless interested in litigation concerning it, would spend his money on any real estate when a colorable claim had been set up to the property. Having had occasion to examine the Kidwell claim and the claim of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, which is now in the hands of Mr. Dodge, of this city, I agree with the Senator from Kansas in the opinion that the claims are simply colorable, and I do not think that any judicial tribunal will ever decide against the Government as to these titles. Still, if I were advising the Government of the United States or an individual in such a case, I would certainly state to my client that it would be entirely unadvisable to expend a single dollar on this property where these claims were pending. Very eminent counsel have been engaged both for the Kidwell heirs and by Mr. Dodge. The other day Benjamin F. Butler called on me as the attorney of Mr. Dodge, and expressed the fullest confidence in the title of his client.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the name?

Mr. VEST. General Butler, of Massachusetts.

Mr. INGALLS. Who is the other man?

Mr. VEST. Mr. Dodge. I believe he is a broker in this city. I do not know his first name. He is the assignee of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company.

Mr. GEORGE. Is it William C. Dodge?

Mr. VEST. They are claims of riparian rights, rights to construct the canal over this property.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Under an old grant made long ago.

Mr. VEST. A Maryland grant. They assigned that interest to Mr. Dodge.

Mr. GEORGE. William C. Dodge?

Mr. VEST. I believe so. Very eminent counsel are also employed in behalf of the Kidwell heirs. While I believe that the ultimate result of the litigation will be in favor of the Government, yet I can not agree to the proposition that it would be safe or wise for us now to expend millions of dollars to be finally put in the hands of these parties if they should succeed. If they finally succeed in defeating the Government every dollar which we put on that property will go into the hands of these claimants.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator from Missouri to state the extent to which the asserted claim goes? How much of the property is involved in the claim of the Kidwell heirs?

Mr. INGALLS. Forty-seven acres.

Mr. BUTLER. Is that all that is in dispute?

Mr. INGALLS. If the Senator is curious to know, I have here a map which shows the proposed outline of the land to be reclaimed in blue lines, and also in red the area of what is known as the Kidwell claim, which extends from Easby's Point, a little below the foot of New Hampshire avenue, along the shore toward the Long Bridge. The area in red indicates the territory covered by the Kidwell patent.

Mr. VEST. The Chesapeake and Ohio claim is that of the old canal, not used now, that has been given up for some years; but the company has surrendered its right to use that canal to Mr. Dodge.

Mr. EDMUNDS. What is the date of that assignment? It is only a year or two ago that the corporation officials presented to me as chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary a formal claim to that property as then belonging to the company. They must have sold out since then.

Mr. VEST. I can not state the date for I did not examine the papers. All I know is that General Butler called on me the other day and I had an interview with him in the committee-room of the Committee on the District of Columbia, in which he claimed that his client had the interest in this matter.

There was one observation of the Senator from Kansas which is very pertinent and important to this question, if it be the fact, and that is that if this appropriation is not made absolutely without the proviso, in other words, if the improvement is not continued on the 47 acres claimed by the Kidwell heirs, the work already done will be lost. I took occasion some weeks since to examine that improvement, and the conference committee of the Judiciary Committee have the question now before them. I understand from the engineer that that work will not be lost, and it is a singular fact, but still a fact, that the large amount of the appropriation heretofore made by Congress has been expended upon this disputed land. The act making the appropriation requested or directed the Attorney-General to institute suit to determine the question of title. I was a member of the Committee on the Improvement of the Potomac Flats which reported that provision, but nothing was done. The matter was sent to an assistant attorney; he brought no suit; and the subject is in the same condition to-day that it was then. These $500,000 can be expended without putting another dollar on this disputed territory and the work can go on; but I am utterly opposed to taking out this proviso because the work can go on this year without using any more money on the disputed territory. I have no question about that; and if that be so, the safe course and the wise course is to keep the proviso in; and when the question has been determined and the title put at rest, we can go on without any loss.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, I should not admit that the measure of damages, even in case the Kidwell patent should be decided by the courts to be valid, would be the value of the property with the improvements placed upon it by the United States Government. I do not know whether there is in the District of Columbia what is commonly known as the betterment law, but in any event I should suppose that if the Kidwell patent should be held to be valid and the claimants under it entitled to recover, the measure of damages would be the value of the property at the time when the United States entered into the possession of it. I speak, however, with hesitation and not by authority, because, not having examined the laws of the District, I am not aware what the decisions have been or what the existing statutes are.

Mr. RANSOM. If it does not interrupt the Senator I will state to him that the bill which has passed the Senate and is now pending between the Senate and the House provides that that shall be the rule of damages.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from Vermont in the observations that he made spoke about the inexcusable delay that had in some mysterious manner been interposed in executing the will of Congress in ascertaining what the rights of these respective parties are. I assume that the Senator did not intend by his observations to reflect in any manner upon the conferees who have had charge of the bill to which I have alluded.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; I was speaking of the old law.

Mr. INGALLS. I assume that the Senator referred to the act of August 2, 1882, which made an appropriation for "improving the Potomac River in the vicinity of Washington with reference to the improvement of navigation, the establishment of harbor lines, and the raising of the flats, under the direction of the Secretary of War," in which act authority is given the Attorney-General "to cause a suit or suits in law or in equity to be instituted, in the name of the United States, in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, against any and all claimants of title under any patent which in his opinion was by mistake or was improperly or illegally issued for any part of the marshes or flats within the limits of the proposed improvement."

It was the intention of Congress in 1882, when the preliminary legislation was passed looking to the reclamation of this area of 700 acres lying in front of the city, that these titles should be ascertained and a decree entered as to the relative rights of the parties; and Mr. Brewster, then Attorney-General, addressed, on the 28th of January, 1885—nearly three years after the act of Congress—a letter to A. S. Worthington, esq., United States attorney for the District of Columbia, directing him "to bring a suit in equity, in the name of the United States, in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, against the said John L. Kidwell and any and all other persons claiming title under the patent issued as above, to have the said patent set aside or annulled."

But for some reason or other, either the press of business in the attorney's office or his disinclination, or want of vigor on the part of the Attorney-General, the action was not instituted, and the title remains to this day undetermined; and the delay, as I stated before, in the committee of conference between the two Houses has arisen from the fact that the Kidwell claimants proposed to release to the United States Government by deed, to be satisfactory to the Attorney-General, all their right, title, and interest, upon the simple consideration that they shall have the right to institute a suit in the Court of Claims against the Government to ascertain in the first place whether they have any claim at all, and in the second place what the value of it was when the United States Government took possession.

I have contended, and I still believe, that it would be a great deal wiser for the Government to accept that proposition than it would be to wait the law's delay, especially after our previous experience, and the halting progress of a suit in equity through the courts in the District to a final determination.

With regard to the claim of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, they insist that they have riparian rights from Easby's Point, which is at the foot of the Naval Observatory hill, where there was formerly a ship-yard, down to Seventeenth street; and so far as that claim is concerned the proviso might remain, because the work can go on without any interruption if no further improvement is made on the land claimed by the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company. But my information from the engineer in charge is that it is very important for the economical and efficient continuation of this work that they shall be enabled to begin at the upper end and work down; and inasmuch as the Kidwell claim, which is a long, narrow, irregular strip, tending, as I said, from Easby's Point, near the foot of New Hampshire avenue, in a southeasterly direction and ending at about the foot of West Twentieth street, is directly at the upper apex of the proposed work, it seems to me that it would be wise to allow the expenditure to proceed irrespective of the inhibition contained in this proviso.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator for information if he can form any idea of what amount of money has already been expended on that particular territory?

Mr. INGALLS. I can not state the amount in dollars and cents.

Mr. BUTLER. There has been a good deal of work done on it.

Mr. INGALLS. There has been a great deal of work done upon it which will be greatly impaired and imperiled hereafter if we continue to make the improvements below instead of above, thereby subjecting the territory covered by the Kidwell patent to the danger of floods coming from above and the erosion of the current.

Mr. BUTLER. May I ask the Senator again—for my attention was withdrawn at the moment—what is the proposition made by the Kidwell heirs of what they are willing to do?

Mr. INGALLS. The Kidwell claimants are now represented by Mr. M. F. Morris, an attorney of this city, who holds the legal title to the Kidwell patent—the entire 47 acres. He represents all the claimants, and he proposes to relinquish by deed to the United States Government——

Mr. BUTLER. As matters now stand, without regard to the improvement put upon the land?

Mr. INGALLS. As matters now stand, with this arrangement, that the United States shall permit him or them to go into the Court of Claims to establish, in the first place, their claim under the patent if they have any, and, in the next place, if the court shall hold that they have any rights under that patent, to ascertain the value of the property at the time when the United States Government took possession of it.

Mr. BUTLER. That would seem to be fair.

Mr. INGALLS. So as to make that the measure of damages in case they are entitled to recover, excluding what the United States Government have put upon it, and also enabling the Government to continue this work without the risk of losing what has already been put there, by floods, by erosion, and by neglect.

Mr. BUTLER. I am very much inclined to concur with the Senator from Kansas that that seems to be a very fair proposition. I do not see what the objection to it is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The objection to it, if there be any, is this: Supposing we content ourselves with that provision and pass a law that way, and then there is a difficulty about the title, they can not make a good one. If the patent is good there may be minor heirs, people out of the country, and so on. If there was any failure in the opinion of the Attorney-General in getting whatever there is of the Kidwell interest, assuming the patent to be valid, then we should find ourselves next year exactly where we were before.

Mr. BUTLER. But I was going upon the assumption that they expect to convey a perfect title to the Government by the arrangement to which the Senator from Kansas refers.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is the very difficulty. That is to be left to the Attorney-General. If he finds not, the whole thing is up again unless, as I believe has been suggested, it might be put in the alternative that if within a certain time that was not accomplished, then the proceedings might go on. That would leave still outstanding the dispute with the so-call assignees of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company about the land further up in respect to which we should be obliged to proceed.

Mr. INGALLS. I said in regard to that, that the reservation so far as it affects the claim of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company can exist without interfering with the work. It is not essential that any more money should be expended on that portion of the flats that is covered by the proposed claim of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company.

Mr. BUTLER. The main difficulty, as I understand from the Senator from Kansas, exists in the claim made by the Kidwell heirs. That is the trouble. If we can settle that the other might be very easily gotten rid of.

Mr. INGALLS. The proviso might remain as to the claim of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal because it is immaterial whether any more money is expended there or not; but the work that has been done on the Kidwell claim, if there is to be no more money expended there, is liable to be washed away, and it imperils all that is done below simply because this line is at the point where the current first impinges. It is essential that that should be raised to the proposed height of the territory covered by the Kidwell patent, in order to protect that proportion of the territory that lies below. If you leave it at its present elevation and proceed to fill up with dredging and the accumulations all the territory below that, you simply dump the water that comes in from above over the Kidwell claim and subject the territory below to the dangers of destruction, as I have before indicated.

Mr. VEST. Mr. President, recurring to the question which is pending before the Senate, as to whether it is expedient for the Government of the United States to continue the expenditure of this large amount of money on this piece of land, I wish to make one observation. Suppose that we continue this expenditure to the amount of a million of dollars, and then this title is decided in favor of the Kidwell heirs, or their assignee, Mr. Morris; then the Government loses every dollar that it has put upon this property belonging to private individuals. The clause in the bill that comes from the House simply provides for the amount of damages that these parties shall recover in the event that they succeed in the suit.

After we have put thousands and thousands of yards of dirt, at enormous expense, upon this property, if the title should be decided against the Government, how is the Government to get back its million dollars?

Mr. BUTLER. But I understand the Kidwell heirs propose to convey to the Government all their title, and have if they succeed only the value of the property at the time the improvement commenced.

Mr. INGALLS. That is the proposition they make; and if their claim shall be held by the courts to be valid, then the measure of damages in case of recovery will be the value of the property before the Government put any cent of money upon it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Is that their proposition?

Mr. INGALLS. That is their proposition.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is not the way I have understood.

Mr. VEST. That is not the provision in the bill referred to.

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator did not hear the first statement made by the Senator from Kansas which was that the Kidwell people propose to make title at once, undisputed transfer of their title at once, to the United States, with the condition that the suit shall afterwards be tried and if decided in their favor then the Government shall pay for the land the damages to be assessed at the time of entry by the United States without reference to the improvement. So, according to the proposition suggested by the Senator from Kansas, the Government gets the title anyway, and only pays the value of the land at the time the improvement commenced.

Mr. VEST. That proposition is pending now, and whether the Congress of the United States will accept it or not is a question to be determined in the future. Until there is some such final determination of the question I contend that it is not safe for us to expend another dollar upon that land. Until there is some determination, some agreement with these people in regard to the final settlement of their claim, this proviso ought to be kept in the bill.

Mr. CALL. I wish to ask the Senator from Kansas a question. I ask why is not that proposition accepted by the Government? Is there any legislation needed?

Mr. INGALLS. Legislation is necessary. A bill was reported from the Judiciary Committee directing the Attorney-General to institute proceedings to test the validity of all adverse claims upon this outlying territory in front of the city, which went to the House of Representatives, having passed the Senate. The House of Representatives amended it by inserting a proviso that no money should be expended in the proposed reclamation of these flats until the final determination of these suits. The Senate declined to agree to that amendment, and asked for a conference, which was agreed to by the House and the bill is now in conference. It has remained in conference to permit the Kidwell claimants to perfect the papers necessary to enable them to submit their proposition to the conferees on the part of the House and Senate in an authoritative and definite form, because of course we did not wish to report an amendment to the respective Houses which was not substantiated by the papers which we should be able to present. That is the occasion of the delay, and the papers have now been completed. We have an abstract of title showing the recorded interests of all the claimants to the Kidwell patent, and we have also a deed from the party who holds all those interests under the Kidwell patent, and we have prepared an amendment——

Mr. GIBSON. Will the Senator allow me to ask whether I am to understand him to say that all parties in interest, that is, all parties asserting a claim under the Kidwell patent, are properly represented in this offer?

Mr. INGALLS. Every one that appears of record. Thay have all united in a deed to Mr. M. F. Morris, which was thought better in order to simplify the matter and let these claims all flow into one single repository, so that that individual might make this deed to the Government of the United States. I will read the proposed amendment——

Mr. BUTLER. Is Mr. Morris willing to give a warranty title to the Government?

Mr. INGALLS. I do not find the paper I desired to submit; it probably has remained in my desk; but in any event it is exactly what I have suggested, that the relinquishment shall be complete to the satisfaction of the Attorney-General; and that all that shall be required on the part of the Government of the United States shall be permission to these parties to go into the Court of Claims, which they can not do otherwise, and enable them to establish the validity of their claim if it has any validity at all, there being no implication whatever by reason of that permission as to the value of the title or the validity of the claim, and an express proviso that the measure of damages in case of recovery shall be the value of the property before the United States had placed any improvement upon it at all.

I submit respectfully that, considering the uncertainties of the law and the inevitable delays that attend the prosecution of suits in equity, the proposition is one which from a common-sense standpoint ought to be accepted. It is the wisest thing the United States Government can do, because it gives them the most favorable terms they could possibly anticipate even under a favorable decision of the court.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to add a word or two to what has been said in regard to this matter. The committee have included both these claims in the proviso; and the discussion here, I think, from my own knowledge of the locality, induces me to believe that in regard to the Kidwell flats the proviso had better not be insisted on. The work done there is at the upper end of the entire lands to be reclaimed, and where the river beats directly upon the land. The current impinges directly on the proposed line of the land claimed under the Kidwell patent. It was found necessary, in order to protect grounds which might be overflowed, to put in along the river, along the new channel bank, the filling there, to revet the work with stone to protect it from the current of the river. It should, if I understand it aright, be raised some 4 or 5 feet more with revetment walls to protect it against freshets. A great deal of the covering on these flats, the upper part, is already done, and it would seem to me a dangerous proceeding to fill up below with earth and leave freshets to overflow and wash out the filling that might be done below.

Therefore I would now, as a member of the committee, think it desirable to remove the exception in regard to the Kidwell flats, and let it remain in regard to the other property which is farther down and nearer the shore, and which would not be affected by currents, or by overflows, and which may be filled in hereafter.

Mr. CALL. It seems to me that this work ought to be pursued unhampered by any restriction of this kind. The proposition of the Kidwell heirs, as stated by the Senator from Kansas, certainly is fair and answers every possible purpose to be attained by any litigation. It subjects the Government barely to the responsibility of paying whatever the property might have been worth in case they have a title, when these improvements commenced, and that could be the only result of any litigation favorable to them. Now, what is the objection to inserting in this proviso that the money shall not be expended until that proposition is made and accepted, which I understand is about to be done.

But I wish to say further that it appears to be a very singular idea that the use of property for the public, required for public uses, may be prevented by some one getting up a fraudulent, fictitious, and colorable claim against it. It will never do to admit a proposition of that kind, and that the Government must be delayed until litigation in the long and tedious course of the law can be had in order to acquire the ownership of property I do not conceive is a proper principle of public policy. But if this ground is needed for the Government, no matter to whom it may belong, steps should be taken for its immediate acquisition by summary process in order that the interest of the whole people may not be delayed because of any claim of right or any actual positive right in any individual.

But the suggestion of the Senator from Kansas clearly establishes that this proviso should not remain in this bill, but that if anything is needed for the complete and perfect protection of the Government against this Kidwell claim it is merely the acceptance of a proposition already made and which may be accepted without a moment's delay.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to state in reply to the observations of the Senator from Florida that he seems to leave out of view the circumstance that it may turn out that these people, after a law is passed such as is proposed, are still the masters of the situation, as to whether they will keep their engagement and make such a deed or not. Second, there is the open question as to whether the Attorney-General will be satisfied that whatever title went from the United States in the Kidwell patent has come back again by the proposed conveyance, on account of questions of infancy, coverture, and all the things that enter into the capacity of getting land disposed of in this District. Thirdly, the money which is to be expended on this land if this proviso is stricken out is as large in amount as that which has been spent before; and if, when it comes to a controversy and an assessment of damages for taking this property, as the Senator says it ought to be taken for the public use, how much is to be paid? Is the rule to be the value of the property when the United States, without authority of law as against the private owner, proceeded to improve it, merely going on to his land and he not bringing any ejectment against the officer; he is glad to have his land filled up. Is it to be that, or is it to be the value of the land at the time there is a constitutional condemnation of it? That is the question. I think that Congress has the power to provide for paying the damages as of the time when the United States took possession; but gentlemen who know much more about law than I do are of a different opinion; and therefore, if their opinion and not mine should prevail in the end, we should be paying the Kidwell heirs, or the syndicate that holds the claim, dollar for dollar over again the money that the United States has spent from its Treasury in making the land valuable, which would be a shame and disgrace to the Senate and to the House of Representatives and to the President to put themselves in such an attitude of exposure.

Now, if the bill should pass that was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with a provision that failing a perfect title within three months, or whatever time it might be—one month would be just as well, because all the title they can give is within reach—legal proceedings should be immediately instituted before we spend any more money, then I think it would be very clear probably that the money spent after the institution of legal proceedings for condemnation, if it should turn out that there was a title for condemnation, would not enhance the damages to be paid by making the property more valuable; they would not be taken in. But as it now stands we are in all the peril that we ever have been in improving a private person's private property which hereafter is to be condemned for the public use at what it is worth at some time. If it is to be condemned at what it is worth after we have spent on these 49 acres three-quarters of a million dollars, then we shall have paid that three-quarters of a million dollars already to make it valuable and then take it at its enhanced value at three-quarters of a million, and thus just pay double.

I say we have no excuse for that kind of legislation, and I say also that if you leave this proviso in and the scheme goes on and as it is proposed by the syndicate that owns the Kidwell claim, then the proviso does no harm because the title will have been got into the United States and the proviso will not apply to it at all. But in case they stand out as they have, and the money is still continued to be piled into that 49 acres, we are exposing ourselves to the peril of by and by paying just double for the whole thing, paying out again the same sums we have already expended on that land for the value of it thus improved. We ought not to do it.

I wish to say further what I said before, so that there shall not be any mistake about it, that there was laid before the Committee on the Judiciary at this session—I can not lay my hand upon it at the moment, as I have not had an opportunity to go down and look at the papers—a written statement from the engineer in charge that this appropriation which is contained in the bill, this sum of money, can be expended for the promotion of the general object and suitably and safely without touching this land, and the same as to the land claimed by the canal company; and therefore this proviso does not operate to the injury of the practical attainment of the object that we have in view, but it only operates to prevent what has somehow or other been done before that we intended should not be done—the spending of any more money to improve this so-called private property until we get in an attitude where we are spending it for the United States, and not for private owners.

I ask for the yeas and nays on the motion to strike out the proviso.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). Does the Chair understand the Senator from Kansas to offer an amendment or merely to make a suggestion?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know that he made a motion. I was not in at the moment.

Mr. INGALLS. I did not understand the inquiry of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The President of the Senate did not know whether the Senator intended his suggestion as offering an amendment to strike out the proviso. Hence the present occupant of the chair asked the question.

Mr. INGALLS. I did not. I made no motion.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then the question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think there is any question, but a question of law, what the damage would be against the United States. As I understand the law to be pretty generally and pretty uniformly settled—there are some exceptions, it is true, and some cases might be cited the other way I admit—the general rule has been in the United States that the damage is to be computed at the time of the taking. That question has been recently very extensively litigated in one of the Western States, and my attention has been called to it, and I know that was the rule there laid down.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, but the question is, What is the time of the taking? Ordinarily, as the Constitution requires, it must be paid for at the time it is taken. But the point is whether the taking, in the sense of the decisions to which the Senator refers, is not the lawful statutory taking by the methods provided for ascertaining and paying the damages. To that I referred when I said that when the proceedings were once instituted we might be pretty safe as to money paid out after.

Mr. TELLER. That was the very question in the case that I mentioned, the proceedings commenced fourteen or fifteen years after the manual taking. So I do not think there is any doubt that the damages to the United States will be the value of the land at the time the Government began to improve it, and not the value of the land after the Government had improved it.

But leaving that aside, we are dignifying this title in a manner that I think is uncalled for. I have not given any attention to this particular title, but it became my duty two or three years ago to look at a perfectly analagous question, entirely so in every respect, and I do not think there is any more title to that land in the Kidwell heirs or any body connected with that claim than if the Commissioner of the General Land Office had made a patent to this Capitol, not a particle, and I would not give, if I was an individual dealing with it, a dollar for the whole title.

I think the Government of the United States ought not to suspend a great work because of some vague, shadowy, fraudulent title, admitted to be not only a fraud, as I understand, but illegal in every respect. I am for striking the proviso out, if that is the motion, and letting the work go on.

Mr. RANSOM. Mr. President, if I could have my way about it, if I were only to consult my own feelings, I would have this proviso stricken out, though in conjunction with other gentlemen I may say I am the author of it. But if I can have the attention of the Senator from Colorado for one second, I think he will see that in this case, for the reason suggested by the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from Missouri, it is proper. It protects with perfect security the rights of the Government. But suppose that the view taken by the Senator from Kansas or the Senator from Florida is correct, and that the proposition which the Senator from Kansas has alluded to be adopted which is an excellent one, which I trust the committee of conference will approve because it can do no harm—it has not yet been adopted, but suppose it is adopted—then immediately all this cloud that is talked about on the title of the United States vanishes and the work can go on. Suppose it is not adopted, and we are still at sea, then what the Senator from Vermont says is strictly true.

I do not know what were the communications which were sent to the Judiciary Committee, but I know the conversation which the Senator from Kansas, the chairman of the Judiciary Committee, and myself had with the engineer, and it was to this effect: that he could expend every dollar of this appropriation upon parts of the land not affected by any dispute in the world as to the title, and expend it as advantageously as he could upon the other parts. Then no harm in the world is done by this proviso. It is suggested by the act of the Senate passed only three months ago saying that the money should not be expended in that way, and still further by the act of the House recently, if I may allude to it, going further on that ground than the Senate did. I do not think it would be well for us here when a committee of conference is acting upon a matter to anticipate what they may do and withdraw this protection from the Government. It can do no harm; it may do a great deal of good.

I have just declared that I did not see how there could be a better proposition for the Government to accept than the one suggested by the Senator from Kansas; and I want to say one word in response to a remark thrown out by my friend from Missouri, who asked why the money was expended upon the upper part of this work first? The Senator from Kansas has well stated that it was the key to the whole position. But I will recall to the recollection of Senators that in 1882 when this proposition was first passed there was a clause in the law providing that the Attorney-General should see to all the rights of the United States before the then Secretary of War should expend one dollar of the money appropriated. He addressed a letter to the Attorney-General asking him to look into the question of title and to report if there was any doubt upon it. The Attorney-General wrote back to him that there could be no question about the title, and advised him to go on with the work.

Mr. TELLER. That is just what I said. It has been held by the Attorney-General, and I do not believe that there is a lawyer in this body who will take twenty minutes to look at this case who will not be thoroughly convinced that there is not any claim there at all. I had occasion to look into an analogous case and study it carefully, involving a good deal of money, in behalf of the Government while I was Secretary of the Interior, and that brought in incidentally this whole question, and I examined it.

I say there can be nothing gained by this proviso; and if I was dealing with the subject I would not pass any law in regard to this alleged title. I would not allow the holders of it to go into the Court of Claims or anywhere else. I would ignore their title absolutely. The proceedings by which it is supposed to have been acquired were not begun in good faith or honesty or decency, and there is not any title, legal or equitable, that they ought to have any standing anywhere in asserting. I would leave them to their remedy as it is, whatever it may be.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The trouble about that is that they have got what on the face of the paper is a valid patent under the seal of the United States and the signature of the President. Now every year that goes on (which may account for this dilly-dallying) the proof of the fraud in the business of the fraudulent contrivance by which that patent was worked through the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office——

Mr. TELLER. Leave that all out and take it on the question of law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The evidence on which that could have been established and perhaps could to-day be established was the evidence of living witnesses with personal knowledge as to the nature and condition of the property at that time, and secondly evidence of personal knowledge of the corrupt contrivances by which the thing was worked through the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office. Men die. The patent with its broad seal continues to live, until by and by, when this thing is all done and you have a park on that 49 acres that held by a private party would be worth a million dollars, he has the advantage of you in any lawsuit for the reason that he has his patent and you have got to attack it by affirmative evidence on the other side.

That is a danger to which I do not wish to expose the United States; and I wish therefore to have this matter go on by spending our money where we can expend it not for the benefit of anybody but the United States in any event, and secondly to frame the bill now in conference, as it can be done, in such a way that if this title is not surrendered, then immediately judicial proceedings for the vacation of it shall be taken and prosecuted as that bill requires, with rapidity. That is what I want done.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to say to the Senator and the Senate that there is no patent for this land. There is a paper that the Senator calls a patent, but it is not a patent, and there is not a court anywhere in the country that would ever let it get into court. Suppose the Commissioner of the General Land Office should issue a patent for this Capitol, suppose he should issue it for the public buildings in the city of New York, or in Connecticut, or in New Jersey, or anywhere else. The patent must be attached to a law, and if it is not the court will take judicial notice that there was no patentable land in this District, that there is none in New York or New Jersey. There is no patent in the sense that we use the term "patent" with regard to lands the title to which is conveyed by the Government. There is not the slightest danger in my judgment of any trouble whatever in this case.

Mr. CALL. I will ask the Senator from Colorado a question before he sits down. Do not the public records of the country at the Land Office show that the United States Government never had any claim or right to this tract of land?

Mr. TELLER. Not only that, butthe Supreme Court of the United States has said over and over again that it would take judicial notice where the Government had public lands and where it did not have public lands. This case has been practically settled over and over again for the last fifty years by an unbroken line of Supreme Court decisions that there can be no title whatever in these parties.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I am compelled to ask the indulgence of the Senate once more. As this goes by hundreds of thousands we may be justified in taking some fair time to understand exactly how it is. Of course when we come to buying a few canals and public works of other people, they are very small affairs and we can go forward with them with great rapidity.

The error into which I think my distinguished friend from Colorado has fallen is likening this to the ordinary case of a Commissioner of the General Land Office putting through a pre-emption or other title. A court would know that we have no public pre-emption lands in the city of Washington, and of course would take judicial notice of it. But this title does not refer itself to the public land laws of the United States, and does not pretend to do so. It refers itself to the old laws of the State of Maryland before she ceded to the United States that part of the 10 miles square on the left bank of the Potomac that she gave which makes the District of Columbia. Her laws in force at the time of that cession provided for citizens taking up vacant agricultural lands in a certain way and getting a title from the State evidenced by the proper authentic instrument going through the regular steps, the final paper of which we call a patent.

Having transferred all her right and title to her property in this District, within these boundaries, to the United States, of course those laws of Maryland would not have followed had it not been that in the act accepting the cession and setting up a government here we took up the great body of the laws of Maryland, and then in 1839 Congress passed a special law to cover the cases of lands that the old Maryland statute had authorized citizens to take up as agricultural lands; and that provided that the Maryland law should be in force as to these lands and that it should be administered by the Secretary of the Treasury through the General Land Office under certain regulations that were provided as it regards land in the county of Washington and without the limits of the city of Washington.

So, then, after the year 1839, if there were within the District and outside of the city of Washington, upon that part of the District that Maryland had ceded to the United States, any lands which fell within the description of the old Maryland act about her settlers and settlements, there was a law of Congress in force which had adopted all that Maryland arrangement and had provided the General Land Office as the means of carrying it out. So far, so good. Then the question was—and on that pretense Kidwell went into this operation—whether there was any agricultural land in the county of Washington and not within the city of Washington. Kidwell took up an idea that the southwestern limit of the city of Washington was the high-water mark down on the shore opposite these flats, and that all between that high-water mark and the thread of the river between the Maryland and Virginia shore was agricultural land, or certainly all that part of it over which the water did not flow with rapidity.

At the time when Kidwell made his survey and started the operation of getting the title to these lands the greatest part of them were overflowed at every tide, as we think could be proved now if we were to take the evidence of witnesses who are not yet dead. He made the proper application to obtain the proper survey under the regulations that Congress in 1839 had provided, on the theory that they were outside the city of Washington, and a proper officer was designated to go and make the survey. That officer at first reported that there was not any agricultural land or any other land in the honest sense of the term there at all, that it was all boatable water. They had to go over it in a skiff to find out the location that he spoke of, and reeds and flags grew up and every tide covered it three or four feet and so on.

That return was not satisfactory. That Commissioner, I believe, went out of office and another Commissioner came in, and a new survey was applied for on what they alleged was new evidence. At that time they went down in the winter. I may not state the case with literal accuracy, but I give you a general idea. At that time they went down in the winter, went onto the ice and snow there, when you could not tell with certainty whether you had running water under you or what it was; at any rate they did not try very hard, I suspect. At that time they got a report, and affidavits were submitted that this was land and that it was outside the city of Washington and that it fell within the Maryland law, which Congress had adopted. Thereupon the thing was worked through to what, if the case would have warranted it, under the Maryland law was a complete title, and there it stood. All that part of it rests in the testimony of witnesses, is not of record. Such was the condition of the thing at that time; and every day and every year that goes by makes it more and more difficult, and by and by it will be impossible to prove what the truth was at that time.

So I say my friend from Colorado is, I think, stating it too strongly when he says that a court would take judicial notice of the fact that there was not any public land in the District of Columbia. In the sense of the public-land laws, he is quite right. In the sense of this Maryland statute adopted by Congress, I submit with great respect and deference that he is quite wrong.

Now, let us look a little further——

Mr. GEORGE. May I ask the Senator one question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. I understand the Senator to say that the invalidity of this patent depends upon proof of the facts to be made by parol evidence of witnesses, and when they are dead the opportunity to invalidate this record title is gone.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes, on that point. I do not wish by any means to have it understood that that is the only reason why the patent is void. I am going on to show——

Mr. TELLER. I would like to suggest to the Senator from Vermont that if that is the fact, the patent must be first supported when it is offered by the necessary proof. Until the holders of it have established, first, that the land is outside of the city of Washington; secondly, that it is agricultural land, they can not get their patent in. The burden of proof is on the party who holds the patent. That has been repeatedly held under similar circumstances in the United States courts.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Again, Mr. President, I feel obliged to differ on this warm Saturday afternoon, on a mere question of evidence, with my friend from Colorado. If the law provides for the issuing of a patent, which can only issue under certain circumstances——

Mr. TELLER. That is what this case is.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That is true; but if that patent recites the existence of those circumstances, I submit again with great deference to him that the patent is admissible on its face, its authenticity as a paper being conclusively proved by the great seal and the official signature; and then the objecting party is required to overcome it by rebutting the implications and recitals in the patent. I think that is the law; but never mind that. I now wish to state the other thing, and then I shall have done.

The next question was whether this piece of the surface of the earth, whether land or water, is within or without the limits of the city of Washington, and that would depend upon the ancient records and the ancient plat of the city and the establishment of it under the proclamation of George Washington, the first President of the United States.

Now, it is a curious circumstance that the original proclamation which established and defined the boundaries of this city, which he was authorized to lay out, can not be found, and there is not any record of it, in the direct and proper sense of a record, and the only way that we could find what those boundaries were in the industrious examination that we made—whether skillful and brilliant or not is another question; it certainly was industrious—was to take an old act of the State of Maryland, which, dealing with another branch of the subject, recited what had been the limits of the city as laid out by George Washington. Taking that to be true—and I think that would be enough in a court of justice—that will not be lost. We have quoted in the report we made the recital of that old Maryland act. Taking that to be true the committee were of opinion that the southwestern limits of the river front of the city of Washington extended to the navigable water of the river, and that it took in within the city limits the whole of this disputed territory.

The third point against this patent which was, as it appeared to us, of value and importance, is that in the acts and proceedings in reference to this river front Congress long before this contrivance was resorted to to get the mud out of the bottom, had devoted that property to public use, and it did not then remain in the category of the Maryland law even if it was outside of the city of Washington.

That states all the points which have been made so far as I can imagine against that patent. I think they are all good ones. One of them, the fraudulent part, depends upon oral testimony which of course every day becomes less and less. The others depend upon considerations that probably will not be lost.

Now I am done by repeating that however all this may be, how shadowy this thing may be, the engineer in charge has stated to us at this very session that this proviso—I do not mean as applied to this particular bill, because he did not know that it would go in—but this provision against spending money on this disputed property either the canal claim or the Kidwell claim, could go in without any detriment whatever to the public interests.

Mr. TELLER. I should ordinarily dislike to differ with the Senator from Vermont upon a question of law; but upon the question of the effect of a patent and how it may be got to a jury, I suppose it will be no egotism if I say that probably I have had a great deal more experience than the Senator. I have dealt with the question for thirty years, and I know the line of decisions, every one of them, and there never has been a decision made on the subject that I have not carefully examined. The honorable Senator has fallen into the mistake of saying that a patent proves certain things when it does not. The patent is presumptive evidence of the prior performance of every act that is necessary to secure the patent, but not of the statements made in the patent. There is where the Senator is wrong. The statements made are not conclusive because in the patent and not presumptive because in the patent.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, without entering into the controversy as to a possible claim, I must say that the proviso under debate seems to me to be an unnecessary caution on the part of the United States as to this improvement. I assume that the Senate is agreed that it is not only desirable but it is of the greatest importance that this improvement should be complete and rapid. If there are objections to title that so manifest themselves as to be substantial, so as to create a measured cast of doubt, or even a substantial doubt, proceedings ought to be taken for ascertainment and condemnation. But the mere existence of counter-claims or counter interests should never be a reason for retarding the occupation and improvement of property that the United States does not entertain a doubt about. If I were ready to admit that there was doubt to be ascertained and that that doubt should retard the improvement, I should desire that doubt to be entertained by the United States, and not entertained by a private person or a counter-claimant. If this improvement is to be retarded so long as there is a doubt in an interested claimant against it, then we are at the mercy of that claimant. The United States, like every other owner, where it has a great interest in dealing with a property must deal with it upon its own judgment and proceed accordingly, and not be controlled by a vague terror that there may be a subsequent claim ascertained and presented.

Now, if there is to be any cautionary clause, I would suggest that the least that should be thus expressed should be corrected by striking out the latter alternative after the word "doubt," and that the restriction as to expenditure should be also restricted, so that if with these suggestions the clause should be amended it would read as follows:

Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended upon or with reference to any place in respect of which the title of the United States is in doubt.

I do not know that I should support the clause with that amendment, but it seems to me at least it should be reduced to an action by this Government upon a doubt entertained by its own law authorities.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont a question. I have understood that there was a law passed in 1882 requiring the Department of Justice to institute proceedings for the purpose of determining this title and of condemning the property. He made some allusion to that fact. I should like to know what has been done under that law, and if nothing, why nothing has been done.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The act of 1882, as I remember it, was only imperative in a certain way. It required that the money should not be spent until an inquiry had been made. It first appropriated for the improvement, and then it directed the Attorney-General to bring any proceedings that were necessary to clear off all colorable pretensions to the property. As has been stated by the Senator from Kansas, for some reason or other—I do not remember what, if I ever knew, I certainly did not at the time—nothing was done about it in the Attorney-General's Office in respect of giving any direction to institute proceedings until 1885. Then he wrote a letter, as the Senator from Kansas has stated, to the district attorney of this District to commence proceedings. Then the district attorney had to proceed to make an investigation, the same one that the Committee on the Judiciary has since made with a good deal of labor and time, as I said before; and in the press of affairs the thing ran along and ran along apparently, I certainly have no means of stating how, and I certainly do not know why, but as a practical fact when the matter was brought to the attention of the Committee on the Judiciary a year or two ago we ascertained that no suit had been begun. Then we stirred up about it, and went to investigating it ourselves; and during this present session when these people were again sent for to know if they had brought any suit, &c., they said they had not. It seems to have been upon the theory that as we had passed a bill at the last session of this same kind to provide for winding this out and clearing it up, and as they thought a more positive and complete bill than the other one was about to be passed providing in case there should turn out to be any title we provided for condemning it and making an end of the whole matter by a proceeding in rem, they thought it was wise and prudent not to institute the proceedings the other law had provided for, which were only proceedings that would try the validity of the patent alone, and if it was upheld would leave it established in the private owner without taking the property.

Mr. GEORGE. Has that bill become a law?

Mr. EDMUNDS. It went to the other House and in some way or other, I have forgotten how, did not become a law. There is, therefore, that excuse or apology for the last year—I do not know whether it is a good one or not—and the Senator can readily understand that the authorities might suppose as Congress was going to act more completely on the subject it was not worth while to bring suit.

Mr. EVARTS. I move to amend the amendment so that it shall read as I have stated, by omitting the words "or with reference to" in lines 189 and 190, and the words "or in respect to which any claim adverse to the United States has been made," in lines 191 and 192.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 189, after the word "upon," it is proposed to strike out the words "or with reference to;" and in line 191, after the word "doubt," to strike out the words "or in respect to which any claim adverse to the United States has been made;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That no part of the sum hereby appropriated shall be expended upon any place in respect of which the title of the United States is in doubt.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that question I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. INGALLS. In connection with this matter, which is really one of very great interest both to the Government and to the people of this District, I will read the language of the act of 1882, to which reference has been made, it being chapter 375 of the Laws of the First Session of the Forty-seventh Congress, the act making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes, for that year, in which the original appropriation was made for the improvement of the Potomac River. It occurs on page 198 of volume 22 of the Statutes, and is as follows:

Improving the Potomac River in the vicinity of Washington with reference to the improvement of navigation, the establishment of harbor lines, and the raising of the flats, under the direction of the Secretary of War, and in accordance with the plan and report made in compliance with the river and harbor act approved March 3, 1881, and the reports of the board of engineers made in compliance with the resolution of the Senate of December 13, 1881, $400,000.

And it is hereby made the duty of the Attorney-General to examine all claims of the title to the premises to be improved under this appropriation, and see that the rights of the Government in all respects are secured and protected; and if he deems it necessary he is authorized to cause a suit or suits in law or in equity to be instituted, in the name of the United States, in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, against any and all claimants of title under any patent which in his opinion was by mistake or was improperly or illegally issued for any part of the marshes or flats within the limits of the proposed improvement.

It will appear by the language of this provision that it was not made mandatory that the Attorney-General should immediately bring suit. He was required to examine into the condition of the title and then cause suit to be brought, if he deemed it to be necessary. Of course the delay from 1882 until the 28th day of May, 1885, when the order for the institution of the suit was finally made, is inexplicable; but I assume that from the language of the letter of the Attorney-General he had come to the conclusion that the demand was so frivolous and so insubstantial that really the rights of the United States were not imperiled at all.

In justice to that officer I think that I shall ask that his letter may be printed in connection with my remarks; and I am not sure that the whole of this report, which contains the history of the land titles in this District, of the conveyance from Maryland to the Government of the United States, and the records of the General Land Office showing the proceedings by which title to the Kidwell meadows was alleged to have been obtained, may be also printed in the RECORD that it may be preserved in permanent form, in order that those who have occasion to consider this subject hereafter may have it in more accessible form than it is now in as a document of the Senate. If there is no objection I will ask that this report may be printed in the RECORD, as it consists almost entirely of official documents and communications bearing upon this subject which can not, I believe, be found elsewhere.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the document will be ordered to be printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears none.

The report referred to is as follows:

[Senate, Forty-eighth Congress, second session. Report No. 1391.]

February 23, 1885.—Ordered to be printed.

Mr. INGALLS, from the Committee on the Judiciary, submitted the following report (to accompany bill S. 2655):

The Committee on the Judiciary, to whom was referred on the 4th instant a pending resolution in the following words:

"Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia is hereby instructed to inquire and report to the Senate whether any proceedings of a legal nature have been taken to annul a certain United States land patent claimed to have been granted to a portion of the Potomac River bottom opposite the city of Washington and which the Government has been improving since 1882, whether the interests of the United States are likely to suffer by raising that portion above tide-level before said patent shall have been annulled, and what legislation, if any, is necessary for the protection of the interests of the United States in this matter; and for this purpose said committee is authorized to send for persons and papers and to administer oaths and take such testimony as may be necessary"—

respectfully report:

The resolution above recited not having been adopted by the Senate, and only referred to this committee, it is not perfectly clear what action thereon by this committee is appropriate, further than to report that in its opinion an inquiry into the subject mentioned in the resolution is extremely desirable.

The committee, however, think it not improper to state briefly the situation of the subject-matter of the resolution, so far as it has been able to obtain information thereon.

By the act of Congress of the 19th of July, 1790 (First Congress, second session, chapter 28), the United States accepted the territory now comprising the District of Columbia, with that on the south side of the Potomac ceded by Virginia, as the seat of the Government under the Constitution, and provided (so far as it respects the present District of Columbia) that the laws of Maryland should continue to be in force until Congress should otherwise by law provide. It provided that the President should appoint commissioners, who, under his direction, should survey and, by proper metes and bounds, define the District, and made further provisions in respect of details. Afterward, and on the ——— ———, the President, by an order or proclamation, seems to have defined the boundaries of the city (afterward called Washington) to be established within the limits of said District.

Afterward, on the 19th December, 1791, the Legislature of Maryland passed its act of definitive cession of so much of the District as was within its jurisdiction, and in the preamble of said act recited—

"That the President of the United States directed a city to be laid out, comprehending all the lands beginning on the east side of Rock Creek, at a stone standing in the middle of the road leading from Georgetown to Bladensburg; thence along the middle of said road to a stone standing on the east side of the Reedy Branch of Goose Creek; thence southeasterly, making an angle of 61° and 20′ with the meridian, to a stone standing in the road leading from Bladensburg to the Eastern Branch ferry; then south to a stone 80 poles north of the east and west line already drawn from the mouth of Goose Creek to the Eastern Branch; then east, parallel to the said east and west line, to the Eastern Branch; then with the waters of the Eastern branch, Potomack River, and Rock Creek to the beginning; which hath since been called the city of Washington." (Chap. 45.)

A city was accordingly laid out by these commissioners pursuant to said order, and a map of the same prepared. The committee are of the opinion that the above-mentioned boundaries of this city did, under the circumstances, extend down the center of the Eastern Branch to the main channel of the Potomac River, and up the main channel of the Potomac River to the mouth of Rock Creek, and up the center of Rock Creek to the starting point of the survey of the city; so that the Potomac Flats, so called, as they are understood by the committee to exist, would fall within the limits of the city of Washington.

In the year 1839 Congress passed a law (Stats., volume 5, page 365) providing that the acts of the State of Maryland for securing titles to vacant land should be considered in force and executed, "as regards lands in the county of Washington and without the limits of the city of Washington, by the Secretary of the Treasury, through the General Land Office," and provided for regulations, &c., by the Secretary of the Treasury, and provided further—

"That any land which may have been ceded to or acquired by the United States for public purposes should not be affected by such acts."

The laws of Maryland supposed to have been put in force by the last-mentioned and previous acts of Congress were those of November, 1781 (chapter 20), the fourth section of which provided—

"That either of the treasurers may grant orders or titlings to the register of the land office of their respective Shore for common warrants to take up vacant uncultivated land, or for special warrants to take up cultivated or improved vacant land, on the payment of 3 shillings and 6 pence current money per acre."

The history of the private claim called the Kidwell claim to a part of these Potomac Flats appears in the papers herewith returned, marked A.

It will be seen that the act of Congress excluded land in the city, and the proviso hereinbefore mentioned excluded from its operation any land which had been ceded to or acquired by the United States for public purposes. It appears from the foregoing that three questions will arise:

First. Whether the Potomac Flats are within the city of Washington. If they are, there will be an end to the Kidwell patent. If they are not—

Second. Whether the river front was not ceded to and acquired by the United States for public purposes. If this question be answered in the affirmative, the Kidwell patent is invalid; and if not—

Third. Whether the Kidwell patent applied to property within the true intent and meaning of the land acts of Maryland and of the regulations of the Secretary of the Treasury on the subject. This will depend upon whether the Kidwell patent was located upon what may in general terms be styled agricultural land. This of course is a question of fact. All the information the committee now have tends to show that the area embraced in the Kidwell patent was not the kind of land covered by the Maryland act. If this turn out to be so, the patent will be invalid for this reason.

Besides the claim under the Kidwell patent, the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, through its counsel, has informed the committee that it claims riparian and perhaps other rights within the territory referred to in the resolution. How far such claim is well founded the committee have not had time to consider.

It appears from a report of the Secretary of War that there has been already expended up to the 1st of February, 1885, in the improvement of these flats and the river the sum of $440,669.70, and that there still remains appropriated for these purposes the sum of $453,330.22.

It appears that the only steps so far taken under the provisions of the act of the 2d of August, 1882 (Forty-seventh Congress, first session, chap. 375), requiring the Attorney-General to examine all claims of title to the premises and to see that the rights of the Government in all respects are secured and protected, and if necessary to bring suits against claimants to set aside any illegal or improper patents, have been that on the 20th of January, 1885, the Attorney-General directed the district attorney for this District to bring a suit to set aside the Kidwell patent, under which direction no steps have so far been taken.

In this state of things the committee recommend the passage of the bill herewith reported.

Sundry papers and correspondence relating to the subject are herewith returned.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

A. Letter of Secretary of Interior to the chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate, 18th February, 1885, transmitting report and papers of Commissioner of the General Land Office touching the subject.

B. Letter of C. I. M. Gwinn, counsel of Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, to chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, of 17th February, 1885.

C. Telegram of Secretary of War to chairman of Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, of 18th February, 1885.

D. Letter of the Attorney-General of the United States to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, 18th February, 1885, transmitting copy of his letter of instructions of 28th January, 1885, to the United States district attorney for the District of Columbia.

A.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, February 18, 1885.

SIR: Your letter of the 12th instant, calling for information concerning a patent for lands (issued to Kidwell or others) situate in the District of Columbia commonly called the Potomac Flats, was received and referred to the Commissioner of the General Land Office. I have the honor to transmit herewith copy of his report on the subject of this date, together with the accompanying papers.

Very respectfully,

H. M. TELLER, Secretary.

Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
Chairman Senate Committee on the Judiciary.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., February 18, 1885.

SIR: I am in receipt, by your reference of the 13th instant, of a letter from Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS, chairman Committee on the Judiciary, United States Senate, dated 12th instant, requesting to be furnished with all information in the possession of this Department "concerning a patent or other title papers issued to one Kidwell, or any other person, covering any part of the land within the District of Columbia commonly called the Potomac Flats, with copies of all papers relating thereto, and references to the laws under which any such patents or titles have been issued, if any such there be."

I have the honor to state that the only patent or other title papers shown by the records of this office to have been issued for any portion of the Potomac Flats, so called, is the patent issued December 6, 1859, to John L. Kidwell for 47.71 acres in the Potomac River adjacent to the United States Observatory.

The records show that several applications for the survey and sale of alleged flats or islands in the Potomac River were made at different periods, among them an application by Mr. Kidwell for the survey of the bar north of the Long Bridge, and called by Mr. Kidwell "Kidwell's Land." These applications were all rejected, for the reason that there was no surveyable land in the localities mentioned subject to disposal by the United States under the laws of Maryland operative in the District of Columbia.

The application by Mr. Kidwell for the survey of the tract lying adjacent to the United States Observatory, and called by him "Kidwell's meadows," was rejected under the administration of Mr. Commissioner Joseph S. Wilson, for reasons above stated, upon a report made by Mr. S. J. Dallas, principal clerk of surveys of this office, February 28, 1868.

In October, 1859, a re-examination was made by Mr. Dallas, at the request of Mr. John Wilson, formerly Commissioner of the General Land Office, then acting as attorney for Mr. Kidwell, and the survey was approved and patent issued as above stated.

On April 18, 1882, I made a full report of facts shown upon record, which was transmitted to Hon. M. W. RANSOM, United States Senate, and appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Forty-seventh Congress, first session, volume 13, pages 49, 50 (copy herewith). I also furnished Senator RANSOM with a memorandum suggesting certain points as bearing upon the subject-matter, which also appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the same date, page 52. Copies of said report and memorandum were transmitted to you, for the information of the honorable Attorney-General, under date of July 29, 1884.

The patent to Mr. Kidwell purports to have been issued under the provisions of the joint resolution of Congress of February 6, 1839 (5 Stat., 365), in pursuance of certain laws of the State of Maryland (acts November, 1781, chapter 20, and November, 1788, chapter 44), and act of Congress of February 27, 1801 (2 Stat., 103).

The following copies of papers are transmitted herewith:

1. Application for survey, John L. Kidwell.
2. Regulations of Treasury Department.
3. Report of special examiner rejecting survey.
4. Application for re-examinations, with affidavits of T. Angerman, John M. Beckett, John Wilson, and Henry Wells.
5. Report of special examiner approving survey.
6. Patent record.
7. Letter of Commissioner McFarland to Hon. M. W. RANSOM.
8. Memorandum.

Very respectfully,

N. C. McFARLAND, Commissioner.

Hon. H. M. TELLER,
Secretary of the Interior.

1.

WASHINGTON CITY, Sept. 2d, 1867.

SIR: Under the provisions of the joint resolution of Congress of the 16th Febr'y, 1839, directing the manner in which certain laws of the District of Columbia shall be executed, I hereby apply to appropriate and enter a vacant or unclaimed tract of land situate in Washington County, District of Columbia, to wit: An island situated in the Potomac River, containing fifty acres, more or less, lying between the Washington city channel and the swash channel, commencing nearly opposite to Fifteenth street west and extending up to a point opposite to where D street north strikes the canal or river, and as much farther upstream as firm unclaimed land is found. Said land has not been surveyed or appropriated, to the knowledge of the undersigned, and I do hereby apply for a warrant of survey in my favor for the same.

Very respectfully, your obed't serv't,

JNO. L. KIDWELL.

To the TREASURER OF THE UNITED STATES.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
County of Washington, to wit:

I hereby certify that on this 2d day of September, 1867, before the subscriber, a justice of the peace in and for said county, appeared John L. Kidwell, who, being sworn on the Holy Evangels of Almighty God, made oath that having, under the provisions of the resolution of Congress of the 16th of Febr'y, 1839, directing the manner in which certain laws of the District of Columbia shall be executed, under application to enter a vacant tract of land in Washington County, District of Columbia, to wit: An island situated in the Potomac River, containing fifty (50) acres, more or less, lying between the Washington City Channel and the Swash Channel, commencing nearly opposite to Fifteenth street west and extending up to a point opposite to where D street north strikes the canal or river, and as much farther up stream as firm unclaimed land is found, and that such land has not been surveyed or appropriated, to his knowledge. There is, according to his information and belief, such land as he desires to appropriate, that his intentions are bona fide to secure it, and that his application is not made with a view or desire or intent to harass or vex any person whomsoever.

Sworn to before me and subscribed in my presence, this second day of September, A. D. 1867.

O. E. P. HAZARD, J. P.

2.

Regulations for carrying into effect a joint resolution of Congress approved February 16, 1839, "directing the manner in which certain laws of the District of Columbia shall be executed."

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, August 10, 1839.

1. The Treasurer of the United States is, in reference to lands in the county of Washington, charged with the duties of treasurer of the western shore of Maryland, and will execute the same agreeably to the laws of Maryland in force the 27th day of February, 1801.

2. With the modifications hereinafter contained, the Commissioner of the General Land Office in like manner will discharge the duties of register.

3. The county surveyor of the county of Washington is required by the resolution to execute warrants to him directed.

4. William Tell Steiger, principal clerk of surveys, is appointed examiner-general, and will discharge the duties appertaining to said office.

5. Matthew Birchard, solicitor of the General Land Office, is appointed judge of the land office, for the purpose of carrying into effect said resolution.

6. The officers hereby appointed will each take an oath, before a person competent to administer the same, faithfully and impartially to execute the duties appertaining to their respective offices, which oath shall be filed in the Treasury Department previous to their entrance upon duty.

7. The forms of titlings, warrants, and other proceedings, with such modifications as the change of jurisdiction has made necessary, shall be the same as were in use in the State of Maryland at the date of the cession of Washington, and no other substantial variation shall be allowed.

8. The rules respecting the practical operations and mode of proceeding in the Western Shore land office will be gathered from the Land-Holder's Assistant; and, until otherwise directed, the same will be followed as the general guide in executing the aforesaid resolution.

9. Any person wishing to appropriate land by an original warrant will, in the first place, go to the Treasurer of the United States, file his application and his affidavit setting forth that there is, according to his information and belief, such land as he desires to appropriate, that his intention is bona fide to secure it, and that his application is not made with the intent or desire to harass or vex any person whatsoever; and thereupon, on payment of the money required by law, the Treasurer will issue the titling or order, directed to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, requiring him to issue to and in the name of the person therein mentioned a warrant, common or special, as the case may be, for the number of acres paid for as aforesaid; and if a special warrant, the Commissioner shall insert the location or description given in writing by the applicant.

10. Applications for warrants of resurvey will be made in the first instance to the Commissioner of the Land Office, who will require an affidavit which, in addition to the facts required to be stated in the affidavit to be filed with the Treasurer, must state the applicant's belief that he has perfect title to the tract sought to be resurveyed and adjoining the vacancy which is designated to be secured and also must produce his title papers.

11. The Commissioner will consider no application unless it be made in writing and within the business days of the week and during office hours.

To prevent contests about priority he will indorse the precise hour of filing each and every application and he will file them in order of presentation and keep a record of the same in a book to be kept for that purpose.

12. The surveyor of Washington County will execute warrants according to law, and such instructions as he may from time to time receive from the judge of the land office, and, when executed, will make his return to the commissioner who, having registered the return, will forthwith deliver it to the examiner-general, and if reported correct, and no caveat shall have been filed within the time prescribed by law, on proof of complete payment a patent shall be issued.

13. Should a caveat have been duly filed, and the truth thereof sustained by affidavit of the party, the same, together with all the papers connected with the application, shall be transmitted to the judge of the land office, to be heard and determined according to law.

14. Should it be found necessary to issue instructions concerning proclamation or escheat warrants, or further instructions touching any of the above subjects, the same will be duly attended to.

—

3.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
February 28, 1868.

SIR; In the matter of the application of John L. Kidwell, dated June 10, 1867, filed in this office the 25th of June last, to appropriate a vacant tract of land in Washington County, District of Columbia, described by him as a certain flat or bar in the Potomac River between the Virginia and Maryland channels, and adjoining the Long Bridge on the upper side thereof, containing about twenty acres, more or less," and of his application, dated September 2, 1867, filed here the 10th of the same month, to appropriate a vacant tract of land described by him as "an island situated in the Potomac River, containing fifty acres, more or less, lying between the Washington city channel and the swash channel, commencing nearly opposite to Seventeenth street west and extending up to a point opposite to where K street north strikes the canal or river, and as much farther up stream as firm unclaimed land is found," under the provisions of the joint resolution of Congress "directing the manner in which certain laws of the District of Columbia shall be executed," approved February 16, 1839 (U. S. Statutes, vol. 5, page 365), I have the honor to report to you as follows:

Pursuant to the United States Treasurer's titlings to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, dated June 10, 1867, and September 3, 1867, warrants of survey of the aforesaid alleged tracts of vacant land were issued by the latter June 26 and September 12, 1867, directing the surveyor for the county of Washington to survey the same, provided it was firm land and not subject to tidal overflow.

In pursuance of the instructions aforesaid, dated June 10, 1867, for the survey of the vacant land adjoining Long Bridge, and on the upper side thereof, B. C. Carpenter, esq., the county surveyor as aforesaid, made a survey of the same August 28, 1867, and returned his certificate thereof by the designation of "Kidwell's Island," "containing 15.25 acres of land, without any improvements;" and in pursuance of instructions of September 12, 1867, the said county made a survey of the alleged island between the Washington city channel and the swash channel on the 10th and 12th October last, and returned his certificate thereof by the designation of "Kidwell's Meadows," containing 47.71 acres of land, more or less, without improvements."

The surveyor's certificate under the law is required to lie in this office six months after it is filed, subject to such objections as may be made thereto, before it can be admitted to patent.

In order to pass upon the survey as examiner-general understandingly, and to see whether the surveys were executed in accordance with the terms of the warrants of survey, it was found necessary to examine the premises, which I did in person on the 13th instant, reaching the localities on the ice, in company with an employé in the surveying division of this office. We found the premises in both instances to be under the ice in the Potomac River, presenting no appearance of land which the applicant, Mr. Kidwell, desired to appropriate under the aforesaid joint resolution of Congress.

Finding the premises to be in both instances submerged and subject to tidal overflow, and of course such land not fit for "vacant cultivation," as required by the third section of the act of November session, 1781, chap. 20 (vide Kilty's Land-Holder's Assistant, page 309), it becomes my duty to reject the surveys, and indorse them in each case "disallowed," and stating my reasons therefor.

In consideration of the foregoing circumstances connected with the applications of Mr. Kidwell, and the surveys returned in total disregard of the law and instructions embodied in the warrants of survey, I have the honor to deliver the plats of the survey to you, with the request that you cause the applicant, Mr. Kidwell, to be notified of the rejection of the surveys made, and also the surveyor of the county, so that the latter may cancel such surveys on his record, for the reasons hereinbefore stated.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
STEPHEN J. DALLAS,
Principal Clerk of Surveys and ex officio Examiner-General.

Hon. JOSEPH S. WILSON,
Commissioner General Land Office,
ex officio Register of the Land Office for the Sale of Vacant Lands in the District of Columbia.

—

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 11, 1869.

SIR: On the 26th of June and 12th of September, 1867, warrants were issued from your office to the surveyor of Washington County, District of Columbia, for the survey of two several tracts of land for John L. Kidwell, esq., known and designated as "Kidwell's meadow" and "Kidwell's land," and lying between the Washington, Georgetown, and Swash Channels of the Potomac River.

This land is within the limits of "that part of the District of Columbia which was ceded to the United States" by the State of Maryland, and therefore clearly embraced by the joint resolution of the 16th of February, 1839 (volume 5, page 365).

It is outside the limits of the city of Washington. By an act of the Legislature of Maryland passed 19th of December, 1791, in view of the proviso therein contained, the boundaries of the city of Washington were fixed as follows, to wit:

"Beginning on the east side of Rock Creek, at a stone standing in the middle of the road leading from Georgetown to Bladensburg; thence along the middle of said road to a stone standing on the east side of the Reedy Branch of Goose Creek; thence southeasterly, making an angle of 61° 20′ with the meridian, to a stone standing in the road leading from Bladensburg to the Eastern Branch ferry; thence south to a stone 80 poles north of the east and west line already drawn from the mouth of Goose Creek to the Eastern Branch; then east parallel to the said east and west line to the Eastern Branch; then with the waters of the Eastern Branch, Potomac River, and Rock Creek to the beginning; which has since been called the city of Washington."

By act of Congress of 3d of March, 1839 (volume 5, page 364), "the bounds of the county of Washington and the corporation of the city of Washington are extended so far as to comprehend the causeway and bridge lately constructed from the said city across the river Potomac to the opposite shore, and the said corporation are hereby empowered to adopt and enforce such rules and regulations as they may deem necessary for the safety and security of property and persons passing the said causeway and bridge."

This land surveyed for Kidwell is outside these boundaries, as will be seen by the accompanying affidavits of T. Augerman, temporarily in command of the steamer Enterprise (Doc. A), which sailed through the Swash Channel that separates Kidwell's land from the main shore, which is the boundary of the city; also the affidavit of Henry Wells, who sailed through said Swash Channel in said steamer Enterprise on the 22d February, 1869, when she made the trip above mentioned (Doc. B), and the affidavit of John Beckett, a respectable colored man, who has known the waters of the Potomac and its tributaries intimately for twenty years, and who testifies (24th August, 1869) to the existence of said Swash Channel for and during all that period and at the present time (Doc. C).

As Kidwell's land is thus within the county of Washington and outside the city of Washington, there can be no doubt that it is subject to the joint resolution of 16th February, 1839, above mentioned, if it be land within the meaning of the laws of Maryland and that joint resolution.

That it is such land is shown by the affidavits of Henry Wells and John Wilson, of the 10th of September, 1869 (Doc. D).

When your examiner examined the land the whole country was covered with sleet, snow, and ice, as will be seen by the affidavit of John Wilson of 10th of September, 1869 (Doc. E), and hence the mistake into which he was led and which he reported to your office.

It is respectfully requested that you cause your examiner to make a new examination, and a carriage will be placed at his disposal for that purpose at any time you may designate, and Dr. Kidwell and the surveyor will go with him to point out the land.

And if the examination shall prove satisfactory, we respectfully request that the patents be issued for these lands as provided by law.

Very respectfully,
JOHN WILSON, Attorney for Kidwell.

Hon. JOSEPH S. WILSON,
Commissioner General Land Office.

COUNTY OF WASHINGTON,
District of Columbia, ss:

Before me, Jos. T. K. Plant, a justice of the peace for the District and county aforesaid, this twenty-third day of February, A. D. 1869, personally appeared Theodore Augerman, of Washington city, temporarily in command of the steamer Enterprise (a regularly registered vessel plying upon the waters of the Potomac, as will be seen by the copy of register attached), who, having been duly sworn, deposes and says that on Monday the twenty-second day of February, 1869, I proceeded in charge of said steamer from the wharf at the foot of 11th street, through the north draw of the Long and Railroad Bridges; thence following the "Swash Channel" past and close to the works at the end of the 17th street wharf; thence past and close to "Braddock's Rock," on main shore (at old gas-house); thence out into main channel at Easby's Wharf; thence to Georgetown, without any difficulty of navigation.

T. ANGERMAN.

Subscribed and sworn to before me the day and date above written.
JOS. T. K. PLANT, J. P. [SEAL.]

FREIGHT STEAMER.

By authority of the United States of America.

Inspector's certificate.

(Steamer Enterprise. Certificate expires September 17th, 1869.)

STATE OF MARYLAND, District of Baltimore:

Application having been made in writing to the subscribers, inspectors for the District, to inspect the steamer Enterprise, of Washington, in the Dist. of Columbia, whereof John Angerman owner and H. F. Duty is master, and having performed that service, now, on this 22nd day of September, A. D. 1868, do certify that she was built at Alexandria, in the State of Virginia, in the year 1865; is of 50.28 tons burthen, and is in all respects stanch, seaworthy, and in good condition for navigation. That she is provided with one high-pressure boiler 8 feet long and 3⅞ feet diameter, of the vertical tubular type, constructed of charcoal iron of ¼ of an inch in thickness, and made by Wm. S. Moore, of Alexandria, in 1865, and is in all respects conformable to law. The said boiler has been subjected to a hydrostatic pressure of 120 pounds to the square inch, and the maximum working power allowed was 80 pounds to the square inch. That there is one safety-valve with 7 square inches area, and the lead prescribed is such as to allow but 80 pounds pressure per square inch, and left in charge of the engineer; and one locked safety-valve of 2 inches in diameter, loaded to 82 pounds pressure per square inch. Has supply pipe of ½ inches diameter, and has sufficient means to keep the water at all times and under all circumstances up to 4 inches over the flues. Has one steam-pipe of 3 inches diameter. Has two pressure engines of 7 inches in diameter of cylinder and 24 inches stroke. Has one feed-pump of 3 inches diameter and 7 inches stroke. Has three gauge-cocks, one water-gauge, and one steam-gauge. Has alloyed metal on the flues, which fuses at — pounds on the outside boilers and at — pounds on the inside boilers. Has fire-pump of — inches stroke and — inches in diameter, and has — feet of hose, three buckets, and two axes. Has one boat in good order. Has life-preservers. We further certify that the equipment of the vessel throughout, including pipes, pumps, and other means to keep the water up to the point aforesaid, hose, boats, life-preservers, anchors, signal-lights, and other things, are conformity with the provisions of the law, and that we declare it to be our deliberate conviction, founded upon the inspection we have made, that the vessel may be employed as a freight steamer upon the waters herein specified, without peril to life from imperfection of form, materials, workmanship, or arrangement of the several parts or form, age, or use. And we further certify that the said vessel is run only within the following limits, to-wit:

From Georgetown, D. C., to Point Lookout, Md.

J. L. BROWN,
Inspector of Hulls.
JOSEPH CRAGG,
Inspector of Boilers.

STATE OF VIRGINIA:

Personally appeared before me, the undersigned, J. L. Brown and Joseph

Cragg, duly appointed inspectors of steam-vessels for the district of Baltimore, and made solemn oath that the annexed certificate of inspection is just and true.

Sworn and subscribed before me on this 18 day of September, A. D. 1868.

I hereby certify that the above is a true copy of the original on file in this office.

R. BELL, JR., D. C.

CUSTOM-HOUSE, ALEXANDRIA, the 18 day of September, 1868.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA,
County of Washington:

Before me, the subscriber, a notary public within and for the District and county aforesaid, duly commissioned and qualified, personally appeared John M. Beckett, colored, who having been duly sworn deposes and says that he has known the waters of the Potomac River and its tributaries for the last twenty-one years and upward, having sailed in various crafts for that period in every different capacity except as captain, and being now engineer of the steamer Enterprise. He further states that he was engineer of the said steamer Enterprise on the 22d day of February, 1869, when that steamer passed along the Swash channel from the foot of Eleventh street, past and close to the works at the end of Seventeenth street wharf, past and close to Braddock's Rock, near the old glass-house, and into the main channel at Easby's wharf, and to Georgetown; that when said steamer passed along said channel it was mean and falling tide, said channel having been staked out by deponent a few days before said steamer passed through the same; that at that time the island south and west of said channel was clearly marked and defined, and the said channel, though materially changed from its ancient condition, and especially within the last three years, still exists, and is fully competent for the navigation of vessels of the draught of the said steamer Enterprise. This channel is clearly and distinctly marked, the mainland and tow-path of the canal being on the right hand going up to Georgetown, and Kidwell's Island being on the left hand. Deponent has no interest of any kind in this matter; and further deponent saith not.

JOHN M. BECKETT.

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 24th day of August, 1869.

JOHN D. CLARK, Notary Public.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, County of Washington:

Before me, the subscriber, a notary public within and for the District and county aforesaid, duly commissioned and qualified, personally appeared John Wilson, of Chicago, Ill., and Henry Wells, of Tallahassee, Fla., both now in the said city of Washington, and known to me to be reliable and competent witnesses, and having been duly sworn, deposes and say that on the 3d day of November, 1868, they, in company with others, went in a boat to ascertain the depth of water around the land surveyed by the county surveyor of Washington County for John L. Kidwell, esq., of Washington, under warrants issued out of the General Land Office of the United States, and dated on the 26th June and 12th of September, 1867. They left Easby's wharf about 2 o'clock p. m. and proceeded to the northwestern end of the land skirted along the western side of it, nearly down to the Long Bridge. We found Kidwell's Meadow high and dry standing out of the water from 2 to 4 feet, covered with a dense growth of weeds, wild rice, and other shrubs. The land was firm, solid, and substantial; the water very shoal all around it, but gradually deepening as we receded from it, in every direction with a solid smooth bottom of firm sand. We did not go around it, or attempt to do so, as the distance was too great and the time too short, but we saw a clear and well-defined channel on all the other sides of it.

Deponents further say that they have no interest whatever in said Kidwell's claims to these lands a meadow.

H. WELLS.
JOHN WILSON.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 10th day of September, 1869.

N. CALLAN, Notary Public.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, County of Washington:

Before me, the subscriber, a notary public within and for the District and county aforesaid, duly commissioned and qualified, personally appeared Henry Wells, of Tallahasse, Fla., now in Washington, a competent and reliable witness, who, having been duly sworn, deposes and says, that on the 22d of February, 1869, he steamed in the steamer Enterprise (a regularly registered boat plying on the waters of the Potomac) for the purpose of testing the existence of and availability for transportation for purposes of my own of the old "Swash" channel, so-called, from the wharf at the foot of Eleventh street west, on the Potomac, through the north draws of Long and railroad bridges to the works at the end of the Seventeenth-street wharf; thence westerly in nearly a direct line to a point close to the canal bank at the foot of Twentieth street; thence following the channel between the mainland and the land on the left, known as Kidwell's Meadows, along the shore out into the main or Georgetown channel as Easby's wharf; thence to Georgetown.

He further deposes and says that the steamer passed without any difficulty or hindrance whatever through the entire channel, and that he considers it a perfectly practicable channel for the class and model of vessel with which it was tested, a 50-ton craft, United States measurement, on ordinary tides.

H. WELLS.

Sworn and subscribed before me this 24th day of August, 1869.

JOHN D. CLARK, Notary Public.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, County of Washington:

Before me, the subscriber, a notary public within and for the District and county aforesaid, personally appeared John Wilson, of Chicago, Illinois, now in said city of Washington, personally well known to me as a competent and reliable witness, who, having been duly sworn, deposes and says, that on or about the thirteenth day of February, one thousand eight hundred and sixty-eight, he personally examined the tract of land surveyed for the John L. Kidwell, esq., by the county surveyor of said county of Washington, under warrants issued out of the General Land Office of the United States, and bearing dates of June 26th and September 12th, 1867, and found, as stated in letter of said General Land Office to said Kidwell of Feb'y 29th, 1868, that there was "no land visible above the surface of the ice," and that the whole city and country in the neighborhood at that time was in the same situation. The fact is that there had been a heavy fall of snow, sleet, and rain, and a pretty severe spell of cold had frozen the same so that the whole surface of the surrounding country was completely covered by the ice, and no land visible above it, except where the ice had been broken by travel, or the land had been protected from the storm. Deponent further states that he has frequently examined the lands so surveyed for Kidwell at other and divers times, and knows that a strong growth of weeds was upon it, and, in his opinion, corn and trees could have been grown upon it by ordinary cultivation. Deponent further states, from personal examination and inquiry, that said land is not subject to tidal overflow, though at times of unusual flood, as in spring and fall rise and by heavy rains, combined with the melting of the snow, said land may be flooded occasionally for a short period, as all other low or meadow lands are in the neighborhood, but such overflow would not, as a general rule, affect the crops at the planting, growing, or harvesting season. And further deponent says that he has no interest whatever in the matter, but is the att'y of Dr. Kidwell in prosecuting his right to these lands.

JOHN WILSON.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this tenth day of September. A. D. 1869.

N. CALLAN, Notary Public.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
November 10, 1869.

SIR: On the 11th of September last John Wilson, esq., attorney for Dr. John L. Kidwell, of Washington city, made application to you for patents for the lands which had been surveyed for said Kidwell in 1867 by the county surveyor under warrants issued by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, the said surveys being designated by the surveyor as "Kidwell's Island" and "Kidwell's Meadows," situated in the Potomac River and county of Washington, D. C. Prior to reporting to you the foregoing surveys for patenting I deemed proper to inspect the same, and having found the premises under the ice I rejected the surveys on the ground that they were under water and constituting no land in the purview of the joint resolution of Congress allowing vacant lands in Washington County to be appropriated.

The aforesaid application, accompanied by several affidavits proving the existence of the lands above the water, alleges that the time when my examination on the ice took place was not calculated to render strict justice to the merits of the case, the frost having congealed the service of the water at high tide, which, together with snow-drifts and sleet covering the lands, led the examiner into an error of judgment, to correct which the aforesaid attorney of Dr. Kidwell asked you to direct the examiner to proceed to the localities surveyed with view of re-examining them and satsify himself of the real condition of the lands, and if he finds that his former inspection and report thereon was erroneous that he remove the obstacle thrown in the way of issuing the patents.

Accordingly, in pursuance of your directions I have re-examined the rejected surveys of "Kidwell's Island" and "Kidwell's Meadows," the former adjoining the Long Bridge on the north, and the latter situated between the Washington city channel and Swash channel of the Potomac River on the one side and the Georgetown channel on the other. My re-examinations took place on the 17th and 24th ultimo on foot and in a boat, both at high and low tides of water, which flow and ebb ordinarily to the depth of about 2½ feet, and the result of which is as follows, to wit:

The "Kidwell's Meadows" were found to be from 3½ to 4 feet above the low water, and from a foot to a foot and a half above ordinary high water, as near as I could judge, the density and vigorous growth of wild rice measuring from ¼ to ½ of an inch in diameter, together with other weeds, impeding the clear view of all parts of the meadows. The Swash channel, separating the meadows on the north from the accretion to the tow-path of the Georgetown and Washington Canal, is from 12 to 45 feet wide and about 4 feet deep, at mean tide affording boat navigation. The meadows are on a level with neighboring low lands north of the Georgetown and Washington Canal, and within the corporate limits of this city, as well as those on the opposite side of the Potomac, used and cultivated as pasture lands and meadows.

The "Kidwell's Meadows" consist of decomposed vegetable matter, the growth of every succeeding year adding to the deposits of former years. These being mixed up with sediments of clay and sand, together with logs of wood, large trees, and animal bodies in a state of putrefaction, contribute to the rapid formation of the land, rank vegetation on the premises, and great unhealthfulness of the immediate neighborhood.

It will be perceived that the present condition of the "Kidwell's Meadows" as viewed in connection with the surrounding water and land instead of, as on former occasion, in connection with the ice and land, is quite different. My inspection of the premises twenty months ago surveyed from the surface of the ice covering the same was at a variance with the present one. The then ice may have been formed at a very high tide, the accumulation of snow on it and superincumbent sleet may have rested on the land, instead of water as I then inferred, and led me to express my opinion as to the real status of the premises, as from my present knowledge of the land I believe that analogous circumstances might produce similar effects in the rigorous winter season; but whatever was the actual condition of the "Kidwell's Meadows" on the 13th day of February, 1868, the day I did in the first instance examine them, my disallowance and rejection of the survey, reporting it to you adversely and cancellation thereof on the records of the county surveyor, I am now, in consideration of the foregoing facts, satisfied that no such disallowance of the survey can be made. And although the "Kidwell's Meadows" are hardly yet fit to produce successful crops of corn or garden vegetables, the land nevertheless is susceptible of producing fodder and affording pasture for the cattle, and as such requires at my hands the rescinding of the former rejection of the survey of the "Kidwell's Meadows," which I do hereby rescind and submit herewith the plat of that survey now approved by me for your direction as to the issuing of the patent for the premises to Dr. Kidwell, the applicant as aforesaid.

As to the "Kidwell's Island," the first above mentioned lying next to the Long Bridge and containing, according to the survey by the county surveyor, 15.25 acres, the premises possessing no characteristics similar to the "Kidwell's Meadows" as yet, I am of opinion still that my rejection of its survey twenty months ago is sustained by the facts elicited in the re-examination of the premises, which were found subject to every day's overflow by the tide, and consequently not yet fit for agricultural purposes, though they may be at no distant time in case the causeway of the Long Bridge is suffered to remain.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully, your obedient servant,

STEPHEN J. DALLAS,
Principal Clerk of Surveys, ex-officio Examiner-General.

Hon. JOSEPH S. WILSON,
Commissioner of the General Land Office, Washington, D. C.

—

6.

(Washington County, District of Columbia, Special Certificate No. 50.)

TREASURY OF THE UNITED STATES, September 3, 1867.

I certify that John L. Kidwell has this day deposited to the credit of the United States twenty dollars on account of vacant land in the Potomac River, above the Long Bridge, for which I have signed duplicate receipts.

L. R. TUTTLE,
Asst. Treasurer U. S.

TREASURY OF THE UNITED STATES, December 3, 1867.

I certify that John L. Kidwell has this day deposited to the credit of the United States three dollars and eighty-six cents on account of vacant lands in the Potomac River, above the Long Bridge, for which I have signed duplicate receipts.

L. R. TUTTLE,
Asst. Treasurer U. S.

TO THE COMMISSIONER OF THE GENERAL LAND OFFICE:

I certify that I have surveyed a plat or parcel of land near to and adjoining the Washington shore of the Potomac River, separated from the mainland by a boat channel, from three to five feet deep, and from ten to fifty feet wide, extending from Twenty-five St. west to Easby's ship-yard, for John L. Kidwell, according to an order of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, to me directed, dated June 26th, A. D. 1867. Said land I have called "Kidwell's Meadows," beginning at a cedar post firmly planted, at low water, on which is inscribed the letters "J. L. K.," at a point bearing N. 84° W. from the centre of the dome of the Capitol, and S. 43° 30′ W. from the centre of the dome of the Observatory, and distant about one-fourth of a mile from thence by compass bearings: (1) N. 66° 30′ W., 5 perches; (2) N. 32° 00′ W., 15 perches; (3) S. 81° 00′ E., 10 perches; (4) N. 49° 30′ W., 20 perches; (5) N. 22° 45′ W., 20 perches; (6) N. 13° 15′ W., 15 perches; (7) N. 73° 30′ E., 2.40 perches; (8) S. 28° 45′ E., 2 perches; (9) S. 59° 00′ E., 2 perches; (10) S. 73° 00′ E., 8 perches; (11) S. 84° 45′ E., 7.60 perches; (12) S. 66°

30′ E., 18 perches; (13) S. 60° 45′ E., 20 perches; (14) S. 49° 00′ E., 20 perches; (15) S. 40° 00′ E., 10 perches; (16) S. 46° 00′ E., 12 perches; (17) S. 71° 30′ E., 74 perches; (18) S. 28° 30′ E., 54 perches; (19) S. 24° 30′ W., 18 perches; (20) N. 47° 00′ W., 24 perches; (21) N. 72° 00′ W., 48 perches; (22) N. 63° 30′ W., 32 perches; (23) N. 60° 00′ W., 14 perches. Thence in a straight line to the beginning, containing forty-seven acres and seventy-one hundredths of an acre of land, more or less, without improvements. Laid down by a scale of 80 pr. to the inch. Surveyed Oct. 10th and 12th, 1867.

B. D. CARPENTER,
Surveyor of Washington County, D. C.

N. B.—The distances given are from actual measurement by walking around on the lines.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
November 10, 1869.

The foregoing survey of "Kidwell's Meadows," on re-examination of the premises on the 17th and 24th October, 1869, were found to be above the tide at low as well as high tides. The said survey being of the land subject to the operation of the joint resolution of Congress of 16th February, 1839, v. 5, p. 365, the same is hereby approved.

STEPHEN J. DALLAS,
Prl. Clk. of Surveys and Ex-officio Examiner Gen'l.

THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

To all to whom these presents shall come, greeting:

Whereas, John L. Kidwell, of the county of Washington, in the District of Columbia, hath deposited in the General Land Office of the United States evidence bearing date the 3d September, 1867, and the 3d December, 1869, whereby it appears that full payment has been made to the Treasurer of the United States, by the said John L. Kidwell, for a tract of vacant land, containing forty-seven acres and seventy-one hundredths of an acre, called "Kidwell's Meadows," and lying in the Potomac River, above the Long Bridge, according to the official certificate and plat of survey thereof, bearing date the 10th and 12th of October, 1867, made and returned by the surveyor of Washington County, in the District aforesaid, pursuant to a special warrant of survey unto the said surveyor, directed on the 26th day of June, A. D. 1867, by the Commissioner of the General Land Office aforesaid, in virtue of the authority of Congress under a resolution "directing the manner in which certain laws of the District of Columbia shall be executed," approved on the 16th day of February, 1839, and which tract of land is shown by the aforesaid certificate and plat of survey to be bounded and described as follows, to wit:

Beginning at a cedar post firmly planted at low water, on which is inscribed the letters "J. L. K.," at a point bearing north eighty-four degrees west from the center of the dome of the Capitol, and south forty-three degress thirty minutes west from the center of the dome of the Observatory, and distant about one-fourth of a mile from thence by compass bearings; north sixty-six degrees thirty minutes west, five perches; thence north thirty-two degrees west, fifteen perches; thence south eighty-one degrees east, ten perches; thence north forty-nine degrees thirty minutes west, twenty perches; thence north twenty-two degrees forty-five minutes west, twenty perches; thence north thirteen degrees fifteen minutes west, fifteen perches; thence north seventy-three degrees thirty minutes east, two and four-tenths perches; thence south twenty-eight degrees forty-five minutes east, two perches; thence south fifty-nine degrees east, two perches; thence south seventy-three degrees east, eight perches; thence south eighty-four degrees forty-five minutes east, seven and six-tenths perches; thence south fifty-six degrees thirty minutes east, eighteen perches; thence south sixty degrees forty-five minutes east, twenty perches; thence south forty-nine degrees east, twenty perches; thence south forty degrees east, ten perches; thence south forty-six degrees east, twelve perches; thence south seventy-one degrees thirty minutes east, seventy-four perches; thence south twenty-eight degrees thirty minutes east, fifty-four perches; thence south twenty-four degrees thirty minutes west, eighteen perches; thence north forty-seven degrees west, twenty-four perches; thence north seventy-two degrees west, forty-eight perches; thence north sixty-three degrees thirty minutes west, thirty-two perches; thence north sixty degrees west, fourteen perches; thence in a straight line to place of beginning, containing forty-seven acres and seventy-one hundredths of an acre of land, more or less, without improvements.

Now know ye, that the United States of America, in consideration of the premises, and in conformity with the resolution of Congress, aforesaid, and the laws in such cases made and provided, have given and granted, and by these presents do give and grant unto the said John L. Kidwell, and to his heirs, the said tract of land above described; to have and to hold the same, together with all the rights, immunities, privileges, and appurtenances of whatsoever nature, thereunto belonging, unto this said John L. Kidwell, and to his heirs and assigns forever.

In testimony whereof, I, Ulysses S. Grant, President of the United States of America, have caused these letters to be made patent, and the seal of the General Land Office to be hereunto affixed.

[L. S.]

Given under my hand, at the city of Washington, the sixth day of December, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-nine, and of the Independence of the United States the ninety-fourth.

By the President:

U. S. GRANT,
By I. N. BURRITT,
Secretary.

J. N. GRANGER,
Recorder of the General Land Office.

(Rec. vol. 4, page 304 to 308, incl.)

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., April 18, 1882.

SIR: The patent to John L. Kidwell for the Kidwell Meadows, so called, containing 47.91 acres, lying south of the National Observatory and extending from opposite Twentieth to Twenty-sixth street west, appears from the records of this office to have been issued under the provisions of the joint resolution of Congress of February 16, 1839 (5 Stat., 365). The proceedings relative to this application and payment for and the survey and patenting of this tract were under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury in August, 1839, for carrying said joint resolution into effect.

The joint resolution related to certain acts of the Legislature in Maryland respecting titles to vacant lands, which were in force in the District of Columbia by virtue of the provisions of the act of Congress of February 27, 1801 (2 Stat., 103), continuing in force the laws of the State of Maryland within that portion of the District ceded by said State to the United States.

The laws of Maryland prescribing the method of securing title to vacant land and which were operative in the District of Columbia, as above recited, were, among others, the acts of November, 1781, chap. 20, and November, 1788, chap. 44. The act of 1781, "to appropriate certain lands to the use of the officers and soldiers of this State, and for the sale of vacant lands," was construed to mean that all lands within the State in Washington County, westward of Fort Cumberland, were appropriated to discharge the obligations of the State to officers and soldiers, and the residue, after completing that engagement, to the use of the public. (Kilty's Land Holder's Assistant, p. 308.) The thirteenth section of the act of 1788 removed the limitations of the former act, and made all vacant land in the State, as well westward of Fort Cumberland as elsewhere, not affected by outstanding warrants, subject to be taken up in the usual manner by warrant at the price of three shillings and ninepence per acre. (Ibid., 315.)

The warrants referred to were orders of survey to be issued on the order or "titling" of the Treasurer and were restricted by the third section of the act of 1781 to vacant cultivable lands, the technical phrase being "Warrants of vacant cultivation." (Ibid., 309.)

The joint resolution of Congress of 1839 authorized certain officers thereln named to perform the duties which had been required of State officers under Maryland laws, and empowered the Secretary of the Treasury to make the necessary regulations to carry the Maryland acts into effect. It was provided in the joint resolution that "any land which may have been ceded to or acquired by the United States for public purposes shall not be affected by said acts."

The Treasury regulations defined the proceedings necessary in obtaining titles to land under said joint resolution.

Assuming that these laws and regulations authorized and provided the means of securing individual titles to islands, flats, and marshes in the Potomac River, within or adjacent to the city of Washington, several applications for orders of survey were made from time to time, which were granted, but under which no surveys were executed. These orders provided that the land to be surveyed must be firm land not subject to tidal overflow. In some instances surveys were returned, but were rejected by the Commissioner of the General Land Office on the ground that the land was submerged by tidal flow, and was therefore not subject to survey and disposal under the Maryland acts and joint resolution of Congress.

The application of Mr. Kidwell for a patent for the so-called "Kidwell's land," being the bar on the upper side of the Long Bridge, was rejected for this reason:

On September 10, 1867, Mr. Kidwell applied for a warrant of survey for the tract known as "Kidwell's Meadows," and which was described in the application as an island in the Potomac River between Washington city channel and the swash channel, commencing nearly opposite Fifteenth street west and extending to a point where D street north strikes the canal or river. The order of survey was issued September 12, 1867, and its execution was made subject to the usual provision that the land to be surveyed should be "firm land and not subject to tidal overflow." The survey was returned by the county surveyor October 19, 1867. An examination of this survey was deemed necessary, and Mr. S. J. Dallas, principal clerk of surveys in the General Land Office, was designated as examiner-general for this purpose. Mr. Dallas made the examination, and on February 28, 1868, reported to the Commissioner of the General Land Office that he found the premises to be under the ice in the Potomac River, presenting no appearance of land, but submerged and subject to tidal overflow, and "of course not fit for 'vacant cultivation,' as required by the third section of the act of 1781."

He also found that the survey had been returned in total disregard of the law and of the instructions embodied in the warrant of survey. The survey was accordingly rejected. On October 17 and 24, 1869, a re-examination was made at the request of Mr. John Wilson, attorney for Kidwell, and upon this re-examination the examiner-general rescinded his former opinion and approved the plat of survey. In this re-examination, made under more favorable conditions than the examination in the original instance, he found the "Kidwell meadows" to be from 3½ to 4 feet above low water and from a foot to a foot and a half above ordinary high water, as near as he could judge, owing to the density and vigorous growth of wild rice and other weeds, which impede a clear view of all parts of the meadows. He did not think the land fit to produce successful crops of corn, but thought it susceptible of producing fodder and affording pasture for cattle.

Upon this re-examination, and the approval of the plat of survey by the examiner-general, patent was issued to Mr. Kidwell December 6, 1869. The amount paid for this tract was $23.86, or 50 cents per acre.

In reference to this patent and to similar applications, Mr. Commissioner Drummond, in a letter to Mr. A. R. Shepherd, dated January 22, 1873, said:

"All applications made since I assumed charge of the Land Office, in February, 1871, have been refused for the following reasons:

"1. Because the land was subject to every day's overflow by tide water, and therefore not in a condition to be surveyed.

"2. Because I thought that the disposition of the land was not clearly authorized by law.

"Because I did not deem it proper to dispose of lands situated in the immediate vicinity of Washington at a nominal sum to private parties who could hold and use them so as to impede and obstruct harbor improvements, unless the law clearly and imperatively made it my duty to do so."

The foregoing statement comprises the fact of record in this office relative to the patent issued to John L. Kidwell for the "Kidwell meadows," so called.

The brief time I have for the consideration of the subject does not permit me to express an opinion upon the legal points involved in the case.

Very respectfully,

N. C. McFARLAND, Commissioner.

Hon. M. W. RANSOM,
United States Senate.

8.

MEMORANDUM.

The title of the United States to the bed of the Potomac River through the District of Columbia was derived from the cession of jurisdiction by the State of Maryland.

The United States has such title to the soil under the navigable waters of the Potomac River within the District and to the islands, flats, bars, and marshes in said river, as the State of Maryland had.

The alienation of the sovereign title to the shores of navigable waters and the soil under them, or the disposal of the flats, bars, and marshes within such waters was not authorized by the general land acts of the State of Maryland.

The laws of Maryland providing for the disposal of vacant lands, and which were adopted by Congress for the District of Columbia, authorized the disposal only of lands of a certain defined character.

The United States could dispose only of such lands within the District under those laws as the State of Maryland could have disposed of prior to the cession under those laws.

If the tract now in question could not have been disposed of by the State of Maryland under the act of 1781 it could not legally have been disposed of by the United States under the joint resolution of Congress of 1839.

The land that could have been disposed of under the general land acts of Maryland was land suitable for occupation and cultivation. It was not land that by the accumulations and hardening of future years might become suitable for cultivation, but land actually cultivable. The term "vacant cultivation," as authoritatively construed, implied unappropriated land that could be cultivated.

If the "Kidwell meadow" was in 1869 a strip of marsh in the Potomac River, subject to overflow by tide water, it was not cultivable land authorized to be disposed of by the Maryland acts and the joint resolution of 1839.

If the land was not of the character authorized to be surveyed by said laws, and the instructions issued thereunder, that is to say, if it was not "firm land and not subject to tidal overflow," its survey in 1867 was illegal and the approval of said survey in 1869 was without authority.

The public land laws of the United States are not operative in the District of Columbia, and the disposal of land, the property of the United States therein, can only be made by special authority of Congress. Patents for lands in said District can not issue without express provisions of law.

If the patent to Kidwell was not for land authorized to be disposed of by the Maryland acts and the joint resolution of 1839, its issue was without authority.

The land must also have been vacant unappropriated land. The Maryland acts contemplated only the disposal of lands of such character. It was further provided in the joint resolution that "any land which may have been ceded to, or acquired by, the United States for public purposes shall not be affected by said acts."

The Potomac River in its course through the District is appropriated to the public uses of navigation. The alienation of the title of the United States to the flats, bars, and marshes therein would impair those uses by impeding harbor improvements and interfering with the removal of obstructions.

The United States is the proprietor of the land adjoining the Kidwell Meadows, so called, having acquired the same for the uses of the Naval Observatory and other public purposes.

The land in question is of alluvial formation. If in 1869 it had been raised above low-water mark by gradual accretion, it had become attached to the adjoining property through riparian rights, and would for that reason have been taken out of the class of lands subject to the operation of the Maryland acts and the joint resolution, first, because the title to the adjoining property had passed from the State of Maryland to private proprietors prior to the cession, and second, because of the public uses to which the adjoining property had been dedicated by the United States.

The segregation of such land and the disposal at private sale would have required special authority of Congress, without which an attempted sale by the executive officers of the United States would be void.

The patent to Kidwell can be sustained only on the following propositions:

First. That the land was firm, cultivable land in 1869.

Second. That it was above high-water mark at that date and not subject to tide overflow.

Third. That it was unappropriated to any public purpose.

Fourth. That it was separated from the mainland by a navigable channel, and was an island in fact, and not an accretion to the mainland.

Fifth. That it was without the municipal jurisdiction of the city of Washington.

Sixth. That the acts of Maryland and the joint resolution of 1839 contemplated the disposal to private persons of the islands, flats, bars, and marshes in the harbor of Washington.

Unless each and all of the foregoing conditions are met the patent to Kidwell was issued without proper authority.

But whether said patent was issued without authority, or whether it is voidable by reason of fraud or mistake, or whether it conveys a valid title to the land, are questions that can of course only be determined by the courts.

B.

BALTIMORE, MD., Feby. 17, 1885.

Hon. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
U. S. Senate:

DEAR SIR: Your letter of Feb. 12th, addressed to Hon. A. P. GORMAN, in reference to the claims of the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company to any part of the so-called Potomac Flats, in the District of Columbia, has been referred to me.

The Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company claims riparian rights from Easby's Point, formerly Easby's ship-yard, to Seventeenth street.

I have directed search to be made in order to exhibit, when necessary, the original location of the canal in B street, between the points named, together with an abstract of the grants and condemnations upon which that part of the canal was originally constructed.

I have a topographical map, which shows the whole case clearly enough. I suppose it to be a Coast Survey map, as it gives the channel depth of the Potomac River, but I am not able at the moment to fix its date. I would exhibit it to you at any time with pleasure.

The acts of Congress relating to the canal are the acts of March 3, 1825, 4 U. S. Stat., 101; May 3, 1828, 4 U. S. Stat., 292, 293, and some other acts not material to your present inquiry which you will find referred to in the synoptical index to the laws of the U. S., pages 176, 177, 188.

I note that many of the State laws, in whole or in part adopted by Congress, relating to the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, may be found in 4 U. S. Stat. at Large, appendix 1, page 793.

It is, as you may readily imagine, very difficult to state a claim of this nature within the brief compass of a letter, especially when it depends upon the terms of grants and condemnations which are not before me.

I can only express the hope that your committee in dealing this session with matters in its charge will so legislate as to afford the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company full opportunity for claiming and obtaining any rights or damages to which it may be able to show itself rightfully entitled.

Very respectfully yours,

CHAS. I. M. GWINN,
Counsel Ches. and Ohio Canal Co.

C.

[Blank No. 1.—Government Telegraph Lines, connecting the Senate with all the Executive Departments.

UNITED STATES SENATE, February 18, 188–.

(From War Dep't.)

To Hon. GEO. F. EDMUNDS, Senate:

In reply to your telegram the Chief of Engineers reports that the whole amount, four hundred thousand dollars, appropriated by the act of August 2d, 1882, for improving Potomac River has been expended, and of the five hundred thousand dollars appropriated for the same object by the act of July 5th, 1884, there has up to Feb'y 1, 1885, been expended the sum of forty thousand six hundred and sixty-nine dollars and seventy cents.

ROBT. T. LINCOLN.

D.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, February 18, 1885.

SIR: In compliance with your request of to-day, I have the honor to transmit herewith a copy of my letter of instructions to the United States attorney for the District of Columbia in relation to the matter of the claim to the Potomac Flats.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

Hon. GEO. F. EDMUNDS,
Chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, WASHINGTON, January 28, 1885.

SIR: By the act of August 2, 1882, chapter 375, which made an appropriation for "improving the Potomac River in the vicinity of Washington with reference to the improvement of navigation, the establishment of harbor lines, and the raising of the flats, under the direction of the Secretary of War," &c., authority is given the Attorney-General "to cause a suit or suits in law or in equity to be instituted, in the name of the United States, in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, against any and all claimants of title under any patent which in his opinion was by mistake or was improperly or illegally issued for any part of the marshes or flats within the limits of the proposed improvement.

I transmit herewith sundry papers, some time since received from the Secretary of War, by which it appears that in the year 1869 a patent was issued to John L. Kidwell, granting a part of the marshes or flats within the limits of the improvement aforesaid; and being of the opinion that such patent was by mistake and improperly and illegally issued, I deem it necessary, as a measure for the protection of the rights of the United States in the premises, that a judicial proceeding be instituted as soon as practicable, having for its object the annulment of such patent.

You are accordingly hereby instructed to bring a suit in equity, in the name of the United States, in the supreme court of the District of Columbia, against the said John L. Kidwell and any and all other persons claiming title under the patent issued as above, to have the said patent set aside or anulled.

In this connection I refer you, for further information regarding the premises, to the following maps covering the Potomac River front at Washington, compiled from the field surveys made in the years 1862 and 1867, which may be found in the office of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey; No. 764 (Hunter's Point to the Long Bridge), 1862; No. 765 (Long Bridge to the Aqueduct), 1862; No. 1082 (Analostan Island to Long Bridge), 1867.

I am, sir, very respectfully,

BENJAMIN HARRIS BREWSTER,
Attorney-General.

A. S. WORTHINGTON, Esq.,
United States Attorney, District of Columbia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate agree to the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York to the amendment of the committee?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The effect of the amendment proposed by my friend from New York would be really, from his point of view, and almost from mine, the same as striking out the whole proviso, because in my mind, if I were the judge and were to settle it at once and for all to-day, and could do it without hearing the other side, but upon my own investigation, I should say I have no doubt that this is not a good title under the Kidwell patent. I am not so certain about the canal business, to be sure.

Therefore, I have asked for the yeas and nays to take the judgment of the Senate upon this process of really destroying the essential and effective force of the proviso reported by the committee.

Mr. EVARTS. The essential point is this, obviously, upon the statement made by my friend from Vermont: I am willing, for the purpose of affecting this clause, to have a cautionary reservation in regard to a doubt existing on the part of the owner and administrator of this land, which is the United States, but I am quite unwilling to put the retarding of the full ownership and dominion to it upon the mere fact that a claim not only is, but has been, made; that is, give the dominion over the land in the sense of retarding and overthrowing the exercise of dominion usefully upon the mere pretension on the other side which calls in question the title.

We certainly go to the extreme when we are willing to retard this whole improvement or throw any doubt or embarrassment upon it by saying the title is in doubt. My friend from Vermont seems to think that if it is put upon that he would have to decide that there was no doubt. Now, either the United States must decide that, or we must wait until the claimant surrenders his pretension.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I desire to say that the Committee on Commerce regarded this amendment making an appropriation for the Potomac flats as one of great importance and one demanded by all the public interests.

The reason why we inserted this large addition to the amount appropriated by the House arose from the importance which the committee attached to this improvement.

As this appropriation has nothing to do with settling or qualifying or determining the title, we thought it better to put a proviso here which would remove all doubt as to the improvement of the Potomac flats being upon property of the United States. As has been stated by the Senator from Vermont, we were fully advised that this amount could be expended by improving land which was entirely free from doubt as to the title, and that the Government could have the benefit of the whole appropriation.

I hope, whatever may be done, that the matter will be in such a shape that this improvement will go forward.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CAMDEN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. ALDRICH].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. MORRILL], but I am assured that he would vote "nay," if here, and I vote "nay" myself.

Mr. SEWELL (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. MCPHERSON]. If he were present, I would vote "nay."

Mr. RANSOM. The Senator's colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. SEWELL. Then I vote "nay."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. KENNA. I am paired generally with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN], who is absent from the Chamber ill, but upon questions on the pending bill I shall record my vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. DAWES. I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE]. I do not know that he would expect me to be paired on such a question as this, and I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 9, nays 41; as follows:

YEAS—9.

Blackburn,	Ingalls,	Sherman,	Teller,
Evarts,	Sawyer,	Spooner,	Whitthorne.
Gray,

NAYS—41.

Allison,	Dolph,	Jones of Arkansas,	Saulsbury,
Berry,	Edmunds,	Kenna,	Sewell,
Brown,	Eustis,	McMillan,	Stanford,
Butler,	Frye,	Manderson,	Vance,
Call,	George,	Maxey,	Vest,
Cameron,	Gibson,	Miller,	Walthall,
Cockrell,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Wilson of Iowa,
Coke,	Harris,	Palmer,	Wilson of Md.
Conger,	Harrison,	Platt,
Cullom,	Hawley,	Pugh,
Dawes,	Hearst,	Ransom,

ABSENT—26.

Aldrich,	Fair,	McPherson,	Plumb,
Beck,	Gorman,	Mahone,	Riddleberger,
Blair,	Hale,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sabin,
Bowen,	Hoar,	Morgan,	Van Wyck,
Camden,	Jones of Florida,	Morrill,	Voorhees.
Chace,	Jones of Nevada,	Payne,
Colquitt,	Logan,	Pike,

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLAN. From line 193 to line 211, including the portion stricken out and the new matter inserted, is one amendment, and I ask that it be so considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was in section 1, to strike out from line 193 to line 199, inclusive, as follows:

Improving harbor at Norfolk, Va.: Continuing improvement, $100,000.

Improving approach to Norfolk Harbor and the United States navy-yard at Norfolk, Va: Continuing improvement by widening the channel of Elizabeth River to the port warden's line on the eastern side, between Lambert's Point Light and Fort Norfolk, $50,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

Improving harbor at Norfolk, Va., and improving approach to Norfolk Harbor and the United States navy-yard at Norfolk: Continuing improvment by widening the channel of Elizabeth River to the port warden's line on the eastern side, between Lambert's Point Light and Fort Norfolk, $250,000; of which $100,000 shall be expended in improving the harbor, and $150,000 in widening the channel of Elizabeth River to the port warden's line on the eastern side, between Lambert's Point Light and Fort Norfolk, beginning at Lambert's Point Light, including the construction of the proposed dike.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 220, to insert:

Improving Winyaw Bay, South Carolina: Continuing improvement, $25,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 228, to reduce the appropriation for "improving Cumberland Sound, Georgia and Florida: Continuing improvement" from $150,000 to $100,000.

Mr. CALL. I hope that amendment will not be agreed to. The report of the engineer made in 1886 and submitted to this Congress states that the amount required for the completion of the existing project is $1,806,023, and the amount that can be profitably expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, is $600,000.

The harbor of Fernandina, which is Cumberland Sound and Amelia Island, part in Georgia and part in Florida, is stated by the report to be capable of being made a harbor with 30 feet of water, and the engineer recommends it as necessary as a harbor of refuge for the commerce that passes along the Atlantic coast.

In view of the great importance of this channel, and this harbor being one of the best upon the entire coast, having the deepest water and the most easy of access south of Norfolk except Brunswick, and capable of being a harbor for the largest ships that are engaged in the commerce which passes along the Atlantic coast, the committee of the House gave this port the average 25 per cent. which they had determined to allow generally upon the estimates made by the engineer of the amount which could be profitably expended during the present year. When the bill came to the Senate committee I had not expected that committee to show any great degree of favor to the State of Florida, but I thought that they would have dealt with some degree of fairness, and that this small amount of 25 per cent. which was made upon the average applied to the estimates of the engineers as to the amount that could be expended this year would have been maintained by the committee. But it seems that they have proceeded without any regard to any average as to the works which had been commenced and which had been recommended by the engineers, but by some rule of favoritism in regard to this or the other State have made changes and increases, taking from States which the bill had allowed upon the average applied by the House to the estimates of the engineers.

The 25 per cent. which was the rule established gave to this port of Cumberland Sound, half in Georgia and half in Florida, $150,000 in place of the $600,000 which was recommended by the engineers as necessary. The appropriations heretofore made, amounting to over a million dollars, are reported by the Chief of Engineers to have had a most favorable effect; that the harbor is rapidly becoming all that it could be desired to be; that there is a large commerce growing up there, and that it is a place of refuge and entrance, and the only one as far South as that, for vessels of the largest size that may be required to put in.

Every consideration of propriety, of public policy, and of fairness requires that the amount which the House put in on a general average of 25 per cent. should be reinstated.

Mr. MCMILLAN. The committee in making this amendment looked to certain other improvements going forward in Florida of great public importance; and we determined as to the relative importance of those improvements as they appeared to the committee and from the reports of the Chief of Engineers.

There is appropriated in the bill for the Saint John's River $200,000. That improvement has been going forward for several years and is coming we think to completion. We thought it better, in view of the relation of that river to the commerce of Florida and to the ocean, that that improvement should not be impaired in any degree. While the amount appropriated for the Saint John's River was large we did not feel called upon to make any change in it.

This improvement of the Cumberland Sound is, of course, one which will be of great importance, but the necessity for its completion is not so great as that of the Saint John's River and other harbors in Florida, both on the Gulf and on the Atlantic coast. Therefore we thought the amount should be reduced.

The amount proposed to be appropriated by the committee can be expended profitably. There will be no danger of any loss to the Government, and the improvement will be carried forward to that extent; but there is no necessity for appropriating so large an amount as is contained in the bill as it passed the House.

This Cumberland Sound improvement is a very old one. It has been going forward for a long time. It was originated many years ago, not perhaps so particularly in a commercial point of view as in some other points of view, as of national defense. While it will become no doubt a very important improvement, we thought $100,000 for this year, in view of the large amount of the bill, would be sufficient for it, because the bill as it came to the Senate contained a very large amount, and we thought it proper to make that change in this improvement, no other reductions having been made in the appropriations for that State.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, the people of my State as well as the people of Florida are very much interested in this question.

I simply rise to indorse what the Senator from Florida has so well said in reference to this harbor and this appropriation. It is a very important work, and there is a great future for it I have no doubt. As a harbor of refuge for that dangerous Florida coast navigation, it will be invaluable when it is completed, and a very large growing commerce will spring up there. It is already quite growing.

I trust that the annual appropriation which has been heretofore allowed, which I believe was $150,000, will not be cut down this year.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senate ready for the question on agreeing to the amendment of the committee?

Mr. CALL. Before the vote is taken I wish the Senate to understand that this is not an increase of appropriation but that it is taken off from the appropriation made by the House, and it is taken in violation of a rule that an average of about 25 per cent. shall be made according to the report of the engineer.

The work has been undertaken by the Government and there have been expended upon it $255,000 since the year 1882. The estimate is an aggregate sum of $1,806,023 yet remaining. The Chief of Engineers reports:

Remarks have been made by me in former annual reports of the advantages peculiar to the harbor of Fernandina in regard to its large capacity and its deep and well-sheltered anchorage.

Without detaining the Senate I may say that the reports are full of the necessity of this channel being deepened to a depth of 30 feet because of the large number of vessels that are compelled in times of storm to take refuge in this port, to which an easy approach is to be found from the sea. I suppose that there is no appropriation in the bill more important to the whole of the vast commerce that passes along the Atlantic coast of the United States than this appropriation for Fernandina.

The fact that there is work going on at Jacksonville has nothing to do with the question. The work has been undertaken by the Government in respect to the commerce of the country, foreign and coastwise; it has progressed, and there has been expended a large sum of money upon it. The policy of it has been established, and now, without any rule but simply in order that appropriations may be increased in other States, it is proposed to cut down this appropriation without any special reason for it. In the increases which have been put upon the bill there are large numbers of them that can be dispensed with far better than this appropriation can be taken from that which was allowed by the House.

I hope the amendment will not be agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, it is said that the absent are always wronged; and I imagine that the reason why this appropriation was reduced from $150,000 to $100,000 was possibly because the member of the committee from Florida was not acting at the time when the matter was under consideration. It may be that the list of committees which I hold in my hand is not accurate, but I observe in the list that was revised on the 28th of April, 1886, the name of one Senator from Florida appears as a member of the Committee on Commerce. I am advised by those who are near me that the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON] has been substituted for the Senator from Florida.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Temporarily.

Mr. INGALLS. Temporarily; and that accounts, I imagine, for the temporary reduction of this appropriation. I will ask the chairman of the committee if the statement which appears on 58 of the report which was made with the bill contains the statistics that relate to this appropriation?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. INGALLS. I am not familiar enough with the details to be able to state off-hand, but I supposed that was so. If the statement on pages 58 and 59 contains the true statistics of the arrivals and clearances of vessels, the amount of commerce at the ports that are to be affected by this appropriation, and a true history and narration of the amount hitherto expended, the character of work done, the amount estimated for the completion of the project, and the amount that can be profitably expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, I should say that there was no good reason for the reduction of this appropriation except that which would be found in the absence of the Senator from Florida, who was at one time a member of the committee.

From the statistics contained here it would appear that this is one of the most important works on the Southern coast. There is a detailed statement of the value of the imports and exports for a series of years from 1877 to 1884, which shows that the duties collected are very considerable, and that the arrivals and clearances have been numerous.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Do you understand that the vessels go in through these entrances where there are now only 11 or 14 feet of water?

Mr. INGALLS. That I judge to be the case. The report states that—

> Heretofore the depth on the bar has not usually exceeded 13 to 13½ feet at mean low water, and at times has been as low as 11½ feet.

These works—

> Are calculated to maintain a low-water depth across the bar of not less than 20 to 21 feet, or a higher depth of 26 to 27 feet.

Then follows a statement of the work done at the present time.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But if I may interrupt the Senator from Kansas, I think he has been reading the entrances and clearances from the port of Fernandina, Fla., has he not?

Mr. INGALLS. I see the statement is that "this work is located in two collection districts."

Mr. MILLER. I will state for the benefit of the geography of the Senator that Fernandina, Fla., is the name of the port, and it is in Cumberland Bay.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator refer to the geography of the Senator from Vermont or the geography of the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. CALL. If the Senator from Kansas will allow me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. INGALLS. Yes, sir.

Mr. CALL. Fernandina is on Cumberland Sound; Cumberland Sound is the entrance to Fernandina, and the statistics the Senator is reading are right.

Mr. INGALLS. So, notwithstanding the corrections of the geography of either the Senator from Vermont or my own, which are offered by the Senator from New York, the statements as to the statistics of the commerce here are correct.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator will permit me to say that I had not undertaken to correct his geography.

Mr. INGALLS. I thought there was a rather jeering and flouting observation about geography. I do not know to whom it referred.

Mr. MILLER. The Senator from Vermont questioned the correctness of the figures which the Senator from Kansas was giving because the report states that it was Fernandina, Fla. All I have stated is that Fernandina, Fla., and Cumberland Bay are one and the same thing.

Mr. INGALLS. There is no Cumberland Bay at all; it is Cumberland Sound.

Mr. MILLER. I mean Cumberland Sound.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If my friend from Kansas will yield to me again, I wish to assure the Senator from New York that he misunderstood me. I did not question the correctness of the figures or anything else; I only wished to have the fact understood as to what relation Cumberland Sound had to the port of Fernandina, Fla., where these entrances and clearances are; and if my friend from New York, being strong on geography, will look at the map he will see that he has perhaps stated the case a little too strongly.

Mr. INGALLS. This report states:

> The appropriations now aggregate $255,000. The total expenditures to June 30, 1885, were $251,301.69.

The amount required for the completion of the existing project is $1,800,000, in round numbers, and the amount that can be profitably expended in the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, which I suppose is the period covered by this bill, is declared by the engineer to be $600,000, of which one-fourth part was appropriated in the bill as it came from the House, and the committee, the Senator from Florida who is a member of it being absent, reduced the amount from $150,000 to $100,000.

The advantage of the presence of a member of the committee from a State during its deliberation will be apparent to those who will examine pages 28 and 29 of the bill. I do not name any State, but the fact that there have been very remarkable additions on pages 28 and 29, when contrasted with the diminution of this confessedly important appropriation, is a fair illustration of the system upon which these appropriations are made.

Mr. MILLER. It is well known that Cumberland Sound is a very important body of water. In the early plans which were made for the coast defenses of this country Cumberland Sound was selected as a place for defense. An important fortification was built, and still remains there. But in the changes of commerce in the last fifty years commerce has been going away from Cumberland Sound and seeking other lines and other outlets to the sea. In the great State of Florida the business has to a large extent centered upon the Saint John's River. The bar at the mouth of the Saint John's River is a very serious obstruction to the commerce of that river.

In my judgment, and in my votes heretofore, and in the words which I have spoken upon this question in the Senate, I have urged the Senators from Florida to abandon the improvement at Cumberland Sound for the time being, until the improvement at the mouth of the Saint John's River could be entirely completed; to take the appropriation from one river and to put it upon the other, and to increase the appropriation for the improvement of the mouth of the Saint John's River. It is well known that the mouth of the Saint John's River and Cumberland Sound are but a few miles apart, and the great business of that portion of the country centers upon the Saint John's River and not upon Cumberland Sound.

There are no great transcontinental lines of railroad terminating upon Cumberland Sound. Its business is not increasing. Its business is not as important as the Senator from Kansas states that it is. Let me refer to the figures. In 1877 the value of the exports from this bay were $315,446, its imports $19,639, the duties collected $2,376. Its business has been almost steadily decreasing until in 1884 the value of the exports was $171,340, the value of the imports $6,859, and the duties collected $1,331.

In accordance with laws heretofore passed the War Department prepared and developed a plan for the improvement of the entrance to Cumberland Sound, and it is in furtherance of that plan that the appropriations have been made from year to year. The Senators from Florida and Georgia would not willingly consent to the abandonment for the time being of this project of the improvement of the entrance to Cumberland Sound, and it has been undoubtedly in deference to their wishes and to their views that it has been continued.

I do not undertake to say, and I do not mean to be understood now as saying, that this improvement at Cumberland Sound is not worthy of the money which has been expended upon it now, nor that it is unworthy of the money which must be expended upon it to complete it; but what I mean to say is that the improvement of the entrance to Saint John's River is of a thousand-fold greater value to the citizens of Florida to-day than this work is.

As we can not appropriate in one river and harbor bill all the money that is necessary to complete these important works, it would certainly conduce to and advance the interest of commerce in this country if Senators would consent to making larger appropriations for the important and great harbors of the country and smaller appropriations for the less important places.

Cumberland Sound, of course, is important to the people who live about it; it is important to the country which it drains; it is important to the commerce of that particular port; but for more than a hundred years the commerce which has come to that sound has been done without inconvenience. Lines of steamers stop there now. Of course they are not the great ocean steamers which carry three, five, or eight thousand tons burden, but they are the regular lines of steamers running from New York and elsewhere to the West India Islands. They call at this port and they find no great trouble in getting into it.

When the work is finally completed and a depth of 21 or 23 feet is obtained, of course larger ships can go in; but the lines of steamers now running from there to the West India Islands and to other points are able to perform and do perform the commerce of that port. I have myself sailed out of it in a fair going ocean steamer and I know something about it.

The only question is how much money we can afford to appropriate at one time. It was the judgment of the committee that as the Saint John's River was very important and there was an appropriation of $200,000 in the bill for it, that the improvement in the Cumberland Sound could afford to be carried on with a less sum than had been appropriated for it by the House. If we compare the importance of the two improvements, the Saint John's River and Cumberland Sound, it will be found that the Saint John's River is of vastly more importance than the Cumberland Sound to the citizens of Florida and all that country.

Mr. INGALLS. Is the appropriation for Saint John's River increased by the committee?

Mr. MILLER. The appropriation for the Saint John's River is not increased over what the House fixed, but it is $200,000, and the committee judged that that was sufficient; but at $200,000 for the Saint John's River, and $150,000, as the House had it, for Cumberland Sound, there is no proper proportion as to the importance of the two places.

Mr. FRYE. The Saint John's improvement is given at least one-third of the estimate.

Mr. MILLER. As the Senator from Maine says, the Saint John's River is given at least one-third of the estimate.

Mr. INGALLS. Cumberland Sound was given one-fourth by the House.

Mr. MILLER. The estimate made by the engineers as to the amount of money which can be properly expended has no reference whatever to the importance of the work, but it is simply an estimate as to the amount of money which the engineers can satisfactorily and profitably expend during the year. That is all there is of that. It has no reference whatever to the value of the work as a work for the benefit of commerce.

This work is estimated to cost yet $1,800,000 and the engineers say if you give them $600,000 this year, it will be expended, the whole of it, during the year. Congress is to judge whether the work shall be completed in three years or five years or ten years and what the rate of expenditure shall be.

As to the proportion spoken of by the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Kansas, that the appropriation made by the House was one-quarter or $150,000, it will be found by going over the bill that the committee has varied from that rule and from all other rules. It has attempted to make the appropriations bear some relation to the commercial importance of the work. In some cases it has given 10 per cent. of the estimate; in some cases 25 per cent.; in perhaps a majority of the cases, 33⅓ per cent. In some cases where the work was of great importance it has given 50 per cent. of the estimate for the year. In some cases where the amount was large and where it was necessary that the work should be completed at once in order that there might be no waste, the committee has recommended and put in the bill the entire estimate. There is no such thing as a rigid rule in the making up of the bill as giving 25 per cent. of the estimate of the engineers, or 33⅓ per cent., or any other percentage.

We have attempted so far as we could to make the estimate bear a just proportion to the importance of the work. We have sometimes perhaps varied from this because we may have been overpersuaded by Senators or by Members who have impressed upon the committee the importance of the work, and have been able to make the committee see the importance of it better than had been shown by the report of the engineers; but I think the Senators from Florida themselves will admit that the work at the mouth of the river Saint John is of vastly more importance to that State than this work is; that the one ought to be pushed to completion at the earliest possible day, and that the other ought to wait and take such appropriation as the country can make for works which may seem important. That is all there is to this question. I have nothing in the world to say against Cumberland Sound. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, it is one of the most desirable bodies of water for ships to lie in, but it so happens in the changes of commerce that very few of our ships go there.

Mr. FRYE. I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Florida to one thing here. He asserted that the House committee, or the House itself, had rather determined upon 25 per cent. of the estimates and complained that Cumberland Sound had not received at the hands of the Senate committee the 25 per cent. If the Senator will turn to pages 26 and 27 of the old bill (I do not know what it is here) he will find that one river, the Caloosahatchee, received 50 per cent.; the next river received 30 per cent.; the next river received the whole amount of the estimate, $15,000; another river received $12,000, with an estimate of $15,000, over 85 per cent.; the next river received nearly 50 per cent.; the next river received only about 20 per cent.; the next river received over 50 per cent.; the Saint John's River received 33⅓ per cent.; the next river received about 20 per cent.; the next river received the whole amount, and the next river received 25 per cent. of the estimate.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Are all those Florida rivers?

Mr. FRYE. Those are all Florida rivers, and they will average 50 per cent. right through.

Mr. CALL. The rivers to which the Senator refers have been given very small, insignificant appropriations. They could not well have been given anything without giving them more than 24 per cent. of the estimates. The small amounts that were given were from $2,000 to $3,000. Any smaller sum than that of course would have amounted to nothing.

Mr. ALLISON. I should like to ask the Senator from Florida, if it does not disturb him——

Mr. CALL. Certainly not.

Mr. ALLISON. How long it will take to complete this improvement with the appropriation suggested by the House or as amended by the Senate committee?

Mr. CALL. I will read from the report.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The engineer says forty years, and it has shoaled now 7 feet since they began; so that at one point there are 7 feet less water than there was before.

Mr. CALL. I read from the report submitted with the bill:

> The engineer officer in charge calls attention to the fact that the appropriations thus far made for this work aggregate less than one-eighth of the estimated cost, and that at such a rate of providing the requisite funds the progress of the work will be exceedingly slow and unsatisfactory, and that, besides, from this cause the ultimate cost of the project will be greatly increased.

That is the most definite answer I can give.

Mr. ALLISON. I notice by this statement that the total cost of this work is over $2,000,000; so that at the rate of $100,000 a year it would take twenty years to complete it.

Mr. CALL. Yes. I propose to submit to the Senate briefly some evidence of the statement I made, that this is a port in which the whole commerce of the country is largely interested; that it is not local; that it is a port in which large ships come in times of storm and in which they take refuge in case of distress; and that there is constantly a large number of those vessels entering into the port, which has the advantages of being very far south and of having a greater depth of water than is to be found in almost any other harbor on the Atlantic with the exception of Brunswick and Savannah, both of which have difficulties of entrance, Savannah particularly.

Statement of the number of vessels and tonnage at the port of Fernandina, Fla., for the year ended December 31, 1885.

ARRIVALS.

	Foreign vessels.	American vessels, sail.	American vessels, steam.	Coastwise steamers.	Total.
January:
Number	4	8	16	41	69
Tons	1,561	3,182	14,115	9,434	28,292
February:
Number	4	11	16	38	69
Tons	2,129	3,305	14,115	7,358	26,907
March:
Number	1	9	17	38	65
Tons	113	3,434	14,692	7,539	25,778
April:
Number		9	21	38	68
Tons		3,627	18,027	7,587	29,241
May:
Number	1	11	21	32	65
Tons	1,174	3,579	17,365	6,844	28,962
June:
Number	2	12	22	25	61
Tons	474	4,328	19,466	3,750	28,018
July:
Number	2	2	22	25	51
Tons	780	828	18,380	3,750	23,738
August:
Number		9	22		31
Tons		2,901	18,006		20,907
September:
Number	2	4	21		27
Tons	867	1,200	16,033		18,100
October:
Number	1	10	23		34
Tons	541	3,437	18,798		22,776
November:
Number	2	13	25	25	65
Tons	890	4,638	24,360	3,750	33,638
December:
Number	6	14	27	36	83
Tons	2,209	4,569	25,587	7,930	40,295

RECAPITULATION.

	No.	Tons.
Total foreign vessels entered	25	10,738
Total American vessels (sail) entered	112	39,028
Total American vessels (steam) entered	253	218,944
Total coastwise steamers arrived	318	57,942
Total	708	326,652

DEPARTURES.

	Foreign vessels.	American vessels, foreign.	American vessels, sail, coastwise.	American vessels, steam, coastwise.	American coasting steamers.	Total.
January:
Number	2	3	9	16	41	71
Tons	666	976	2,889	14,115	9,434	28,080
February:
Number	3	5	6	16	38	68
Tons	1,003	1,405	2,044	14,115	7,358	25,925
March:
Number	4	3	7	17	38	69
Tons	2,229	835	2,203	14,692	7,539	27,498
April:
Number	1	1	9	21	38	70
Tons	397	199	2,872	18,027	7,587	29,082
May:
Number		2	9	21	32	64
Tons		547	3,447	17,365	6,844	28,203
June:
Number	1	3	6	22	25	57
Tons	1,174	1,073	1,907	19,466	3,750	27,370
July:
Number	2	4	6	22	25	59
Tons	695	1,295	2,254	18,380	3,750	26,374
August:
Number	1		6	22		29
Tons	222		1,965	18,006		20,193
September:
Number	2	3	6	21		32
Tons	962	1,055	1,581	16,033		19,631
October:
Number	1	3	7	23		34
Tons	541	1,011	2,312	18,798		22,662
November:
Number	1	2	8	25	25	61
Tons	463	557	2,999	24,360	3,750	32,129
December:
Number	5	4	10	27	36	82
Tons	1,962	1,330	3,025	25,587	7,930	39,834

RECAPITULATION.

	No.	Tons.
Total foreign vessels cleared	23	10,314
Total American vessels cleared, foreign	33	10,283
Total American vessels (sail) cleared, coastwise	89	29,498
Total American vessels (steam) cleared, coastwise	253	218,944
Total American coasting steamers departed	318	57,942
	716	326,981

I certify that the above is a correct statement taken from records of this office.

W. A. MAHONEY, Collector.

JANUARY 26, 1886.

This is the character of commerce found there. There is a large shipment there of lumber to foreign countries and in the coastwise trade; but the harbor is of great importance to the carrying commerce of the country because of its position and the facilities for entrance and the depth of water.

The engineer in his supplementary report states very emphatically, different from the statement of the Senator from Vermont, that the work has improved the harbor and the depth of water, and if carried on with any degree of persistency and liberality the very early attainment of a depth of 30 feet of water can be had over the bar at Fernandina, where the entrance is immediately on the sea. I think it is either 3 or 5 miles only from the sea, a broad, open channel, where any ship can enter at any time of storm, day or night, with this improvement, and the importance of it can not be overestimated. The facts are stated in full and reiterated.

I hold in my hand a supplemental report of the Chief of Engineers made to the House committee, upon which this appropriation was allowed. That report is as follows:

UNITED STATES ENGINEER OFFICE, New York, November 28, 1885.

GENERAL: I have the honor to transmit to-day, in a separate package, a chart of a survey of the entrance to Cumberland Sound, Georgia and Florida, made under my direction July and August, 1885, and to submit some remarks on the results of the survey.

Material changes are found to have occurred in the hydrographic condition of the locality since the last survey, made in April, 1883, a chart of which accompanied my annual report for that year. Upon the chart now sent the present low-water curves, and, at the most important points, those determined at the previous survey, are shown for the purpose of comparison.

Over large portions of the bar where the new permanent ship-channel is proposed to be located, the depths of water have increased. No 12 foot low-water curve now intersects the sailing range, while two years ago it was crossed both inside and outside of the bar by such curves, about 2,000 feet apart from each other.

The inner 18-foot low-water curve, which forms a pocket in continuation of the marginal 18-foot curves of Amelia Basin, has worked seaward about 3,000 feet since 1883, reaching a point nearly half a mile in advance of the present end of the foundation course of the south jetty. The pocket is located and directed almost precisely in conformity with the line of channel designed to be established. This favorable result may justly be ascribed, in a large measure, to the recent seaward extension of the foundation of the jetty which has amounted to over 3,500 linear feet since December, 1884.

Since 1883 the 18-foot curve of the outer slope of the bar has receded inward to some extent. In the spring of that year the shortest distance between the inner and outer 18-foot curves exceeded 1 mile; in August, 1885, it was about 2,500 feet.

The groups of shoals known as Pelican Shoals, north of Amelia Basin, have more or less shifted their positions, and their areas bare at low water are now of less extent. Further north of these shoals, and to the eastward of the present end of the bottom course of the north jetty over the large area covered by breakers, depths have also generally increased.

The local deepening of Cumberland Channel where it is crossed by the north jetty has continued, especially on the south side of the work. The pool of more than 20 feet depth formed here is most probably due to the water combing over the low jetty during flood tide.

The 12-foot and 18-foot curves forming the margins of the deep anchoring ground known as Amelia Basin have not materially changed their positions of late years; but on the northerly side—to the eastward of the present end of the north jetty—the 12-foot curve now extends about 1,200 feet northward, and further north on this range the deepest water in this vicinity is formed, indicating that a channel is here in process of formation which if not prevented would eventually take the place of Cumberland Channel, now partially obstructed.

The average depth of Amelia Basin seems to have increased during the last few years. This may be due to a better concentration of the ebb currents in the upper portion of the basin since over 7,000 linear feet of the foundation of the north jetty were laid.

Surface-current observations were taken at a station marked A⊙, in mid-channel way of Amelia Basin. At this point the ebb currents predominated over the flood currents, both as to velocity and duration. The ebb currents averaged 2.23 miles per hour with a maximum of 3.78 miles; the flood currrents averaged 1.61 miles with a maximum of 2.52 miles.

In connection with the survey, an examination of Saint Mary's River, Georgia, which enters Cumberland Sound at its southern end, was made with a view to ascertaining the best water that can be carried up to a point where the water of the river is always fresh. The town of Saint Mary's is situated 4 miles above the mouth of the river. On this reach three shoals exist with minimum low-water depths in the channel of from 14 to 14½ feet. Two miles above the town, two shoals were found near to each other, with 16 feet and 12½ feet of water respectively. Between the several shoals the depths vary from 18 to 40 feet. At present it appears that 20 feet of water can be carried to Saint Mary's at high tide, and about 18 feet over the upper shoals.

The results of the recent survey, considering the small sum that has been expended on this improvement (only $253,000 or 12½ per cent. of the estimated cost), are regarded as very satisfactory.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

Q. A. GILLMORE,
Colonel of Engineers.

Brig. Gen. JOHN NEWTON,
Chief of Engineers, U. S. A.

I submit also a memorial of the Board of Trade of Fernandina:

CUMBERLAND SOUND.

Necessity for the continued improvement of its entrance. Remarkable results of the present jetty system.

The present importance, from a commercial point of view, of Cumberland Sound is shown by the fact that during the year ending December 31, 1885, there entered at the Custom-House of the port of Fernandina, seven hundred and sixteen vessels, with an aggregate tonnage of 326,981 tons. (See certificate of collector of customs, marked Exhibit A.) This does not include the entrances at the custom-house of Saint Mary's, Ga., the latter port being also on Cumberland Sound.

It is a recognized fact that all States on the Pacific and Atlantic seaboards are entitled to at least one deep-water port, providing the evidence is conclusive that it can be obtained and that the commercial development of the State deserves and warrants the expense.

The present depth of water at the entrance to Cumberland Sound is entirely inadequate to the large business now offering, thereby seriously retarding the growth and development of the State.

We ask your attention to only two extracts from the many letters we have confirming this statement:

Mr. Lawtrey, a British merchant established at Fernandina, who is a large shipper, writes to Senator JONES:

"It is not true that there is ample water on the bar for the commerce of the port. I have spent my life in the shipping business (the last ten years at this port) and I write advisedly and from actual experience. In the matter of chartering vessels I am compelled to select from those of small tonnage and light draught, which are always more expensive than larger ones (in proportion). Even with the utmost care, I am constantly meeting with serious losses by the detention of my vessels when they are loaded; all caused by the want of water on the bar. These delays are both expensive and vexatious; and the natural result is that I am forced into the market to compete with merchants at more available ports, and these drawbacks are naturally against me.

"Again, with ample water on this bar, I could run successfully a line of fine steamers to England during the entire year with profit to all concerned.

"These vessels could bring back emigrants for the State, besides heavy articles of freight. In a word, I could compete successfully with the more favored ports on the Atlantic."

Col. J. C. Read, who was an officer in the Union Army from Pennsylvania, says, in a letter at a former session to Senator CALL:

"The commerce of this port is rapidly increasing, requiring a larger class of vessels than formerly, as it is a great advantage to shippers to charter the larger class, the freights being proportionately less.

"The larger orders for lumber from far distant markets could be filled here if we could accommodate heavier tonnage. I was offered a large order—some 12,000,000 feet for Java, East Indies, but the parties had no vessels of less draught than 22 feet, so I did not secure the order, although the purchasers were anxious to place it with me. Our vessels that we now use, 16 to 17½ feet draught, have frequently to lay to until the following spring tides, and sometimes do not succeed in getting to sea even with the first of those. It places the business of this port and Saint Mary's at a great disadvantage in comparison with Brunswick, Darien, or Savannah."

Florida is the only Atlantic State that has no deep-water harbor. Its products can find transportation in the larger class of vessels only though a port of another State. The port of Savannah, through national appropriations has had its depth of water increased from 8 feet, in 1855, to 22 feet, in 1885. It is thus enabled to bring to its wharves the larger vessels, which can profitably transport freight much more cheaply than the smaller ones, and thus draw from Florida the business which rightfully belongs to that State and which, by the improvement of the entrance to Cumberland Sound, could be done through a Florida port. Fernandina is naturally the commercial outlet for Florida.

It is the terminus of a railway system of over 600 miles, extending into every part of the State, has inland water communication with the Saint John's River, and yet because of the greater depth of water and the consequent increased facilities of Savannah the products of Florida are diverted from their natural outlet and carried several hundred miles further by rail to reach a deep-water harbor, thus increasing the expense of transportation to the producer.

Cumberland Sound is the eastern terminus of the proposed canal across Florida, connecting the Gulf of Mexico with the Atlantic Ocean, and offering cheap transportation for the grain products of the West and Northwest to the seaboard.

The proposed American and Mexican Pacific Railroad has its Atlantic terminus at Fernandina; this will give a shorter rail route between the Pacific and Atlantic than any existing or projected line; it will also be available at all seasons of the year, and not subject to detentions from ice and snow.

It is to the interest of producers that as many deep-water Atlantic harbors be made as possible, with the shortest water and rail connections.

Fernandina's air-line distances to the interior Western centers of commerce are as favorable as any other Atlantic port, as will be seen by the following table, computed by Mr. G. Woolworth Colton, the well-known map-maker:

Table of air-line distances in statute miles.

	Fernandina.	Savannah.	Charleston.	New York.
Atlanta	267	242	274	.....
Selma	341	366	421	.....
Cincinnati	604	.....	.....	558
Indianapolis	678	.....	.....	663
Saint Louis	738	.....	.....	894
Houston	833	901	942	1,436
San Francisco	2,372	2,376	2,401	2,588
San Diego	2,093	2,113	3,159	2,448
El Paso	1,482	1,511	1,562	1,920

It is also shown by an extract from an official letter, filed herewith, and marked Exhibit B, that four round voyages can be made between Fernandina and Liverpool in the same time consumed in making three voyages between Gulf ports and Liverpool, a ship being enabled to make four voyages from Fernandina in the same time consumed in making three from the Gulf; can carry freight in the first instance at a proportionately less rate, and the cost of transportation would thus be greatly lessened, and the dangers and increased cost of insurance of a voyage around the peninsula of Florida avoided.

As showing the adaptability of Cumberland Sound for a naval rendezvous and port of refuge, we ask your attention to the accompanying publication, marked exhibit C.

The work thus far done on the bar has been found to be permanent and effective. No part of the jetties has been washed away or disturbed. None of the appropriation will be wasted in repairing the work already done, but the whole amount will be available for continuing the improvement.

The success of this system at this port is already assured; the results already manifest are remarkable, and show that by a small expenditure of money the depth of water has been materially increased, and the extent of shoal water narrowed down to a comparatively small area.

We invite your careful attention to the recent supplemental report of General Q. A. Gillmore, made in November, 1885, touching the present favorable condition of the work at Cumberland Sound, which is now before your committee.

Very respectfully,

SAMUEL A. SWANN,
J. H. PRESCOTT,
FRED W. HOYT,
For the Board of Trade of Fernandina, Fla.

Hon. A. S. WILLIS,
Chairman Committee of Rivers and Harbors,
House of Representatives.

In regard to the question whether these appropriations should be concentrated in every State, the Senator from New York is doubtless quite right that it would be much better if fewer works were undertaken and larger amounts were appropriated for the completion of those in progress; but how can the Senate control that question? The Senators from Florida have had no control over it. These bills have come to us from the House. Every Congressional district has a member of Congress, and he will not consent that important works which have quite as much right to consideration as any others shall be neglected. Because there are a comparatively smaller number of people in that particular section interested in the foreign commerce of this country is no reason why their rights should not be respected and their interests promoted as well as the great interests of the country. They are engaged in the foreign and coastwise commerce of the country, and they require these appropriations.

The Senators from Florida and no other Senators can control that question so as to apply the whole or a chief amount of the appropriations to works which are of greater importance than others without the concurrence of the members of the House of Representatives, and it is not probable that their concurrence can be obtained as long as they have immediate interest in the ports in their own Congressional districts and the rivers there.

I merely wish to call attention to the fact that there has been no increase of appropriations in this bill for Florida, and that this proposed decrease is not justified by the reports on file or by the facts of the case.

It does not matter what comparative importance may be attached to the Saint John's River and to the city of Jacksonville. That would have been a proper consideration in the initiation of these works, but they have been undertaken, this money has been expended, and it is certified here to have been profitably expended.

The port of Fernandina is certified by the facts, by the actual vessels that enter and depart from that port every year, by its position on the coast, by its great depth of water, by its perfect security for vessels to enter in time of storm, to be one of national importance, and the appropriation made by the House was entirely justified by these facts, while there are hundreds of other improvements provided for in the bill which do not bear the same relative importance, and the appropriations for many of which have been increased by the Senate committee.

Mr. President, I am not one of those who object to the appropriation of money for interior rivers and channels. Every stream which bears any part of the production of this country to the great ports to enter into foreign commerce to be converted back into money has a right to the fostering care of the General Government and in promoting its grandeur, and I am always willing to vote it; but there is no justification for the decrease of the amount as proposed in the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I find in the report of the Chief of Engineers, part 2, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, page 1230, in respect of the profitable progress of this work, as the Senator from Florida calls it, under the head of "condition and effects of the work" as far as they have gone with the $255,000 that have already been appropriated and expended, this:

The ebb and flood currents, which at the beginning of last season's work crossed the south jetty obliquely, have lately been observed to have changed their direction, and now run about parallel to it. A remarkable shoaling—has taken place on the last length of about 1,300 feet laid in May and June, 1885. A profile along the axis of the jetty was made about May 1, 1885. The greatest depths, nearly 25 at low water, then existed on the extreme outer 100-foot lengths. Back of this, to a point about 6,400 feet from the shore end, the depths varied from 20 to 21 feet. On this reach it was found that, as the work of sinking the new mattresses proceeded, a shoaling of about 2 feet had taken place in advance. In the deep pocket near the outer end the shoaling amounted to about 7 feet. Practically the irregular sea-bottom on the entire length mentioned had been leveled off and raised to a reduced and rather uniform low-water depth of about 18 feet.

That is not the object of the appropriation, I suppose, to produce shoaling—

So if this engineer is correct in his statements, the effect of these jetties so far has been to make water that before was 20 to 21 feet deep, now 18. I am very much afraid that at the end of the forty years required for this improvement and the expenditure of the two million dollars, where they can now get over with 11 feet at low water they will not have more than 4 or 5 feet. I am very much afraid that this work being done in this way, instead of working an improvement to the entrance of that sound, will work its destruction. As far as the report now goes, with the $255,000 spent, at the outer parts of that jetty where there were 21 feet of water before, there are only 18 feet now, as the engineer tells us here.

That is all I know about it; and I should agree with the Senator from New York that instead of increasing the appropriation for a place of this kind we should have a pretty thorough scrutiny before we spend any more money upon it, to be sure that we are not doing more harm to the place as it is by these artificial operations than we are doing good.

Mr. MILLER. I scarcely think the criticism of the Senator from Vermont is correct. The depth of water over the bar is from 13 to 13½ feet. The engineers have commenced running two jetties, of course beginning in the sound inside the bar and running out toward the sea until they strike the 25 or 30 foot curve, where the water is of that depth. Just how long the jetties are to be I do not know. It is a perfectly natural thing that as these jetties are started and before they are completed this irregular bottom should fill up with the sand which is washed out from the bar; but when the jetties are fully completed, undoubtedly the operations there and the results there will be just what they have been at all other harbors where jetties are completed, and they will produce an even depth of water of from 20 to 21 feet, which is all that is expected to be obtained.

The fact that at the outer end of these jetties there has been some filling in of sand to a depth of 18 feet has in no way injured the entrance to this harbor, for the depth of water over the bar is still a little more than when the work was commenced. The work has not yet gone far enough to produce any substantial result, and when completed I have no doubt the plan laid out by the engineers will produce just what they expected, a depth of water of from 20 to 24 feet.

But I still adhere to my opinion that we can not afford to expend upon this work more than the committee has given it. I have heretofore in the passage of these bills expressed my opinion that this work ought to cease entirely until the other great work on the Saint Johns River, which is so near it, is completed and put in perfect order; and then if the Government shall feel able to go on and improve the entrance to Cumberland Sound it ought to do it.

As I have said before, it is a great body of water; it is one of the greatest ports upon our Atlantic coast, and was intended originally by the Navy Department as a place of rendezvous for the Navy of the United States, and forts were built at the entrance for the purpose of protecting it. Of course they are of no use now, because at the present day ships drawing over 13 feet can not get in the bar, and therefore the only commerce that comes there now must come in vessels drawing less than 13 feet of water; but vessels drawing that depth of water have been able to do all the commerce that came to Cumberland Sound, and will continue to do it for a long term of years to come, unless some great railroad terminus should be made there. If that should occur and a vast amount of commerce should be brought there, then there would be a necessity for pushing the work faster; but as it is I still adhere to my opinion that the appropriation proposed by the committee is very liberal considering the amount of commerce, and that it would be much wiser if we could stop the work entirely for the present.

Mr. CALL. I will say to the Senator from Vermont that the low-water depth of the harbor of Fernandina or Cumberland Sound has varied heretofore, according to the reports of the engineers, from 11 to 13 feet with a mean rise and fall of tide of about 6 feet. By the jetties reaching across the water they expect to maintain a low-water channel not less than 21 feet deep. The mean depth of feet of that water is from 11 to 13 feet, with 6 feet added at high water, at a time when vessels usually enter, and vessels of a large draught do now enter at Fernandina; but it is confined to the time of high tide. For that reason and in order to attain the 30 feet of water these improvements have been undertaken.

I will not detain the Senate by reading, but I will simply state that I have in my hand here the supplemental report made by General Gillmore, which shows that these jetties have been doing a successful work in deepening the channel and that the shoaling as to which the Senator from Vermont read—and if he had been as good an engineer as he is a lawyer, as the Senator from New York has shown, he would have understood the report as showing that it is always the result that there is shoaling in advance of the work until they get out into deep water.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yet, if I may interrupt the Senator a moment, he will see on looking at the diagrams that they appear to have begun these jetties out at the twenty-one and twenty-two feet curve, where they wanted to cut it clear in at that depth, and, therefore, clearly it is not a case of beginning on the shoal part and working off, when possibly it might happen for the time being; they have begun in the deep water, and in the very deep water where they began they have 3 feet less than they started with.

Mr. CALL. There is where the shoaling always occurs, if I am correctly informed. There is nothing in any of the reports that shows the work to have been a failure, or the result to be discouraging; on the contrary, they are all considered favorable.

Mr. MILLER. That would inevitably result if they began their jetties in the deep water. The sand coming out from the bay would stop there undoubtedly until the jetty was completed, and then it would be carried clear out to sea.

Mr. CALL. Unquestionably.

Mr. MILLER. I agree with the proposition of the Senator from Florida, that if the Senator from Vermont was as good an engineer as he is a lawyer, he would understand it without any explanation.

Mr. CALL. The engineer says as follows:

The groups of shoals known as Pelican Shoals, north of Amelia Basin, have more or less shifted their positions, and their areas bare at low water are now of less extent. Further north of these shoals, and to the eastward of the present end of the bottom course of the north jetty over the large area covered by breakers, depths have also generally increased.

That we find the dangerous part where the breakers are, and the report of the engineer states that wherever these breakers and shallow bars are found the depth has increased; elsewhere that there is a depth of 30 or 40 feet; and it is in the channel through these bars where the breakers are that this work is expected to attain the permanent depth of 30 feet, and this report states emphatically and distinctly the fact that in all those points where it was expected to be efficacious the work has been successfully done.

I will not detain the Senate further except simply to read a statement from the Bureau of Navigation. It is as follows:

BUREAU OF NAVIGATION, NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 16, 1886.

SIR: In reply to your inquiry of the 9th instant, I take pleasure in stating herewith the approximate length of voyages from Galveston, New Orleans, and Fernandina to Liverpool and Mediterranean ports, and return voyages, by steamers and sailing vessels, namely:

The Senate will bear in mind that Fernandina is already the terminus of an extensive system of railroads reaching throughout this country, running southward to New Orleans, extending into Texas, California, and Mexico, and westward and northward covering the whole area of railroad transportation. The statement continues:

Average passage of sailing vessels:

	Days.
From New Orleans to Liverpool	45
From Galveston to Liverpool	47
From Fernandina to Liverpool	30
From New Orleans to Gibraltar	42
From Galveston to Gibraltar	44
From Fernandina to Gibraltar	29
From Liverpool to New Orleans	47
From Liverpool to Galveston	49
From Liverpool to Fernandina	41
From Gibraltar to New Orleans	41
From Gibraltar to Galveston	43
From Gibraltar to Fernandina	36

Steamers should make the passage as follows:

	Days.
From New Orleans to Liverpool, at a speed of 8 knots	23.8
From Galveston to Liverpool, at a speed of 8 knots	25.0
From Fernandina to Liverpool, at a speed of 8 knots	18.7

Very respectfully,

J. E. WALKER, Chief of Bureau.

NOTE.—It follows from the foregoing that a sailing vessel in making three round voyages would occupy—

	Days.
Between New Orleans and Liverpool	276
Between Galveston and Liverpool	283
Between Fernandina and Liverpool	213

And in making four round voyages would occupy—

	Days.
Between New Orleans and Liverpool	368
Between Galveston and Liverpool	384
Between Fernandina and Liverpool	284

And in a steamer averaging 8 knots (the average time of freighters), three round voyages, would occupy—

	Days.
Between New Orleans and Liverpool	142.8
Between Galveston and Liverpool	150.0
Between Fernandina and Liverpool	112.2

And four round voyages would occupy—

	Days
Between New Orleans and Liverpool	190.4
Between Galveston and Liverpool	200.0
Between Fernandina and Liverpool	149.6

So practically both as to sailing vessels and steamers, four round voyages would be made between Fernandina and Liverpool in the same time required for three round voyages from New Orleans or Galveston. The same results will apply to voyages to Gibraltar.

As a result from the foregoing, a sailing ship carrying 6,000 bales of cotton would transport—

	Bales.
In 276 hours between New Orleans and Liverpool	18,000
In 288 hours between Galveston and Liverpool	18,000
In 284 hours between Fernandina and Liverpool	24,000

And a steamer carrying 10,000 bales would transport—

	Bales.
In 142.8 hours between New Orleans and Liverpool	30,000
In 150 hours between Galveston and Liverpool	30,000
In 149.6 hours between Fernandina and Liverpool	40,000

The port there is one of the finest in the United States and capable of having a very large and valuable commerce. As a harbor of refuge to-day in every storm that occurs, the mariner upon the South Atlantic coast looks to Fernandina as a place of refuge.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Committee on Commerce.

The question being put, there were on a division—ayes 12, noes 12.

Mr. EDMUNDS. An even divide, and no quorum, I am sorry to say. We shall have to have the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROWN (when the name of Mr. COLQUITT was called). My colleague [Mr. COLQUITT] is not present. He is paired with the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON].

Mr. DAWES (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Ohio [Mr. PAYNE].

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS]. I do not know how he would vote on this amendment, and therefore I withhold my vote.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON (after having voted in the affirmative). I voted, forgetting for the moment that I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT] who is absent. I withdraw my vote.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. As he is absent and I do not know how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. MANDERSON. I am paired with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN]. If he were present I should vote "yea," but I abstain from voting, being paired.

Mr. CULLOM. My colleague [Mr. LOGAN] is paired with the Senator from North California [Mr RANSOM].

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 17; as follows:

YEAS—22.

Blair,	Edmunds,	Maxey,	Sherman,
Cameron,	Evarts,	Miller,	Stanford,
Coke,	Frye,	Mitchell of Oreg.	Vest,
Conger,	Hale,	Palmer,	Wilson of Iowa.
Cullom,	Hawley,	Platt,
Dolph,	McMillan,	Sawyer,

NAYS—17.

Beck,	George,	Ingalls,	Whitthorne,
Berry,	Gibson,	Pugh,	Wilson of Md.
Brown,	Gray,	Teller,
Butler,	Harris,	Vance,
Call,	Hearst,	Walthall,

ABSENT—37.

Aldrich,	Fair,	McPherson,	Riddleberger,
Allison,	Gorman,	Mahone,	Sabin,
Blackburn,	Hampton,	Manderson,	Saulsbury,
Bowen,	Harrison,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sewell,
Camden,	Hoar,	Morgan,	Spooner,
Chace,	Jones of Arkansas,	Morrill,	Van Wyck,
Cockrell,	Jones of Florida,	Payne,	Voorhees.
Colquitt,	Jones of Nevada,	Pike,
Dawes,	Kenna,	Plumb,
Eustis,	Logan,	Ransom,

So the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 1, line 231, to increase the appropriation for "improving harbor at Savannah, Ga.: Continuing improvement," from $125,000 to $175,000.

Mr. BROWN. I propose to amend the amendment of the committee. I move to strike out the word "one," in line 231, and insert the word "two;" and also in the same line to strike out "and seventy-five;" so as to make the appropriation for continuing the improvement of the harbor at Savannah, Ga., $200,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 231, after the word "improvement," strike out the word "one" and insert "two," and after the word "hundred" strike out "and seventy-five;" so as to read:

Improving harbor at Savannah, Georgia: Continuing improvement, $200,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make the point of order on that, that it increases the appropriation.

Mr. BROWN. I will state that I introduced two weeks ago and more the amendment and had it referred to the Committee on Commerce, and it is estimated for by the head of the Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. If it is estimated for, it is in order.

Mr. BROWN. The committee propose to give us $175,000, and the engineers estimate for $330,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the point of order be reserved. If the Senator is right about the estimate, I will withdraw the point of order after the Senator has made his remarks.

Mr. BROWN. Savannah, Ga., is a port of entry where there is a very large commerce, and I will state in this connection that the commerce of Savannah, as shown by the report made by the Committee on Commerce to accompany this bill, for the last year amounted to a little over $51,000,000. Savannah has in the last three river and harbor bills had $200,000 appropriated for this improvement; or rather two appropriation bills have passed and become laws making that appropriation, and the same amount was continued in the appropriation bill that failed at the last session. So since 1881 we have never received less than $200,000 in any river and harbor appropriation bill. There are nearly 20 miles of river between the city and the bar. Outside the bar there is very deep water; and for the needed improvement the estimate on the present plan, which proposes to increase the depth to 20 feet, is $730,000. Four hundred thousand dollars of that has been expended, and there is $330,000 still remaining not yet appropriated. All of it is very greatly needed now.

I have a letter from the president of the steamship company that has a splendid line of steamers running between Savannah and New York informing me on account of there being no appropriation last year the work that has been done has been greatly damaged, and it will not be long unless something is done till he will be unable to get his steamer up the channel from the bar to Savannah.

I think there ought to be a little fair dealing about matters of this sort. I turn to the other Southern cities and I see that for Norfolk the appropriation proposed in the bill as reported by our committee is $250,000; Wilmington, $225,000; Charleston, $250,000; Mobile, $120,000; Jacksonville, $200,000; and Savannah, $175,000. As to commerce, I do not want to enter into a comparison between these ports.

I only say that Savannah beats any of them a long way in the amount of commerce which is done at the port, amounting, as I have already stated, to over $51,000,000 last year. There are exported from the port of Savannah over 800,000 bales of cotton a year. It is the largest exporting port for naval stores in the world. A vast amount of lumber goes out there, and nearly all the rice of the coast is shipped out from Savannah. Then there is a great deal of promiscuous commerce outside of the large items I have mentioned. Therefore it is a port of very decided importance; and not only does the commerce of Georgia go out of it but of the neighboring States. The central railroad system that converges to Savannah carries an immense amount of productions even from Kentucky and Indiana and Illinois that go out through the port of Savannah. And still we propase now to cut it down $25,000 below what it has had heretofore; and really $200,000 is less than it very imperatively needs.

I can not think the Senate will do this. I appeal to the justice of the Senate in a matter of this sort to treat all with some show of equality. When we come to consider the commerce of the different places the rule of comparative importance has not been exactly observed. If it is a sound rule to appropriate the most money (as we did to-day, a million to New York), where there is the most commerce being done and where there is the most commerce to be built up, then I bring a claim here that no other one of the Southern cities has brought.

I do not suppose in this connection I am at liberty to speak of the action of the House of Representatives; but at some other point the appropriations have been cut down far below what they ought to have been and very far below what they have been heretofore.

What I am seeking now is to get the appropriation for the Savannah River up to the amount that has been given us heretofore, and where there is an imperative necessity for it. The line of steamers that runs between Savannah and New York is a line of splendid vessels and they can barely get up the harbor as it is now. They do a very large business; and if we have any regard at all for the commerce which is growing up and being done at the port, it seems to me that the Senate ought not to hesitate in this matter.

I do not purpose to attack the committee. I have conversed with a majority of the members of the committee present, and those members I believe have no objection to our having this little increase. A portion of the committee probably might not feel at liberty to say that there should be any change, as there has been no meeting held on the subject; but I appeal to the chairman of the committee on this case and think I can tell him that he will not find in all his appropriations a case where there is so meager an appropriation given to a port that is doing so large a business with the same disadvantages that it labors under and the same necessity for an appropriation.

I trust I am understood, and I hope there will be no trouble about allowing this little amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, I agree with the Senator from Georgia that the port of Savannah and Tybee Roads at the mouth of Savannah River embrace works of national importance; so that just as liberal an appropriation as may be desired justly to keep that harbor, the entrance to that great city and that great system of railroads with its great commerce, in good order I am for. That is one of the things I believe in, and one of the objects for which we can justly spend the public money. Now exactly how much it is wise to spend this year I am not advised, and I express no opinion on that.

But I make this point of order on this first occasion when it has arisen, not because if it were sustained, as I think it clearly must be when I refer to the Book of Estimates, I should not be strongly tempted to waive it, for I make it not for the purpose of interfering with the action on this item, but in order, before we go on to the infinite things that are in this bill and the infinite amendments that will be moved, that we can establish in a leading and test case whether we are within the rules or not, so that I hope the Senator from Georgia will not misunderstand me in making the point of order on his amendment.

His reply to my point of order was that this amount is estimated for. I have the Book of Estimates here, and I think the Senator is mistaken, unintentionally of course. The estimate required by our rules is a definite and distinct one. On page 178 of the Book of Estimates, under the head of "Improving rivers and harbors," this is said:

Construction, completion, repair, preservation, and survey of harbors and rivers, to be expended upon such works as may be directed by Congress, submitted—

I admit that that may be considered as a submitted estimate—

$10,000,000.

And then under the same general head for "Examination, surveys, and contingencies of rivers and harbors, $150,000," in two or three items that I need not take time on.

Total harbors and rivers, $10,176,920.

Then, "Total public works under the War Department, $16,572,630.18." That is an estimate submitted to Congress as such. Now comes a note, and then comes the whole list of improvements, and constructions, &c., that are reported by the Chief of Engineers, under the head of "Amount that can be profitably expended in the next fiscal year, as reported by the Chief of Engineers," and then it begins as the bills generally do, geographically in a certain way at Maine, and runs down through Massachusetts, and Vermont, and New York, and Rhode Island, and all the States, southerly, until we reach Georgia.

Improving harbor at Savannah, Ga.: Completing improvement, $330,000.

Now, preceding that, which is the estimate on which my friend stands or claims, is this note:

NOTE.—The following statement—

Which includes the Savannah item and Burlington, Vermont, and all the other places—

The following statement is not furished as a part of the "annual estimates for the public service" required by the act of March 3, 1875 (18 Stat., p. 370), to be furnished by the Secretary of War to the Secretary of the Treasury, but is inserted as a convenient and customary summary of items taken from the annual report of the Chief of Engineers for the fiscal year 1885, showing—

I skip some unnecessary words referring to the old statute—

"the amount that can be profitably expended in the next fiscal year" on each of the uncompleted works mentioned.

That amount going all through being $42,332,100. So I submit with great respect that the point of order is well taken. The item of $330,000 for Savannah is not the estimate of the head of the Department, and he says it is not in terms. But I beg my friend to understand that I am not making the point on the merit of his proposition.

Mr. BROWN. On page 184 of the report of the Chief of Engineers I find this language in speaking of the port of Savannah:

Amount (estimated) required for completion of existing project.....	$330,000
Amount that can be profitably expended in fiscal year ending June 30, 1887.....	330,000

Submitted in compliance with requirements of section 2 of river and harbor acts of 1866 and 1867.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But that is the Chief of Engineers, not the Secretary of War. Now, the Secretary of War says he does not adopt that as an estimate. He makes his estimate preceding the $10,000,000 as a whole.

Mr. McMILLAN. The statement made in the Book of Estimates is not the only estimate made by the Secretary of War. The Chief of Engineers has made a formal and official report to the head of his Department, the Secretary of War. In regard to every item of improvement he has stated the estimated amount required to complete the project and he has also stated the estimate of the amount that can be profitably expended during the current year. That is reported officially to the Secretary of War. The Secretary of War officially communicates that report to Congress and commends to the consideration of Congress the estimates therein. His official communication supplements this report to Congress, and I submit that the estimate made by the Chief of Engineers in regard to each project is an estimate within the meaning of any rule which has been adopted if we have a rule requiring such an estimate in reference to rivers and harbors.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Chief of Engineers is not the head of a Department.

Mr. McMILLAN. The Secretary of War is the head of the Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. He says he does not submit them as "annual estimates for the public service."

Mr. McMILLAN. That is in the Book of Estimates, but that is a statement that affects only that Book of Estimates. It does not affect the official report of the Chief of Engineers, which is made to the Secretary of War as the head of the Department, and transmitted as an official document by the Secretary of War to Congress, as is suggested by the Senator from New York, under a law of Congress requiring that report to be submitted. This is as accurate an estimate as can be made considering the nature of the report. It is an official report. These estimates are stated distinctly in detail, and each of them is as much an estimate for the current year as if contained in a separate document.

Now, I do not undertake to say that this rule would apply to the river and harbor bill, because in construing the rules we must look to the custom of the authorities and of Congress in treating of this subject, and this has always been the mode of making estimates for the current year for appropriations in the river and harbor bill. It is not as it is in regard to other appropriation bills. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill makes appropriations to carry out the provisions of existing law definitely, and there would be then a precise estimate submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury in transmitting the items to Congress; but it has always been the practice and it is in accordance with the law upon this subject that this character of estimate be made, and it is the only precise and definite estimate that is made on the subject.

So far as the point of order is concerned, I think——

Mr. BECK. I should like to ask the Senator from Minnesota, the chairman of the committee, whether the Secretary of War has made any other estimate for the improvement of rivers and harbors except the one submitted on page 178 of the Book of Estimates, which reads:

Construction, completion, repair, preservation, and survey of harbors and rivers, to be expended upon such works as may be directed by Congress, $10,000,000?

Has he gone into any more details than that, except so far as the report of the Chief of Engineers is concerned?

Mr. McMILLAN. No, except in submitting the report of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. BECK. Then I do not see why two, or three, or five hundred thousand dollars, if Congress sees fit to give it for Savannah Harbor, can be subject to a point of order. We have a right to consider it ourselves.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The document sent to the Chair by the Senator from Vermont purports to be a letter of the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimates of appropriations. It is not the usual document of estimates from different heads of Departments. It is the document of estimates as submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury; and the table to which the Senator from Vermont refers providing for expending $10,000,000 is the table prepared in the Treasury Department. But if the Senator from Minnesota can show an estimate from the head of the War Department, or if this table attached to the Secretary of the Treasury's estimate may be regarded as the statement of the Secretary of War——

Mr. EDMUNDS. That note is the note of the Secretary of War.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Then the Chair would be of opinion that any amendment within the limits of this estimate, $330,000, would be within the estimate of the head of the War Department.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But if I may submit to the Chair, that particular head of Department in his note preceding that list says that he does not submit it as an estimate in terms. That is what I called the attention of the Chair to.

Mr. CONGER. That is from the Secretary of the Treasury.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No; the Secretary of War says that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands that it is part of the Secretary of the Treasury's report. It appears to be there. If the Chair is mistaken about that he will change his ruling.

Mr. MILLER. I do not see that that has anything to do with this.

Mr. FRYE. If the Chair sustains the point of order raised by the Senator from Vermont, how is any determination to be arrived at? Ten million dollars, according to this statement, is the estimate, and the bill contains $18,000,000. What was to prevent the committee from reporting an amendment to the bill to strike out all except the appropriation for New York and make that $19,000,000? What is to prevent making the appropriation for Savannah, Ga., $330,000, the amount which is estimated by the War Department; and how can the Chair be able to say that then you are exceeding the estimate when the estimate is a lump sum? Practically I do not see how the point of order could be enforced if it was sustained.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is disposed to regard the tabular statement, annexed evidently by the Secretary of War, as the estimate called for by the rules. If so, the amendment is within the limit of an estimate proposed by the head of a department.

Mr. MILLER If that matter is settled——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair holds the amendment to be in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I understand the Chair to overrule the point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is within the rule.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I hope that decision will stand till we finish this bill, so that we shall all have fair play.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. BROWN] to the amendment of the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. BECK. I desire to say a word in regard to Savannah Harbor. I will vote with the Senator from Georgia to increase the appropriation to $200,000. I think if it were proposed to be made $250,000 I should vote for it, unless there was some good reason given why it should not be so much. On one occasion when I had charge of the sundry civil bill it was proved before the committee that there was a great deal of trouble about the navigation of the Savannah River, much of it growing out of obstructions placed in different parts of the channel during the last years of the war. I was in the city of Savannah a few years ago, and I was shown how the commerce of the city had grown and what might be accomplished by removing obstructions to navigation. I have watched the progress of the city ever since. Year by year it has grown and its commercial interests have developed, until I am satisfied there is no port on the Atlantic, certainly none south of Norfolk, that is developing more rapidly than the city of Savannah. It has fine lines of steamers; its commercial importance is magnifying every day; therefore whatever is needed to aid its prosperity ought to be given. Our water ways are the great competitors with railways and other transportation lines in cheapening freights, and all the money we spend inures to the benefit of all the people of the country.

I do not blame the Committee on Commerce of either House for cutting down this and other appropriations as low as they can because of the immense pressure that must have been brought to bear upon them from every quarter and because of the large sum of money that the bill necessarily appropriates. I have not examined the details of the bill; not being on the committee, I have had no opportunity to study its provisions. But while I believe in reasonably economical appropriations I am not troubled about the amount of money now proposed to be expended in improving our rivers and harbors. My trouble is that we have too much idle public money. The country will, in my judgment, very soon suffer more, indeed is now suffering more by reason of the amount of money that the Government of the United States has lying useless in the Treasury and is needlessly collecting every year by taxation, than it would if the Government did not have money enough or had barely money enough to carry on its ordinary operations.

While this debate has been going on I have been looking over the monthly debt statement handed to me in the last half hour, coming from the Secretary of the Treasury. It makes a full exhibit of the condition of our finances. We have paid off $96,000,000 of the principal of the national debt in the last year. We have only $144,000,000 that we can by any possibility pay off before September, 1891, unless we go into the market and buy our not yet matured outstanding bonds at 127, 140, or 150 per cent. premium, which I suppose no wise legislator would think it a proper or prudent thing to do, or to be placed in a position to require it to be done in order to avoid greater evils.

Mr. TELLER. I do not think we have paid off $96,000,000.

Mr. BECK. If the Senator will look at the decrease of the debt during the year ending June 30, 1886, he will see that it amounts to $96,097,796.25——

Mr. TELLER. I call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the debt is not paid. The money is simply piled up in the Treasury.

Mr. BECK. I am coming to that, and that is just what I fear danger from. There is only $144,000,000 of the debt that we can by possibility pay off before 1891, unless we buy the outstanding bonds before they mature. We have so arranged the bonded debt that we can only pay $250,000,000 after September, 1891, and the remaining $737,000,000 is not due till 1907. Of course the people who hold these bonds can no more be required to take our money, no matter how anxious we may be to pay it out, than I can be required to take even double price for my horse if I do not want to sell him, or think that I can get more for him as the need of the bidder for the horse becomes greater.

The fact must not be overlooked that we can not compel them to take the money. Do not forget that. Having, as I said, only $144,000,000 of debt that we can pay off before 1891, the official report shows that we have first about $19,000,000 in cash on hand to meet called bonds. Then we have $75,000,000, which is a net balance after accounting for everything. Then we have $100,000,000, which we hold under the silly pretense that it is necessary to keep that much idle gold to guard greenbacks which need no guard. Our credit is too good to make that pretense necessary any longer. Then we have $29,900,000, or, in round numbers, $30,000,000 of fractional silver coin. In other words, while $144,000,000 is all that we can pay until September, 1891, we have of absolutely idle cash lying in the Treasury $224,000,000. Therefore we could to-day pay off every dollar of the $144,000,000 of 3 per cent. bonds and have $80,000,000 idle money left. Yet we are collecting by the most onerous and expensive form of taxation beyond what we can decently or honestly spend $96,000,000 a year. Perhaps the worst of it is of those $144,000,000 nearly $130,000,000 are held to-day by the national banks as security for their circulation, every dollar of which circulation is needed to carry on the business of this country. The moment we pay those bonds there is a contraction of at least $100,000,000 more of bank circulation, because the premium on the 4 and 4½ per cent. bonds is, or soon will be, so high that no national bank can afford to buy them in order to base its circulation upon them. Indeed, the chances are they will sell what they now hold and still further contract the currency.

Therefore I again repeat we are worse off by having a plethora of money than if we had collected from the people barely enough to pay ordinary annual expenses. I do not care if this bill does appropriate fifteen or twenty millions if it is spent properly in improving our important water ways. They are the only competitors with the great railway corporations. Anything is better than locking up the money in the Treasury. Better spend $20,000,000 on rivers and harbors than to pay it as premiums on bonds, which we will soon have to do if we continue to tax the people as we have been doing; and it does not seem as if we were going to give any relief by reduction of taxes. We have profitable work on which we can spend a great deal of money and benefit the country, such as the river and harbor of Savannah or the harbor of New York or of Galveston or of Norfolk or of Wilmington or any other important river or harbor. I do not seek to encourage extravagant appropriations, but I see in the near future greater evils growing out of the surplus revenues we are collecting than even large appropriations for public works; the money collected must be again put in circulation. Do not lock it up in the Treasury, for if that is done it will bankrupt the country. There is more real danger and injury done by having the people's money lying there than in spending it for any laudable public work. Therefore I am not troubled at this time about the money or about the size of the bill. I do object either to locking up the revenue or to buying bonds at exorbitant premiums to get rid of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Georgia to the amendment of the Committee on Commerce.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. VEST. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Will the Senator allow me to present a conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will receive it if there be no objection. The Chair hears no objection.

LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES OF JOHN M. ROBESON.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 209) for the relief of the legal representatives of John M. Robeson, deceased, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its amendment to the bill of the Senate.

JOHN H. MITCHELL,
GEO. GRAY,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
JAMES D. RICHARDSON,
J. LYMAN,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HEARST submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After thirty-one minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Tuesday, July 6, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate the 3d day of July, 1886.

TERRITORIAL CHIEF-JUSTICE.

John C. Shields, of Michigan, to be chief-justice of the supreme court of the Territory of Arizona, vice Sumner Howard, resigned.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

G. Chase Godwin, of Grand Rapids, Mich., to be attorney of the United States for the western district of Michigan, in the place of John W. Stone, commission expired.

JUSTICES OF THE PEACE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

John A. Moss, whose commission expires July 1, 1886, to be assigned to Anacosta.

Alfred G. Osborn, whose commission expired June 20, 1886, to be assigned to Brightwood.

POSTMASTERS.

Augustus C. Golding, to be postmaster at Norwalk, Fairfield County, Connecticut, vice Charles Olmstead, commission expired.

H. M. Saff, to be postmaster at Thomasville, Thomas County, Georgia, vice Lebbens Dekle, whose commission expires July 6, 1886.

William H. Wilcox, to be postmaster at Elgin, Kane County, Illinois, vice William T. Hunter, removed.

Charles L. Knight, to be postmaster at Council Grove, Morris County, Kansas, vice Frank A. Moriarty, resigned.

Dennis G. Clary, to be postmaster at Sleepy Eye, Brown County, Minnesota, vice Hans Mo, resigned.

Ferris W. Latimer, to be postmaster at Addison, Steuben County, New York, vice C. W. Giller, commission expired.

Darieus A. Ogden, jr., to be postmaster at Penn Yan, Yates County, New York, vice Daniel Lanning, whose commission expires July 27, 1886.

John C. Streeter, to be postmaster at Watertown, Jefferson County, New York, vice E. M. Gates, commission expired.

William C. Allen, to be postmaster at Akron, Summit County, Ohio, vice James H. Morrison, commission expired.

Louis Doumaux, to be postmaster at Wellsborough, Tioga County, Pennsylvania, vice Susan R. Hart, commission expired.

S. Mortimer Ward, to be postmaster at Georgetown, Georgetown County, South Carolina, vice W. J. Moultrie, removed.

The following nominations are withdrawn, the offices having been relegated to the fourth class July 1, 1886:

F. S. Trousdale, to be postmaster at Metropolis City, Ill.

Thomas Hall, to be postmaster at Preston, Minn.

H. H. Dolen, to be postmaster at Brownsville, Nebr.

CONSUL.

Edward Young, of the District of Columbia, to be consul of the United State at Windsor, Nova Scotia, vice Daniel K. Hobart, recalled.

COLLECTOR OF CUSTOMS.

David S. Presson, of Massachusetts, to be collector of customs for the district of Gloucester, Mass., vice Fitz J. Bobson, commission expired.

FOR PROMOTION IN THE REVENUE-MARINE SERVICE.

Third Lieut. George H. Doty, to be a second lieutenant, vice Cook, deceased.

Third Lieut. Howard Emery, to be a second lieutenant, to fill a vacancy.

Third Lieut. Francis M. Dunwoody, to be a second lieutenant, vice Baldwin, promoted.

Third Lieut. John E. Lutz, to be a second lieutenant, to fill a vacancy.

FOR APPOINTMENT IN THE REVENUE-MARINE SERVICE.

Daniel J. Ainsworth, of Virginia, to be a third lieutenant, to fill a vacancy.

J. Charles Harris, of New York, to be a third lieutenant, vice Failing, promoted.

WITHDRAWALS OF ARMY NOMINATIONS.

The following-named officers (now acting under letters of promotion issued during the recess), nominated December 14, 1885, for promotion in the Army, are this day withdrawn.

Third Regiment of Cavalry.

First Lieut. Edgar Z. Steever, to be captain, March 4, 1885, vice Simpson, whose promotion expired by constitutional limitation.

Second Lieut. George H. Morgan, to be first lieutenant, November 26, 1884, vice Simpson promoted.

FOR PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

Third Regiment of Cavalry.

First Lieut. James F. Simpson, to be captain, November 26, 1884, vice Monahan, retired from active service.

First Lieut. Edgar Z. Steever, to be captain, January 18, 1886, vice Crawford, deceased.

Second Lieut. George H. Morgan, to be first lieutenant, November 26, 1884, vice Simpson, promoted.

Second Lieut. Joseph T. Dickman, to be first lieutenant, January 18, 1886, vice Stever, promoted.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate July 3, 1886.

CONSUL.

James W. Romeyn, of Detroit, Mich., to be consul of the United States at Valparaiso.

FOR PROMOTION IN THE ARMY.

First Regiment of Cavalry.

Maj. Abraham K. Arnold, of the Sixth Cavalry, to be lieutenant-colonel, June 11, 1886.

Eleventh Regiment of Infantry.

Second Lieut. Henry O. S. Heistand, to be first lieutenant, June 1, 1886.

Sixth Regiment of Infantry.

First Lieut. Frederick W. Thibaut, to be captain, June 6, 1886.

Second Lieut. Zerah W. Torrey, to be first lieutenant, June 6, 1886.

Fifth Regiment of Cavalry.

First Lieut. Adolphus W. Greely, to be captain, June 11, 1886.

Second Lieut. James V. S. Paddock, to be first lieutenant, June 11, 1886.

Sixth Regiment of Cavalry.

Capt. Emil Adam, of the Fifth Cavalry, to be major, June 11, 1886.

Seventh Regiment of Cavalry.

Lieut. Col. James W. Forsyth, of the First Cavalry, to be colonel, June 11, 1886.

For appointment by transfer in the Army.

Second Lieut. Sedgwick Rice, of the Twenty-second Infantry, to be second lieutenant in the Seventh Cavalry, June 10, 1886, with rank in the cavalry arm from August 29, 1885.

FOR PROMOTION IN THE ARMY IN ACCORDANCE WITH SECTION 1207, REVISED STATUTES.

Ordnance Department.

First Lieut. Rogers Birnie, jr., to be captain, June 14, 1886.

First Lieut. Ira MacNutt, to be captain, June 14, 1886.

First Lieut. Charles C. Morrison, to be captain, June 14, 1886.

First Lieut. Frank Baker, to be captain, June 14, 1886.

REGISTER OF LAND OFFICE.

J. L. Camp, of Gilmer, Tex., to be register of the land office at Prescott, Ariz.

POSTMASTER.

Joseph J. Topliff, to be postmaster at Longmont, Boulder County, Colorado.

TO BE JUSTICE OF THE PEACE FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA, TO BE ASSIGNED TO THE CITY OF WASHINGTON.

James A. Tait.

TO BE SECOND LIEUTENANTS IN THE ARMY.

Corps of Engineers.

Cadet rank.

1. Cadet Henry C. Newcomer.

First Regiment of Cavalry.

31. Peter E. Traub.

Second Regiment of Cavalry.

20. Cadet John T. Nance.
28. Cadet William H. Bean.

Third Regiment of Cavalry.

7. Cadet Arthur Thayer.
15. Cadet Cecil Stewart.
37. Cadet Jesse McI. Carter.
42. Cadet Malvern H. Barnum.
46. Cadet William H. Hay.

Fourth Regiment of Cavalry.

17. Cadet Samuel Reber.
18. Cadet Floyd W. Harris.
38. Cadet Frank B. Fowler.
43. Cadet Letcher Hardeman.
47. Cadet James E. Nolan.

Fifth Regiment of Cavalry.

5. Cadet Charles L. Potter.
13. Cadet John T. Haines.

Sixth Regiment of Cavalry.

30. Cadet John J. Pershing.

Eighth Regiment of Cavalry.

27. Cadet Charles C. Walcutt.
36. Cadet Joseph C. Byron.
40. Cadet Edward C. Brooks.

Ninth Regiment of Cavalry.

39. Cadet Harry G. Trout.
44. Cadet Edmund S. Wright.

First Regiment of Artillery.

6. Cadet John A. Towers.
16. Cadet Charles T. Menoher.

Fourth Regiment of Artillery.

9. Cadet Lucien G. Berry.
11. Cadet John E. McMahon.
12. Cadet Walter N. P. Darrow.

Fifth Regiment of Artillery.

14. Cadet Avery D. Andrews.
22. Cadet Robert G. Proctor.

First Regiment of Infantry.

62. Cadet Frank L. Winn.
74. Cadet Dwight E. Holley.

Third Regiment of Infantry.

21. Cadet Harry Freeland.
26. Cadet Frank G. Kalk.
48. Cadet James H. McRae.
64. Cadet Erneste V. Smith.

Fifth Regiment of Infantry.

59. Cadet Frederick C. Kimball.
60. Cadet Charles G. Lyman.
71. Cadet Richard C. Croxton.

Sixth Regiment of Infantry.

50. Cadet Amos B. Shattuck.

Seventh Regiment of Infantry.

41. Cadet Chauncey B. Baker.
54. Cadet Armand I. Lasseigne.

Eighth Regiment of Infantry.

24. Cadet Colville M. Pettit.
72. Cadet Edward N. Jones, jr.

Ninth Regiment of Infantry.

65. Cadet George B. Duncan.
75. Cadet William G. Elliot.

Eleventh Regiment of Infantry.

8. Cadet Robert L. Hirst.
45. Cadet Bertram T. Clayton.
70. Cadet Edward M. Lewis.

Twelfth Regiment of Infantry.

29. Cadet David J. Baker, jr.
33. Cadet Benjamin A. Poore.
52. Cadet Walter H. Gordon.
56. Cadet George J. Godfrey.

Thirteenth Regiment of Infantry.

69. Cadet Julius A. Penn.

Fifteenth Regiment of Infantry.

66. Cadet Robert C. Williams.
76. Cadet Marcus Maxwell.

Sixteenth Regiment of Infantry.

63. Cadet Charles C. Ballou.

Seventeenth Regiment of Infantry.

19. Cadet William H. Camp.
53. Cadet James L. Druien.
55. Cadet James H. Frier.
67. Cadet Lucius L. Durfee.

Nineteenth Regiment of Infantry.

10. Cadet Frank McIntyre.

Twentieth Regiment of Infantry.

25. Cadet Albert D. Niskern.

Twenty-first Regiment of Infantry.

34. Cadet Edward W. McCaskey.
68. Cadet Charles G. Dwyer.

Twenty-second Regiment of Infantry.

51. Cadet William M. Swaine.

Twenty-third Regiment of Infantry.

23. Cadet George D. De Shon.
58. Cadet George B. Davis.

Twenty-fourth Regiment of Infantry.

57. Cadet Henry C. Keene, jr.
77. Cadet David W. Fulton.

TO BE ADDITIONAL SECOND LIEUTENANTS.

Attached to the Corps of Engineers.

2. Cadet Mason M. Patrick.
3. Cadet Charles S. Riché.
4. Cadet Thomas H. Rees.

Attached to the cavalry arm.

49. Cadet Stephen H. Elliott, to the Fourth Cavalry.
73. Cadet Seward Mott, to the Sixth Cavalry.

Attached to the artillery arm.

32. Cadet Thomas B. Mott, to the First Artillery.
35. Cadet Gustave W. S. Stevens, to the Fourth Artillery.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, July 3, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, addressed the Chair.

Mr. BURNES. I am compelled to demand the regular order.

WILLIAM BOONE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House a message from the President of the United States.

The Clerk read as follows:

WILLIAM BOONE.

To the House of Representatives:

I return without approval House bill No. 473, entitled "An act granting a pension to William Boone."

There is not the slightest room for doubt as to the facts involved in this case.

No application for pension was ever made to the Pension Bureau by the beneficiary named in this bill. He enlisted in August, 1862; was in action November, 1862, and taken prisoner and at once paroled. During his parole, and at Aurora, in the State of Illinois, he took part in the celebration of the 4th day of July, 1863, and while so engaged was terribly injured by the discharge of a cannon. He is poor, and has a wife and a number of children.

These facts are derived from the report of the committee in Congress to whom the bill was referred, and from a letter written by the soldier since favorable action was had upon said bill by both Houses of Congress, which letter is now before me. In this letter he says: "I never thought of trying getting a pension until my old comrades urged me to do so."

This declaration does not in the least, I think, militate against the present application for pension, but it tends to show the ideas that have become quite prevalent concerning the facts necessary to be established in order to procure a pension by special act of Congress.

Let it be conceded that during the three months which elapsed between the soldier's enlistment and his capture and parole he was constantly in the field and bravely did his duty. The case presented is that of a brave soldier, not injured in any engagement with the enemy, but honorably captured, and by his parole placed in a condition which prevented, for the time being, his further active military service. He proceeded to his home, or to his friends, and took his place among non-combatants. Eight months afterwards he joined the citizens of the place of his sojourn, and the citizens of every town and hamlet in loyal States, in the usual and creditable celebration of our national holiday. Among the casualties which unfortunately always result from such celebration there occurred a premature discharge of a cannon, which the present claimant for pension was assisting other citizens to discharge and manage.

Whether any of those thus engaged with him were injured is not disclosed; but it is certain that the paroled soldier was very badly hurt.

I am utterly unable to discover any relation between this accident and the military service, or any reason why, if a pension is granted as proposed by this bill, there should not also be a pension granted to any of the companions of the claimant who chanced to be injured at the same time.

A disabled man and a wife and family in need are objects which appeal to the sympathy and charitable feelings of any decent man; but it seems to me that it by no means follows that those intrusted with the people's business and the expenditure of the people's money are justified in so executing the pension laws as that they shall furnish a means of relief in every case of distress or hardship.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 2, 1886.

On motion of Mr. MATSON, the message and accompanying bill were referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DAVIDSON, of Alabama, until Monday, on account of sickness.

To Mr. GROSVENOR, until Wednesday next, on account of important business.

To Mr. MILLARD, for three days, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (S. 2152) to amend chapter 218 of the acts of the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, approved June 15, 1882; and

A bill (S. 1942) for the relief of J. M. Hiatt, only surviving partner of Hiatt & Co.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 392) declaring forfeited certain grants of land made to certain States in aid of the construction of railroads.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

The SPEAKER. The bill (H. R. 4342) for the relief of Nimrod McKee was improperly referred to the Committee on Claims. It directs the Postmaster-General to annul a contract, and should go to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads. If there be no objection that order will be made.

There was no objection.

POSTAL COMPENSATION OF RAILROAD COMPANIES.

Mr. BLOUNT, by unanimous consent, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (S. 2438) to authorize the Postmaster-General to allow compensation to railroad companies in certain cases for apartment service heretofore furnished pursuant to agreement; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. TRIGG. I desire to make a report from the Committee on Accounts to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Several members called for the regular order.

Mr. BURNES. I think if we shall begin now we shall be able to finish the deficiency bill to-day. I therefore move that the morning hour for the call of committees for reports be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BURNES. I now move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

The motion was agreed to.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the general deficiency appropriation bill. The formal amendment pending will be considered as withdrawn, if there be no objection, and the Clerk will continue the reading.

Mr. BELMONT. I understand yesterday there was an agreement that the paragraphs concerning the State Department should be taken up this morning. I believe it was understood we would go back to them this morning.

Mr. BURNES. I do not understand any such agreement as having been made.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman in charge of the bill simply stated that he could not go back on yesterday.

Mr. BURNES. I will go back when we get through the bill.

Mr. BELMONT. I asked the gentleman when we would come to those paragraphs, and he said this morning. I thought it was in the nature of an agreement, although it was not made on the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. No such understanding can control the committee.

Mr. BELMONT. Then I understand the gentleman refuses to go back.

The Clerk read as follows:

JUDGMENTS COURT OF CLAIMS.

For payment of the judgments of the Court of Claims, as follows:

Mr. BURNES. From line 1069 to line 1579 inclusive I see no necessity for reading. These are judgments of the Court of Claims. There is a mere list of the names of the judgment creditors and the amounts of judgment as certified by the clerk of the court. The reading will consume half an hour or more, and I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the reading of that list and let it be printed in the RECORD.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The paragraph the reading of which was dispensed with is as follows:

To Edward L. Jordan, $1,145; the New York Consolidated Card Company,

$4,221.50; James H. McLean, $1,030; Joseph Burnett & Co., $183.60; the World's Dispensary Medical Association, $513.40; Ray V. Pierce, $348; Augustus Vogeler & Co., $1,672.80; Andrew Dougherty, $3,842; Herman Tappan, $440; Wells, Richardson & Co., $240; Andrew S. Lowe, $112.20; Weeks & Potter, $725; Johnston Holloway & Co., $168; E. W. Hoyt & Co., $730; Vogeler, Meyer & Co., $382.50; Charles N. Crittenton, $375; Russell, Morgan & Co., $210; George G. Green, $1,092.24; Joseph H. Schenck & Son, $420; Henry Tetlow & Brother, $180; Hiscox & Co., $90; D. Ransom, Son & Co., $353.60; the Merchants' Gargling Oil Company, $316.21; James E. Schwartz & Co., $200; the Anglo-American Drug Company, $220; Mette & Kanne, $30; Calvin E. Hull & Co., $40.08; Thomas J. Husband, $191.20; Dr. D. Jayne & Son, $1,764.31; Kennedy & Co., $205.36; Daniel F. Hutchinson, $30; William Cromey, executor of John Bull, deceased, $342; William Bond & Co., $160; Curtis & Brown Manufacturing Company, $46.50; Jeremiah Curtis & Sons, $440; B. Barnwell Sams, administrator, $181.63; J. Julius Sams, $181.63; George A. Brandreth, executor, $2,060; William Henry Comstock, $152; J. S. Johnson & Co., $192; the Rumford Chemical Works, $110; Edward E. Bradbury, $1,950; Morgan & Maddux, $650; John Conley, $500; Francis M. Tanner, survivor of Tanner & Hayes, $750; Dewitt C. Redgrave, $26.85; the Pacific Railroad, $44,800.74; the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, $51,-351.91; William H. Taylor, $152; John H. Wallace, $1,032; William R. Merriam, $2,877.19; Benjamin U. Keyser, receiver, $805.17; David H. Cuthbert, receiver, $181.75; Foster L. Balch, receiver, $753.49; Lester S. Willson, receiver, $142.63; Otis R. Glover, receiver, $1,065.25; C. F. Fleming, $5.71: James Adger, $45.64; Susan D. Adger, $47.92; Jane Adger, $31.95; J. E. Adger, $22.08; J. B. J. and J. E. Adger, $29.67; M. A. Parker, $27.39; Robert Adger, $69.30; Robert Adger, trustee, $296.66; Robert Adger, trustee, $41.08; Robert Adger, trustee, $31.95; George K. Otis, $16,445.36; Huntington W. Jackson, receiver, $6,362.89; James M. Rhett, $183.33; Lyman B. Perkins, $100; Solomon Max and Abraham Hoffheimer, $288; Michael J. Grealish, $600; Bowers and Dunham, $285; Frederick Brown, $119.33; the Centaur Company, $301.50; Seabury and Johnson, $165; the Holman Pad Company, $92.86; David M. Richardson, $4,250; Schmitt & Schmittdiel, $1,058.95; Barclay & Co., $94.25; George H. Palmer, $2,265.75; Ryder, Crounse & Welch, $50; William B. Gates, executor, $1,837.14; John A. Jones, $220; Samuel G. Lawton, $352.66; Cato Ashe Seabrooke, administrator, $203.19; Van Schaick & Co., $6,433.49; Annie B. Graham, administratrix, $2,445; Thomas D. Griffin, $321.41; Daniel Donovan, $930; William J. Landram, $4,724.78; John F. Henry, Cunan & Co., $204.71; Jacob C. Harper, $145; Henry Kettler, $1,000; Joseph Loehr, $1,095; Charles Bursch, $269.50; the J. C. Ayer Company, $918: R. P. Hall & Co., $160; the Sioux City and Pacific Railroad Company, $82,765.80; the Connecticut Mutual Life Insurance Company, $11,450; John Scherling, administrator, $10,901.50; William L. Bryan, $806; Edward A. Blount, administrator, $965.43; John H. Kimmons, $35; Vileor Vallot, $537.20; Samuel Patterson, $156; Anson C. Merrick, $435; J. W. Payne, $422; James T. Spann, $200; A. J. Pardue, $1,524; James G. Harrison, $46; John S. Fowler, $112; J. W. Burton, $332; A. T. Summey, $362; John S. Bradford, $1,294; W. D. McKinstry, $168; Frank Hardin, $211; Samuel B. Crail, $1,211; William Paterson, $132; J. H. Finks, $136; Robert Barber, $3,191; W. C. Robards, $53; James Brizzolara, $3,575; James O. Ladd, $489; Bushrod W. Bell, $600; William G. Bogle, $300; George M. Bond, $367; Isaac N. Cardoza, $930; L. Congleton, $203; William W. Gilbert, $2,476; Henry D. Fitzgerald, $450; Chester B. Hinsdill, $109; Philip A. Hoyne, $1,756; Henry L. Jeffers, $797; John D. Jordan, $195; Orville D. Laird, $140; Eugene O. Locke, $54; E. E. Marvin, $193; Stephen C. McCandless, $207; Matthew F. Pleasants, $128; M. T. Roberts, $225; William E. Singleton, $78; Samuel Thompson, $676; Stephen Wheeler, $3,971; A. Winslow, $175; Elias S. Falkenburg, $156; Joseph M. Stafford. $530; Lafayette Green, $76; Benjamin L. Benedict, $274; Gustave Anderson, $118; Jos. C. Finnell, $111; H. A. Forney, $381; A. M. Gudger, $117; Barnett Wilson, $701; Samuel Levy, $136; J. Bentley, $147; Ashley, Wetherbee & Watson, $281.17; C. Ashworth, $1,136.28; G. Buckingham, jr., $38.83; George and Samuel Brown, $119.96; Geo. and Saml. Brown & Co., $1,011.90: Theo. Berdell, $551.01; A. Frank & Brother, $286.56; Dater & Timpson, $604.96; Groynne & Day, $678.64; Evans, Wharton & Co., $355.70; L. G. Florance, $102.23; W. S. Hale & Co., $150.57; Johnson & Day, $404.86; Kellogg & Parker, $89.68; Lange, Boell & Arming, $354.60; R. L. Livingston, $323.38; Moran & Gould, $187.43; Henry Meigs, jr., $163.42; H. Meigs, jr., & Smith, $11.98; Mason, Cox & Smith, $327.09; Manning & De Forest, $425.40; Putnam & Earle, $255.68; N. D. Putnam, $119.63; William Parker, $29.76; J. J. Pardee & Co., $358.82; J. D. Prince, $543.34; Stokes & Saltonstal, $134.35; Charles Stokes, $115.20; Speyer & Moran, $824.11; Scranton & Scoville, $941.17; Smith, Seaver & Bowen, $243.31; Francis Ringeling, trustee, $1,794.16; Alexander Taylor & Son, $220.41; Underhill, Haven & Co., $565.94; Stewart & Mattison, $137.33; Vandeventer & Co., $131.86; Wittemore & Mott, $120.10; Barney, Raymond & Co., $785.48: John S. Barry & Co., $1,327.60; Day & Morse, $491.45; William M. Earle, $22.98; Eames & Moore, $199.95; Fowler, Osgood & Co., $418.62; Gray, Prince & Co., $2,687.13; D. C. Hays & Co., $321.08; Durant & Earle, $392.45; DeRose & Tilghman, $265.77; C. F. Davenport, $109.76; Derkheim, Cox & Kemeys, $84.16; Hoyt & Gardner, $847.91; H. C. Hardy & Son, $544.09; Kemeys & Cox, $1,381.23; Jacob Little & Co., $2,311.68; Adam, Kimball & Moore, $452.08; J. C. Atterbury, $63.80; Alley & Lawrence, $1,237.23; Robert S. Anderson, $62.71; T. M. Burton & Co., $195.49; Beers & Edwards, $584.54; Bolles & Co., $280.84; John Bonner & Co., $3,004.77; Britton, Van Vechton & Markham, $276.94; Boyd, Falls & Vincent, $193.95; Baldwin & Weeks, $4,205.50; Barnard L. Smyth, $246.59; Boyd, Vincent & Co., $1,093.98; Coleman Benedict, $1,350.24; Condict, Jennings & Co., $169.55; Chase, McClure & Co., $274.36; Corne & James, $421.27; Davis & Son, $334,79; Delafield & Fitch, $194.63; Dean, McGinnis & Co., $8,753.38; Decoppet & Tiers, $193.82; Dornett & Nichols, $1,049.89; T. F. Durant, $771.05; Fanshawe & Milliken, $380; A. Morton Ferris & Brother, $2,006.93; Fitch & Co., $792.27; Utley & Dougherty, $168.85; J. F. Underhill & Co., $883.52; Van Vechten & Moore, $86.97; Henry T. Verhaven & Co., $871.02; Francis T. Walker, $418.73; Weston & De Billier, $305.93; Wheeler & Peters, $2,144.49; W. G. Wiley & Co., $942.61; Wm. H. Whittingham, $995.45; W. G. Wiley, $144.38; C. E. Wood, $480.85; Wollberg & Co., $381.88; Wood & Davis, $372.93; A. Wolf, jr., & Co., $1,993.30; W. E. Young, $121.65; T. N. Cooper, $2,686.32; J. P. Jones, administrator, $81,250; H. R. Philbrick, $214.88; L. M. Erwin, $402; Marion Erwin, $233; E. C. Wade, $179; Rich'd D. Locke, $149; Maner L. Wade, $79; S. M. Griffin, $40; J. M. Allred, $345; Jas. D. Brady, $255.83; J. E. Blaine, $2,283.43; Culver Barcalow, $3,577.68; Ellery M. Brayton, $1,003.74; Jas. C. Brown, $236.83; Beverly B. Botts, $3,020.73; Geo. W. Brown, $534.82; Webster Bruce, $1,055.59; Ann Bruce, administratrix, $308.16; William W. Bruner, administrator, $1,236.07; Alonzo B. Carroll, $229.29; Andrew Clark, $1,442.30; John C. Carpenter, $579.27; Edward H. Chase, $271.49; John A. J. Creswell, administrator, $408.75; Henry M. Cooper, $558.08; Lucien B. Crooker, $351.11; Charles C. Dame, $917.10: Philip Doppler, $900.35; George P. Dunham, $1,472.03; Isaac H. Duval, $1,282.61; Sewall S. Farwell, $651.15; Amos L. Frost, $2,185 57; J. W. Green, $1,132.90; David F. Hollister, $759.33; S. M. Jackson, $295.89; Walter H. Johnson, $3,086.85; John N. Knapp, $496 21; Robert P. Kennedy, $2,979.22; John F. Kumler, $873.98; James M. Melton, $1,363.48; John J. Mott, $2,658.74; Charles W. Pavey, $1,147.24; Jewett Palmer, $244.39; Francis H. Pierpont, $1,545.38; James Pursell, $2,783.41; Worthy S. Streator, $561.98; Lampson P. Sherman, $753.15; David A. Stewart, $61.52; Edward G. Selden, administrator, $2,623.64; Moses D. Stivers, $857.82; Edward Scull, $1,555.85; James Stuart, administrator, $1,500; John M. Sullivan, $1,750; William P. Tatem, $2,133 38; Edward R. Tinker, $2,367.52; William Umbdenstock, $71.21; J. T. Valentine, $1,253.50; James C. Veatch, $1,556.27; Edward C. Wade, $82.43; Charles C. Walcutt, $2,491.95: Edward Wheeler, $487.38; William H. Wheeler, $986.86; Jonathan C. Willis, $688.20; Elihu A. White, $362.46; William M. Woodcock, $1,021.10; Andrew H. Young, $529.94; Bettie N. Young, administratrix, $449.84; Alfred Hobbs, $1,372; J. W. Beck, $646; William Wright, $361; A. E. Buck, $132; Wm. C. Wells, $348; James H. Bone, $1,382; F. W. Girard, $139; Thomas S. Atkins, $109; George Patterson, $21; A. J. Perdue, $693; John L. Thornley, $550; E. M. Seabrook, $152; S. Rodmond Smith, $101; Aaron Collins, $1,168; James A. Bledsoe, $172; John M. Langston, $7,666.66; Henrietta M. Paynter, $274.51; John C. Cooper, $391.45; John T. Patterson, $864; Scarborough A. Norris, $130; Alfred T. Dullard, $107; John W. Calder, $119; Mervin B. Converse, $40; Joseph M. Stafford, $1,050; Charles Brietz, $187; Charles H. Bill, $265; Paul Ravesies, $128; Robert Barber, $563.90; John R. Carey, $124; John T. Green, $106; Hugh C. Hamilton, $92; John C. Moore, $727; A. W. McCullough, $532; J. C. Wilson, $170; John H. Wallace, $803; John G. White, administrator, $736; Lamar C. Quintero, administrator, $1,689; William G. Lane, $2,418; William H. Hunter, $872; John G. Allen, $6,962; Edward M. Rand, $645; Sarah E. Ramsay and Anna E. Wagner, $1,700; Bernard Zwart, $49; Joseph Ricketts, $440; Henry L. Carroll, $647; Washington P. Parker, $223; Chancellor Hartson, $844.45; R. D. Frayser, administrator, $366.44; John S. Toof, administrator, $413.07; John M. Landon, $1,327; James O. Ladd, $120; James A. Murray, $898; William A. Rose, $90; James C. Saunders, $1,627; Henry E. Young, administrator, $263.60; Charles E. Coffin, administrator, $263.60; Robert W. Shand, administrator, $262.31; Robert W. Shand, trustee, $1.29; William W. Brown, $309; Thomas F. Bowman, $551; Hostetter & Smith, $1,971; Samuel Henry, $516; John M. Allred, $156; John L. Conley, $905; W. C. Smith, $887; L. G. Pirkle, $615; John Graves, $428; James G. Hawthorne, $1,424; Will Haight, $504; A. W. Caldwell, $297; Orlando McClendon, $831; Cadwallader J. Pride, $225; Matthew R. Cullen, $310; Joseph Clark, $52; Isaac Beckett, $190; Michael A. McGowan, $4,444.38; Paul Ravesies, $1,070; Charles L. Adams, $737; Isaac N. Cardozo, $1,865; Charles M. Dennison, $205; William W. Gilbert, $365; Charles B. Faris, $1,459; E. B. Harrison, $966; Abner Hazeltine, $377; James A. Murray, $725; Mark McDonough, $504; A. Q. Moore, $53; C. W. Nottingham, $93; John E. Pound, $633; Stephen Roberts, $347; G. A. Scroggs, $282; J. A. Thorn, $509; Joseph Ricketts, $255; George L. Douglass, $328.35; in all, $682,216.26; together with a further sum sufficient to pay the interest on the judgments in favor of the said Edward L. Jordan, John H. Wallace, William J. Landram, and John M. Langston, respectively, under section 1090 of the Revised Statutes, from the date of presentation for payment until paid, at 5 per cent. per annum: Provided, That none of the judgments herein provided for shall be paid until the right of appeal shall have expired.

Mr. BURNES. I ask unanimous consent to make a correction of some errors in the printing of the paragraph relating to these judgments of the Court of Claims. In line 1191 the letter "r" in the name Bursch should be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection that correction will be considered as made.

There was no objection.

Mr. CABELL. It might as well be understood by the committee that if any error is found hereafter in these names the proper names should be substituted.

The CHAIRMAN. It is well for the Chair to state that the enrolling clerk will be obliged to be governed by the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. The request, I understand, only applies to corrections to be made pending the consideration of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that pending the consideration of the bill in the committee if any other errors of misspelling are found in the portion just passed over they be corrected. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. CABELL. That is what I desire.

Mr. BURNES. I desire to correct an error which occurred in printing the same paragraph. I send up an amendment to come in after the word "cents," in line 1360.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fitch & Bowen, $3,756.65; Earle & Saltonstall, $38.76; Gibson, Beadleston & Co., $1,849.60; Gibson, Caranova & Co., $2,515.16; David Groesbeck & Co., $3,348.82; Edward Haight & Co., $848.59; B. Hall & Young, $55.92; G. L. & L. Haight, $152.62; A. G. Hemingway & Co., $113.78; H. L. Horton & Co., $630.31; Hone & Nicholas, $679; Hutchinson & Dimmick, $142.86; Hutchinson & Broas, $575.19; Jacqueline & Decoppet, $716.75; Kissam & Co., $3,107 49; Latham, Alexander & Co., $221.69; August Limbert, $410.76; August Limbert & Co., $921.64; Lockwood & Davenport, $1,959.24; Maxwell & Graves, $1,452.65; Meserole & Trumbull, $623.96; Mills, Robeson & Smith, $250.71; Miller & Walsh, $300.75; William B. Mott & Co., $684.38; W. D. Moore & Co., $233.06; David M. Morrison, $562.18; B. Murray, jr., $481.65; Osgood Brothers, $6,069.35; Osborn & Chapin, $1,398.17; F. P. & H. L. Olcott, $955.34; Paulding & Slosson, $279.07; Pearl & Co., $188.54; Pulesston, Raymond & Co., $2,490.83; E. D. Randolph & Co., $10,657.02; Rasmus & Lesignola, $271.10; Rollins & Co., $305.60; Randall & Weiram, $300.60; Schafer Brothers, $1,812.53; Smith, Randolph & Co., $1,290.98; M. F. Smith & Decoppet, $160.36; D. Henry Smith, $542.59; William Alexander Smith & Co., $190.46; C. S. Sloane & Co., 02, 711.23; Suydam & Vincent, $89.33; Robert Stuyvesant, $81.66; Stuyvesant & De Wolfe, $2,052.09; Stuyvesant & Goadby, $115.36; Stoker, Taylor & Co., $2,340.73; William and Joseph Taylor, $1,868.52; Tanner & Co., $3,146.28; Taintor & Dyett, $268.87; Towar & Learned, $852.92.

Mr. BURNES. By an error these names, which are in the list as certified by the Court of Claims, were omitted from the bill.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to come in as a new paragraph after line 1590.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of judgments and awards recovered against the United States reported by the Attorney-General under the provisions of chapter 359 of the laws of 1885, approved March 3, 1885, Executive Document, first session Forty-ninth Congress, No. 207, as follows: To pay Augustus G. Ruggles amount of judgment recovered by him against the United States for damages and costs, $22,287.06; to pay James K. Pumpelly, Edwin C. Gray, and Frank A. Lyons, as administrators of the estate of George J. Pumpelly, deceased, amount of judgment recovered by him against the United States December 18, 1876, $10,164 57; to pay John S. McDonald amount awarded to him against the United States November 13, 1875, for flowage of land by reason of Government dams at Menasha, Wis., $17,588.17; to pay Peter Armond amount awarded him against the United States November 13, 1875, for flowage of lands by reason of Government dams at Menasha, Wis., $268.80; to pay Fisher Jewson amount awarded him against the United States

November 13, 1875, for flowage of land by reason of Government dams at Menasha, Wis., $384; to pay Richard Jewson and Richard Jewson, jr., amount awarded them against the United States November 13, 1875, for flowage of land by reason of Government dams at Menasha, Wis., $614; to pay J. T. Bud amount awarded him against the United States October 14, 1875, for flowage of land by reason of Government dams at Menasha, Wis., $450; and a sufficient sum in addition thereto as may be necessary to pay the interest on the judgments and awards as above provided is hereby appropriated.

Mr. GUENTHER. I move to amend the amendment by inserting before the last paragraph what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

For payment of unappealed awards and judgments rendered against the United States for flowage damages caused by the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin, as follows:

William H. Jenkyns, $960; Charles Miller, $400; George H. Mansur, $772.50; Edley Payne, $1,100; Peter Grattan, $705; John N. Kid, $900; Kate Jenkyns, $200; William Clements, $310; Frank Walker, $455.50; L. H. Eaton, $687.50; Tilley Walker, $500; Tertullius Spalding, $910; E. P. and William Sill, $430; William Sill, $760; Amos D. Page, $760; Patrick Hussey, $30; Joseph Strobe, $960; R. J. Radick, $135; Samuel Neff, $455; Patrick Morrissey, executor of the last will and testament of Patrick Hayes, deceased, $265; J. A. Sanford, $250; George Allanson, $125; Michael Clarey, $230; Helen B. Chapman, $940; Andrew Frederichson, $905; J. H. Porter, $1,185; Gustave Ehrlich, $135; Dennis Cushing, $370; John Cushing, $500; James Durick, $100; William Cushing, $290; William Geary, $280; Oliver Dempsey, $200; Catherine Cavanaugh, $300; James Durick, $420; John F. Seymour, $200; W. M. Sinclair, $100; Costs on appeal to superior court, $114.65; M. Aukland, $80; Aaron Walker, $200; Jane J. Thomas, administratrix of the estate of Thomas J. Thomas, $200; August Frohne, $150; W. R. and J. M. Edwards, $100; Henry Floyd, $140; Martha Hanson, $80; Robert Edwards, $200; F. Chamberlain, $15; Cornelius Spoor, $30.12; Wesley Horton, $28.10; Frederick Bandt, $145; William Page, $150; August Zulk, $100; Anton Rumpler and August Zelmer, $37.50; Martin Matz, $300; John Karon, $130; Martin Tinde, $75; Julius Liebig, $160; Louis Kranz, $75; Herman Esmer, $50; August Swanke, $200; John Hursley, Fred Radtkin, and Martin Radkie, $100; William Spooner, $100; Franz Zuilki, $100; Juliana Countryman, $200; Joseph Guderski, $20; Frederick Boick, $180; William Fuchs, $75; John O. Borst, $175; S. A. Hake, $25; Ephraim Mueller, $250; August Behm, $125; G. H. Behm, $65; Caroline Fuller, $65; Ernest Lambrecht, $100; John Larson, $225; Christian Temple, $233; S. Y. Judd, $500; Elizabeth Owens, $300; Henry Talbe and Ferdinand Retz, appealed, $250; John Jones, $350; John Michaels, $124; D. S. Kissam, $450; Julia Hopp, $100; Adam McKittrick, $400; James Lynch, $300; Ernest Liebenhaur, $300; John B. Wyso, $100; William McClelland, $50; William Zanto, $200; Michael Glynn, $75; Hollis Stedman, $50; J. J. Keen, $100; Datis E. Lewis, $125; Alonzo D. Payne, $200; Francis L. Smith, Erastus H. Payne, and Horace D. Smith, $260; Amos C. Brown and Lucy Brown, $175; William Stewart, $120; Joseph M. Hodgkins and Samuel C. Hall, $20; John McClelland, $50; Henry Falbe, or Phelps, $50; Tracy W. Lewis, $70; C. A. Peck, $200; E. H. Payne and Sarah E. Rigley, $80; W. J. Middleton, $150; Vincent S. Sawinski, $50; John Rude, $80; Hugh Lynch, $50; William Gordon, $200; Thomas J. Dewey, $150; Amanda A. Bugh, $150; Henry Basing, $100; Ferdinand Marion, $150; N. M. Dodson, $150.90; George Fitch and D. W. G. Palmeter, $75; Mrs. T. W. Marsh, $75; Gustave Raasch, $60; W. J. Frank, $125; Edward Teske and Gustave Teske, $175; De Los Maxon, $100; Joseph Melodzek, $205; Lea Kennan, $912; Charles H. Kempley, $595.25; Anna Eliza Page and Margaret Jane Page, $600; John Roger, $338.50; Edward McCaffery and Asiel Waldo, $263.20; Abraham Seaman, $643.54; Samuel Phoenix, 314.50; Harriet B. Cramer, $53.04; Isaac Pickering, $118.66; Jane Pickering, $107.27; F. B. Hawes, $430.35; Lyman R. Slade, $126.99; A. W. Whitson and T. Whitson, $290.70; Charles Metcalf, $406.13; Elizabeth Morris, $65.00; Margaret Bohrner, Theodore Bohrner, and Frank Bohrner, $392.30; Spencer A. Pease, $375; Henry W. Rockafellow, $148.60; John and Richard Mee and F. A. Kendall, $241.60; C. C. Mathers, $332.25; Eli McNutt, Hiram McNutt, and Engelina Waldo, $902.62; J. H. Merritt, $434.25; William Hartwig, $50; John McNab, 334.35; Mary A. Leach, $150.40; Robert Weir, $626.70; Mathew Span, $50; Wilhelmina Retz, $43.14; Andrew Kewitz, $15.80; G. Liebenhaur, $15.80; David Evans, $15.80; Frederick Hault, $16,

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to raise a point of order on that proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman raise the point of order as applying to the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. BRAGG, as well as the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. GUENTHER?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not know whether the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] desires to have the question of order decided at once, or prefers first to make his statement.

Mr. BRAGG. I prefer it should be decided at once.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana did not understand the Chair. The inquiry of the Chair was, whether the point of order was raised as applicable to the proposition of the gentleman from Wisconsin on the right [Mr. BRAGG] or that of the gentleman from Wisconsin on the left [Mr. GUENTHER].

Mr. HOLMAN. The proposition just read.

Mr. BRAGG. There was no point of order taken to the proposition I made which was read to the House.

The CHAIRMAN. So the Chair understood.

Mr. BRAGG. It has passed beyond the reach of a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. That was the understanding of the Chair.

Mr. HOLMAN. I had not observed the reading of the other proposition. If this, however, was read immediately afterward, I submit that perhaps it is not too late still to make the point of order.

Mr. BRAGG. I will state to the gentleman from Indiana that after the proposition which I submitted had been read, my colleague on the right [Mr. GUENTHER] moved an amendment. There was no point of order taken on my proposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. At that moment I was otherwise employed, so that I did not notice it.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The point would be in time, notwithstanding the reading of the other amendment, there having been no debate on the first proposition.

Mr. HOLMAN. If there was no intermediate business, I submit the point of order could still be made; that is to say, if one gentleman offers a proposition and another gentleman immediately moves to amend it, I submit that a point of order lies to the whole, there having been no intervening debate.

Mr. BRAGG. I am willing to submit that question to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. In the opinion of the Chair the point of order applies only to the proposed amendment to the amendment, no point of order having been made upon the original proposition. Does the gentleman from Indiana desire to insist upon the point of order as applicable to the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GUENTHER]?

Mr. HOLMAN. I do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the point of order.

Mr. HOLMAN. So far as I am aware there is no law under which the Government of the United States is liable for the payment of these claims; that is the first point. Secondly, this amendment is not for a deficiency of an appropriation, because there never was an appropriation for this purpose, and therefore there could not be a deficit.

Mr. BRAGG. The gentleman is mistaken on that point.

Mr. HOLMAN. As to these judgments?

Mr. BRAGG. As to there having been an appropriation heretofore made.

Mr. HOLMAN. For the payment of these judgments?

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir; but for this purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. I mean there has been no appropriation made for the payment of these claims.

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir; there has been.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think not.

Mr. BRAGG. I state what I know to be the fact.

Mr. HOLMAN. I make the point of order that there is no law for this; and, in any event, these are not deficits, but at best simply equitable claims against the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to what this amendment proposes. It is—

For the payment of unappealed awards and judgments rendered against the United States for flowage damages caused by the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, in the State of Wisconsin, as follows—

Now, suppose these are valid claims against the United States——

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir; if the fact is shown that they are valid judgments against the United States——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is obliged to judge of the matter as it is presented to the committee.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish to be heard a moment on that point. This is a bill providing for certain deficiencies in appropriations heretofore made. Assume that under an act passed some years ago, after the Government had obtained possession of this property, the Fox and Wisconsin River improvement, there was authority to assert these claims in the district court, and they were asserted and allowed to the extent named, does that make them deficits so as to entitle them to a place on this appropriation bill, or do they become simply claims against the United States like any other claims? I am objecting not only on account of the absence of law authorizing these judgments against the United States, but also on the ground that they are not germane to this bill, but belong to other committees of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule. This bill contains a large number of appropriations for judgments rendered by the Court of Claims. We have this morning skipped a number of pages of that kind of matter by general consent. The Chair is at a loss to know why a judgment rendered by any other authorized tribunal is not a proper subject for appropriation under this bill.

Mr. HOLMAN. But I ask the Chair, is this a deficiency in an appropriation? This bill covers simply deficiencies—not in the administration of the Government, because that would cover everything but appropriations, the object of the bill being to make up deficiencies in appropriations heretofore made.

The CHAIRMAN. Have there not been in former appropriation bills appropriations to pay judgments against the United States?

Mr. BRAGG. Always.

Mr. HOLMAN. I did not hear the remark of the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair supposes that former appropriation bills appropriated money to pay judgments against the United States; and it appears that there are other judgments for which appropriations have not been made. It seems to the Chair that those judgments may properly be appropriated for in this bill. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. HOLMAN. I should like to see some law authorizing the judgments.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order, assuming that there is such law.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Chair, therefore, assumes that there was a law authorizing these appropriations for the payment of these judgments against the United States.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana misapprehends the Chair. This is to pay judgments. If there is no law authorizing the payment of judgments the Committee of the Whole will refuse to adopt the amendment.

Mr. BURNES. If the Chair will permit me, I wish to call attention to the fact that in the amendment are certain claims for mere awards of damages that have not gone into judgment.

The CHAIRMAN. Are they not judgments unless appealed from?
Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir.
The CHAIRMAN. The Chair overrules the point of order.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. MCCOOK, its Secretary, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House was requested, the bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its sitting.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, I desire the attention of the committee, and particularly the attention of gentlemen on this side of the Chamber, while I present as briefly as I may the facts applicable to the case covered by the amendment offered to this bill. I know how difficult it is for members of Congress to think and act for themselves. How much easier it is to follow like sheep running over the bridge after the leader than to determine to go first; and therefore, although I may not be able to prick the iron-clad consciences of the Appropriations Committee, I hope to arouse the individual consciences of members of Congress sufficiently to have them act upon their own judgment instead of blindly following and taking without question the medicine that is administered to them by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. Chairman, it is difficult for me to say whether I offer this amendment with feelings more of regret or astonishment because of the action of the Appropriations Committee, which forces upon me the necessity of offering it—astonishment that a committee representing the Democratic party, that great champion of honesty, economy, and reform, should place themselves in an attitude of repudiating the just obligations of this Government, that have been litigated in the courts, and that, too, after the property of private citizens has been taken and condemned by a law passed by this body, and regret that I should be obliged to make that statement with reference to such a committee.

Let us see what the facts of the matter are. In years gone by the Government of the United States, for the purpose, as was alleged and supposed, of improving its water ways, made appropriations, and they have been making them ever since, for improving the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers in order to make a complete line of water communication between the Mississippi River and the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the Atlantic Ocean by the Erie Canal. In order to do that we have made year after year appropriations for the construction and maintenance of dams.

As a member representing a portion of the country affected by these dams, years ago I entered my protest against such appropriation, but this House and the Congress have continued to make them; and in order to satisfy the demands of the citizens affected by these appropriations Congress passed an act providing for the condemnation of all lands affected by the flowage resulting from these dams and for the adjustment of the claims. Under that law commissioners were appointed, the United States being present by its attorney and representing them in the appointment of commissioners. These commissioners long and patiently took the proofs on the side of the Government and on the side of the people whose land was flowed under that act.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. BURNES. Under the arrangement made on yesterday the gentleman from Wisconsin was entitled to half an hour.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was not aware of that arrangement.

Mr. BRAGG. Many of these claims and all of those which are not specified as judgments in the amendment are awards which under the law have the force and effect of a judgment, no appeal having been taken within thirty days. The United States never appealed from these awards, and they stand and have the force and effect of judgments. In the case of James Pumpelly in 1876, ten years ago nearly, for it was in December, 1876, he recovered a judgment upon an award, on a trial had by a jury, for $10,000 and costs.

The Government of the United States appealed from that judgment, and the supreme court of the State of Wisconsin affirmed that judgment. The Government then made a question whether the United States through Congress could be compelled by law to submit to the decision of a tribunal other than the Federal courts. That judgment came to the Supreme Court of the United States and was there decided and affirmed—a decision rendered affirming the judgment. So that we have an award, a trial, and retrial in the supreme court of the State, and a trial in the Supreme Court of the United States; and still my distinguished friend from Indiana says there is no liability. I am absolutely astonished that these men attempt to repudiate such a judgment. They have plenty of money to appropriate to condemn and destroy the lands of the farmers along the river and lake affected by this improvement, but they have no money to pay for it when it is done; and when we come here, years having passed, and enter complaint, they pass a law providing for the adjustment of this claim; but when we come again they repudiate the claim.

I do not state this with reference to all of the members of the Committee on Appropriations, for if I am correctly informed the subcommittee adhered to the doctrine of economy and reform, which I understand means honesty on the part of the Government and in the discharge of all the functions of the Government. In the last session of Congress they came here again and repudiated it. The Committee on Appropriations repudiated it again because it was not sufficiently clear what amount ought to be paid; and, as before, when they asked for bread these gentlemen gave them what they supposed was going to be a stone, and if you allow them to do what they choose it will be a stone. They passed an act which you will find as chapter 359 of the laws of 1885, I think in the sundry civil bill.

The Attorney-General of the United States is required—

To investigate the judgments and awards against the United States arising under an act of Congress entitled "An act to aid in the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers in the State of Wisconsin," approved March 3, 1875, and to report to Congress at its next session whether the liability of the United States therefor is established and what amount is justly due thereon.

When that came here last year after ten years' solicitation, instead of paying the judgments of the Supreme Court of the United States and other judgments, Congress passed a law asking the opinion of the Attorney-General whether the Government was liable to pay them or not. The Attorney-General has filed his opinion. He has made his report under the law; it is Executive Document No. 207. That document was before the Committee on Appropriations, and in it he certifies that these are just and final adjudications against the United States, and there is no reason why they should not be paid. But still, sir, they come in here and throw them out of the bill. Where will they go next for an excuse? Last year they wanted an opinion of the Attorney-General. This year they have got the opinion of the Attorney-General. But they stand still in the old rut, repudiate the opinion of the Attorney-General upon the law of the case, and make a new point of order that there is no law authorizing it, although the chief law officer of the United States has certified to them as final adjudications.

All this is done under the plea of economy. If there is to be any application of the principle of economy as it seems to be understood by my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], let it be in failing to appropriate money for new objects. Let it be in stopping from launching out anew and let economy be construed in its democratic sense to mean what it ought to mean and what it means everywhere except behind the curtains of the Appropriations Committee—honesty. Honesty means the payment of the debts which you have already made while you have the money to pay them instead of going on making new debts and making no provision for them. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this House ought to be reminded that the provision of the Constitution of the United States which provides that no property shall be taken for public use without just compensation therefor is law enough to answer all the objections of the gentleman from Indiana. We stand here in the attitude of supplicants. Why? Because the law they apply to us is the law of the highwayman who has his foot on his victim and his pistol at his head, and says, "Hand over to me voluntarily the money you have got," and the man is obliged to do so. That is the law they apply to us. And why? We can not take proceedings by mandamus to compel the United States to pay those debts. There is no responsibility resting on these men. If there were judgments against them in a private capacity they would be promptly paid. But they can shirk the responsibility by dodging behind the committee and come and ask the House of Representatives to indorse their action of dishonesty in repudiating the adjudicated claims against the United States under the flimsy plea of economy.

I now yield to my colleague, Mr. GUENTHER.

Mr. GUENTHER. Mr. Chairman, my colleague, General BRAGG, has explained the history of these claims and situation so completely that little remains for me to say.

I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that these awards, made in pursuance of the act of Congress of March 3, 1875, chapter 166, were not only not excessive, but so low that frequently when the Government took an appeal to the courts the result was that the valuation was increased.

The gentleman who for years was the assistant attorney, appointed by the Attorney-General to represent the interests of the United States, is now a member of this House.

He knows, I think, almost every case, and has personally inspected most of the lands, or rather what used to be land. I hope that he will give his views to the House after I have finished.

Now, Mr. Chairman, put yourself in the place of these people. There are nearly two hundred of them in the district which I have the honor to represent. They bought their land either from the United States or from the State or private parties. They cultivated and improved it in the sweat of their brows. After a while, through the erection of dams for the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, their property was destroyed by being permanently overflowed, either wholly or partly. Through no fault of theirs, without their consent, their property was virtually wholly or partly confiscated for public use.

Now, what kind of Government would this be which after their own Attorney-General says that nothing remains to be done except to make payment refuses to do so?

I read from the letter of the Attorney-General, transmitted to the House of Representatives April 29, 1886:

The amount of the unappealed awards and the amount of the judgments rendered, as above set forth, make together the sum of $88,963.16. As to these cases the proceedings are at an end, and nothing remains to be done except to make payment. From the information obtained by me I am satisfied that the liability of the United States for such awards and judgments, respectively, is established agreeably to law, and hence that the amount of each is justly due thereon.

Upon what grounds could we justify a refusal to pay these judgments? Certainly not on the plea of economy. Then it would be economy to refuse what one owes. On this ground we might save many millions a year, but I hardly believe that a majority of this House is willing to gain a reputation for that kind of economy, which would be nothing less than dishonest repudiation.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. GUENTHER. Yes, sir.

Mr. CANNON. What I wish to inquire is whether the amendment offered by the gentleman's colleague [Mr. BRAGG] and the amendment offered by the gentleman himself [Mr. GUENTHER] covers the claims mentioned in the paragraph read from the letter of the Attorney-General aggregating $88,963.16, and no others?

Mr. GUENTHER. None but those.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not think we are a nation of repudiators. Can we afford in justice, in equity, in honor to ignore the just demands of these people because we have the power to do it? They are mostly poor, hard-working farmers.

I personally know of some who have been brought to a condition of actual suffering by losing, through no fault of their own, their land, their means upon which they relied to gain a living.

It would be a crying shame, it would be in violation of every principle of justice to withhold from these citizens that which they are justly entitled to.

They rely upon you for justice. For God's sake, give it to them. They have waited for it long enough. Many of these awards were made ten and eleven years ago.

I appeal to gentlemen on both sides of this Chamber to vote for my amendment as well as that of my colleague [Mr. BRAGG].

Should there be any doubt in your minds about this appropriation, give it, I beg you, to these two hundred poor, hard-working, honest farmers of my State. Do not allow it to be said that this great Government, with an overflowing Treasury, refuses to pay judgments against itself recovered by its own citizens in pursuance of law enacted by the Congress of the United States.

I appeal to your sense of justice and fairness as well as to your sympathies with these poor and honest Western farmers. Make this just appropriation, and you will have the satisfaction that you not only did right, but also sent joy to the humble firesides of hundreds of worthy people. Do it, and the sins that you committed in not doing it long ago will be forgiven.

I yield to my colleague [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, I personally know in relation to these awards and their justice. I was the attorney of the United States in the trial before the commissioners and the courts of all, or nearly all, these cases. I have personally examined the lands. The commissioners were not selected from the vicinage, they were impartial men, and whenever the claimants appealed from the judgment of the commissioners the awards were doubled, tripled, and in some instances quadrupled. The awards have been made strictly under the statute of the United States, and the legality and constitutionality of that act and of the act of the State under which the awards were made in pursuance of the act of Congress have been affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States. These are awards for lands taken by the Government of the United States in the improvement of the Fox River, lands belonging to the farmers along the banks of the river which were overflowed and destroyed or injured by these improvements, and, as I have said, they were made in pursuance of the act of Congress; they are reasonable and just, and, if tried by a jury of the vicinage, the awards would be three or four times as large as they are now.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has eight minutes.

Mr. BRAGG. I reserve that.

Mr. BURNES. I now yield ten minutes to my colleague on the committee [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I shall consume anywhere near that time unless it be in reading a paper. The history of this transaction is not a very pleasant one. We made a grant of land years ago to aid in constructing an improvement in the State of Wisconsin. That improvement was in part made. Afterward, perhaps about the year 1875 or 1876, the Government concluded to become the owner of the property, and, by legislative action, entered into an engagement by which it undertook to pay the amount of the assessed value of the property and took charge of the work. That measure was carried out, and, if I remember correctly, some $200,000 or $300,000 was appropriated for the purpose. About the same time, perhaps at the same time, an act seems to have been passed to authorize the circuit court to appoint commissioners to assess damages to persons whose property would be affected by the construction of the works in contemplation for the improvement of the navigation of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, a series of locks and dams and other constructions. The result of all this work has been, in the main, a complete failure, as I think the gentleman from Wisconsin is well aware.

Mr. BRAGG. Have you not appropriated this year $80,000 or $90,000 more to go on with that work and rob these people of more of their lands?

Mr. HOLMAN. It is true that the river and harbor bill does contain just such a provision, but the gentleman from Wisconsin, I think, will not say that that is an expenditure which ought to be made. That the Government has expended a vast sum of money upon these works under ingenious plans there is no doubt whatever; but the question is whether or not these judgments should be paid. Now, the gentleman from Wisconsin is quite mistaken in supposing that this is entirely a one-sided case. I admit that the present Attorney-General of the United States has written to the House in relation to these claims as follows:

The amount of the unappealed awards and the amount of the judgments rendered, as above set forth, make together the sum of $88,963.16. As to these cases the proceedings are at an end, and nothing remains to be done except to make payment.

Now, right here I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Wisconsin whether these two lists together, or either of them (for I see one is an amendment to the other, not a substitute), embrace the whole of the $88,963.16, or go beyond it?

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir; they embrace just that amount. The amendment which I offer embraces the two judgments, one of $10,000 and costs, and the other for $19,000 and costs.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Judgments of the Court of Claims?

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir; the large judgment was by the Supreme Court of the United States, which settled the law controlling all the others.

Mr. HOLMAN. How does it happen that you two gentlemen submit two propositions?

Mr. BRAGG. I can explain that. I present a proposition representing the interests of my constituents——

Mr. GUENTHER. And the residue of these claims are from my district; so I introduced the other amendment.

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, these two large judgments, as I understand from the gentleman from Wisconsin, have been affirmed by the Supreme Court, and as a matter of course they will have to be paid.

Mr. CUTCHEON. And why should they not be paid on this bill?

Mr. HOLMAN. But these, as I understand, are claims against the old company for damages which accrued during the time of its existence, not for damages created by the United States, if my memory is correct.

Mr. BRAGG. Let me answer that point, as the gentleman is seeking legal information. If the claims existed against anybody other than the United States, how did the parties happen to recover judgment against the United States with the United States defending and interposing all their pleas?

Mr. HOLMAN. That would seem to be a very pertinent question.

Mr. BRAGG. Very pertinent, for nobody ever discovered the point which the gentleman makes except the Committee on Appopriations.

Mr. HOLMAN. The Committee on Appropriations in the last Congress submitted the whole facts, and the House thought it not proper at that time to make appropriation without further information. The House was not then able to ascertain, and the Committee on Appropriations has not up to this time been able to ascertain, how it happened under the legislation which occurred that the Government of the United States was responsible for damages perpetrated by the corporation from which they received this property.

Mr. BRAGG. Was not the proposition ruled out last year on a point of order?

Mr. HOLMAN. It was up, anyhow.

Mr. BRAGG. Then the House did not act on it at all.

Mr. HOLMAN. The last information we have on this subject comes from the assistant attorney at Berlin, Wis., who had charge of these cases; and I ask that a portion of his report be read in my time, as I would be glad to have the committee in possession of all the facts.

Mr. BRAGG. Before the gentleman sends that up—I know he does not intend anything unfair——

Mr. HOLMAN. No, sir.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman state that the document to which he refers is an appendix to the opinion of the Attorney-General, and that the opinion of the Attorney-General is based upon it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes, sir. I ask that the communication from Mr. Waring, assistant attorney, dated Berlin, Wis., March 29, 1886, be read, as it explains this matter much more fully than any statement I could make.

The Clerk read as follows:

BERLIN, WIS., March 29, 1886.

SIR: In pursuance of instructions contained in your letter of the 15th instant, I have the honor to transmit herewith a full and complete statement of the judgments and awards for flowage damages which have already been rendered against the United States in proceedings instituted under the laws of Wisconsin, and agreeably to the provisions of the act of Congress of March 3, 1875, chapter 166, giving the names of the claimants respectively, the date and amount of each judgment or award. In addition to these cases in which an award has been made, petitions have been filed in quite a number of cases in which no other proceedings have been had. It will be observed that there are pending on appeal to the circuit court in Fond du Lac County thirty-two cases, in Winnebago County ten cases, in Marquette County eight cases, and in Green Lake County one case——

Mr. HOLMAN (interrupting the Clerk). The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] thinks the reading of that whole letter will take too much time. I ask that it may go entire into the RECORD.

Mr. BRAGG. I object to that going in unless the opinion of the Attorney-General goes along with it.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I ask the Clerk to continue the reading.

Mr. BRAGG. I make the point that it is not in order to have part of a document read; I insist that the whole must be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana can have read in his own time anything he pleases.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am having the whole document read.

The Clerk (resuming the reading) read as follows:

The most of these appeals were taken by the United States. In a few both parties appealed. Nearly all the cases in which damages were awarded to the claimant tried prior to 1877 were appealed. This is noticeably apparent in cases originating in Fond du Lac County. The damages claimed and awarded to lands in that county were much greater, as will appear from the statement sent, than in any other county; in fact, greater than the damages claimed and awarded in all the other five counties together.

Mr. BRAGG. My understanding with the gentleman in charge of the bill is that if this document goes into the RECORD the whole document goes in.

Mr. HOLMAN. The whole of this document.

Mr. BURNES. The gentleman from Wisconsin shall have our consent to put into the RECORD any part of this executive document that he desires.

Mr. BRAGG. I wish it all in.

Mr. BURNES. The gentleman can ask consent to have it printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am only asking to have put in the RECORD the report of the attorney having charge of these cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HOLMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] yields me a moment more.

This attorney of the Government says:

As the officers in charge of the improvement have determined to maintain the water at its present height by the erection of a new dam (now in process of construction), and the Goverment having by act of Congress of March 3, 1875 (chap. 166), voluntarily assumed (according to the construction of that act by the courts) the payment of these damages, is there any other way than to pay the same when fairly and legally ascertained?

Whether it would be policy for Congress to make an appropriation in payment of any of these claims until the beginning of the end of these applications can be seen may be doubtful, and I would suggest that the cases pending on appeal should be in some manner disposed of before an appropriation is made for the payment of any of the claims.

The question arises in this form: The Government makes an embankment that throws the water back, and the engineers decided it to be a failure and ultimately determined to abandon it. The question is whether the Government in equity should pay the whole of the damages notwithstanding the fact that the property is returned entirely to the respective owners. It is one of the most unfortunate pieces of work the Government ever went into. They received no benefit from it. It has already expended hundreds of thousands of dollars and it originally constructed the work by grants of the public land. It is one of the instances where by shrewd management large sums have been drawn from the public Treasury and other sums are required as the result, and yet there is no good to the country.

Mr. BURNES. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN].

Mr. REAGAN. I was not in the House when the committee took up this subject, and had not therefore the benefit of hearing the suggestions which have been made in the course of the discussion. This is a subject which can not be discussed with satisfaction in a few minutes.

The House ought to know there have been first and last nearly $2,000,000 appropriated for the construction of slack-water navigation on the route called the Fox and Wisconsin route, connecting the Mississippi River with Green Bay. Those appropriations have gone sometimes as high as $500,000 a year. When those appropriations were being made I had occasion to consult with the Chief of Engineers in regard to the practicability of the construction of this route and had this opinion, that while it might be practicable to construct slack-water navigation up the Fox, it was not the belief of the engineers that it was practicable to construct slack-water navigation down the Wisconsin.

Upon that information Congress refused to appropriate on the authority of the Chief of Engineers. The Senate put in an appropriation, notwithstanding this view of the Engineer Department.

I merely make this statement preliminary to another. I am not prepared to make a full statement, however, but it is important this House should understand before it appropriates the sum of money exactly what it is doing.

The construction of that very extensive work on Fox River may serve to some extent for the purpose of navigation, but it has resulted under a construction of the action of the State of Wisconsin and the action of the Congress of the United States in extensive works being used for the purpose of private parties. Many manufacturing mills are established there, and the water-power is furnished to them at the expense of the Federal Government.

I understand, then, the claims here (an imperfect understanding, however) are claims for damages done to property by overflow produced by the construction of these works. They come here and ask extravagant appropriations for public works. They divert them to private uses. Damages accrue on account of the construction of these works used by them to propel machinery, and then they come here to Congress and levy additional tribute on the country in payment of damages these works produce mainly or largely for their benefit.

This subject ought to be understood by the House. It can not be understood now. I can not undertake to make a statement of the legislation and facts from which the statement I have made has been developed. It has been my duty to investigate this subject to ascertain the facts. I asked the House once for the passage, which I secured, of a resolution calling for information as to the number of private establishments which were being run by the water-power from the public works on the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers. There came a report which evaded the whole question. Subsequently I was not on the committee having charge of the subject.

But the whole work deserves to be overhauled. Congress has the right to know why the Government should be held responsible for the construction of works at public expense for private benefit, from some cause I do not understand, because I have not read the whole of this debate—because there has been damage from overflow of public works.

Mr. BRAGG. If a judgment is recovered against the United States and it has become final, is there any place for retrial of that judgment? Would the gentleman from Texas, as a lawyer, say there was?

Mr. REAGAN. I have been accustomed to see proceedings inaugurated and carried through against the United States that would hardly command the approval of any good lawyer, moralist, or legislator. I would not appropriate for this purpose until these facts are known and until it was seen whether the Government had been properly treated in obtaining these judgments. Although the Government may be technically liable, still if these judgments are based on false pretenses, and that can be made to appear, I believe it is the right of Congress to refuse to appropriate money to satisfy them.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is the reason why I was anxious to have read the letter of the attorney having charge of these works.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURNES. How much time have I left?

The CHAIRMAN. Twelve minutes.

Mr. BURNES. I will reserve that time until I can hear from my friend from Wisconsin.

Mr. BRAGG. Mr. Chairman, the remarks made by the gentleman from Texas, who always gives us sound information, and generally sound advice, exhibited this remarkable fact, that it is not generally valuable to take part in debate unless you know what is being debated. The gentleman from Texas says Congress has the right to know by what authority these judgments were rendered. If he had read the report of the Attorney-General he would have found several acts, and acts every one of which I think was voted for by him, under which the jurisdiction was vested and authority was taken.

The Attorney-General has specifically given every single act of Congress in which these proceedings were had and by which the authority was conferred. Now, the gentleman says in addition that he has a right to know, even if authority was conferred, that the Government had been honestly and fairly treated and had not been swindled in making these awards. If the gentleman had been in his seat and had listened to the statements of the United States attorney who tried the cases, and who sits here upon my right, wherein he stated that he had attended on behalf of the Government and himself, made personal inspection of all the lands covered by water, and examined all of the witnesses, and that the prices fixed by the commission, by men selected from other counties, were low instead of high, and before the awards were made that all of the information on which they could be based was in the possession of the commission, I think perhaps he would not have made that assertion——

Mr. REAGAN. Let me interrupt the gentleman. I can not undertake to say——

Mr. BRAGG. I can not yield to the gentleman for a speech.

Mr. REAGAN. Permit me to say only this, that from the very beginning of the time that I went on the Committee on Commerce, as long as that subject was before it, I made an effort to expose the frauds of that Fox and Wisconsin work both in the committee and in the House.

Mr. BRAGG. Now, sir, we are told again that large sums, enormous sums, have been used for this purpose, and that they have been appropriated for these improvements but have been diverted from their legitimate purposes by us. Who does he mean by "us" when he says we have diverted them? The money that has been appropriated thus far has been expended under the direction of the War Department, if he means us. If there has been any diversion of the money to an improper use it has been under the sanction of one of the Departments of this Government; and is he prepared to stand up in his place as a legislator and say when he gives money for an appropriation and the authorized agents of the United States proceed to disburse it, whether it be hundreds or thousands or millions, that he shall shirk the responsibility of making the payments for the wrong done in carrying out Federal legislation through Federal agencies?

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman allow me a question?

Mr. BRAGG. Certainly; with the greatest pleasure.

Mr. HOLMAN. The judgment in favor of Augustus G. Ruggles for $19,949.47, or rather the award, is dated on the 4th day of last January. The time has not yet elapsed in which an appeal can be taken, I believe.

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir; it has.

Mr. HOLMAN. If it has expired, is the gentleman aware of the fact as to whether such an appeal has or has not been taken?

Mr. BRAGG. I know that it has not been taken, and the Attorney-General certifies that it has not.

Mr. HOLMAN. When and where does he certify to that fact?

Mr. BRAGG. There, sir, in that very document he certifies a list of the awards from which appeals had been taken. The whole list is set out.

Mr. HOLMAN. That document is certified to on the 29th day of April.

Mr. BRAGG. Yes, sir.

Mr. HOLMAN. And some time has elapsed since then within which the appeal might have been filed.

Mr. BRAGG. I can not stop, Mr. Chairman, to open a law school to teach the gentleman from Indiana when the appeal must be taken or when the limit of appeal expires.

Mr. HOLMAN. I think an appeal would yet lie in that case.

Mr. BRAGG. And I know it would not; and I will take that very case as an illustration, for I tried it.

Mr. HOLMAN. On the part of the Government or the claimant?

Mr. BRAGG. No, sir; not on the part of the Government; I tried it against the Government. In 1876 Augustus G. Ruggles took that appeal on an award, and that has lain there ever since 1876 and not entered into judgment, because the case of Pumpelly was sent through to the Supreme Court of the United States, as the United States officers stated that it was necessary to have a case decided in the Supreme Court to settle the liability under the law. Hence, that case of Ruggles was left standing for ten years under the award, in order that the United States Supreme Court might establish the law, the assurance being given that when the law would be established there would be no further carping on the subject. That is the reason it stood so long. The court took the Pumpelly case and established the law, and the Ruggles case was moved for trial and judgment entered upon the award. In Wisconsin, in order to take an appeal which affects anything but the record, a bill of exceptions must be settled within sixty days after the rendition of the judgment. I do not know that I shall be able to post my friend from Indiana as to the practice in that State.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, I said nothing about a bill of exceptions.

Mr. BRAGG. But that is all there is of the appeal. The Supreme Court decided the question upon the record in the Pumpelly case; no appeal was taken, no bill of exceptions filed, and the Attorney-General certifies that judgment as final.

Now, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I think you who have paid attention are fully posted as to the merits of this case. There are judgments, some of ten years' standing, that are repudiated by the committee and payment refused.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURNES. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL. I do not pretend to discuss here the legal points involved in this case or whether the Congress of the United States did right or wrong in delegating to a State court the adjustment of a claim against the Federal Government. But I do say that the whole proceeding from the beginning to the end of this matter induced, and I may properly say compelled, the Committee on Appropriations to resist this payment in every way possible; and I do not believe but what the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] if he had himself been a member of that committee would have done the same thing.

Originally, the United States Government made a grant of land to the State of Wisconsin. The State of Wisconsin donated this land to this corporation. After a while the corporation got tired of the enterprise; and then it was that there was an application to the Government to take possession at a certain price. The award of damages against the Government, whereby the Government assumed the ownership, if I remember aright—and I hope the gentleman will correct me if I do not state the figures correctly—the award was about a million of dollars, but there was deducted from that the value of the land which the Government originally gave to the State of Wisconsin, and which left the Government of the United States actually indebted to this corporation to the extent of $300,000, or thereabouts.

Mr. BRAGG. I think it was less. I believe it was $124,000.

Mr. BURNES. Originally $325,000, and it was subsequently reduced to what the gentleman from Wisconsin states.

Mr. RANDALL. When we came to complete this work, if my memory serves me right, the Government to this $300,000 or thereabout has added appropriations aggregating $1,100,000. It is stated by some as being a little larger.

Mr. REAGAN. The appropriations have amounted to $1,940,000, nearly two millions.

Mr. RANDALL. I understood the amount was about $1,100,000.

Mr. BRAGG. It is more than that. Will the gentleman from Pennsylvania permit me to make a suggestion?

Mr. RANDALL. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRAGG. In the Forty-sixth or Forty-seventh Congress on this floor I offered an amendment to the river and harbor bill appointing a commission of civil engineers, not connected with the Government works, for the purpose of reporting whether we should make any appropriation.

Mr. RANDALL. I give the gentleman the credit of that.

Mr. BRAGG. And the gentleman from Pennsylvania resisted my amendment and it was beaten.

Mr. RANDALL. I have resisted everything in connection with this enterprise from the beginning. In addition to the arrangement made originally we had to expend $1,100,000, or, as the gentleman from Texas states it, $1,900,000. And then how was the Government treated? There was a reservation that these people should have the rentals, so that we built this improvement; but the corporation reserves all the income from our money.

Now, I think that justified the Committee on Appropriations in resisting to the fullest extent, and continuously, this appropriation of money. That is all I have got to say. This is the history, and I wanted to state the history of it to the House so that the committee might be aware what prompted the Committee on Appropriations in its continual resistance to this measure.

Mr. BURNES. I yield half of the time which remains to me to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. CANNON. In the original legislation under which these liabilities of the Government accrued I had no lot or part. It may have been an unwise grant. For the sake of the argument let us say it was. Nevertheless the legislation was had. In addition to that, the United States has provided a forum in which its citizens have litigated their rights under the act of Congress, and those damages have been reduced to judgments. They are awards from which there is no appeal.

The responsibility of the United States as reported by the Attorney-General is fixed. As to $88,000 of these judgments and awards, wise or unwise, right or wrong, the liability of the Government is fixed, and nothing remains to be done, in the language of the Attorney-General, but to pay; and until we do pay they draw interest at 6 per cent. There is the whole thing in a nutshell.

Mr. REED, of Maine. In other words, if the gentleman will permit me, the Committee on Appropriations are fighting an execution.

Mr. CANNON. Precisely so. And they go on talking about the interest of somebody in Wisconsin in the water-power, talking about the wisdom or unwisdom of the original legislation—in other words, going to a last year's bird's nest.

Mr. BLAND. Are these the same parties who are interested in the water-power?

Mr. CANNON. I do not know. I am told by the gentleman from Wisconsin that some of these men are poor men whose lands were overflowed and who have recovered damages in the tribunal provided by the Government, and now that we are at an end of the whole question there is nothing left to us but to appropriate and make the best of a bad bargain; get out of that bad bargain if we can, and in the future make no more bad bargains.

Mr. FINDLAY and Mr. GUENTHER desired to address questions to Mr. CANNON.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] having reserved to himself one-half of the time that remained to him when the gentleman from Illinois rose.

Mr. BURNES. I have but a word to say. So long as my friend from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG] confined his proposition to the naked legal question, so long as he merely claimed he had a legal right to the payment of his judgment, then so long I sympathized with his statement and approved of his argument. The gentleman has appealed to the forum of conscience; he has alluded to the iron-clad conscience of the Appropriations Committee, and contrasted it with the conscience of the gentlemen in Wisconsin who are pressing this matter on us. I simply accept the issue and say to this House—and I ask my colleague on the committee [Mr. CANNON] to correct me if I do not state it correctly—in that forum there can be no question as to the dishonesty of these claims and of these judgments. These claims and judgments ought not to be paid by the representatives of the people of this country who are acting here as the sovereign legislative power of the Republic. True, there is a technical judgment of the courts of the State of Wisconsin. It has been stated that there were judgments of the Supreme Court. The opinion of the Supreme Court upon a made-up case has been given, but when you go to the issues that were tried in Wisconsin, they were tried by a Wisconsin jury, tried in Wisconsin courts, appealed to the supreme court of Wisconsin——

Mr. GUENTHER. There are just as honest men in Wisconsin as anywhere else.

Mr. BURNES. I have no doubt of it, and there are just at honest Representatives on this floor from Wisconsin as from Missouri or any other State, and chief among them are my two friends who are urging these amendments.

Mr. BRAGG. Will the gentleman permit me to correct him in one statement?

Mr. BURNES. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRAGG. This question was not submitted to the Supreme Court on "a made-up case." The United States appealed a case to the Supreme Court and appeared and argued it by Solicitor-General Phillips.

Mr. BURNES. I admit that.

Mr. BLAND. I wish to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin whether any of these parties to whom these payments are proposed to be made are the parties interested in this water-power?

Mr. GUENTHER. Not one.

Mr. BURNES. In answer to my colleague [Mr. BLAND] I will say that there is a company of gentlemen there who have sold the Wisconsin River and reserved the water. [Laughter.]

Mr. GUENTHER. But they are not the parties who have sustained these damages.

Mr. BURNES. No matter. They were the owners of these lands which we gave them in our bounty. We gave them $1,048,000 in money for their improvements, we gave them $700,000 worth of land at a minimum price, and we now have against us claims of $200,000 or $300,000 for damages done by the water which belongs to the manufacturing industries established there. Their water has done this damage, not ours, and every dollar that is appropriated for continuing the work simply raises that water higher and higher and overflows the land which belonged to this company, and has been disposed of by them to people in that vicinity at probably from $5 to $10 an acre, they accounting to us at $1.25. I ask this House not to consider this proposition until the next session of Congress.

Mr. BRAGG. That is what you ask continually.

Mr. BURNES. Leave it out of this bill, and let each member of the House look into it for himself and say at our next session whether the Congress of the United States will pay a dishonest and unmeritorious claim simply because there is a technical legal obligation established against us.

Mr. BRAGG. Did you not provide in the last Congress for getting information? Did you not adopt a resolution calling upon the law officer of the Government for a report upon this subject?

Mr. HOLMAN. But we did not commit ourselves.

Mr. BURNES. I grant, Mr. Chairman, that the opinion of the Attorney-General has been given in favor of the regularity of these proceedings in Wisconsin, but the Attorney-General acted entirely through subordinates of whose weight and caliber I have no knowledge.

Mr. GUENTHER. But he signs it "A. H. Garland, Attorney-General." [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The CHAIRMAN. Before the question is put, the Chair thinks it proper to state that at the time of making the ruling the Chair was unaware that there had been any ruling to the contrary or any prior ruling on the subject; but the Chair is thoroughly satisfied as to the correctness of its ruling.

Mr. REED, of Maine. Will not the gentlemen from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] give us the language used by the Attorney-General in approving the payment of these awards? It is in the last paragraph, at the end of the second page of the letter.

Mr. BURNES. Yes, sir. The Attorney-General says:

> The amount of the unappealed awards and the amount of the judgments rendered, as above set forth, make together the sum of $88,963.16. As to these cases the proceedings are at an end, and nothing remains to be done except to make payment. From the information obtained by me, I am satisfied that the liability of the United States for such awards and judgments respectively is established agreeably to law, and hence that the amount of each is jusily due thereon.

Mr. REED, of Maine. "Justly due," the Attorney-General says.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, is further debate in order?

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the pending proposition is exhausted, but debate is still in order under the five-minute rule.

Mr. BLOUNT. I move to strike out the last word. For one, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to review the judgments of courts to which the Government of the United States has submitted disputes between itself and any of its citizens. These are judgments of a court to which the United States has expressly submitted the questions here in dispute. In many of these cases the Government has not seen fit even to take an appeal, and the Attorney-General of the United States, in a communication addressed to this House in reply to a resolution of inquiry of a former Congress, has given his opinion as follows:

> The amount of the unappealed awards and the amount of the judgments rendered, as above set forth, make together the sum of $88,963.16. As to these cases the proceedings are at an end, and nothing remains to be done except to make payment. From the information obtained by me I am satisfied that the liability of the United States for such awards and judgments, respectively, is established agreeably to law, and hence that the amount of each is justly due thereon.

The Attorney-General of the United States could say no less, and this House, in my opinion, can say no less than that the Government will respond to the judgments of the courts in cases of this kind. It has been the practice of this House not to go behind judgments; it has been the practice of the Committee on Appropriations to accept it as a part of their duty to provide for the payment of judgments as well as for the other expenditures of the Government. I know of one instance in which the Committee on Appropriations did refuse to pay a judgment. They withheld payment for one Congress. It was alleged that the judgment was an outrage, as it is alleged in this case. The very next Congress paid the judgment, and it afterward turned out that the Committee on Appropriations had been imposed upon, that an attorney had succeeded, by certain representations, in preventing the payment, and, by reason of the delay had brought his clients to pay him instead of $10,000, which they claimed was the proper amount, the sum of about $40,000. It does not become the Government of the United States now to enter into an inquiry whether the appropriations for these works were proper. They were made. Congress provided for the settlement of the issues. They have been settled; and for one, in any case where there is a judgment of the United States court re-enforced by an opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States, I will not take issue with that judicial judgment upon the mere statement that the information before the Committee on Appropriations was such that if the House could have it the House would coincide with the Committee on Appropriations in excluding this appropriation. I have every confidence in the gentlemen composing that committee and in their high purposes; but, in view of the multitude of questions which they have to consider with reference to matters of expenditure, and the impossibility of their taking up measures of this kind and examining them as they can be examined by a court, I am not willing to take the opinion of that committee against the opinion of the court.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, it has very rarely been my duty to express a different opinion from that of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], and I do not now differ with his technical opinion; but it seems to me he looks alone at the judgments in this case and at the interest of those to be benefited by those judgments, and forgets in his argument the rights and interests of the American people.

I wish to repeat that nearly $2,000,000 have been appropriated by the Government for making the improvements on that river. These Government works furnish water-power for manufacturing establishments and mills all along the river. These works have been made by the Government at the expense of the people for the benefit of the private owners of those mills and manufacturing establishments, and the very works which the Government has built at its own expense, which inure to the profit of private individuals, are made the basis of judgments against it by the people who received the benefit of this public work; and the very bounty of the Government is made a basis for involving it in additional and possibly endless expenditure.

I attach as much sanctity to the judgments of courts as any one where they are based upon reason and justice; but where it is manifest that the judgment of the court is but the culmination of a system of the grossest fraud, no vote of mine shall ever expend the money of the American people for the benefit of the robbers.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. But was not the "bounty" of which the gentleman speaks designed for the whole people; and in order to confer this bounty upon the whole people has not the Government destroyed the property of individuals, for which compensation is asked?

Mr. REAGAN. I know it has been said that this appropriation is for the benefit of "poor farmers;" but the size of the judgments does not look much as if that were the fact.

Mr. GUENTHER. The judgments with one or two exceptions range from $20 up to about $500, with only two exceptions, and there are over two hundred of them.

Mr. FINDLAY. I wish to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] whether he considers that we have any right in our legislative capacity as Representatives of the people to revise a judgment of the courts?

Mr. REAGAN. I have no hesitation in saying that I regard this House in a proper case as a high court of equity, and would hold that fraud vitiates everything. In defending the rights of the American people against robbers I would hold that fraud vitiates all action—to this extent, at least, that I would not appropriate money from the public Treasury to carry out the culmination of frauds like these.

Mr. FINDLAY. By the operation of what principle do we become a high court of equity?

Mr. REAGAN. I am not discussing technical questions with my friend from Maryland or any one else. I am talking of the justice, the righteousness, of taking the people's money to give it to men who have already had $2,000,000 of the public money.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Can the gentleman give any evidence that the parties who are to receive payment of these awards are the persons who received the money heretofore expended by the Government?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRAGG. I ask for a vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair, if there be no objection, will regard pro forma amendments as withdrawn.

Mr. BLAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the proposed section. There is one thing which, so far as my vote is concerned, I want to have understood, and I think that a number of gentlemen are in the same condition. It has been asserted on the one hand, and denied on the other, that the same parties who are the beneficiaries of these judgments are the parties interested in this water-power——

Mr. GUENTHER. There is not a word of truth in it.

Mr. BLAND. If they are in fact so interested, I am opposed to this proposition.

Mr. GUENTHER. I repeat, there is not a word of truth in it.

Mr. BLAND. I want the statement to be made upon the responsibility of gentlemen on this floor that the beneficiaries of these judgments have no interest in the water-power.

Mr. GUENTHER. I move to strike out the last word. In response to the inquiry of my friend from Missouri [Mr. BLAND], I wish to state that the number of these judgments is over two hundred; and with the exception of two large judgments their average amount is less than $300. They range from $20 up to about $500; and from my personal knowledge I know that most of these men are poor, hard-working farmers, and not a solitary one is interested, directly or indirectly, in the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, except as other citizens of Wisconsin are.

If they had their way they would say we do not want the improvement on the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers, because by doing so you have confiscated our property and taken away from us the means of earning a living.

Mr. BRAGG. Yes; that is so.

A MEMBER. Why?

Mr. GEUNTHER. Because the Government of the United States began the work by an act of Congress and said it was forever to be responsible for the damages heretofore or hereafter acruing by reason of the construction of these works.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Let me ask the gentleman from Wisconsin this question.

Mr. GEUNTHER. Certainly.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Are any judgment creditors interested in these improvements?

Mr. GEUNTHER. Not a single solitary one of them, as I stated already.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. You know that?

Mr. GUENTHER. I know it, and state it on my honor and responsibility as a Representative.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair wants to know what the amendment was of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BLAND. I withdraw it.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

And to prevent damages to lands in future the dams shall be lowered so as to draw off the water and prevent further overflow.

The CHAIRMAN. Two amendments are already pending.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I offer it then as a substitute. [Cries of "Regular order!"] Now, Mr. Chairman, it is said the farmers are injured by these overflows. It also appears these overflows are caused by dams built by mill-owners interested in the water-power, and these dams have been built by the Government at the expense of the whole people for the benefit of a few; that for the purpose of navigation they are of no value. It seems to me, then, the correct remedy would be to lower the dams, draw off the water, and prevent further overflow. In that case there would be no damage to farmers who own land, and the Government would be put to no further expense.

Mr. GUENTHER. I make the point of order against the gentleman's amendment. It is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order comes too late.

Mr. SPRINGER. What is the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. It is a substitute offered by the gentleman from Ohio to the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. GEUNTHER].

Mr. GEUNTHER. It is not in order, because it is new legislation.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I will withhold it and offer it again.

The CHAIRMAN. Then the question is upon the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. On reconsideration, Mr. Chairman, I will leave it pending as a substitute, for then the point of order will not lie against it.

Mr. BRAGG. I only desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that, if this substitute is agreed to, it will wipe out the appropriation for the payment of these damages.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Of course.

Mr. BRAGG. You have done it before; it is nothing but a subterfuge.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. It is a substitute, and it prevents future damages.

Mr. GUENTHER. The gentleman offered it as a substitute and then withdrew it. He now offers it again, and I raise the point of order against it, as I said before.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is mistaken. The gentleman from Ohio offered his substitute, and after it had been debated the point of order was raised when it came too late.

Mr. GUENTHER. I hope the substitute will be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is on the amendment of Mr. GUENTHER to the amendment of Mr. BRAGG.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 97, noes 26.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted, but we will take a vote in the House.

Mr. BRAGG. It might as well be fought out now as another time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not understand whether the gentleman insists upon the point of order of no quorum or not.

Mr. BURNES. He does not.

Mr. HOLMAN. I do not if we can have a vote in the House.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question recurred on Mr. BRAGG'S amendment as amended.

Mr. BURNES. Will it be in order to offer another amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Certainly.

Mr. BURNES. Then I offer the following amendment, and I think I have the support of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. BRAGG].

The Clerk read as follows:

Said sum to be paid out of any money now appropriated or hereafter to be appropriated for the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers in Wisconsin.

Mr. BRAGG. I have no objection to that.

Mr. REED, of Maine. That is right.

Mr. GUENTHER. No; it is not. In this case we would probably not receive one cent. No appropriation for the improvement of the Fox and Wisconsin Rivers is made, and if made it is questionable whether it will become law. The river and harbor bill has not passed the Senate yet.

The question was taken on the amendment of Mr. BURNES; and on a division there were—ayes 63, noes 83.

Mr. BURNES. No quorum.

Mr. BRAGG. I desire to say to the committee that although I gave temporarily my assent to this proposition of the gentleman from Missouri, when the vote came upon it I withdrew it, for the reason that I thought the appropriations had been provided for the Fox and Wisconsin improvement, but none has been so far made, and none may be made.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. BURNES and Mr. BRAGG were appointed tellers.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 54, noes 94.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I now ask a vote upon my amendment, if in order, which I offered in the first instance as a substitute but now as an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. GUENTHER. I raise the question of order upon it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will examine the amendment.

The Chair finds that this is an amendment which proposes that the dams shall be lowered so as to draw off the water and prevent further overflow. The Chair thinks it is out of order, as new legislation.

The question recurred on the amendment of Mr. BRAGG as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SENATE.

To pay to Mrs. Eliza C. Hendricks, widow of Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks, late Vice-President of the United States, $8,750, being a sum equal to one year's salary for the unexpired term of his service and the allowances of a member of Congress for mileage and stationery.

Mr. RANDALL. I wish to offer an amendment, to come in after line 1597.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay E. B. Wade the difference between the pay received by him and the salary of reading clerk from May 27 to June 14, $105.

Mr. RANDALL. This officer holds a position in the House, and during the sickness of one of the reading clerks performed the duties of that clerk. I provide that while he performed such duty he shall receive the difference between the pay he gets and the pay allowed to a reading clerk, which amounts to $105. It does not involve any increase of pay.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

For allowance to the following contestants and contestees in full of expenses incurred by them in contested-election cases: To H. A. Herbert, $501.75; A. C. Davidson, $200; J. B. Weaver, $2,000; Frank T. Campbell, $2,000; Frank H. Hurd, $3,000; Jacob Romeis, $3,000; and to James E. Campbell and Henry L. Morey, for allowance in addition to the $2,000 already paid to each of them for expenses incurred in a contested-election case in the Forty-eighth Congress, $1,500 each; in all $13,701.75.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I desire to raise the question of order on this paragraph of the bill. I make the point of order on lines 1604 and 1605 where the word "three" is inserted in each line, allowing to Frank H. Hurd $3,000 and to Jacob Romeis $3,000 for expenses of contesting an election. This is in excess of the amount fixed by the statute.

Also, on the provision allowing $1,500 to James E. Campbell and Henry L. Morey for additional allowance for contested-election case in the Forty-eighth Congress.

I made the same point of order in the Forty-eighth Congress, and desire the Clerk to read from the RECORD the remarks which I submitted at that time on that point.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ROBERTSON. I make the point of order on that, and will submit it to the Chair.

* * * * * * *

Mr. Chairman, I do not suppose it will be denied by the gentleman from Pennsylvania that there is now a statute fixing the amount to be paid and limiting all of the expenses of a contestant before this House to $2,000 and of a contestee to $2,000 in these election cases. He will not contend that there is not a law which says they shall not, under any state of circumstances, exceed that amount.

Now, sir, I desire to read but one section—section 3 of Rule XXI, which says:

"No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law."

Then, as a matter of course, this exceeds the present law. It is in excess of what the law provides for this purpose. It is in violation of the present law, and therefore the point of order that I make upon it is good and it ought to be sustained by the Chair. Then, that it changes existing law would hardly be questioned, because I have just cited the law, and I do not suppose the gentleman from Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations himself, who is a skilled parliamentarian, would deny or overrule the point of order that I make were he occupying the position that you now hold.

Mr. RANDALL. Nor if I were occupying any other position when I was called upon to rule upon such a question.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Do you see anything wrong with the point of order?

Mr. RANDALL. I have never said that there was.

Mr. ROBERTSON. But I go further than that, Mr. Chairman. I hold that a contestant who comes here and seeks a seat upon this floor and fails to secure it should not be allowed one cent for his expenses; while, on the contrary, the contestee should be allowed his actual and legitimate expenses, not however to exceed the amount provided by the law, namely, $2,000.

Mr. BURNES. I submit in the interest of progress with this bill that it is unnecessary to consume further time with reading the speech of my eloquent and esteemed friend. I will submit, sir, that the point of order can not be resisted if insisted upon. In the sundry civil bill of 1880——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule upon the point of order.

Mr. BURNES. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that the point of order as to the last portion, in reference to the appropriation for additional payment to Messrs. Campbell and Morey, applies in toto; but the Chair understands the gentleman from Kentucky only desires it to apply in lines 1604 and 1605, to the excess over $2,000?

Mr. ROBERTSON. That is it exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. As so understood, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I wish to inquire of the gentleman from Kentucky whether his point of order does not extend to all amounts embraced in that section which exceed $2,000?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Then I move to amend by striking out "$13,701.75," in lines 1610 and 1611, and insert "$8,701.75."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that in lines 1604 and 1605 an amendment is rendered necessary to make the section conform to what the gentleman from Kentucky desires.

Mr. MCMILLIN. That is what I am proposing to do.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands the gentleman to suggest an amendment to lines 1610 and 1611, requiring them to conform to something that has not yet been done in the body of the paragraph.

Mr. ROBERTSON. If the Chair understands my point of order, it is that but $2,000 shall be allowed to Mr. Hurd and $2,000 to Mr. Romeis, in accordance with the statute, for their election contest; but I suppose the whole amount will have to be stricken out to reach that; and also strike out $1,500 for Campbell and Morey absolutely. Then, of course, $2,000 ought to be inserted in place of the $3,000 stricken out for Mr. Hurd and Mr. Romeis.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I first desire to propound a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand the ruling of the Chair to apply to each item where the aggregate sum exceeds $2,000?

The CHAIRMAN. It applies to every line from 1604 down to 1610, inclusive. But the $3,000 ought not to be entirely ruled out on the point of order.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I understand the gentleman from Kentucky to move to insert $2,000 in place of the $3,000.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I desire to say a word about the point of order. If the Chair has ruled I suppose I am too late.

Mr. HISCOCK. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HISCOCK. Did I understand the Chair to include line 1604 in his ruling?

The CHAIRMAN. So far as it applied to Mr. Hurd, the Chair did.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If the Chair will indulge me——

The CHAIRMAN. On the point of order?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. That is disposed of.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I rose to address myself to that.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was unaware of it. With the consent of the committee the Chair will hear the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will appeal from the decision of the Chair only for the purpose of saying a single word. It is this: The House is made, by the Constitution, the judge of the qualification and election of its own members. I insist that, as a part of the proceeding in case of a contest, the taking of testimony is absolutely indispensable to a right determination of the question upon which we are bound to pass. I deny that this Congress may limit the power of another Congress in the matter of the expense which may be authorized to reach that result.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, can it be made in a general appropriation bill, under the rules, over $2,000?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. If the law is void in itself, if this Congress may not say what the Fiftieth Congress shall expend in determining the qualification and election of its own members, then that law is a dead letter upon the statute-book. The point I make is that it is an attempt to hamper an investigation which the House, under the Constitution, is compelled to make.

The investigation in case of a contest is a proceeding growing out of the obligation imposed upon the House by the terms of the Constitution itself, and no law of one Congress can limit or abridge the exercise of that power by a succeeding House. The law cited palpably tends to do that thing. For if the Forty-ninth Congress may say, touching an investigation into the election and qualification of members of the Fiftieth Congress, that there shall not be expended in making the investigation which is indispensable to a proper discharge of the duty of the House under the Constitution a sum exceeding $2,000, you thereby limit and restrict the exercise of the highest prerogative that belongs to the House of Representatives under the Constitution. And so I hold the law itself is one that it is not competent for Congress to enact. It is an invasion of a domain over which we have no jurisdiction. It is an attempt to determine for a future House a question which that House must determine for itself. And if that law may not be enacted which will limit an appropriation or limit an expenditure in the behalf I have mentioned the law is void, and the rule cited must be construed as if no such law in fact existed.

Now, Mr. Chairman, you are aware, as we all are, of the importance of a thorough and complete investigation touching the election by which a member holds his seat upon this floor, if his right is called in question. That that investigation should be full, free, and fair, in order that the House may be fully advised, no one doubts. And yet the statute which I refer to would limit absolutely the amount which may be expended in prosecuting that inquiry; an inquiry, mark you, indispensable to the proper discharge of the duty devolved upon the House by the Constitution.

The investigation is not made, it will be observed, merely in the interest of the contestant or the contestee, but in behalf of the people of the United States, because each member here represents not only his own district, but represents the people of the whole country, since he legislates for the people of the whole country. Hence a contestant in furnishing the House with evidence touching the election in question is in the discharge of a public duty, a duty devolving upon him under law, which it is competent for Congress to enact, to present to the House under its order, or with its permission, such facts as will enable it rightly to determine whether he is entititled to a seat on this floor.

And in my judgment, although I have not given the question full thought, and have in fact only considered it since the matter has been called up—in my judgment a law which hampers Congress in making that needful inquiry is not constitutional.

Mr. ROBERTSON. We are not really bound to give them anything. Then how can the law be unconstitutional?

Mr. BLAND. I ask the gentleman from Ohio whether or not the Constitution gives power to Congress to enact laws necessary to carry into execution any of its provisions, and therefore whether Congress has not the power to legislate on election cases?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. One Congress may not limit the scope of inquiry or the amount to be expended by another Congress in determining the qualification and election of its members. The point is not whether we may not pay a cent or not, but whether this Congress may limit or restrict the expenditures of a succeeding Congress in making an inquiry and in determining a question which that Congress is called upon to decide and of which it has sole and exclusive jurisdiction.

Mr. BLAND. The power to judge of the qualification of its members is a constitutional power of the House. Why is it not right to make a law to carry into effect that part of the Constitution?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. It is true that the House has that power, but it can not restrict any succeeding Congress in the exercise of that power.

Mr. BLAND. It can not make a law, then, to regulate the mode of determining elections.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I withdraw the appeal.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is upon the proposed amendment in line 1604, to strike out "$3,000" and insert "$2,000."

Mr. TURNER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] in the appeal which he proposes from the decision of the Chair seems to be endeavoring to obtain from the Chair a decision declaring null and void an act of Congress and pronouncing it unconstitutional. I agree with him as to the breadth and scope of the power of the House of Representatives in the trial of election cases, because that is a constitutional grant of authority to the House. But when he undertakes to go further, and say that this House in the execution of a constitutional prerogative may not lay down convenient rules of practice for the government of our successors until they see fit to change them, that is another and a different question, on which I differ with him.

The Congress of the United States, Mr. Chairman, has made a statute which governs the procedure in these contested-election cases, which lays down the rules of practice that are to govern in their consideration, rules which are found to be indispensable to their orderly conduct and decision. That view, as a matter of practice, has been acquiesced in by our predecessors for a very long time past. In the old days, when the House proceeded upon the view which the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] presents here with so much ability, these cases came up in the House simply on memorials from citizens of the districts interested—generally in that form—but those contests became so muddled and mixed, so uncertain in every respect, that it was found indispensable that rules should be laid down; and hence this statute which governs contested-election cases was enacted. The expenses growing out of these contests are mere incidents of the contests, on which I think this House has a right to bind those who are to come after us to this extent: That if our successors do not see fit to change the statute it will bind them. That is to say, it binds them if they acquiesce in it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will remark that there is nothing pending before the committee, the appeal having been withdrawn.

Mr. TURNER. Then, Mr. Chairman, I am speaking out of order and I ask pardon of the Chair.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, arbitrarily, on a point of order made by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBERTSON], the power is taken from the majority of this committee to determine whether Mr. Campbell and Mr. Morey shall have an allowance of $1,500 each in addition to the $2,000 already given them, and whether Mr. Hurd and Mr. Romeis shall be allowed $3,000 each, as recommended by the Committee on Elections, who are familiar with the contest, or shall be restricted to $2,000 each; and after he has exercised that arbitrary power under his point of order the gentleman from Kentucky asks the committee to cut down the aggregate of this appropriation. Now, I think we had better not do that. Let this appropriation stand as it would if the point of order had not been made, and when the bill goes to the Senate I hope that, notwithstanding this unjust law which has been cited here, and which in my opinion is void, there may be such amendments made and such a report by a conference committee that a majority of this House can have an opportunity to do justice to the gentlemen concerned in these contests. Mr. Chairman, we can not arbitrarily say that every case shall have an allowance of $2,000 and no more. I recollect that since the enactment of this law there was a case, the Curtin and Yocum case, in which each contestant received an allowance of $8,000 or $10,000.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Eight thousand dollars apiece.

Mr. CANNON. Yes, sir; and the allowance to various other contestants has been over $2,000 each. Now, what are the facts about the Campbell and Morey case? That was a contest that was demanded by both parties in the State of Ohio; it involved the taking of nearly two thousand depositions. The contest arose largely out of the student vote in that district. Depositions were taken in almost every State in the Union; and I am informed that those two gentlemen were almost broken up by that contest. Now, sir, we are all interested in having proper contests in these election cases. It is a matter of public policy that the will of the people shall be given force and effect, and here is the place to give it effect on this particular case. I hope the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBERTSON] will not prevail, because if it does not, and if we leave this larger amount in the bill even though the items may not justify it, it will be some indication to the Senate of the real view of the House, and they may perhaps strike out this whole provision and throw the matter into conference, so as to enable the majority of the House, irrespective of a point of order and without regard to the objections of one man, to say whether these gentlemen shall have the allowance to which they are entitled.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no question before the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The proposition is to strike out "three," in line 1604, and insert "two."

Mr. BURNES. I ask unanimous consent to limit debate to half a minute.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment, which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1604, after the name "Frank H. Hurd," strike out "three" and insert "two."

In line 1605, after the name "Jacob H. Romeis," strike out "three" and insert "two."

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, let me suggest that it is not a motion to strike out and insert. The "three" has been already ruled out on the point of order, and the motion now is to insert "two."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out in line 1610 the word "thirteen" and insert the word "eight." I offer this amendment to make the aggregate amount correspond to the change made in the items.

Mr. LOWRY. Mr. Chairman, I wish to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee. There is a case the expenses of which were not audited at the time these items were reported to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MCMILLIN. The gentleman can offer his amendment later.

Mr. LOWRY. But it will affect the aggregate. The case, Mr. Chairman, is an Indiana case, in which the entire work has been performed and the accounts audited, and the Committee on Elections have recommended an allowance of $3,000, but I desire to make the amendment to conform to what I understand to be the ruling of the Chair, and therefore I wish to ask whether I am correctly informed that the Chair has sustained the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair rules that the House may in general appropriate what it pleases; but on a general appropriation bill it can not appropriate for this purpose beyond the limit of the act of 1879.

Mr. LOWRY. In view of that ruling, I modify the amendment recommended by the Committee on Elections so as to allow to each of these parties the sum of $2,000.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Making the aggregate $10,000.

Mr. LOWRY. I wish to say that the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HENDERSON] was instructed by the committee to report this amendment; but I do not observe him in his seat, and I deem it important that the proposition should be offered at this time in order to protect the interests of the parties.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "dollars," at the end of line 1605, insert "Meredith H. Kidd, $2,000; George W. Steele, $2,000."

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I think that no law on the statute-book operates more unjustly upon contestants and contestees in election cases than this very law limiting the amount to be paid in such cases. Some years ago this provision was put on a general appropriation bill; and every Congress since has disregarded that enactment by increasing the amount of these allowances in various cases.

Now look at the items in this bill which are cut down by this point of order. Take the case of Mr. Romeis. He presented vouchers before the committee showing an expenditure of some $5,200. By no economy which the committee could devise, looking at the items of account after they had been incurred, could they see how this expenditure could possibly have been reduced below $4,500. But knowing the disposition of the House to economize, even to the extent of refusing to vote just bills and reimburse men for expenses which they had honestly incurred, the subcommittee of the Committee on Elections, of which I had the honor to be a member, recommended the allowance of $3,000 to Mr. Romeis and the same amount to Mr. Hurd.

Now take this case of Kidd vs. Steele. Mr. Kidd presented a bill, with vouchers, showing the payment of some $4,900, and Mr. STEELE, a similarly authenticated bill amounting to $4,500. In that case more than twelve hundred witnesses were examined. The testimony extended over a number of counties, local attorneys being employed in those different counties; and their bills seemed to be reasonable. There did not appear to be any reason in the world why this House should not reimburse to Mr. STEELE every dollar of the $4,500 he had expended. His expenditures were economical; they should have been allowed by the House. Still by reason of this statute which the House, Congress after Congress, does not regard, this bill is cut down to $2,000.

Mr. BURNES. The gentleman is laboring under a mistake. The House has never violated that law since it has been enacted except when the Senate has put on an increase, and this House has been compelled to acquiesce.

Mr. REED, of Maine. The gentleman is mistaken when he says that.

Mr. PAYNE. The House is a free moral agent; the statutes making these appropriations in excess of the amount named in that law are here; and they would not be in existence if they had not been passed by a majority of the House. I repeat the assertion that the House has constantly violated that law.

And this is not the only particular in which we have departed from the statute. Every gentleman on this floor will remember that only a few weeks ago in the Rhode Island case the House violated this statute in regard to the time allowed to the contestant and contestee to take evidence. The House repeatedly violates this statute.

Mr. BURNES. The House may do it with impunity, but the Committee on Appropriations can not.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] that his only course now is to appeal from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. PAYNE. I am speaking to the amendment, and I think my remarks are in order. In the Forty-sixth Congress we allowed $8,000 on each side in the case of Curtin vs. Yocum; in the last Congress $3,500 on each side in the case of Massey vs. Wise.

Mr. SPRINGER. As the gentleman has referred to the Curtin and Yocum case, I wish to say that the expenses in that case were incurred before the law referred to was passed.

Mr. PAYNE. Notwithstanding that, however, this same point of order was raised, and the proposition was ruled out.

The chairman of the subcommittee is correct in saying that every one of these contestants and contestees has had to go to the Senate in order to get justice; but in each case when the matter has come back to the House the House has concurred in the Senate amendment. Why not do justice in the first instance? Why not do away with this unjust statute? Why not say to every man, whether he be rich or poor, that he may have a fair investigation of his case, may bring it before the House, and may have his honest expenses paid? [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. LOWRY, it was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee, to change the amount in the aggregate.

Mr. MORROW. Before that is fixed I want to offer the following amendment:

After the word "each," in line 1610, add: And to Barclay Henley, J. A. Louttit, Joseph McKenna, William W. Morrow, C. N. Felton, H. H. Markham, $2,000.

Mr. LOWRY. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, the seats of each and all of the members from the State of California were contested. The entire contest was embraced in four separate cases. A bill has been presented to the Committee on Elections for the sum of $3,700; but, as we learned this morning, that bill has not been fully considered; the committee has not passed upon it. Of course it is important that the pending portion of the bill should not be passed without including in the bill provision for the expenses incurred by members of the California delegation in connection with the contest of their seats.

Under the ruling of the Chair the amount in each case is limited to $2,000. The delegation is willing the amount of the charges in all four cases shall be reduced to $2,000 if it can be passed in the form of an amendment. That is a remission of something over $1,700.

Mr. LOWRY. Mr. Chairman, the question in reference to an allowance to the contestants and the contestees in the California case has been before the Committee on Elections. The question has been fully considered. I regret to say the Committee on Elections was not able to agree any sum whatever should be allowed to the contestants in that case.

But so far as the sum now in the amendment is concerned it is entirely beyond any sum which entered into the mind of the Committee as being proper to be allowed to the contestees. If there was action of the committee, it was to postpone the question of making an allowance until we could have more deliberate consideration of the question.

So far as I am individually concerned, Mr. Chairman, I desire to state to the Committee of the Whole House this was a contest, in the opinion of the committee, which should never have been inaugurated. The main question involved was as to the legality of a statute passed by the California Legislature redistricting the State, and the question had been substantially settled by the supreme court of the State of California for itself. The contestants were gentlemen influenced by the ambition to occupy seats in the Hall of this House and became candidates under what circumstances I am not prepared to say. Some received as high as 57 votes, and the most energetic and enthusiastic of the contestants received 7 votes as candidates for seats in the House of Representatives.

It was a simple case where the tailors of Tooley street seemed again to have met and once more resolved the people of the State of California will send an entirely different delegation from that which was elected by the people in their respective districts.

In a word, the contest itself was without merit, and the committee had no difficulty in agreeing to making a report in the case. So far as the contestees were concerned it was not a matter of volition with them.

Mr. MORROW. That is what I wished to bring out.

Mr. LOWRY. They were elected, and it was incumbent on them to maintain their rights. The extent of their labor was in the preparation of their brief. That brief it was not necessary should be prepared at all. I understand it was not even presented to the committee, when in session, for consideration. As for myself, I have not, up to this time, given that brief any examination. I had the honor to make the report in the case. The question was so simple and plain as not to require any brief, but the contestees had to incur the expense of a lawyer employed in the preparation of their brief. It was not incumbent upon them to assume the case was free from all question. Hence the employment of an attorney and the preparation of a brief. I think the sum of $500 would be an abundant allowance to be made to the contestants, and, in my judgment, the contestees jointly.

Gentlemen think the contestants have no such standing before the House as would entitle them to any consideration.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. TURNER. I ask the pending amendment be read.

The amendment was read by the Clerk.

Mr. TURNER. I move to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$650."

Mr. MCMILLIN. To each of them?

Mr. TURNER. No, sir; to all.

Mr. MORROW. One word in response to that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Georgia desire to be heard?

Mr. TURNER. I desire my amendment shall be explicitly understood.

I understand in the amendment the sum of $2,000 is named to be paid to them jointly. My amendment is to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$650," to be paid to them jointly.

From my knowledge of the circumstances of the case I desire to state to the House my deliberate conclusion is that sum is ample to compensate the attorney for preparing the brief of contestees. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MORROW. Mr. Chairman, I desire simply to say a word in response to the suggestion of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LOWRY] who has just taken his seat. So far as the merits of the case are concerned we both agree that it had none; but the gentleman from Indiana knows, and every lawyer here on the floor must know, that the question as to whether a case has merits or not has nothing whatever to do with the amount of labor involved in the case, either in its prosecution or defense. We were the contestees in this case and had to meet the contestant and his case wherever presented; and during the course of nearly a whole year we had to meet it constantly in some form or another. We had to respond to his notices to take testimony at the capital and at other places, testimony which of course we thought and knew was irrelevant, but yet that made no difference. We were compelled to respond to this evidence taken by the contestant, and, necessarily, we had to employ an attorney all the time, and the expense involved was consequently quite considerable. We also had to go to the expense of making an appearance in response to these notices, which we believed to be unnecessary; but of course we could not anticipate that.

We knew that the Committee on Elections understood the questions of law; but these gentlemen forming the committee know that the duty of the contestee is to respond to every argument presented by the contestant, no matter how absurd. We performed that duty for ourselves and for our constituents. It is true that there were only about 57 votes for the contestants, while the contestees received perhaps 16,000 or 18,000 each; still it was our duty to our constituents to respond to the case wherever it was, and we had to pay our own expenses. In view of the necessary disbursements on that account we do not believe that $2,000 is at all unreasonable.

Mr. PAYNE. I offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia, to strike out "six" and insert "eleven;" so that it will read "$1,150."

This claim, Mr. Chairman, was referred to a subcommittee, composed of the gentleman from North Carolina, Mr. HENDERSON, Mr. CROXTON, of Virginia, and myself, and we examined this bill of expenses as carefully as we were able to do. These proceedings commenced in the court in California, and were continued through the court in various forms and finally came to Congress. The point was that the apportionment law of California, under which these gentlemen were elected to their seats, was not constitutionally passed by the Legislature. There were other points, but that was the principal point in the case.

There was a large amount of documentary evidence taken at the different stages of the proceedings, and the case finally came before the Committee on Elections on a printed report, containing all of this documentary evidence. A brief was filed on behalf of the gentlemen holding the seat, counsel were employed, and the bills were presented to the subcommittee. We found after an investigation of the bills that $150 had been necessarily expended for the contest before the House. There are other expenses, but they seem to be expenses incurred in the courts. Then we tried to separate, as nearly as we could, the amount to be paid for counsel before the Committee on Elections and the amount of expense incurred in the supreme court of California, and we thought that $1,000 would be a fair compensation for the attorneys before the committee in making the brief and preparing the case. This made the total amount $1,150, which the subcommittee thought was a fair amount.

Mr. TURNER. Will the gentleman allow me a moment?

Mr. PAYNE. Yes, sir.

Mr. TURNER. Is that intended for service rendered here before the Committee on Elections, or does it include the litigation in the California courts?

Mr. PAYNE. As I tried to state, the bill of expenses contained both compensation in the supreme court of California and also for an investigation and making the brief here. It appears that one of the counsel spent a number of days here.

Mr. FELTON. He came here for that purpose.

Mr. PAYNE. And it appears that the counsel who came from California to New York city submitted his charges for expenses, which were simply from New York city to Washington and return and the number of days he spent in Washington. The attorney himself resides in San Francisco, as I am informed. The committee made the best examination they could, and the bills and vouchers were presented and unanimously reported to the committee from the subcommittee for $1,150. The Committee on Elections did not finally decide on any amount. Several amounts were voted on, smaller——

Mr. TURNER. I submit to my colleague that it is not proper to state what transpired in the committee.

Mr. PAYNE. Well, I will withdraw that. The Committee on Elections presented the report to the House, although the sub-committee, and I think I may state that, have reported to the Committee on Elections the amount I have suggested.

I hope my amendment, therefore, will receive the sanction of the committee.

Mr. TURNER. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HATCH). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. TURNER. I would like to know whether the amendment proposed by the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] is in order at this time. There has been an amendment proposed by the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW], to which I offered an amendment. I submit that the amendment now proposed by the gentleman from New York is in the third degree, and is not in order.

Mr. PAYNE. I offered it as a substitute for the original proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment of the gentleman from New York, offered as a substitute, is in order. The Chair understands there is an amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LOWRY], to which an amendment was offered by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. TURNER. It is not a substitute for an amendment; it is an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is offered, the Chair understands, as a substitute for all the amendments.

Mr. TURNER. I submit it is only an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the substitute offered by the gentleman from New York is in order.

Mr. FELTON. What may be the legal status of this matter I do not know. I am not conversant with that. But I desire to say, if we take the expenditures in money of the parties to this election contest and of this attorney they will amount, I think, to quite as much as the gentleman's amendment would allow, if not more. Whether they have been legal expenditures or not I do not know. But more money has been paid out by the gentlemen contesting here and their attorney in contesting this matter than the amendment allows.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. It does seem to me that a contest of this sort that seems to have been perfectly frivolous, where one of the contestants, the leading active contestant, as I am informed, received the enormous minority of 7 votes in the whole State of California, any great outlay of money ought not to have been necessary on the part of the contestees. The gentleman from New York who has just addressed the committee says that the committee, or the subcommittee who took this question into consideration, considered some fees of attorneys incurred in the State courts of California. In my humble judgment those are not legtimate fees to be charged here.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Yes, sir.

Mr. PAYNE. I tried to make myself understood that we excluded those fees in the State court when we made our report, and intended only to cover the expenses before the committee in the contest here.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I misunderstood the gentleman on that point.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it does seem to me that if every man who aspires to a seat in Congress without any sort of backing at home can involve this House in the payment of any amount of useless expenses he may see proper to incur in the shape of attorney's fees, some remedy ought to be applied for such a state of things. This House should say what are reasonable and what are unreasonable attorneys' fees.

Sir, any lawyer on this floor—and I believe there are a good many of us here—can make a great deal more money conducting such cases as the gentleman from California has presented here at $50 apiece than we can make as members of Congress.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. And then might starve before the end of the year.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Those might starve who have extravagant ideas of what constitutes a living. But down where I come from we have to work, and lawyers would not starve with such cases at $50 apiece.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York. Will the gentleman say how many election cases are pending?

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. This policy has the effect of encouraging men to have cases of this sort on mere pretenses, where they have no real rights, and to get this House to vote fees to lawyers where men come here to contest on a vote of seven out of an entire vote of twenty-five or thirty thousand.

Mr. PAYNE. Does the gentleman understand that this is a proposition to pay the contestants?

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. I do not understand that. But I say the gentlemen from California who were elected to this House should trust something to the good sense of the Committee on Elections and this House and not go outside to employ lawyers to contest their frivolous cases. If the money of this Congress is to be given away in contesting every conceivable case that can be brought here, why then, I say, any man, no matter what are the merits, can come before this House and involve us in expenses and costs of thousands of dollars in frivolous election cases.

Mr. BURNES. I trust now the Committee on Elections will not trespass further on the time of this committee by continuing this discussion. I ask unanimous consent that it shall now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that on an examination of the record he ascertains the first amendment was offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW] to insert $2,000, which the gentleman from Indiana on the right [Mr. LOWRY] moved to amend by striking out "$2,000" and inserting "$500." The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER] then offered an amendment in the nature of a substitute, to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$650," to which the gentleman from New York on the left [Mr. PAYNE] offered an amendment in the nature of a substitute, to strike out "$2,000" and insert "$1,150." The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LOWRY] to the amendment offered by the gentleman from California. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] now asks unanimous consent that debate on the pending paragraph be closed. Is there objection?

Mr. HEPBURN. I have an amendment which I desire to offer to the paragraph and which I may want briefly to discuss. I object. Is the proposition to close the debate on the whole paragraph?

Mr. BURNES. The gentleman may have two minutes.

Mr. MORROW. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Can I withdraw the amendment I have proposed and yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] to offer his amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can withdraw his amendment if he desires, or he can modify his amendment by accepting that of the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MORROW. Then I will modify my amendment and make the amount $1,150.

Mr. HOLMAN. What is the question? I do not think it is understood.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. MORROW], by his amendment as modified, moves to make the amount $1,150, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LOWRY] moves to strike out "eleven hundred and fifty" and insert "five hundred." The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana to the amendment of the gentleman from California.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected—ayes 22, noes 71.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER], to strike out "eleven hundred and fifty" and insert "six hundred and fifty."

The House divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 73.

Mr. MCMILLIN. No quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN] and the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER].

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 77, noes 72.

Mr. PAYNE. No quorum.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, so far as I am concerned, I will agree to do all I can to give these gentlemen a yea-and-nay vote in the House on the proposition to increase the amount provided in the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. TURNER].

Mr. MORROW. To increase it to $1,150?

Mr. BURNES. To whatever amount you please.

Mr. PAYNE. With that understanding, I withdraw the point of no quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to understand clearly the proposition of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES]. Is the point of no quorum withdrawn?

Mr. PAYNE. The point of no quorum is withdrawn, with the understanding that an amendment may be offered to this paragraph in the House increasing the amount to $1,150 and that a yea-and-nay vote shall be taken upon it.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The amendment of Mr. MORROW as amended was then agreed to.

Mr. HEPBURN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After the word "dollars," in line 1604, insert: "And to the widow of J. C. Holmes, a contestant for the seat from the eighth district of Iowa in the Forty-sixth Congress, $1,000."

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I am constrained to make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. HEPBURN. What is the point of order, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. BURNES. The point, Mr. Chairman, is that there has been no action whatever taken in that case by the Committee on Elections, and that there is no law authorizing this appropriation so far as I know.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not understand that the negligence of the Committee on Elections in regard to the matter can be made the basis of a point of order. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] desire to be heard further on the point of order?

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a statement in reference to this case.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois desire to address the Chair on the point of order?

Mr. SPRINGER. Yes. The contested-election case out of which this claim arises occurred in the Forty-sixth Congress when I had the honor to be chairman of the Committee on Elections. It was prosecuted in good faith on the part of the contestant. There were two cases, but this amendment embraces only one of them. The question involved was as to the proper day upon which to hold elections in the State of Iowa for members of Congress, there being a very nice legal point as to whether the entire delegation had not been elected on a day not authorized by law. The parties came before the committee with their attorneys and filed their briefs. There was no testimony, the question being wholly a question of law. They argued the case at length, and the committee made a report upon it. After the case was decided against the contestant, the parties came before the committee again and the committee recommended a certain allowance to each of them, I have forgotten how much.

Mr. HEPBURN. Fourteen hundred dollars.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have forgotten the amount, but no doubt that was it. The committee recommended that there should be an allowance made to each claimant. The matter came before the House on an amendment to the sundry civil bill in the closing session of that Congress, and, after debate and consideration by the Committee of the Whole House, it was voted down, and they got nothing. After that the matter became a claim, as the parties were advised, and a bill is now pending before the Committee on Claims for an allowance to these two claimants—not the amount covered by this amendment, but the amount they claimed before, which, I think, was larger than the sum named in this amendment. That bill has not yet been reported by the Committee on Claims. That, Mr. Chairman, is the status of this case.

Mr. HEPBURN. Mr. Chairman, I believe this is a just claim, and that this widow ought to have this money. It was an important question that was determined by that contest. There had been a dispute in the State of Iowa for a long time as to the day when elections for members of Congress should be held—as to whether they should be held in October or in November.

There was an election held—not by a great many persons, but by a few hundred—and the question was in that way brought here. It was regarded as a question of so much importance, and there was so much doubt in regard to it, that the people of Iowa changed their constitution in accordance with the view taken by the contestants as to the time for the holding of the election.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. And I will say to my colleague that Mr. Colerick, of Indiana, a member of the Committee on Elections, made a minority report against the right of the delegation to their seats, and in favor of the contestants.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do hope that the Committee of the Whole will vote affirmatively upon this proposition. I do not want to occupy time in further explanation of it. I know that there are a number of gentlemen here who thoroughly understand this question, having been members of the House at that time. I remember that my colleague from the first district of Iowa [Mr. HALL] gave, upon the request of the governor of our State, an opinion on the question, which sustained the claim of the contestants.

Mr. BURNES. I simply call attention to this provision of the law

Before any sum whatever shall be paid to a contestant or a contestee for expenses of election contests, he shall file with the clerk of the Committee on Elections a full and detailed account of his expenses, accompanied by the vouchers and the receipt for each item, which account and vouchers shall be sworn to by the party presenting the same, and no charges for witness fees shall be allowed in said account unless made in strict conformity to section 128, Revised Statutes of the United States.

Mr. HEPBURN. It is my understanding that that provision of the law has been complied with in this case.

Mr. BURNES. If so, then I submit to my friend from Iowa the case has been adjudicated by the House to which the contest related, and the claim has been repudiated.

Mr. HEPBURN. As I understand from the then chairman of the Committee on Elections, that committee reported in favor of the allowance of the claim for a larger amount than this; but the House took adverse action. The Committee on Claims of the Forty-seventh Congress refused to consider the matter, because they regarded it as not within their province; and the same view, I think, was taken by the committee of the Forty-eighth Congress. I know the matter was discussed in that committee, and I think that was the view taken of it—that it should go to another committee. But the action which the gentleman insists upon as required by the law was taken in this case, as I am informed. I know I have seen some of these vouchers.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Oh, the bills were certainly filed.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HATCH). The Chair is unable to see why the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa is not as much in order as amendments which the Committee of the Whole has been discussing and voting on for the last hour or more. The Chair overrules the point of order.

The amendment of Mr. HEPBURN was agreed to; there being—ayes 71, noes 64.

Mr. HISCOCK. I offer the following amendment:

After line 1611, insert the following:

"To pay H. H. Smith for additional services rendered as Journal Clerk under a resolution of the House of December 12, 1885, and for services as clerk to the Committee on Rules during the present session, $500."

Mr. BURNES. I interpose a point of order upon that proposition.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is not liable to any point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] will state his point of order.

Mr. BURNES. The point is that the appropriation proposed is not provided for or authorized by any law.

Mr. HISCOCK. This is for pay of an employé of the House for services rendered under a resolution of the House. No point of order lies against it.

A MEMBER. Read the resolution.

Mr. HISCOCK. It is a resolution adopted by the House December 12, 1885, in which the Clerk is directed to make a compilation of the revisions of the rules in the Thirty-sixth and Forty-sixth Congresses, and have it printed under the direction of the Journal Clerk. Certainly no point of order lies against it. There is no law fixing the salary of the Journal Clerk. He is an employé of the House; and here is a resolution directing him to perform certain services. The amendment I offer proposes to pay him for those services.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York will send up the resolution to which he has referred, in order that the Chair may see it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I send up a reference to it.

Mr. HOLMAN. I submit that a resolution of the House is not a "law" within the meaning of the rule.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will cause to be read clause 3 of Rule XXI.

The Clerk read as follows:

No appropriation shall be reported in any general appropriation bill, or be in order as an amendment thereto, for any expenditure not previously authorized by law, unless in continuation of appropriation for such public works and objects as are already in progress; nor shall any provision changing existing law be in order in any general appropriation bill or in any amendment thereto.

Mr. HISCOCK. Now, I claim that in view of the resolution of the House directing these services to be performed by an officer of the House this appropriation is in order.

Mr. BAYNE. In addition to that there is no change of existing law.

Mr. HISCOCK. The amendment provides simply for paying one of our own employés.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that in his opinion the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York does not undertake to change existing law in the sense contemplated by clause 3 of Rule XXI. The statement made by the gentleman from New York, and not controverted, the Chair accepts to be true—that this work was performed under the resolution referred to. The Chair is in doubt whether the amendment is in order or not, and will submit the point of order to the committee.

The question having been taken,

The CHAIRMAN said: On this question the ayes are 82, the noes 46; and the amendment is declared by the Committee of the Whole to be in order. The question is now on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MORRISON. I trust this amendment for additional pay to the Journal Clerk will not be adopted. He now receives as Journal Clerk $3,000, and for other service in preparing the Digest of Rules and Procedure an additional thousand dollars; in all, $4,000. It is true he performs some little service for the Committee on Rules, in the nature of ex officio service, a labor of love, which is useful to him in preparing the Digest. The new or additional rules make part of the material for the Digest. In acting as clerk he comes to learn the rules, their import, to understand their purpose, and what led to them. He is amply and well paid, indeed better than any one about the Clerk's desk, for all the service he renders. To give him additional pay is a mere gratuity and he ought not to have it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hold in my hand a compilation of the revision of the rules which shows the work performed by the Journal Clerk for which this $500 is given.

I should add in connection with this compilation, as stated by the gentleman from Illinois, he acts as clerk to the Committee on Rules. It seems to me the amount we propose to give is not too much, and it ought to be allowed. I am sorry to differ with my distinguished friend and colleague on the committee.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Has that amount been recommended by the Speaker as chairman of the Committee on Rules?

Mr. HISCOCK. I am not so informed. The Speaker is here and you can ask him.

Mr. MCADOO. As gentlemen know, I am in favor of economy of appropriation. The labors of the Journal Clerk are entirely distinct from those of any other in the House. Here is a work of two hundred and sixty-eight pages reciting not only what the rules are but what they have been, collected and collated with all the precedents in the past by this gentleman.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of not a particle of value, and never should have been published.

Mr. McADOO. The committee had it printed. If it is a labor of love and of no value, why does the Committee on Rules have it printed?

Mr. MORRISON. I do not think the committee did that.

Mr. McADOO. How did it get printed, then?

Mr. HOLMAN. Smith, perhaps, had it printed.

Mr. McADOO. It argues an irregularity in the proceedings of the House when a subordinate can go to the Printing Office and have such a document printed.

Mr. MORRISON. All I have to say is that $4,000 a year is ample for all the services he renders this House or can render it.

Mr. HISCOCK. This is the usual sum paid in past Congresses.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Has the Committee on Rules taken action on this?

Mr. HISCOCK. As a Committee on Rules they have not taken action on it.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 72, noes 55.

Mr. MORRISON. No quorum. [Cries of "Oh, no!"] It will require a quorum—163 votes—to pass the $500 amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. You can get a vote in the House.

Mr. MORRISON. It will take 163 votes everywhere to get this $500.

The CHAIRMAN appointed as tellers Mr. MORRISON and Mr. HISCOCK.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 91, noes 64.

Mr. HOLMAN. I insist under the rules on a call of the roll, as there is no quorum voting.

The roll was called; and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Aiken,	Eden,	Lehlbach,	Robertson,
Anderson, C. M.	Ermentrout,	Libbey,	Sayers,
Anderson, J. A.	Evans,	Lore,	Scott,
Arnot,	Fleeger,	Lovering,	Scranton,
Atkinson,	Foran,	Mahoney,	Sessions,
Ballentine,	Gay,	Maybury,	Shaw,
Barbour,	Geddes,	McComas,	Singleton,
Barksdale,	Gilfillan,	Merriman,	Skinner,
Barry,	Glover,	Millard,	Smalls,
Belmont,	Goff,	Miller,	Snyder,
Bennett,	Green, R. S.	Mitchell,	Spriggs,
Bliss,	Green, W. J.	Murphy,	Steele,
Boyle,	Grosvenor,	Negley,	Stewart, J. W.
Brumm,	Guenther,	Nelson,	Stone, E. F.
Buchanan,	Hale,	Oates,	Stone, W. J., Ky.
Burrows,	Halsell,	O'Hara,	Storm,
Campbell, Felix	Hanback,	O'Neill, Charles	Struble,
Carleton,	Harris,	O'Neill, J. J.	Swinburne,
Clardy,	Haynes,	Osborne,	Swope,
Clements,	Heard,	Owen,	Taylor, I. H.
Cole,	Hemphill,	Parker,	Taylor, J. M.
Compton,	Henley,	Payson,	Thomas, J. R.
Comstock,	Hewitt,	Perkins,	Throckmorton,
Conger,	Hitt,	Pettibone,	Tucker,
Curtin,	Holmes,	Phelps,	Viele,
Daniel,	Houk,	Pidcock,	Wade,
Davenport,	Johnston, J. T.	Pirce,	Wait,
Davidson, A. C.	Ketcham,	Price,	Ward, J. H.
Davis,	King,	Reese,	Weaver, A. J.
Dawson,	Laird,	Richardson,	Whiting.
Dowdney,	Le Fevre,	Riggs,

[During the roll-call,

Mr. HISCOCK said: If I can have consent, I will withdraw the amendment for the purpose of expediting the business. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. It can only be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. DUNN. I object, if it interrupts the roll-call.

The roll-call was resumed and concluded.]

The committee then rose; and the Speaker having resumed the Chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union having had under consideration the general deficiency bill, had found itself without a quorum, whereupon he had directed the Clerk to call the roll, and now reported the names of the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER. The names of the absentees will be entered upon the Journal. From the report it appears that 123 members are absent and 196 present. There is a quorum, and under the rules the committee will resume its session.

Mr. HOLMAN. While the House is in session, for the purpose of getting the legislative, executive, and judicial bill in condition for consideration, inasmuch as the amendments of the Senate will have to be printed, I ask that the amendments of the Senate be non-concurred in.

Mr. HISCOCK. What is the regular order?

The SPEAKER. The regular order is for the Committee of the Whole to resume its session.

Mr. HISCOCK. I call for the regular order.

The Committee of the Whole accordingly resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will resume their places.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask that the amendment be reported.

The amendmend was again read.

Mr. LONG. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. I understand that the gentleman from New York is willing to withdraw the amendment. I ask if he has not the right to do so.

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not withdraw it; I call for the regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asked, pending the roll-call in committee, to withdraw it, and objection was made.

The tellers having resumed their places, the committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 84, noes 72.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no quorum, the Clerk will call the roll.

The Clerk proceeded to call the roll, when the following members failed to answer to their names:

Adams, J. J.	Eden,	Lehlbach,	Reed, T. B.
Aiken,	Ermentrout,	Libbey,	Reese,
Anderson, C. M.	Evans,	Lore,	Riggs,
Anderson, J. A.	Felton,	Louttit,	Sayers,
Arnot,	Fleeger,	Lovering,	Scott,
Ballentine,	Foran,	Mahoney,	Scranton,
Barbour,	Gay,	Maybury,	Sessions,
Barksdale,	Geddes,	McComas,	Shaw,
Barry,	Gilfillan,	Merriman,	Skinner,
Bennett,	Glover,	Millard,	Smalls,
Bliss,	Goff,	Milliken,	Snyder,
Boyle,	Green, R. S.	Mitchell,	Spriggs,
Browne, T. M.	Green, W. J.	Muller,	Stahlnecker,
Brumm,	Grosvenor,	Murphy,	Steele,
Buchanan,	Guenther,	Negley,	Stewart, J. W
Burleigh,	Hale,	Nelson,	Stone, E. F.
Burrows,	Halsell,	Norwood,	Storm,
Campbell, Felix	Hanback,	Oates,	Struble,
Campbell, T. J.	Harris,	O'Hara,	Swinburne,
Carleton,	Haynes,	O'Neill, Charles	Swope,
Clardy,	Heard,	O'Neill, J. J.	Taylor, I. H.
Clements,	Hemphill,	Osborne,	Thomas, J. R.
Cole,	Henley,	Owen,	Throckmorton,
Comstock,	Hewitt,	Parker,	Tucker,
Curtin,	Hitt,	Payson,	Viele,
Daniel,	Holmes,	Perkins,	Wade,
Davenport,	Houk,	Perry,	Wait,
Davidson, A. C.	Johnston, J. T.	Pettibone,	Ward, J. H.
Davis,	Ketcham,	Phelps,	Weaver, A. J.
Dawson,	King,	Pidcock,	Whiting.
Dibble,	Laird,	Pirce,
Dowdney,	Le Fevre,	Plumb,

The committee then rose; and Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the general deficiency bill, found itself without a quorum, whereupon he had directed the roll to be called, and now reported the absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER. The names of the absentees will be entered upon the Journal. From the report it appears that there are absent 123 members and present 196, being more than a quorum. The committee will resume its sitting.

Mr. HOLMAN. I now again ask unanimous consent——

Mr. HISCOCK. Regular order.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move that the House adjourn.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will resume their places.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, it is true in point of fact that the amendment I offered had never been submitted to the Committee on Rules, although individual members of the committee had been consulted. In view of that fact I withdraw the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Maurice Ruddleston the difference between the pay of a laborer, at $720 per annum, and that of a messenger, at the rate of $3.60 per day, from January 1 to June 30, 1886, $291.70.

Mr. BURNES. I desire to offer an amendment simply to correct the name of this party. It is "Kuddlesden" instead of "Ruddleston."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LONG. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 1627 insert:

"To pay Frank B. Gorman the difference between his pay as laborer and that of page, from January 13, 1886, to June 30, 1886, inclusive, $97.50."

Mr. LONG. This is the young man on this side of the Hall who has been doing the duty of page during the session and receiving the pay of a laborer. Having performed the duty of page, it seems he should be entitled to the compensation of a page.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

To pay George Winters and L. B. Cook $200 each, being the difference between their pay as conductors of the elevator and $1,200 per annum, from July 1, 1884, to July 1, 1886, $400.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Insert after line 1637 the following:

"To pay Noah W. Halley $712.50, being the difference between his pay as a folder at $900 per annum and that of a messenger at $1,200, from December 16, 1883, to May 1, 1886."

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. Mr. Halley has been performing the duty of messenger since 16th December, 1883, but has been receiving the pay of a folder, the pay of a folder being $900 and that of a messenger $1,200. He asks to be allowed the difference between $900 and $1,200 during the period named.

Mr. SPRINGER. For how long?

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. From the 16th of December, 1883, to the 1st of May, 1886. This is a case similar in all respects to others which have preceded it in the bill.

Mr. SPRINGER. But this case goes back too far; it goes to a previous Congress.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. He has performed faithful service and is one of the best employés of the House.

The question being taken, the chairman stated that the "noes" seemed to have it.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I call for a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 14, noes 53.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair appoints as tellers the gentleman from Indiana, Mr. WARD, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BURNES.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I withdraw the point as to a quorum, and shall modify the amendment which I have offered by making it apply to the period only of the present Congress.

Mr. DUNHAM. Would a motion for the committee to rise now be in order?

The CHAIRMAN. It would.

Mr. DUNHAN. For the purpose of moving that the House adjourn over Monday I move that the committee rise.

Mr. MORRISON. But we are not going to adjourn over Monday.

The motion that the committee rise was disagreed to—ayes 35, noes 79.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I now offer my amendment as modified.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. There are two other employés of the House in exactly the same situation as this man is.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. Let us dispose of one case at a time.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The same amount of justice ought to be done to all of them.

Mr. BURNES. Gentlemen seem to misunderstand this matter. These things come to the Committee on Appropriations by reason of a resolution introduced into the House, referred to some other committee, favorably reported, and then some morning in the morning hour this report is referred to the Appropriations Committee. The preliminary steps were taken in this case, but as the claim seemed to refer to service prior to this Congress we did not incorporate it in the bill. If the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] has any claim which has been considered by the Committee on Accounts or the Committee on Claims and been favorably reported and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, let him bring it up.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Some time during this session I introduced a bill to correct this very abuse, so that the same amount of justice might be done to all without special legislation. Why can not those two other messengers be included in this amendment? I move to amend by inserting in addition the names of E. D. Eaton and M. M. Robinson. They are men holding the same appointments and doing the same service.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that to amend the resolution as the gentleman from West Virginia proposes still leaves no appropriation but for one man. The gentleman had better write out his amendment and send it to the desk.

Mr. BURNES. While the gentleman from West Virginia is preparing his amendment I desire to call the attention of the Chair to section 1764 of the Revised Statutes.

Mr. REAGAN. I make the point of order that this is new legislation not authorized by law.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I understand the gentleman from West Virginia has withdrawn his amendment.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. For the time being I withdraw it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD].

Mr. REAGAN. Why is it that this increase is asked for? Why should this allowance be made? Has the Chair ruled on the point of order?

The CHAIRMAN. There was no point of order made.

Mr. REAGAN. I tried to make the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. But that was on the amendment of the gentleman from West Virginia, which has been withdrawn.

Mr. REAGAN. I make the point of order now on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana. There has been no debate on it.

The CHAIRMAN. It has been debated by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. There has been no debate on this amendment since it was offered in its modified form.

Mr. REAGAN. We have too many of these messengers. You come in doors and you find them all around the House. It is not right. If the Doorkeeper wants additional messengers he should ask for them. We all have our friends—except myself—at any rate most members have their friends here for whom they would like to get a little more pay. It is not just that this should be done. These messengers should be appointed regularly and paid for the services they render.

If we had to put our hands down into our own pockets to give this extra money we would not act so liberally. When we are voting away other people's money the case is different. But I protest against all this legislative increase of wages to employés of this House. If we did the wise thing, that would command the respect and confidence of the country, we would discharge one-half of the employés of this House. There is nearly a regiment of them, and for very many of them there is no use.

The force ought to be greatly reduced. There is not a man who has looked into the matter who does not know that the force ought to be greatly reduced, but it is kept up because men's friends want them here, or because they appeal to their friends to get them employment here. Now, while we are employing these men here, and paying them high salaries, we all know that there are millions of people throughout the country much poorer than any of them, working harder than any of them, and not getting half so much pay. We are here to represent those people who are at home, working harder for less compensation, and we ought not to consider ourselves merely as the representatives of the special few who come here and get employment from the Government. I have no patience with the men who come to Washington and hang around until they get a place under the Government, and then, after they get it, are always appealing for an increase of salary. I have seen enough of that, and I trust there will be an end of it.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I hope we shall now have a vote.

The amendment of Mr. WARD was rejected.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to go back to a paragraph which has been passed, in order that I may offer an amendment. I was out of the House at the time when the paragraph was considered.

Mr. BURNES. I can not consent to go back, Mr. Chairman; I have been refusing to do that all day.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I would like very much to have an opportunity to offer this amendment.

Mr. BURNES. I will try to accommodate the gentleman in some other portion of the bill.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. The amendment can not well go into any other portion of the bill, because this is its legitimate place.

Mr. BURNES. I have so steadily refused to go back at the request of other gentlemen that I must decline in this case also.

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to come in after line 1637.

The amendment was read, as follows:

After line 1637 insert "to pay Patrick V. Dolan the difference between the pay of a laborer at $720 per annum and that of a messenger at the rate of $3.60 per day, from July 1, 1885, to January 1, 1886, $302.40.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I must make the point of order on that amendment. I call attention of the Chair to section 1764 of the Revised Statutes, which prohibits any allowance whatever to any clerk or officer for any extra service or for any service.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that that is confined to clerks and officers, and applies to no other persons. Is there any law for this proposed appropriation?

Mr. BURNES. There is no law for it, and no order of the House.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that this item has been carried in the appropriation bills of both sessions of the last Congress. We have already passed here an item for the successor of this man from the date of his appointment up to the 30th of June.

This appropriation is to fill out the intervening time between the appriation made by the last Congress and the time when that successor was appointed. I have here a report from the Committee on Accounts recommending this very item in the language in which I have offered the amendment. This report, I understand, was overlooked and was not brought to the attention of the Committee on Appropriations in time for the item to be inserted in the bill. The man for whom the amendment is offered is a constitutent of my colleague, Mr. GIBSON, and was employed in the library of the House during all last session of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman provided for in this amendment was one of the men in charge of the House library during the last session of the House and a part of the present session.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair begs to remind the gentleman from West Virginia that the point of order has been sustained.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I hope the Chair will hear me before deciding.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair did not know that the gentleman desired to speak. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. Regular order.

The CHAIRMAN. This is the regular order.

Mr. OUTHWAITE. What is the gentleman from West Virginia discussing?

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair has consented to hear the gentleman from West Virginia on the point of order.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I introduced a resolution to pay this man, which was referred to the Committee on Accounts. They considered the resolution and reported it favorably to the House. The House received that report and ordered the resolution to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, to be provided for by that committee in an appropriation bill. Now, that certainly takes the matter out of the operation of any point of order. It has been acted upon by the House several times, and the resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations with instructions to provide for this item.

Mr. BLOUNT. Was the committee instructed to provide for it in this bill?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. To provide for it in one of their appropriation bills, and the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. WILSON], a member of the committee, has stated to the House very frankly that it was omitted by inadvertence. Now, the House having ordered that this be appropriated for in one of the regular appropriation bills, that action of the House certainly puts it beyond the reach of the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The action of the House upon the resolution might give a right to come upon the contingent fund, but it makes no law to justify an appropriation in this bill. The point of order is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay to Caroline Urban and Christine Antz, dependent sisters of the late Hon. Michael Hahn, the amount of salary for the unexpired term of his service as a member of the Forty-ninth Congress, $4,974.41, to be paid in equal parts to said dependent sisters.

Mr. HEPBURN. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the provision which I send to the Clerk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Clerk of the House of Representatives to pay to the officers and employés of the House of Representatives borne on the annual and session rolls on the 30th day of June, 1886, including the reporters of the two Houses and the Capitol police, one month's pay at the compensation then paid them by law, which sum shall be immediately available.

Mr. BURNES. I am not aware of any law authorizing this item. If there be one, I hope the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] will cite it.

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] makes a point of order. Now that comes from the Democratic side of the House. This is a Democratic House with Democratic employés. I ask my friend from Iowa, why should we on this side force upon the other side that which they do not want?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Has not the gentleman from Illinois been trying to force an increase of salaries all along through the Departments?

Mr. CANNON. Not at all. You may pay your employés just what you choose, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. HEPBURN. I do not know what the point of order made by the gentleman from Missouri is.

Mr. DUNHAM. He says there is no law for it.

Mr. BURNES. My point is that if there is any law for this appropriation I am not aware of it; and I think the onus is on my friend from Iowa.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Iowa desire to be further heard?

Mr. HEPBURN. I merely wish to call the attention of the Chair to the precedents we have had for this legislation. From a memorandum which I have before me I see that legislation of this kind has been decided in order by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union—once on an appeal from the decision of the Chair, and twice on the submission of the question of order to the Committee of the Whole by the Chair. I am not able to say just where those rulings will be found; but that has been the action of the Committee of the Whole. I suggest further that this same amendment has been put upon all the deficiency bills for the last seven years, save one; and at that time it was placed on another general appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HAMMOND). The Chair desires the Clerk to read from the proceedings of the House in Committee of the Whole, July 12, 1882, when an amendment similar to this was offered to the sundry civil appropriation bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. In deciding this point the Chair desires to state the only doubt in his mind arises from the fact it relates to an existing service which is constantly before the House, and in view of the numerous precedents which exist, and which he has not had time to examine to see whether the point of order is settled, but concerning as it does the entire body of the House, he feels it is a case where, without shirking proper responsibility, he ought to submit it to the judgment of the committee. He submits, therefore, whether the point of order raised by the gentleman from Indiana should be sustained.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 19, noes 110.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN appointed Mr. HISCOCK and Mr. HOLMAN as tellers.

The committee divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 24, noes 128.

So the point of order was not sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair also directs the reading of a portion of the proceedings of the House in Committee of the Whole February 23, 1883, when a similar proposition was presented.

The Clerk read as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state that a proposition of this kind was presented at the last session, when the present occupant of the Chair was presiding; and he then stated that in a matter affecting so directly the officers and usages of the House, he would not take upon himself the responsibility of deciding the question of order, but would submit it to the committee.

* * * * * * *

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair remembers that there used to be an extra percentage allowed. If there has been no precedent the Chair will take the responsibility of ruling upon the question; but declines to rule where the House has set a precedent, and prefers to submit the matter to the judgment of the committee.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, the rule requires that there should be some existing law in order to make an appropriation in order on a general appropriation bill. In view of the fact that the duties of these persons, performed in connection with the House, as well as their compensation, must be provided for by some other law, and that this amendment proposes a compensation not provided for by law and which can not be paid without a provision of this kind, it seems to me beyond all doubt that the proposition is liable to a point of order under the rule.

This is a proposition to pay persons who are already being paid under existing law for their services—to give them a gratuity independently of the service they are required to perform. The question, it seems to me, is so clear that the Chair might with great propriety rule the amendment out of order, because this gratuity, without a law expressly allowing it, can not be given. I do not propose of course to enter upon the merits of a proposition to give persons already receiving high salaries a month's pay for doing nothing, the money to come out of the pockets of people much poorer than themselves.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I believe the rule has been changed since the submission of this question in the cases cited by the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. In what particular has the rule been changed as affecting the present question?

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. In requiring an affirmative law; that is, a law authorizing the service, when a proposition for payment is submitted on an appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The rule applicable to this question exists now as it did when the question came up, except that in the former rule certain exceptions were made, which have now been rescinded. The Chair thinks that this amendment is out of order; but at the same time, where two such precedents have been set—one in July, 1872, when Mr. Kasson presided, and the other in February, 1883, when Mr. Robinson, of Massachusetts, was the chairman of the Committee of the Whole—the Chair thinks, as did the last-named gentleman, that it would be improper for the Chair to assume to control the question by his opinion only. Those two rulings, as the Chair is advised, were both upon general appropriation bills—in one case the sundry civil appropriation bill, and the other the deficiency bill; so that the same principles apply in that case as in this. The Chair will, therefore, in view of the precedents, submit the question to the Committee of the Whole in this form: In the opinion of the Committee of the Whole is the proposed amendment in order?

The question being taken, there were—ayes 82, noes 39.

Mr. REAGAN. I make the point that no quorum has voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas, Mr. REAGAN, and the gentleman from Iowa, Mr. HEPBURN, will take their places as tellers.

Mr. BAYNE. I suggest that we can have a vote in the House on this question.

Mr. PETERS (to Mr. REAGAN). This question is only on the point of order.

Mr. REAGAN. I withdraw the point for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of "no quorum" being withdrawn, the amendment is decided to be in order. The question now is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I desire to say a word on the pending amendment. This proposition includes the annual clerks, who are paid for remaining all the year, as well as the session employés, who stay only during the session of Congress and then go home. There ought to be a difference, I think, between these two classes of employés. One class are at the expense of coming here for a few months and then returning, and perhaps some consideration may be due on this account. But the proposition to increase in some way the pay of the officials of the House and Senate is not a new one. It comes here regularly at every recurring session of Congress. Every endeavor is made to get into a place in the first place, and then nothing is left undone to get the pay increased, so as to make it more than for like services outside of Government employ. It looks sometimes as though only those in office had representatives here. I think, Mr. Chairman, that we are bound to think sometimes of those who pay these things, of the men whose money in the way of taxes supply these high salaries, of the laborers who plow and sow and reap, who work in mines, factories, and mills, and who in the end pay everything; for out of what labor annually creates all salaries and all expenses of government come, and the more that is taken for government the less there will be for those who create the whole wealth. If the pay of the employés of this House is not equal to pay for like services elsewhere, then it ought to be increased, but it ought to be increased directly and equitably and not by an allowance for no service. If, however, officials here receive higher salaries than for like services outside by those whose taxes, as I have said, must pay all salaries and all expenditures, then these salaries ought not to be increased.

I repeat here the statement I have frequently made, that on the average the seventeen millions of laborers in this country, from the product of whose labor all salaries, all wages, and all profits must come—these laborers on the average receive but a little over $300 a year, and for labor and capital combined the average earnings per family of five is less than $1,000, probably now not more than $800; that is, all the capital of the country employed, with all the labor of the country, yields in the most profitable times not exceeding $200 per capita, or $1,000 per family of five, and in times like these the average earnings of capital and labor combined do not exceed $800 per family. And of this the healthy laborer who toils all day gets on an average but about $300 in a year, with no extra month's allowance, and no thirty days' leave that does not come out of his pay; and you can not increase their earnings, either, by legislation, but you can diminish them by increasing the burdens upon them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. I only want to say a word about this matter. For many years it has been the practice to vote this month's extra pay to the employés of the House. From the courtesy prevailing between the different sides ordinarily the minority offers the amendment, and the majority acquiesce in it as a matter of course. This practice has been followed so long it may be said that when a man accepts employment in the House this extra month's pay is regarded as part and parcel of his salary.

Following that precedent out of proper courtesy and in the line of precedent it has been received by the majority gracefully. I will not come here and force on the majority of the House, whether they are willing or not, or even force it on them when they are willing, but I wish to claim they are not, an extra month's pay to Democratic employés. That is all I wish to say.

Mr. REAGAN. I suppose we ought to feel grateful to the gentleman from Illinois for his kindness in extending the courtesy of piling up appropriations to make this Democratic House appear as extravagant as possible. That is the philosophy of it.

What is the condition of things here? We have confronting us a large body of employés, some of whom are necessary, but many of whom are supernumerary, and who are receiving high salaries, much beyond that ordinarily received by those doing like service in the country. A large part of them receive annual salaries, who for one-half the time can devote themselves to their private business and still receive full pay higher than is paid elsewhere.

We are asked when gentlemen have been fortunate enough in getting these employments, when others would be glad to accept them on the salary allowed, to give them a month's extra salary. How much this will be in the aggregate I do not know. It will be a large sum, no doubt.

The amount is material; and then it is material these gentlemen, like others, should understand when they make a contract with the Government to render service at a stipulated price they should be held to it. If they are unwilling to serve at such pay, then they should resign and allow other persons to take their places.

I repeat now what I said a few moments ago, that when we are surrounded by our friends, all of whom we wish well, asking us to give them an additional amount, and it does not come out of our own pockets but from the hard earnings of others whom we forget while we are here, it is very convenient and easy to appropriate a few hundred thousand dollars as extra pay, not required by the law nor the contract, but simply as a matter of grace and bounty on the part of Congressmen who are voting away other people's money. I say, sir, that it is not honest; it is not in accordance with what I believe to be our duty. It ought not to be done.

Mr. BURNES. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that we should have a vote upon this proposition. Unless we can have a vote at once, I shall be compelled to move that the committee rise to close debate. I ask unanimous consent that debate be closed.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Iowa.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 97, noes 39.

Mr. REAGAN. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair will order tellers.

Mr. REAGAN and Mr. HEPBURN were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 114, noes 43.

Mr. REAGAN. I withdraw the point of no quorum.

So (no further count being demanded) the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to offer the following amendment, to come in at the end of the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Iowa, and which has just been adopted:

The Clerk read as follows:

That all employés of the Senate and House, including the Capitol police, who were employed on the 7th day of December, 1886, or subsequently by resolution of either House, and who, prior to the 15th day of May, 1886, ceased to be employed, shall be paid a sum equal to one month's pay at the rate they were severally receiving on the 7th day of December, 1885, or subsequently, as above provided; and an amount sufficient for this purpose is hereby appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and the same shall be available immediately: Provided, That but one month's allowance shall be paid in any case, and the same shall not be paid to any person who is now employed by the Senate and House of Representatives.

Mr. BURNES. I make the point of order against the amendment of the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Ohio on the point of order.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I have only to say, Mr. Chairman, that I present this amendment at the suggestion of gentlemen on the other side of the House and in accordance with the wish of gentlemen on this side. It is in the line of precedents, and if the other amendment which was just adopted was in order this amendment is as clearly in order.

It provides for paying those who were dropped from the rolls a short time since the additional thirty days' allowance which is ordinarily granted at every session of Congress; and it is in conformity to a rule that obtains in all of the Departments which allows every employé thirty days' leave of absence with pay every year.

This simply fixes the pay of certain employés of this House, and that may be done of course at our discretion at all times; and I repeat if the other amendment was in order, and I submit that it was, because it has been held by the House to be so, then this is in order on the same ground and for a like reason.

But while on the floor I will say to the gentleman from Indiana, my friend Judge HOLMAN, and others who stand here in the interests of the people with myself, that I have taken the sense of the people in this behalf and they are vastly in favor of this proposition. In other words, being in order as an amendment to the bill, it recognizes the right of these employés to thirty days' leave, or its equivalent, which they would have received had they not been discharged from employment under the Government a few days ago.

I have nothing further to say touching the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair knows of no precedent for submitting such a question to the committee except as to the existing employés; and therefore is compelled to sustain the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay to Frank H. Isham and W. E. Mallory $180 each for three months' service in the document-room, $360.

Mr. SOWDEN. I move the adoption of the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay Robert Dougherty the difference between the pay of A. W. Williams, at $900 per annum, and Robert Dougherty, at $720 per annum, from January 1, 1884, to June 1, 1885, being the sum of $255; said Robert Dougherty having succeeded said A. W. Williams in charge of the registry and delivery books in the House folding-rooms; also, the difference between the pay of M. J. O'Brien, at $840 per annum, and Robert Dougherty, at $720 per annum, from June 1, 1885, to July 1, 1886, being the sum of $130; said Robert Dougherty having succeeded said M. J. O'Brien as assistant foreman of the House folding-rooms.

Mr. BURNES. I reserve points of order on the amendment.

Mr. SOWDEN. I offer this amendment for my colleague, Governor CURTIN, who is called away unexpectedly on some important business.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the general deficiency bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Speaker, the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill came over this morning from the Senate with a very large number of amendments, and it is important that they should be printed and a conference between the two Houses arranged with a view to expediting the consideration of that bill. I therefore, on behalf of the committee, ask the House to non-concur in the amendments, and that they be printed and a conference between the two Houses asked.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I ask that the amendments be read.

Mr. HOLMAN. The amendments are quite numerous. Should the House not be in session on Monday it will be impossible to fix the consideration of the bill until after an order is made to print the amendments, and hence there would be practically three days lost unless this arrangement is now made.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. My object was to move concurrence in some of the amendments.

Mr. HOLMAN. There are about 300 amendments, and unless it is printed and goes to a conference committee at an early date it is evident it will be late next week before it can be considered at all.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I want to suggest to my colleague on the committee [Mr. HOLMAN] whether it can be arranged as to any amendments that the sense of the House might be taken afterward on them as to concurrence or non-concurrence.

The SPEAKER. The House can recede from its disagreement at any time.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I know it can do so after the conference is entered upon. But my suggestion is whether the House might now consider some of the amendments. My object is only to facilitate the early disposition of this business.

Mr. BLOUNT. You have not much time to do it in to-day. It is almost 5 o'clock.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not mean to-day.

Mr. HOLMAN. I take it for granted a large number of the amendments will come back to the House again.

Mr. HEPBURN. I rise to object to the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN.] How are we to know that very many of these amendments would not be concurred in if submitted to the House? The House might prefer to concur in them. Instead of that we asked are to take the word of the gentleman from Indiana, who has not himself perhaps examined the amendments, and refuse to concur. By this procedure we turn over the whole question to a committee of conference. I am decidedly opposed to that course. I want to have the amendments read to the House, and to determine as to each one whether we will concur or not.

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. HOLMAN. Of course we would all prefer to have the amendments read and considered separately if practicable; but it is manifest at this stage of the session that it is impracticable if we intend to have an early adjournment. There are three hundred amendments to be considered. I call for the previous question. But pending that I ask unanimous consent that the time for adjournment be extended ten minutes after 5 o'clock, or until this matter can be disposed of.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to extend the time for adjournment until the pending question can be disposed of.

Mr. DUNHAM. That might keep us all night.

Several members objected.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I ask that the time be extended for ten minutes.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. There are probably not over half a dozen items which we would care to have considered by the House. If there could be some arrangement by which these items could be brought before the House on Monday or at some other time for consideration, the House might non-concur in the others.

Mr. HOLMAN. As I have already said, I think a large portion of these amendments will be returned to the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would suggest that perhaps the House might agree to order the amendments to be printed and that they be submitted to the House hereafter when members shall have an opportunity to examine them.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I think that is the better way.

Mr. HOLMAN. Then I will ask that the amendments of the Senate be printed.

There was no objection; and it was so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 209) for the relief of the legal representative of John M. Robeson, deceased.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 41) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Saint Joseph, in the State of Missouri, and to establish it as a post-road;

A bill (H. R. 1462) granting a pension to Addie L. Macomber;

A bill (H. R. 3463) granting a pension to Mrs. Hanna Babb Hutchins;

A bill (H. R. 4544) granting a pension to Ann E. Cooney; and

A bill (H. R. 7165) to increase the pension of Manhattan Pickett.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 6311) for the relief of Mrs. Maria Walker.

Mr. MCRAE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 6397) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Mr. BURNES. I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

And accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. J. M. ALLEN: Petition of Richard H. Willett, of Mary E, and Albert Jones, of Judith McKinney, of Jefferson Burnett, of Zachariah, of James A. Mahone, of Hardin Patterson, of Andrew Kremen and of Thomas P. Shull, of Tishomingo County; of Wiley N. Nabors. administrator; of William Lasley, deceased, of Itawamba County; of Mary J. Dunn, of Lee County; and of Susan Merrill, of Lee County, Mississippi—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BLANCHARD: Petition of certain citizens of Bayou Cocodrie, Rapides Parish, Louisiana, asking relief for distress caused by recent floods—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. BRUMM: Petition of Charles T. Gibson and 25 others, of William J. Jacobs and 48 others, and of Daniel J. Williams and 50 others, urging the passage of Grand Army pension bill—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BUTTERWORTH: Petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati, against the passage of a bill for the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River at Saint Louis—to the Committee on Commerce.

Also, petition of manufacturers and dealers in woolens and clothings against any reduction of the tariff—to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the Chamber of Commerce of Cincinnati, against the construction of a bridge across the Little Kanawha River—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. COWLES: Petition of John F. Phifer, of Lincoln County, North Carolina, asking that his war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. J. H. JONES: Memorial from attorneys of Marshall, of Pittsburgh, of Clarksville, and Longview, Tex., to remove Federal Courts from Jefferson to Marshall, Tex.—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LANHAM: Petition of county commissioners of Stephens County, Texas, for relief—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. MCCOMAS: Petition of William H. Chipley, of Frederick County, Maryland, for payment of claim—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. O'FERRALL: Petition of Catharine Golightly, praying that the war claim of Sampson Touchstone, deceased, late of Frederick County, Virginia, be referred to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

By Mr. CHARLES O'NEILL: Memorial of the Philadelphia Board of Trade, favoring the issue of one and two dollar notes to replace worn-out and unclean notes of said denominations—to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

By Mr. OSBORNE: Resolutions of the Engineer Club of Philadelphia, relating to improvement to entrance to New York Harbor—to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors.

By Mr. J. H. TAYLOR: Petition of F. F. Cousen and 72 others, citizens of Columbiana County, Ohio, praying for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAM WARNER: Petition of Levers P. Scroggin, of Kansas City, Mo., for reference of his war claim to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WISE: Petition of William Bailey, of New Kent County, Virginia, praying that his war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

The following petitions, asking for the passage of House bill 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts; of House bill 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants; of bill forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with; of House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma; of Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement; of bill prohibiting aliens from holding lands in the United States; of bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery; and of bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired, were severally referred to the Committee on the Public Lands:

By Mr. C. H. ALLEN: Petition of Thomas M. Guane and 23 others and of George S. Gregory and 24 others, citizens of the eighth district of Massachusetts.

By Mr. BOUND: Petition of Harry C. Hawley and 110 others and of W. H. Fortney and 220 others, citizens of the fourteenth district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. W. W. BROWNE: Petition of G. T. Latimer and 55 others, of Bernard Keogh and 133 others, and of John A. Martin and 22 others, citizens of the sixteenth district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. BRUMM: Petition of J. T. Garraway and 214 others, of W. H. Evans and 200 others, of P. P. Brannon and 282 others, of James Reagan and 170 others, of Patrick Coyle and 230 others, of M. James and 172 others, of Thomas Donahue and 125 others, of Thomas Conway and 98 others, and of J. F. Buck and 97 others, citizens of the thirteenth district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. J. E. CAMPBELL: Petition of Frank Right and 130 others, of John Barr and 183 others, and of R. H. Preston and 86 others, citizens of the third district of Ohio.

By Mr. J. M. CAMPBELL: Petition of Samuel Brewer and 84 others. citizens of the seventeenth district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. T. J. CAMPBELL: Petition of William Bailey and 144 others, of J. Hermann and 47 others, of Chris. Hinken and 105 others, of John J. Hagerty and 75 others, of Joseph Brown and 177 others, of Arthur Wilson and 17 others, of John Jacob and 81 others, and of Edward Riley and 113 others, citizens of the eighth district of New York.

By Mr. COLLINS: Petition of John Moran and 180 others, citizens of the fourth district of Massachusetts.

By Mr. R. H. M. DAVIDSON: Petition of Artimus T. Betz and 48 others and of E. A. Bryant and 404 others, citizens of the first district of Florida.

By Mr. ELY: Petition of J. Lyons and 142 others and of Edward Flynn and 200 others, citizens of the ninth district of Massachusetts.

By Mr. HAYDEN: Petition of John Averill and 26 others, of G. M. Joll and 23 others, of F. P. Pierce and 92 others, of James H. Doherty and 10 others, of John Murphy and 42 others, of A. B. Taylor and 48 others, of C. D. Weeks and 281 others, and of E. S. Scribner and 148 others, of the fifth Congressional district of Massachusetts.

By Mr. HILL: Petition of Mark Fang and 55 others, of H. B. Wood and 39 others, of George J. Rexroth and 190 others, of Charles B. Ramby and 125 others, and of Horton J. Dugal and 128 others, citizens of the sixth district of Ohio.

By Mr. HIRES: Petition of Harry F. Adams and 39 others and of Milton J. Townsend and 91 others, citizens of the first district of New Jersey.

By Mr. KELLEY: Petition of John G. Rees and 248 others, of C. H. Smith and 48 others, and of Lewis L. Brown and 80 others, citizens of the fourth district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. LEHLBACK: Petition of Alexander H. Haines and 32 others, of John Syer and 25 others, of Joseph Jesson and 75 others, of Daniel King and 19 others, of John Delong and 53 others, of P. J. Clark and 48 others, of Charles W. Hindel and 84 others, of P. Wallace and 85 others, of Robert J. Henson and 70 others, of John Penrose and 107 others, of Alvis Heeple and 25 others, of James Carrigan and 15 others, of William E. Eastman and 463 others, of Thomas Seidmore and 423 others, of C. H. Littlefield and 158 others, of Hugh Conroy and 181 others, of C. B. Bogan and 52 others, of Charles Gibbons and 24 others, and of Edward Hagen and 250 others, citizens of the sixth district of New Jersey.

By Mr. LONG: Petition of A. F. Baker and 33 others, of A. N. Bates and 80 others, of J. Coe and 21 others, of A. A. Belcher and 73 others, and of George H. Bellows and 76 others, citizens of the second district of Massachusetts.

By Mr. LYMAN: Petition of C. Follett and 81 others, of Robert Shields and 126 others, and of Harvey Mann and 189 others, citizens of the ninth district of Iowa.

By Mr. MCKINLEY: Petition of E. H. Knight and 54 others, of W. Triplett and 133 others, and of W. H. Lynn and 45 others, citizens of the twentieth district of Ohio.

By Mr. OUTHWAITE: Petition of Lewis James and 72 others, and of A. S. Campbell and 77 others, citizens of the thirteenth district of Ohio.

By Mr. RANDALL: Petition of George W. Zemmiers and 41 others, of J. J. Mulvay and 24 others, of B. F. Faunley and 126 others, of William H. Davy and 74 others, of William Byrne and 133 others, and of Charles W. Hibbe and 23 others, citizens of the third district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. RICE: Petition of J. H. Richard and 152 others, of Frank D. Ladd and 158 others, of Robert Walker and 262 others, of J. Haley and 158 others, of R. Burnes and 23 others, of Thomas Milvey and 25 others, of James E. O'Shea and 51 others, and of Patrick Murphy and 92 others, citizens of the tenth district of Massachusetts.

Mr. SPRIGGS: Petition of Duane Bolster and 71 others and of E. J. Harbershen and 38 others, citizens of the twenty-third district of New York.

By Mr. E. B. TAYLOR: Petition of James Kern and 174 others, of W. A. Russell and 106 others, and of A. J. Ward and 71 others, citizens of the nineteenth district of Ohio.

By Mr. A. J. WARNER: Petition of Frank Brown and 189 others and of James Hagerman and 92 others, citizens of the seventeenth district of Ohio.

By Mr. WEST: Petition of O. F. Feirc and 96 others, of L. F. Phillips and 89 others, and of Thomas H. O'Neil and 24 others, citizens of the twentieth district of New York.

By Mr. A. C. WHITE: Petition of Arthur Vardy and 528 others and of J. G. Mortimer and 60 others, citizens of the twenty-fifth district of Pennsylvania.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, July 5, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday was read and approved.

ADDITIONAL FORCE IN THE OFFICE OF THE ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Attorney-General of an appropriation to provide an additional force in his office, made necessary by the provisions of the act for the ascertainment of French spoliation claims; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, on account of sickness.

To Mr. STORM, until Tuesday, on account of sickness.

To Mr. HEARD, an extension for one week, on account of important business.

To Mr. MILLER and Mr. THROCKMORTON, for one week from Monday, July 5, on account of indisposition.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was rejected—ayes 30, noes 84.

The SPEAKER. This being Monday, the Chair will proceed to call the States and Territories for the introduction of bills and resolutions.

GEORGE T. HUDSON.

Mr. WHEELER introduced a bill (H. R. 9737) for the relief of George T. Hudson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

E. R. CHATTIN.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 9738) for the relief of E. R. Chattin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

NANCY J. WATKINS.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 9739) for the relief of Nancy J. Watkins; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CLAIBORN EVANS.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 9740) for the relief of Claiborn Evans; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

E. R. CHATTIN.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 9741) for the relief of E. R. Chattin; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LAURA HENTIG AND LAURA PLUMMER.

Mr. WHEELER also introduced a bill (H. R. 9742) for the relief of Laura Hentig and Laura Plummer; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

RULE XVI, CLAUSE 9.

Mr. HERBERT offered a resolution to amend clause 9 of Rule XVI of the rules of the House of Representatives; which was referred to the Committee on Rules, and ordered to be printed.

A. A. LOVELACE.

Mr. SADLER, introduced a bill (H. R. 9743) for the relief of A. A. Lovelace; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

HOTEL ON GOVERNMENT LAND, FORTRESS MONROE.

Mr. MITCHELL offered a joint resolution (H. Res. 197) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant a permit to John F. Chamberlin to erect a hotel upon the land of the United States at Fortress Monroe, Va.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

MARIA J. TURNEY.

Mr. SEYMOUR introduced a bill (H. R. 9744) granting a pension to Mrs. Maria J. Turney; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

EMMA ZIMMERMAN.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, introduced a bill (H. R. 9745) granting a pension to Emma Zimmerman; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ALLEN MORRIS.

Mr. TOWNSHEND introduced a bill (H. R. 9746) granting a pension to Allen Morris; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE C. WHITLOCK.

Mr. MATSON introduced a bill (H. R. 9747) granting a pension to George C. Whitlock; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

BENJAMIN F. RAIFF.

Mr. HEPBURN introduced a bill (H. R. 9748) for the relief of Benjamin F. Raiff; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. SPRINGER introduced the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

NICARAGUAN CANAL.

Resolved, That the President be requested, if not incompatible with the public interests, to furnish the House of Representatives with all the correspondence between this Government and the Republics of Nicaragua and Costa Rica since 1876 in reference to the location and construction of an interoceanic canal via the San Juan River and Lake Nicaragua, and relating to the treaty or other rights of the bordering republics.

BRIDGES ACROSS TENNESSEE AND CUMBERLAND RIVERS.

Mr. STONE, of Kentucky, introduced a bill (H. R. 9749) to authorize the construction of bridges across the Tennessee and Cumberland Rivers by the Ohio Valley Railway Company; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN F. ROGERS.

Mr. TAULBEE introduced a bill (H. R. 9750) for the relief of John F. Rogers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MRS. E. M. PATTISON.

Mr. WILLIS introduced a bill (H. R. 9751) for the relief of Mrs. E. M. Pattison, formerly Mrs. E. M. Lewis; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

PATRICK O'MALIA.

Mr. WILLIS also introduced a bill (H. R. 9752) granting a pension to Patrick O'Malia; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

D. C. BUFORD.

Mr. WILLIS also introduced a bill (H. R. 9753) for the relief of D. C. Buford, of Louisville, Ky.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MONUMENT TO EX-PRESIDENT TAYLOR.

Mr. BLANCHARD introduced the following concurrent resolution of the Legislature of the State of Louisiana relative to the erection of a monument to the memory of ex-President Zachary Taylor, to be located in the city of New Orleans, and requesting the aid of the national Congress therefor; which was read, and referred to the Committee on the Library:

Be it resolved by the house of representatives of the State of Louisiana (the senate concurring), That our Senators and Representatives in Congress are respectfully requested to secure such national legislation as is necessary to explain and equalize the act of July 19, 1848, amended February, 1879, to include all regular and volunteer soldiers, artisans, teamsters, and employés of the land forces which served in the war with Mexico, and to direct the Secretary of the Interior to ascertain the unpaid balance properly due under the act so explained and equalized, and after six months' public notice be authorized to transfer all amounts then due and unpaid to a special fund for the purpose of aiding in the erection of a monument at the city of New Orleans, State of Louisiana, in honor of ex-President Zachary Taylor and the gallant soldiers who fought and won the battle of Palo Alto and Resaca de la Palma, May 8 and 9, 1846, and to appoint nine officers of the United States Army to act with a like number from each the Louisiana State troops and Lousiana Associated Veterans of the Mexican war as commissioners in furthering this object, and provide the Associated Veterans of Mexican war with the names of those killed, wounded, or died during the war with Mexico. And for such other aid and information as Congress may, in its wisdom, deem just and proper.

DANIEL B. WASHBURN.

Mr. ELY introduced a bill (H. R. 9754) for the relief of Daniel B. Washburn; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES E. BARNARD.

Mr. RICE introduced a bill (H. R. 9755) granting a pension to Charles E. Barnard; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

FRANK GARDNER.

Mr. LONG introduced a bill (H. R. 9756) for the relief of Frank Gardner, late private Company I, Thirty-third United States Colored Troops; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MESSENGERS IN HOUSE POST-OFFICE.

Mr. TARSNEY (by request) introduced the following resolution; which was referred to the Committee on Accounts:

Resolved, That the three session messengers of the House post-office be continued in employment one month after adjournment of Congress at its present session, to be paid at the same rate heretofore paid them, out of the contingent fund of the House.

DAVID L. GARVER.

Mr. CUTCHEON (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 9757) for the relief of David L. Garver; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Patents, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT OXFORD, MISS.

Mr. MORGAN introduced a bill (H. R. 9758) to amend an act entitled "An act for the erection of a public building at Oxford, Miss.;" which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

RAILROAD THROUGH INDIAN TERRITORY.

Mr. HALE (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 9759) to authorize the Southwest Extension of the Le Roy and Caney Valley Air-Line Railroad to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN N. SMITH.

Mr. BURNES introduced a bill (H. R. 9760) granting a pension to John N. Smith; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

HENRY B. ROBERTS.

Mr. BURNES also introduced a bill (H. R. 9761) granting a pension to Henry B. Roberts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

C. C. CAIN.

Mr. BURNES also introduced a bill (H. R. 9762) for the relief of C. C. Cain; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

J. G. SHAWHAN.

Mr. BURNES (by request) also introduced a bill (H. R. 9763) for the relief of J. G. Shawhan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

J. M. STINE.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, introduced a bill (H. R. 9764) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of J. M. Stine; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

AARON BOTTS.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri (by request), also introduced a bill (H. R. 9765) for the relief of Aaron Botts; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

LOAN OF TENTS FOR SOLDIERS' REUNION.

Mr. DOCKERY introduced a joint resolution (H. Res. 198) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to loan tents to the Northwestern Missouri Veteran Soldiers' Association for reunion purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

A. P. SWINEFORD.

Mr. GALLINGER introduced a bill (H. R. 9766) for the relief of A. P. Swineford; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

CATHERINE SQUIER.

Mr. PHELPS [by Mr. HIRES] introduced a bill (H. R. 9767) to place on the pension-roll the name of Catherine Squier; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

IMPRISONMENT OF JULIO SANTOS.

Mr. BELMONT submitted the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs:

Resolved, That the President be, and he is hereby, requested, if not incompatible with the public service, to transmit to the House of Representatives the correspondence relating to the imprisonment in Ecuador, and subsequent release, of Julio Santos, a citizen of the United States.

MARGARET BRENNAN.

Mr. MERRIMAN (by Mr. BEACH) introduced a bill (H. R. 9768) granting a pension to Margaret Brennan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JOHN LIGHTELL.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL (by Mr. BEACH) introduced a bill (H. R. 9769) to place the name of John Lightell upon the retired-list for privates and non-commissioned officers of the United States Army or Marine Corps; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MARGARET REAGAN.

Mr. MAHONEY (by Mr. BEACH) introduced a bill (H. R. 9770) granting a pension to Margaret Reagan; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WILLIAM ALEXANDER.

Mr. SKINNER (by Mr. BENNETT) introduced a bill (H. R. 9771) to pension William Alexander, of North Carolina, late sergeant United States Army; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MALONA W. WYLIE.

Mr. HILL introduced a bill (H. R. 9772) for the relief of Malona W. Wylie; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MODE OF AUDITING ACCOUNTS, POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, introduced a bill (H. R. 9773) providing that all expenditures of the Post-Office Department shall be passed upon by a Comptroller and Auditor, as all the other expenses in the Treasury Department; which was referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, and ordered to be printed.

GEORGE FETTERMAN.

Mr. MCKINLEY introduced a bill (H. R. 9774) to remove the charge of desertion against the record of George Fetterman; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

MOSES J. ROBERTSON.

Mr. THOMPSON introduced a bill (H. R. 9775) for the relief of Moses J. Robertson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MARY J. FRANCIS.

Mr. LITTLE introduced a bill (H. R. 9776) granting a pension to Mary J. Francis; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ANDREW WINTER.

Mr. LITTLE also introduced a bill (H. R. 9777) for the relief of Andrew Winter; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CONDEMNED CANNON, EVERETT, PA.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Pennsylvania, introduced a bill (H. R. 9778) donating condemned cannon to Post 131, Grand Army of the Republic, at Everett, Pa.; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

CHARLES HOOVER.

Mr. CAMPBELL, of Pennsylvania, also introduced a bill (H. R. 9779) restoring to the pension-roll the name of Charles Hoover, late a member of Company F, One hundred and forty-second Pennsylvania Volunteers; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ANNIE B. JOHNSON.

Mr. HARMER introduced a bill (H. R. 9780) granting a pension to Annie B. Johnson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ARCHIBALD MURPHEY.

Mr. HARMER also introduced a bill (H. R. 9781) granting a pension to Archibald Murphey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

WEDNESDAY EVENING SESSIONS FOR PRIVATE BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, in connection with the resolution which I now send to the desk, I would like to make this statement: That of course the public business must be attended to, but there are also upon the Private Calendar a number of bills to which there is no objection, and which certainly should receive the consideration of Congress——

The SPEAKER. Debate is not in order.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. I am aware of that; but it is only for the purpose of stating in regard to the resolution I now offer, and which I ask to have published in the Journal——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman can ask unanimous consent to make a statement in regard to it.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Then I make that request.

The SPEAKER. Without objection the gentleman will have that privilege.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. As I stated, of course the public business should be attended to, but there are many cases of merit on the Private Calendar which should also receive consideration.

If a citizen of the United States has but a small claim against the Government he ought to have some time allowed for its consideration. Bills also to relieve soldiers from the charge of desertion to which there can be no objection, and which are favorably and unanimously reported by the Committee on Military Affairs, ought to be allowed a hearing. I think it would be only right for us to set apart some time when such claims can be heard. Friday is private-bill day, but for some time it has been regularly monopolized by public business. In this resolution I ask that the Committee on Rules shall set apart Wednesday night of each week at which time those cases can be taken up and acted upon. I deem it but a matter of justice and right that this should be done.

The SPEAKER. The resolution can not be considered at this time except by unanimous consent.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas a large number of bills favorably reported from the several committees now remain upon the different Calendars, and particularly a very large number upon the Private Calendar, to which there are and can be no objection to their passage, but are prevented from being called up by other business, requiring much time and delay: Therefore,

Resolved, That on each Wednesday the House take a recess from 5 o'clock p. m. until 8 o'clock p. m. for the purpose of disposing of bills on the Private Calendar to which there is no objection.

Mr. TAULBEE. Is the request of the gentleman that this resolution shall be considered at the present time?

The SPEAKER. The rule of the House requires that all bills and resolutions introduced under the call of the States and Territories shall be referred to committees.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on Rules.

NANCY CONNER.

Mr. BOYLE introduced a bill (H. R. 9782) granting a pension to Nancy Conner; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

DAVID ABBOTT.

Mr. BOYLE also introduced a bill (H. R. 9783) granting a pension to David Abbott; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES CLINE.

Mr. BOYLE also introduced a bill (H. R. 9784) granting a pension to James Cline; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

J. C. MARTIN.

Mr. NEAL introduced a bill (H. R. 9785) for the relief of J. C. Marin, of Monroe County, Tennessee; which was read a first and second ime, referred to the Committee on War Claims, and ordered to be printed.

MEDICAL RECORDS OF THE WAR.

Mr. JOHN M. TAYLOR (by request) introduced a bill (H. R. 9786) to transfer the medical records of the war from the War Department, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

COMMITTEE ON ALLEGED VIOLATIONS OF RULE XXXIV.

Mr. RICHARDSON submitted a resolution to authorize the select committee to inquire into alleged violations of Rule XXXIV to sit during the session of Congress and the recess of Congress; which was referred to the Committee on Rules, and ordered to be printed.

DAVID R. DAVIS.

Mr. THROCKMORTON (by Mr. LANHAM) introduced a bill (H. R. 9787) granting a pension to David R. Davis; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ABIGAIL FARLEY.

Mr. PRICE introduced a bill (H. R. 9788) granting a pension to Abigail Farley; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

MANUEL A. PINO.

Mr. JOSEPH introduced a bill (H. R. 9789) for the relief of Manuel A. Pino; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

JUAN DE J. MARES.

Mr. JOSEPH also introduced a bill (H. R. 9790) for the relief of Juan de J. Mares; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. This completes the call of States and Territories for the introduction of bills and resolutions. If there be no objection the Chair will now recognize gentlemen who were not in their seats when their States were called.

There was no objection.

FLETCHER S. DEWEY.

Mr. HOLMAN introduced a bill (H. R. 9791) granting a pension to Fletcher S. Dewey; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

F. W. ZICKENDRATH.

Mr. HOLMAN also introduced a bill (H. R. 9792) for the relief of F. W. Zickendrath; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

BRIDGES ACROSS CUMBERLAND AND CANEY RIVERS.

Mr. MCMILLIN introduced a bill (H. R. 9793) to amend an act approved March 3, 1885, to authorize the construction of bridges across the Cumberland and Caney Fork Rivers, in Tennessee; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

BUSINESS OF WAYS AND MEANS COMMITTEE.

Mr. MORRISON submitted a resolution fixing a day for the consideration of bills presented by the Committee on Ways and Means; which was referred to the Committee on Rules.

SUBTREASURY BUILDING AT SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. HENLEY, by request, introduced a bill (H. R. 9794) to purchase additional ground to enlarge the subtreasury building at San Francisco; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, and ordered to be printed.

MARY E. HOUSER.

Mr. RYAN introduced a bill (H. R. 9795) granting a pension to Mary E. Houser; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, I beg to suggest that in all human probability no business can be transacted in pursuance of the regular order to-day, and I therefore move that it be dispensed with, and if that be done I shall move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of the deficiency bill.

The SPEAKER. No motion to dispense is necessary. The gentleman can move directly to go into Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union.

Mr. BURNES. Then I make the motion that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering general appropriation bills.

Mr. PETERS. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PETERS. Does it require a two-thirds vote to suspend the rule?

The SPEAKER. No motion to suspend is necessary. The motion to go into Committee of the Whole on the State of the Union to consider general appropriation bills is in order, and may be adopted by a majority of the House.

Mr. BAYNE. I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. Or rather I rise to say that I believe a point of order would lie against the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], but if it be the desire of the House to proceed with the consideration of the appropriation bills I will not press the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not see that any point of order can be made. The motion to suspend the rules is in order if any gentleman desires to make it and obtains the floor for that purpose, and so is the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES]. This day is not set apart for suspensions; the motion to suspend is simply a motion which is in order on this day.

Mr. BAYNE. But by clause 9 of Rule XVI the motion to go into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering appropriation bills is admissible only after a morning hour. Now, we have had no morning hour to-day.

The SPEAKER. But the morning hour is dispensed with by another rule of the House on the first and third Mondays of the month.

Mr. BAYNE. Yes; the morning hour is dispensed with, or rather it is excluded by another rule, and therefore, having no morning hour to-day, my point is that the motion to go into Committee of the Whole is not admissible.

The SPEAKER. The ruling of the Chair has always been otherwise. It has always been held that on these Mondays, there being no morning hour, the effect is just the same as if the morning hour had been dispensed with by a vote of the House, and that it is in order to move to go into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the consideration of appropriation bills.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] to yield to me for a moment.

LEGISLATIVE, EXECUTIVE, AND JUDICIAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will lay before the House for reference the bill H. R. 8974, with the Senate amendments.

Mr. HISCOCK. What bill is that, Mr. Speaker?

The SPEAKER. The legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill.

Mr. HISCOCK. As I understand that, the bill is sent back to the committee.

The SPEAKER. It is referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

JAMES WILSON.

Mr. McCOMAS introduced a bill (H. R. 9796) granting a pension to James Wilson; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

JEREMIAH EVERLY.

Mr. McCOMAS also introduced a bill (H. R. 9797) granting a pension to Jeremiah Everly; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions, and ordered to be printed.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. BURNES that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union; and there were—ayes 87, noes 87.

Mr. McMILLIN. I demand tellers.

A MEMBER. Does the Speaker vote?

The SPEAKER. The Chair votes in the affirmative.

Mr. McMILLIN. Then I withdraw the call for tellers.

Mr. PERKINS. I call for tellers.

The SPEAKER. Tellers being demanded, the Chair appoints the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. PERKINS, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. BURNES.

The House divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 105, noes 96.

Mr. NEECE and Mr. THOMPSON called for the yeas and nays.

The question was taken; and the yeas and nays were refused, only 35 members (not one-fifth of the last vote) having voted in the affirmative.

So the motion of Mr. BURNES was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the purpose of considering a general appropriation bill. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN], on which a point of order has been made. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 1680 it is proposed to insert:

"To pay Robert Dougherty the difference between the pay of A. W. Williams, at $900 per annum, and Robert Dougherty, at $720 per annum, from January 1, 1884, to June 1, 1885, being the sum of $255; said Robert Dougherty having succeeded said A. W. Williams in charge of the registry and delivery books in the House folding-rooms; also, the difference between the pay of M. J. O'Brien, at $840 per annum, and Robert Dougherty, at $720 per annum, from June 1, 1885, to July 1, 1886, being the sum of $130; said Robert Dougherty having succeeded said M. J. O'Brien as assistant foreman of the House folding-rooms."

The CHAIRMAN. Has the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] anything to say on the point of order?

Mr. SOWDEN. All that I have to say is that the point of order is not well taken, because this amendment does not increase the salary of any officer or employé, but simply provides that the salary already fixed for one official shall be paid to his successor.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to inquire of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SOWDEN] whether the persons sought to be paid by this amendment were or were not the officers to whom this salary applies.

Mr. SOWDEN. The salary paid to A. W. Williams was $900. Robert Dougherty was substituted or appointed to his place and has filled that position. All that he now seeks is to recover by this amendment the difference between $900 per annum, the pay to which he was entled, and $720, the amount which he received.

Mr. SPRINGER. If he actually held the office he should have received the salary under the law.

Mr. SOWDEN. But he did not receive it. By this amendment it is proposed to give it to him.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Did not the incumbent of the office receive the $900? We should not provide for paying two men for the same position.

Mr. SOWDEN. If Mr. Dougherty's predecessor drew the salary unlawfully, that should not bar the person who actually did the work from receiving the amount allowed him by law.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Then I understand there is no evidence to show that anybody received any salary to which he was not entitled?

Mr. SOWDEN. I take it it is incumbent on the gentleman who raises the point of order to show that the amendment is not in accordance with law and that this officer is not entitled to $900 per annum, the sum named in the amendment. The person who served in the position is entitled to the difference between $720, which he actually received, and $900, the legal salary.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let the amendment be again read.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

Mr. BURNES. The ground upon which the committee has acted in matters of this kind may be stated in a few words. Claims of this character do not belong to the Forty-ninth Congress, and they ought not to be, and as I understand they will not be, under the existing rules, recognized, unless there is some order of the House of Representatives or some express law for their payment. Now, in other cases which appear to be similar there were orders coming to the Committee on Appropriations from the House itself directing us to take jurisdiction. But this is a claim coming to us from the Forty-eighth Congress, and has not the sanction of law or of any order of the House. There is nothing, therefore, it seems to me, on which to base a claim for appropriation of this character. It must take its course before the Committee on Claims as other claims of similar description have done.

I will add that it is a very bad practice, indeed, under which a man appointed to one position, for which the salary is fixed either by law or by order of the House, is without authority of law and without an order of the House taken out of that position to which he was appointed and the salary which was fixed, and put into another position without any authority whatever. This is getting to be a great evil, and it is time this House should refuse to send such claims to the Committee on Appropriations indorsed by the action of the House.

But the claims now before us are not in that position. They have not been before the Committee on Accounts, have not been favorably reported back and sent to the Committee on Appropriations. These are applications for naked gratuities, and are without sanction of law or an order of the House of Representatives.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, there is no force in the position assumed by the gentleman from Missouri when he says that this amendment provides for the payment of a party who served in a previous Congress; for if he had observed the language of this amendment he would have seen that it covers the period from June 1, 1885, to July 1, 1886. The language is:

Also the difference between the pay of M. J. O'Brien at $840 per annum, and Robert Dougherty at $720 per annum, from June 1, 1885, to July 1, 1886, being the sum of $120; said Robert Dougherty having succeeded said M. J. O'Brien as assistant foreman of the House folding-rooms.

Now, upon what authority does the gentleman from Missouri assume to state that this man did not occupy his position by proper appointment? An order of the House for his employment was not necessary. This officer is employed by the Doorkeeper of the House, and the office is recognized by the House. If he served in the capacity named, he is certainly entitled to the salary attached to the position. That is all he asks in this case—to be paid the difference between $720 and $840, the latter being the legal salary of the position to which he was transferred and the duties of which he filled. Hence I say the gentleman's position is untenable.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I wish to ask the gentleman a question for my own information. If Mr. Dougherty was assigned to a place the salary of which was $900, why has he not drawn that amount?

Mr. SOWDEN. I imagine the reason is because there was no appropriation of the money for that purpose. I know not the reason if it be not that.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Well, I think we ought at least to have the facts in the case. If he was appointed to an office the salary belonging to which was $900, and performed the duties of that office, of course he ought to have the pay; but if he was appointed to another place and performed the duties of a higher position held by somebody else, he is entitled only to the pay of the place to which he was appointed. We are in need, I think, of some facts in this case which have not been stated.

Mr. SOWDEN. Mr. Chairman, the facts are clearly stated in the amendment itself. It states when this party was assigned to this position, and from the time he assumed the discharge of those duties he asks to be paid.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is somewhat in doubt, but sustains the point of order.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay claims for stenographic work done for the standing and select committees of the House during the present session by other than the official stenographers, and which are recommended by the Committee on Accounts, namely, to Reuben Daily, George O'Doherty, E. D. Easton, John D. O'Connor, Simon McPherson, John G. McLean, H. M. Clapp, Henry G. Hayes, H. H. Alexander, J. L. Andem, J. O. Clephane, J. J. Linney, A. J. Jones, and George W. L. Buckler, $2,484, being $1,545.50 for services rendered prior and $938.50 for services rendered subsequent to the appointment of the official stenographers to committees; said claims to be audited by the Committee on Accounts, and paid, on their approval, by the Clerk of the House, out of the sum herein appropriated; but no part of this sum shall be paid for services rendered under employment by the official stenographers and paid for by them.

Mr. GUENTHER. With the consent of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] in charge of this bill, and of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], I ask consent of the committee to make a correction in the amendment I offered on Saturday. By some inadvertence the amount of costs in five cases——

Mr. BURNES. I trust my friend from Wisconsin will not press that matter now, but will wait until we get through with the bill.

Mr. GUENTHER. Very well; in compliance with the gentleman's suggestion I will withdraw the correction for the present.

The Clerk read as follows:

Miscellaneous:

For additional amount necessary for engraving and printing a portrait of the late Vice-President Thomas A. Hendricks, to accompany the eulogies ordered to be printed by the joint resolution approved March 13, 1886, $450.

Mr. REAGAN. I would like to have some explanation from the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] in charge of the bill how $450 came to be adopted as the amount necessary for engraving this portrait?

Mr. HOLMAN. This was the estimate which came to us from the Department.

Mr. REAGAN. I desire to say they do not cost over $125. I notice they come in these bills asking $400 and $500 for that which any private gentleman can get done for $100.

Mr. HOLMAN. I followed the estimate here. They generally cost $500.

Mr. BURNES. Five hundred dollars were appropriated for this work. This executive document which I hold in my hand fully explains the matter. It might as well be read.

Mr. REAGAN. I do not wish to consume the time of the House.

Mr. BURNES. Five hundred dollars were originally appropriated, but there was such an extraordinary number printed of the document referred to it was found necessary to have this extra plate.

Mr. REAGAN. Nine hundred dollars then for the two plates?

Mr. BURNES. Yes, for the two plates. The gentleman will remember this work is done at the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Mr. REAGAN. Why was not the first plate good for the second printing?

Mr. BURNES. They wear out like everything else.

Mr. REAGAN. An engraved steel plate would hardly wear out that fast.

The CHAIRMAN. There is no motion pending.

Mr. REAGAN. I am inclined to move to strike out that paragraph. It is an extraordinary price for two steel plates.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman submit the motion?

Mr. REAGAN. Yes; I do.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will not move to strike that out. It is a regular estimate.

Mr. BURNES. I ask the estimate of the Department be read to the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

Letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Bureau of Engraving and Printing of an additional appropriation for copies of portraits of the late Vice-President Hendricks.

MARCH 30, 1886.—Referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 26, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to transmit herewith, for the consideration of Congress, copy of letter of the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, of the 24th instant, stating that an additional appropriation of $450 will be required for engraving and printing the number of copies, 31,000, of the portrait of the late Vice-President Hendricks, in accordance with the provisions of joint resolution No. 5, approved March 13, 1886.

Respectfully, yours,

C. S. FAIRCHILD, Acting Secretary.

The Hon. SPEAKER of the House of Representatives.

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
BUREAU OF ENGRAVING AND PRINTING,
Washington, D. C., March 24, 1886.

SIR: I herewith inclose a printed copy of public resolution No. 5, approved March 13, 1886, entitled "Joint resolution to print 31,000 copies of the eulogies on Thomas A. Hendricks, late Vice-President of the United States;" the resolution providing that "the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to have printed a portrait of the said Thomas A. Hendricks to accompany said eulogies; and for the purpose of engraving and printing said portrait the sum of $500, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated," &c.

I have the honor to state that it has been customary for Congress in passing similar resolutions to appropriate the amount named to engrave a portrait and print 12,500 copies, which in some instances has been barely enough to pay for that many impressions in addition to the cost of the engraving.

Under the present resolution $500 will be sufficient to cover the cost of engraving the portrait and printing 12,500 copies only. In order, therefore, that the entire number, 31,000 copies, may be printed, it is estimated that the sum of $450 in addition to the amount already appropriated will be needed.

Very respectfully,

E. O. GRAVES, Chief of Bureau.

Hon. DANIEL MANNING,
Secretary of the Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. REAGAN. I withdraw the amendment because it will be voted down, although I believe the appropriation ought not to be allowed.

The Clerk read as follows:

For refunding taxes illegally collected, prior to July 1, 1883, except the claims numbered 46050, 47381, and 47413 contained in said Executive Document No. 70, $17,197.13.

Mr. CANNON. I move to strike out the following words: "except the claims numbered 46050, 47381, and 47413, contained in said Executive Document No. 70, $17,197.13," and insert in lieu thereof "the sum of $39,020.28."

The object of this amendment is to insert three items certified by the Auditor and Comptroller for taxes illegally collected nearly twenty years ago. In the aggregate they amount to about $20,000. Under legislation which I merely refer to, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue is required to ascertain the taxes illegally collected and pay them, or certify them for payment in the event there is no appropriation available. The appropriation available for the payment of these three claims, as well as thirty or forty other claims standing upon the same principle, has long since been covered into the Treasury. Therefore they have been audited by the Auditor and Comptroller under another provision of the statute and certified to Congress for payment.

These taxes arose under the income-tax law of 1862, levying taxes upon the interest on bonds and upon the dividends on stock. The law only levied a tax upon such bonds and stocks as were owned by citizens of the United States or citizens residing abroad. It did not levy a tax on the bonds or stock of non-residents and alien holders. In the early execution of the law the tax was retained by corporations upon dividends without respect to the residence of the holder, and the retained tax on bonds and stocks was paid over to the Government. There has been litigation touching this matter, and in 7 Wallace, in the case of Railroad Company against Jackson, the whole question was elaborately discussed and decided by the Supreme Court.

From the syllabus in that case I quote the following:

The internal-revenue act of June 3, 1864, does not lay a tax on the income of a non-resident alien, arising from bonds held by him of a railroad company incorporated by States of the Union and situated in them.

I will send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read a portion of the opinion in this case touching the point in controversy.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. KELLEY. If I can be recognized I will yield my time to the gentleman.

Mr. CANNON. Before proceeding further I would like to call the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to the fact that it was agreed there should be a little general debate here and there on this bill.

This is a matter touching which there can not be a presentation in five minutes; it may take fifteen.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes yielded to him by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CANNON. That is not sufficient, and I ask now that limited general debate be allowed on this proposition.

Mr. BURNES. I will ask my friend from Illinois how much time he wishes?

Mr. CANNON. Well, I think I can present the case in fifteen minutes, possibly in ten minutes more; but there are other gentlemen who may desire to be heard.

Mr. BURNES. I trust the gentleman from Illinois will have ten minutes.

Mr. CANNON. But other gentlemen may want some time, and I would like to have it understood that there may be a reasonable general debate.

Mr. BURNES. When other gentlemen rise I presume the arrangement can be made to give them time if necessary.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] will be recognized for ten minutes additional.

There was no objection.

Mr. CANNON. I now ask the Clerk to read from the opinion in the Railroad Company vs. Jackson that part which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

The act in force when the coupons in question fell due was the act of June 30, 1864, and is the one by which the tax of 5 per cent. claimed on the bonds of the plaintiff must be determined. The court below held that the act did not include a non-resident alien, and directed a verdict and judgment for the whole amount of interest. The decision was based mainly on the ground that looking at the several provisions bearing upon the question and giving to them a reasonable construction, it was believed not to be the intent of Congress to impose an income tax on non-resident aliens, and that they were not only not included in that description of persons upon whom the tax was imposed, but were impliedly excluded by confining it to residents of the United States and citizens residing abroad; and that the deduction from a prescribed income of the interest of these railroad bonds when paid by the companies was regarded as simply a mode of collecting this part of the income tax.

We agree in this view. It is not important, however, to pursue the argument, as Congress has since in express terms, by the acts of March 10 and July 13, 1866, imposed a tax on alien non-resident bondholders. The question hereafter will be not whether the laws embraced the alien non-resident holders, but whether it is competent for Congress to impose it, upon which we express no opinion. Judgment affirmed.

Mr. CANNON. But the point has been raised, in talking about this matter elsewhere, that there is no proof that the railroad company ever paid these non-resident bondholders this tax which it has already paid into the Treasury. That action was by such a non-resident holder against the railroad company; and the court held that it did not make any difference whether the railroad company had paid it to the Government or not; that the company was liable to its non-resident or alien stockholders.

The same case, or a similar question, came up again for adjudication, and the Attorney-General held, in volume 15 Opinions of the Attorneys-General, page 67, and I read from the syllabus in that case, as follows:

The amount of tax illegally collected from the Illinois Central Railroad Company from 1883 to 1886, as income tax upon dividends on stock held by non-resident aliens, should be repaid that company, after deducting so much therefrom as has been already paid, &c.

I will not quote the opinion at large. Now, after proof taken, these claims come here certified by the present Comptroller to the present Auditor, having been passed upon by the present Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and there is no question but what they are just. There is no question but that the United States has had the use of the money for nearly twenty years; and now we are asked to pay back the amount of the principal—without any interest—that was illegally exacted and which was paid into the Treasury.

I say again that I can see no reason why it should not be returned. That is all I desired to say in this connection, and I will yield the remainder of my time, if I have any, to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has five minutes of the time allotted to him remaining.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, the failure to appropriate this amount of money was, as I have heard, based on the ground that the parties who were collecting, or about to collect, it would never pay it over to the parties to whom it belonged. Now, sir, the attorney of these parties, the attorney of the non-resident alien stockholders, whose money was withheld from them, is my personal and valued friend.

I have seen his powers from some of the very owners of these funds and from the bankers in New York who have been their banking agents for years. He sought to present the case to the subcommittee, and if the gentleman from New York [Mr. ADAMS] is here I am sure he will bear out the statement that he had no opportunity of presenting the case of his clients before the subcommittee. It is within my knowledge that he sued—sued most abjectly—for the privilege of stating the case to the whole committee, and was—I do not use the word offensively, but I say it because it expresses what would have been my feelings if I had stood in his place—bluffed; and it is within my observation that his carefully guarded but distinct statement of his case which he placed in the hands of the committee was returned to him without having been submitted to the committee. I ask, however, that this letter from my friend, the counsel in the case, T. W. Neill, may be read, and I vouch for all its statements.

The Clerk read as follows:

OFFICE OF T. W. NEILL, ATTORNEY AT LAW,
1767 P STREET NORTHWEST,
Washington, D. C., July 5, 1886.

MY DEAR JUDGE: Relative to the non-resident-alien-income-tax-refunding claims, Nos. 46050, 47381, 47413, referred to on page 72 of the deficiency bill, and Nos. 48191, 48281, and 48242, on page 98, which are not provided for, it has come to my knowledge that this omission was occasioned by a statement made before the Committee on Appropriations, to the effect that these old claims had been bought up by the attorney who was prosecuting them, and, if paid, no part of the money would go to the beneficiaries. I represent these claims on behalf of these beneficiaries, through their bankers and financial agents in New York city, and I write to say that any such statement is an unjust and uncalled-for reflection upon the railroad corporations, upon these bankers of high standing and character whom I represent, and upon me, and the statement is false in every particular. I was, greatly to my regret, not permitted the opportunity to hear or answer this false statement before the committee, and therefore I beg, if it shall be repeated or referred to before the House, that you will contradict it as unqualifiedly false.

Among the bankers represented by me are H. Amy & Co., Moran Bros., A. Iselin & Co., Baltzer & Lichtenstein, A. Goettel & Co., of New York city, and S. & J. Welsh, of Philadelphia.

These bankers are the agents in this country of the alien claimants, and will receive on their behalf every dollar of this money from the railroad corporations so soon as the Government shall pay these adjudicated allowances.

I am, very sincerely, yours,

T. W. NEILL, 1767 P Street Northwest.

Hon. WILLIAM D. KELLEY,
House of Representatives.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, when we were on the overflowed-lands case the question was put to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] by the gentleman from Maine [Mr. REED]: "Am I right in supposing this is a case of resisting execution by the committee?" And it was answered that he was. I say this is a more flagrant case. It is a case of the overruling of decisions by the Supreme Court without hearing the party claimant or his statement of law. For the present I yield the floor.

Mr. BURNES. I beg to call the attention of the committee, perhaps not inopportunely, to an evil that is existing all around us and that has finally found encouragement in the Committee of the Whole House in the House of Representatives. It seems that here in Washington there is less regard paid to the ethics of an honorable profession than in any other quarter of the habitable globe.

Mr. KELLEY. I desire to say that that remark does not apply to my friend T. W. Niell, who is pressing this claim, sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. BURNES. I trust my venerable friend——

Mr. KELLEY. And it involves the Comptroller of the Currency, and the Treasurer of the United States.

Mr. BURNES. It is true, Mr. Chairman, I have not the experience in legislation that belongs to my venerable friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY]. It is true that I may not have the patience to bear with those things I see around me that he has borne so long. But I do not think it improper on this occasion to call attention to the fact that no lawyer, or that few at least, leave the service of their client, the United States, without boldly taking employment on the other side of questions with which they have grown familiar while they were in the service of and retained by the United States.

Mr. KELLEY. Nor does that remark apply to Mr. Neill. He has not been in the service of the United States.

Mr. BURNES. We see all around us almost every day men who have been engaged in the service of the United States in either House of Congress and in the Departments of the Government, having by reason of that confidential relation to their client, the United States, obtained valuable information against the United States, turn around and at once attempt to discover and bring to light lawsuits against their former client almost without limitation. This may have no relation to this case, because it is not my business, as I understand it, to become familiar with the attorneys who are engaged in prosecuting these claims. It is not my business, as I perceive it, to champion those attorneys upon this floor, and furthermore, sir, allow me to say that so far as my limited experience is concerned, it is the first time when a vulgar blackguard on the outside of this House has been allowed to come before the House to insult and deride one of its honorable committees. So long as the criticism of the Appropriation Committee is confined to members on this floor I can laugh at it and enjoy it, but I submit to my colleagues on both sides of this House whether they are prepared for such a communication as has been sent in by this so-called attorney, using language which no member on this floor would use in order, which no member on this floor would care to use with due regard to the proprieties of life and the views that belong to gentlemen.

Mr. KELLEY. The letter was addressed to me. I submitted it, and therefore assume its language and am responsible for it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Will the gentleman from Missouri allow me a question?

Mr. BURNES. Yes, sir.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I do not quite get the application of the gentleman's remarks. Does the gentleman claim that the writer of this communication has been in Congress or in any of the Departments?

Mr. BURNES. I do not know the man. I only know him from that communication which has been thrown into this discussion.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. LONG, having been recognized, said: I yield such time as he desires to the gentleman from Missouri, reserving a portion of it for myself.

Mr. BURNES. I would suggest it would perhaps not be unfair if by unanimous consent my time was extended as was the time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON].

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. I make that request.

There being no objection, the time of Mr. BURNES was extended for ten minutes.

Mr. BURNES. Now let me come to the merits of the proposition, and when I shall have presented my views with regard to these merits it will be for the House of Representatives to pass upon them.

We heard strangely enough the other day about "Democratic honesty." I know no Democratic honesty, no Republican honesty. Honesty is honesty, and I trust that it exists as well in the bosoms of Republicans as in the hearts of Democrats. These railroad companies, payment to whom has been excluded in this bill, came before the auditing officers of the Treasury Department with a claim twenty-four or twenty-five years old. They presented that claim as due to them, and, conveniently enough, a decision of some court is found that seems to bear upon the question. But, sir, do you suppose for one moment that if the proposition had been submitted to any court in this country that there was money due to certain individuals in Europe judgment would have been rendered in favor of a railroad company in this country?

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman allow me a suggestion right there?

Mr. BURNES. I must ask the gentleman to excuse me now.

Mr. CANNON. It is right on that exact point.

Mr. BURNES. I will hear the gentleman after a while.

Mr. CANNON. But we shall have passed the point then. What the gentleman suggests is just what the Supreme Court did.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, under a law of the United States certain railroad companies whose claims are excepted from this bill paid what was then a lawful tax to the United States upon certain bonds and stock issued by them. These taxes were paid by these railroad companies, and under the law they reserved from the stockholders and the bondholders the amount of the tax which they had paidt o the Government. The money that they paid to the Government of the United States as the tax upon the bonds and stocks of their corporations was the money of the bondholders and the stockholders which was withheld from them by the companies; therefore, if the decision of the court be correct, the Government owes the money to those alien bondholders and alien stockholders, and does not owe it to the railroad companies. Will this House, in its eagerness to accommodate the managers of these railroads, pay them money which it is confessed is not due to them but to individual parties across the water? Whenever these men who, out of their own money, have paid this tax—whenever they come and say to us, "Out of our money the railroad companies have paid the tax, which your laws now give back to us,"—whenever the real parties come here in that way we will consider whether we will make an appropriation or not.

Mr. LONG. But this amendment does not propose to pay the money to the railroad companies.

Mr. BURNES. I say to my friend from Massachusetts that this recommendation of the accounting officers of the Treasury is in favor of the railroad companies, and the companies can draw the money. The estimate is in favor of each railroad company, and not in favor of the parties. Now, where is the steal? Let me show this House the direct, palpable wrong that is sought to be perpetrated here—I mean, of course, no disrespect to any gentleman upon this floor. Here is the wrong: These alien stockholders and bondholders have been now twenty-five years in igorance of the fact that the Government of the United States owed them a cent.

Mr. KELLEY. I beg leave to correct the gentleman.

Mr. BURNES. Many of them are dead; all of them perhaps, but for the intervention of some little jack-legged lawyer fishing in the archives of the Government, would have been in utter ignorance to-day that anything was due them. But no matter, sir. I say that if we owe these people anything, we owe it to them name by name, and we do not owe these railroad corporations one cent of this money. Look at it. The railroad companies paid this tax with the money of their alien bondholders and stockholders. The railroad companies are not "out" one cent. Bring in the names of the creditors. Do not cook up a steal between an attorney and two or three railroad officials, but bring in the names of the creditors of the Government and we will pay them their just due. That is the point here. These appropriations are for these railroad companies to whom we are not indebted one farthing, yet, in our haste to gratify a lofty attorney who figures in this business, and in our haste to put some money into the coffers of the railroad companies, we actually propose to constitue them trustees of unknown cestui que trusts, and to put the money of the people into their hands to be dispensed by them to these unknown creditors. It is the duty of the Government, if it owes this money to anybody, to pay it to the parties to whom the debt is due, not to these irresponsible attorneys nor to these railroad companies. If the alien creditors have an attorney here, why does he not bring their names to the front? Why does he use the name of a railroad company to whom we are not indebted instead of bringing forward the names of his clients, if he has any?

Mr. KELLEY [holding up a paper]. They are here.

Mr. BURNES. I apprehend, Mr. Chairman, that it will be found that this gentleman is excellent at finding a case, and that he has found a case without a lawful client. I guess he has no client but himself, and no associate in his crime but the railroad companies, who are endeavoring to get money that does not belong to them. Sir, I am speaking not for my own money nor for the money of anybody on this floor; I am speaking for the interests and rights of the people of this country; on their behalf I am resisting an ignoble attempt to take the money of the people and put it into the hands of the railroad companies to be distributed or kept as they may choose.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, this is a plain proposition. The facts are few and direct. Now, after the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] has muddied the water and like the cuttle-fish seeks to swim away, I want to call the attention of the committee to what the facts are. First, the railroad company, the same as a banking company, or any other company, paid under the internal-revenue law a certain per cent.—from 2 to 5 per cent.—of the dividends upon its stock and bonds directly to the Government, instead of paying that 2 to 5 per cent. to the stockholder or the holder of the bond or coupon. Now, after twenty years' lapse of time, this claim for a refunding having been in the mean time filed under the law by the exact companies that paid the money into the Treasury, the claim is first approved under the section of the Revised Statutes by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue—lawfully approved by your Commissioner of Internal Revenue; then it is approved by your Auditor and your Comptroller, appointed by your President; and, thus approved, the claim is certified for payment and sent to Congress for an appropriation.

I want the attention of the gentleman from Missouri to what I am about to say—that the highest court of this land, the Supreme Court of the United States, in the construction of the law, in the determination of right between man and man and between the citizen and the Government (and whether you want to bow or not to the decision of the highest tribunal in this land, my oath and my duty as a good citizen compel me to do so), has determined this question in a case precisely similar to these cases—a case in which the foreign bondholder sued a railroad company and recovered. Here is the opinion of the Supreme Court which I had read from the Clerk's desk a few moments ago, and it is upon this exact point.

Now, every one of these companies is liable in this matter to its stockholders. Where twenty years ago they paid their dividends less the 5 per cent. which was paid into the Treasury of the United States—promptly paid, but under protest and contrary to the requirements of the law, as the Supreme Court held—they are still liable to their foreign stockholders. They come now and say, "As we paid the money to the Government over twenty years ago and are still liable, we ask that the Government return us that money, that we may pay it to the stockholders to whom it is due." There is the whole case.

Mr. BURNES. I will ask my colleague on the committee whether there is any decision of the Supreme Court creating an obligation by virtue of that decision to pay money to one person when it is due to another?

Mr. CANNON. I will say to my friend, the railroad company is the trustee of its stockholders and the only party known to the Government in this matter.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. CANNON. I wish some one would give me a few minutes more.

Mr. CONGER obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. CANNON. My friend from Missouri is a lawyer, and I want his attention again. I ask him whether the railroad company is not liable to its stockholders?

Mr. BURNES. As a matter of course the railroad company paid these taxes, and paid them under a law which required them to be paid.

Mr. CANNON. No, sir; under no law, as the Supreme Court held.

Mr. BURNES. Very well; under a law which was supposed to be binding at that time these taxes were paid to the Government of the United States. Now, I am not going off on any immaterial issue, and I do not care whether the mode of proceeding would be by the alien bondholder or stockholder against the corporation or against the Government. I do, however, say one thing, which I think my colleague will not deny, that if we owe these alien bondholders or stockholders for money which has gone into the Treasury under an illegal ruling of the Department or an unconstitutional law, they can come before us at any time to recover their money; and these railroad companies, although they may be trustees, as the gentleman calls them, for the stockholders, are in no sense trustees for the Government, into whose hands the Government should put money for the benefit of third parties.

Mr. CANNON. Why, my friend is not ingenious in his answer nor direct. Here is the case in which the stockholder recovered against the railroad company. Here is the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. SPRINGER. To what decision does the gentleman refer?

Mr. CANNON. To the case of The Railroad Company vs. Jackson, in 7 Wallace.

Mr. SPRINGER. That was not a case involving the payment of tax imposed by the internal-revenue law, but it was a suit growing out of the laws of Pennsylvania taxing railroads in that State.

Mr. CANNON. Oh, no; the gentleman is entirely wrong.

Mr. SPRINGER. I have the case here.

Mr. CANNON. So have I; and I had it read. If the gentleman will turn to page 269 he will find the whole question decided by the Supreme Court. I hope he will read it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it be read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. CANNON. I had it read once. If the gentleman will yield me time I will have it read again.

Now, I ask who paid this money into the Treasury? This railroad company.

Mr. BURNES. Whose money was it?

Mr. CANNON. It was the money of the railroad companies which they held to pay the dividends upon their stock and bonds, and they paid it to the Government under protest.

Mr. BURNES. Now, does not the gentleman know that at the time this payment was made the law expressly authorized the railroad company to pay out of dividends declared on stock or bonds the taxes due from parties who owned the bonds or stock?

Mr. CANNON. Oh, certainly. That is, the law purported to do it. But the Supreme Court held that the law did not apply to alien non-resident stockholders, and the railroad companies have paid or are liable to pay—I do not care which—the amount they reserved from the dividends due to their stockholders and bondholders.

The gentleman and myself disagree about this matter. Here is the Supreme Court of the United States, whose decision I have read. Who gives us the law next? The law officers of the Government. Here is the opinion of the Attorney-General, which I have read, in which he expressly holds under that decision of the Supreme Court of the United States that the trustee, the railroad company, had the right to receive the money. And who next is the law officer of the Government? Your Auditor and your Comptroller settled these claims under this decision and certified them here, but you come here and say in effect they are either knaves or idiots.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, obtained the floor.

Mr. CANNON. I hope I will be allowed to conclude my remarks.

Mr. STRUBLE. I move by unanimous consent the gentleman be allowed two minutes longer.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the gentleman being allowed two minutes longer in which to conclude his remarks?

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I do not know the attorney who presses this claim. I do not care whether he is black or white, honest or dishonest. I do not know any party in interest, claim-holder or bond-holder, nor have any of them spoken to me. But I do know my Government, under the decision of the Supreme Court of last resort, owes this money. It has been legally ascertained by your Auditor and Comptroller and certified along with sixty or seventy others, and when you come to these three railroad companies you stop, and while you certify to the others, you run your pencil through these three cases because, forsooth, they were railroad companies, and for no other reason.

I never owned a share of railroad stock in my life and suppose I never will, but I can stand here and do justice to a railroad company, to a rich man and to a poor man. The law of the country knows no man's wealth or standing. Its arm is long enough to reach the strongest and it is strong enough to protect the weakest. I am tired and sick of this kind of statesmanship. If I thought I were guilty of it I would say to myself it was the baldest, purest demagogy I had heard or thought of. [Laughter.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I do not have the honor of knowing the attorney who represents these claims, although I am informed by Judge KELLEY and General BINGHAM, of Pennsylvania, he is one of the reputable lawyers of Philadelphia. I do know from what I learn, and I put the question to my friend from Missouri [Mr. BURNES], that he has neither been a member of Congress nor represented the Government in any official capacity. Hence my friend's allusion to the question of ethics involved, though eloquent and interesting, had no bearing on this case. The proposition is a simple one. There is no conflict for or against railroads in this question.

The citizens of another government, owning property in this country upon which there was an income tax, were not liable to the payment of that tax, but under a misapprehension the trustees of certain railroad companies instead of paying over dividends to the cestui que trust paid the income tax to the Government, and therefore the Government received money to which it was not entitled.

While the Government held money in the Treasury to which it was not entitled the question has been raised, why do not these people come here and ask to have it returned to them, that is, the real parties in interest? I answer, the names of each and all of them are on file in the Treasury Department, in the hands of the Secretary of the Treasury. I hold here a partial list of thirty-one of these claimants. Of course it must go to the trustee, to be paid to the cestui que trust, as every lawyer knows, that having been the medium through which the money passed to the coffers of the General Government.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, the question stands here, shall we appropriate from the Treasury of the General Government money which has been adjudicated by the highest tribunal as not belonging to it to pay it over to the parties to whom it does belong? Not a dollar can rest in the treasury of the railroad companies. It simply goes to the foreign citizens, to whom it belongs in law and equity.

There is no ground for feeling in this case. Perhaps my colleague on the committee is under misapprehension as to the letter Judge KELLEY had read from the Clerk's desk. It puts no condemnation on the subcommittee or on the committee, as I understand it. Not at all. We can not have any such construction. That paper showed, not that any false statement had been made by the committee or the subcommittee on appropriations, but that some person opposing these parties represented falsely that the attorney of record for the claimants was himself the owner of the claims, and the honorable gentleman from Pennsylvania was asked to contradict that statement in the House or in the committee. That was no reflection upon my honorable colleague on the committee.

I would join with him to resent it if it did, and my own self-respect would arouse me to do so if it cast any reflection upon the committee. But I do not understand anything of the kind. He understood that a misapprehension existed, and not having the right to do so himself, he asked the father of the House, Judge KELLEY, from his place on the floor here to contradict it. That is all, and the simple question here is whether or not we shall honestly pay over the money that does not belong to us to the foreign citizens of another government to whom in law and equity it belongs.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a brief statement in reference to the pending question. My colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] said that it had been decided by the Supreme Court that these were valid claims, leaving the impression upon the mind of the committee that the Supreme Court had decided on the merits of the claims which are here now demanding payment, or creating the impression that the court had held that these parties were entitled to their money in the pending cases.

The fact is that in 1861 Congress passed a law imposing an income tax upon every person residing in the United States whose income reached a certain amount, and in the case of corporations this tax was placed upon the income derived from bonds and stocks. The eighty-first section of this act provided that the tax on income derived from bonds and stock of corporations should be paid by the companies, and that they might deduct the sum of the payments so made from the payment for interest on the bonds or dividend upon stocks, as the case may be.

In the case of the Illinois Central Railroad Company the company paid this tax as provided in the eighty-first section, and charged it up to their non-resident alien stock and bond holders. There, so far as this record goes, the matter ends. But in 1866 Congress amended the law and included non-residents in its provisions, so that after that date non-residents were required to pay this tax upon their income, as specifically stated. A case went up from Pennsylvania, from which the gentleman read at length, the case of The Railroad Company vs. Jackson, reported in 7 Wallace, 263.

The facts of that case are substantially as follows: The railroad company in settling with these non-resident bondholders deducted from the amount of the dividend payments to them, or the amount due upon the coupons, the 5 per cent. income under the laws of Congress, and they refused to accept that deduction and took the case from Pennsylvania to the Supreme Court of the United States. The Supreme Court in that case held, in December, 1868, that the law had been amended two years before as to non-resident bondholders, a majority holding also that the tax did not apply to non-resident bondholders.

Mr. CANNON. To alien bond or stock holders.

Mr. SPRINGER. I mean that it did not apply to alien stock or bond holders; and therefore affirmed the judgment of the Pennsylvania court, which had held that the railroad company had no right to deduct from the coupons the amount of this tax.

Mr. CANNON. That is correct.

Mr. SPRINGER. That is the case that went up to the Supreme Court. But I want to call the attention of the committee to a dissenting opinion by Justices Clifford and Swayne, Justice Clifford concurring with Mr. Justice Swayne in the dissenting opinion, in which this language is used:

I dissent from the opinion and judgment of the court in this case, because I think the taxes in question, both State and Federal, were legally assessed and the officers of the railway company properly deducted the same from the amount of the coupons, &c.

That was the dissenting opinion by two of the ablest judges on the bench.

Now, the point here—and it does not appear in the cases involved in this bill—the point here is that the parties in interest have not pursued their remedies in the court so as to place them in condition to demand a return of the tax after a decision in another case similar to theirs.

Mr. CANNON. I am satisfied my friend does not want to be incorrect in this matter.

Mr. SPRINGER. Certainly not.

Mr. CANNON. And if he will allow me, I will take the liberty of correcting him.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I will take the floor and yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

It does so appear, first, that that decision and the Attorney-General's opinion, which opinion my friend has seen——

Mr. SPRINGER. I have, sir.

Mr. CANNON. Held that the trustee was entitled to recover. More than that, it further appears that your Commissioner of Internal Revenue, under a section of the statutes authorizing him to make the investigation, your own Auditor and your own Comptroller—in fact the Auditor and Comptroller of all of us for the time being—have examined the cases, and held that these claims are proved up, and have certified them in this document along with some sixty or more of the same sort.

Mr. HOLMAN. Yes; certified them as cases where parties have applied for a rebate of taxes; but that is all.

Mr. SPRINGER. They have certified, as I have understood the gentleman from Indiana, these cases as cases where parties have applied for rebate of taxes.

Mr. CANNON. More than that. Under the statute, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue first ascertained on full proof what the amount was; then as the appropriation had lapsed under another section of the statute the application went to the Auditor and Comptroller. If the Commissioner of Internal Revenue had had the money he would have paid it at once, as he did other claims. Under a subsequent section of the statute the Auditor and Comptroller both passed these claims, and after they were so audited and controlled certified them to Congress in this document for appropriation.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let me ask the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] did the railroad company or the beneficiaries of this appropriation covered by his amendment apply to the Internal Revenue Department under the provisions of the internal-revenue act for the return of these taxes.

Mr. CANNON. The railroad company did so apply.

Mr. SPRINGER. When?

Mr. CANNON. Within the time prescribed by law.

Mr. SPRINGER. If they applied within the time it was the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to refund the tax.

Mr. CANNON. But my friend will recollect that after two years all unexpended balances are turned into the Treasury. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue had no money; if he had had the money he would have refunded the tax. This claim received the approval of the Auditor and Comptroller, and the money having been exhausted, came here for appropriation.

Mr. SPRINGER. If these parties had applied within the terms prescribed in the internal-revenue and income-tax law for return of their taxes as having been illegally assessed and collected they would have been paid under the provisions of that law, but not having so applied they take their places as simple claimants before Congress for our grace and favor in removing for them the statute of limitations; and the way to reach those cases is to introduce a bill, send it to the proper committee, and let Congress determine whether such a case is presented for our consideration to those non-resident bondholders as would entitle them to have the statute of limitations lifted as to them and to sue the Government.

Mr. CANNON. On that point we can not afford to be mistaken. If the statute of limitations had run before the claim for this refunding had been made I would agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER]. But in fact the statute of limitations had not run. The claim was filed in time, and because it was filed in time the proof was taken, and it was approved by the Commissioner and approved by the Auditor and Comptroller in every respect. It was in time, just as the sixty or seventy other cases in the document were in time.

Mr. BURNES. I desire to bring this debate to a close. But before doing so I trust I will be indulged while I make a remark somewhat personal in its nature. I can always pardon the energetic manner of my colleague and friend [Mr. CANNON]; but sometimes he is energetic in speech as well as in manner. The language used by him in his remarks was not intended, I trust, nor do I believe it was intended, to be offensive. At the same time it is not quite proper for the gentleman to say to me that I am opposing these propositions simply because these claims are due to railroads, and that I am guilty of demagogy.

I desire to say to my friend from Illinois, believing, as I do, that in speech he is often more energetic than he is aware, I have no prejudice for or against railroads. I am as willing to do fairly and justly by railroads as by private individuals. I make no distinction except to examine into their affairs a little more closely than I would into the affairs of a private individual. I have no prejudice against them, and I do not exclude this claim, nor did the committee exclude it, because it was made on behalf of a railroad. And I trust the gentleman when he sleeps over it will feel in the morning after sleeping that he has not followed the golden rule in doing to me as he would have me do to him. So far as that is concerned that is merely personal, but I felt I ought to say that much.

Mr. CANNON. I shall say to the gentleman from Missouri, in the first instance, I was in favor of putting these claims into the bill, because I believed that the United States justly owed them. I will confess, believing so, and properly believing so, in my judgment, that when the gentleman from Missouri made his somewhat vigorous speech, I think, perhaps, more vigorous than he intended to make it, in which he denounced these claims as dishonorable, as I understood him, that did touch me, because in my view and opinion they are honorable and just; and for that reason I was for them, and I took care, under parliamentary usages, not to refer to the gentleman from Missouri in what I said about my opinion that this was a piece of demagogy. I said if I had done so I would have entertained that opinion of myself.

Certainly I have no intention or desire to be unjust or discourteous to any gentleman, least of all to my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Missouri, and if I was discourteous I now disclaim any such intention.

Mr. BURNES. I was sure that that was the feeling of my friend, and therefore I mentioned the matter.

Mr. Chairman, but a word more. The simple question is, is this money the money of the bondholders and the stockholders or is it the money of the railroad company? That question each gentleman here can determine for himself. Who is the real owner of this money? I have simply tried to show that if the money goes into the hands of the railroad company or of this attorney of the company, the slumbering creditors, the real owners of it, will possibly get it, and possibly not. We ought not to vote money to one party which is due to another. I now ask unanimous consent that debate be limited to five minutes, which I will yield to my friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WHITE].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES]?

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, before that motion is agreed to, I would like to have a brief letter read from the bankers who are to receive this money, which letter has been filed with the Secretary of the Treasury, asking him to furnish a list of the alien and non-resident parties to whom the money is due. There is no railroad company intervening.

Mr. BURNES. That is wholly unnecessary. I object to anything being filed that is not read.

Mr. KELLEY. I ask to have the letter read.

The request of Mr. BURNES for unanimous consent was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the Government paying its just and honest debts as I am in favor of individuals paying theirs, and I was very much surprised the other day when an effort was made to refuse payment of a judgment. But as to the matter under discussion here, we know that when a claim is brought into court we can generally tell whether it is an honest claim or not. Now, there is an indebtedness here. Certain money was paid by the railroad companies and it got into the Treasury of the United States, but that money does not belong to the railroad company, it belongs to individuals; and, although we should be honest, yet it is time enough for us to pay our honest debts when the men to whom they are due come in here and respectfully demand payment. This railroad company, in order to get a standing here, should at least show that they have either been obliged to pay this money, or that they have voluntarily paid it. They do not make any such showing. As I believe, the Committee on Appropriations have attempted to treat them fairly, and, I think, have treated them fairly. Looking at the matter in this way, I can not vote to pay this money to the railroad company without some assurance that it will go to the parties to whom it belongs. And, of course, if it were paid to the railroad companies and did not reach the real owners, such payment would be no bar to a subsequent claim by those owners. We are obliged to pay our honest debts, but we are obliged to pay them to the right parties, and if we pay them to the wrong parties, that, of course, is no payment at all.

Mr. LONG was recognized for the remaining two minutes.

Mr. LONG. Mr. Chairman, it is agreed on all hands in this House that the money in question does not belong to the United States. It was paid to the United States under a mistake of law, and the only question now is to whom should it be refunded. I rise simply to read from the mature and carefully considered opinion of the Attorney-General of the United States, which re-enforces the action of the accounting officers of the present administration in recommending this payment. The Attorney-General says:

This money was claimed and received by the United States as income tax upon dividends on stock (held by non-resident aliens) made by the Illinois Central Railroad Company in the years 1863, 1864, 1865, and 1866.

Subsequently the courts of the United States declared it illegal to exact this tax upon dividends of stock belonging to aliens not resident in this country. (Railroad Company vs. Jackson, 7 Wall., 262.)

The officers of the company are trustees of the stockholders, and they held the money earned in trust for the owners of the stock, after the payment of all legal claims against the company.

The officers of the road were bound to pay over the dividends earned to the stockholders, and they had no right to withhold 5 per cent. or any other sum, for any illegal purpose; and, if so withheld, the stockholders might sue for and recover the same against the road.

These alien stockholders can recover of the company any money to which they have a lawful right, and which the company refuses to pay; and the corporation can not defend itself in a court of law against the claim on the ground that the company has paid out the money upon some unlawful exaction, and especially after the payment has been declared illegal by the highest tribunal.

Mr. Chairman, we are bound by the law to repay this money to the trustees who paid it into the Treasury. Not to do that is to do what no honest man would do.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate on this amendment has expired.

Mr. EVERHART. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That satisfactory security shall be given to the Secretary of the Treasury that the said amount shall be refunded to the several alien bondholders or stockholders (or their representatives) out of whose money the said taxes were paid to the Government.

Mr. BURNES. I rise to a point of order on that amendment. The parties named in it are not before the Government asking any appropriation; there has been no account rendered as to them and no claim set up for them. They come in without any recommendation or authority whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. As the Chair understands the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, it is a proposition to make payment to railroad companies whose accounts have been audited; and this amendment provides simply that the companies shall not be paid until they shall file a certain bond. The Chair rules the amendment in order.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this proposition was limited by unanimous consent, and is now exhausted.

Mr. KELLEY. On the amendment to the amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. On the whole proposition.

The question being taken, Mr. EVERHART'S amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The question being taken on agreeing to the amendment of Mr. CANNON as amended, there were—ayes 67, noes 69.

Mr. CANNON. I make the point that no quorum has voted, and call for tellers.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. CANNON and Mr. BURNES were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 89, noes 81.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For Coast and Geodetic Survey (western division), 1883 and prior years, $8.

Mr. BAYNE. I move to amend by inserting after the paragraph just read the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Treasury to pay William B. Morgan, late disbursing agent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, for the time he has spent since his dismissal, and to reimburse him for expenses incurred in the settlement of his accounts, $2,000.

Mr. BURNES. I reserve a point of order on that amendment.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, when the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was under consideration I proposed an amendment similar to this, but withdrew it upon a suggestion made by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations [Mr. RANDALL] that the proposition would more fittingly come within the general deficiency bill. In making a statement on that occasion I said that the record of Mr. Morgan, as disbursing agent of the Coast and Geodetic Survey, had been perfectly clean, honorable, and straight in all respects; that I believed his accounts had been adjusted and had been found in all particulars correct. Since that time I have received a letter from Mr. Chenowith, Auditor of the Treasury Department, stating that although there were no imputations upon the integrity of Mr. Morgan as disbursing agent, yet he believed there was gross neglect on the part of Mr. Morgan in the management of affairs connected with that service. In view of that statement from the Auditor of the Treasury Department I can not insist upon the amendment going into this bill; but I desire to say on behalf of Mr. Morgan, as one who honorably, faithfully, and honestly served the Government for a great many years, and who in the general onslaught made upon the Coast and Geodetic Survey was deposed from his place, and whose reputation was to some extent besmirched because some of his associates in that office were unquestionably guilty of gross frauds upon the Government—I desire to say that Mr. Morgan's record is clean; and he wishes that such a presentation may be made in his case. I ask, therefore, to incorporate with my remarks a brief statement (which will occupy very little space in the RECORD) of the facts concerning his connection with that office, showing the manner in which he discharged his duties and exhibiting his whole relations to the office.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania desires to print certain papers as a portion of his remarks. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The statement submitted by Mr. BAYNE is as follows:

STATEMENT OF MR. MORGAN'S SERVICES.

William B. Morgan was tendered the position of disbursing agent of the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey without solicitation on his part while serving on a committee appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury (Mr. Folger) to superintend the transfer of the office of the United States assistant treasurer at New York from General Hillhouse to Mr. Thomas P. Acton. This committee consisted of Mr. E. O. Graves, the present Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing; Mr. Horace A. Whitney, the present cashier of the Treasury, and Mr. Morgan.

Morgan accepted the position, and was relieved from duty as a member of said committee (by telegraph) by the Secretary of the Treasury (Mr. Folger) and ordered to return to Washington, file his bond, and assume the duties of the office tendered him.

He filed his bond and entered upon the duties of the office on the 12th day of January, 1882, and performed the duties faithfully and honestly until he was dismissed without a moment's notice, and before any examination had been made to ascertain whether or not there was anything wrong with his accounts.

The commission appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury to make an investigation of the Coast Survey consisted of Messrs. Thorn, Garrison, and Huntington. The manner of procedure of the investigation was to call for an employé, ask him all the questions they desired, then dismiss him and call another. There was no opportunity given to Morgan or any of the other parties dismissed to hear the evidence given, hence no opportunity to cross-examine witnesses. It was a most unusual procedure. They were all dismissed before one sentence of evidence had been taken by the commission.

Mr. Morgan has given the best twenty-three years of his life to the Government service, nearly three years of which was as a private soldier and non-commissioned officer, and the greater portion of the balance of the time in the Treasury Department. He made a record there which any man might well feel proud of. He has letters of the highest commendation from Secretaries McCullough, Boutwell, Richardson, and Sherman, under whom he served, thanking him for the valuable services he rendered. He has made examinations of nearly all the assistant treasurer's offices in the country, and some of them several different times. The Department had such great faith and confidence in him that he was selected to take charge of the first party that conveyed coupon bonds to Europe after the first syndicate had been formed.

He did not feel justified in going into any business until his accounts had been settled by the accounting officers, and has since been engaged in making explanations, &c., after having received official information from the First Comptroller of the Treasury (the final accounting officer, so far as his accounts are concerned) that certain items had been disallowed or suspended.

These disallowances or suspensions are technical; but he felt it to be his duty, not only to his bondsmen but to himself, to make full explanation of all vouchers paid by him. He has paid no voucher which has not been properly executed and approved or certified in accordance with law and the regulations of the Coast Survey.

His brother, John H. Morgan, served as a soldier in the First Pennsylvania Reserve Cavalry, and his cousins Frank, Samuel, and Billingsley Morgan and Hugh Flanegan, served in the same regiment. His cousin, James A. Morgan, and J. Boyd Alexander, served in the One hundred and forty-ninth Pennsylvania Volunteers. The latter died in Andersonville prison.

Not one of these soldiers or their relatives has ever applied for or received a Government position of any kind or a pension.

UNITED STATES COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY OFFICE,
Washington, July 31, 1885.

To Mr. F. M. THORN,
Superintendent and Chairman of Committee, Washington, D. C.:

* * * * * * *

I desire to put on record here my strong convictions as to the honesty and zeal of Mr. W. B. Morgan, late disbursing agent. Coming to the office about four years ago as a selection from a large number of officials in the Treasury Department, he has appealed to me to introduce such methods as to aid in a great degree the whole character of the work. I have ever found him ready on short notice to give statements of all the various accounts of hydrographic parties or the conditions of appropriations and allotments made by the Superintendent in such a maner as to frequently call for favorable comment. In eight years' experience in the service very many accounts from the twenty or twenty-five hydrographic parties passed through my hands, and as very few vouchers were returned with errors that had escaped both of us, I had come to regard the improved system he had introduced as about perfect. His care and attention and that of his principal assistant I have particularly noted, and I can not help but think his removal is due to some misunderstanding which must be explainable.

* * * * * * *

Very respectfully,

C. M. CHESTER,
Comdr. U. S. N. and Hydro. Inspt. C. and G. Survey.

WASHINGTON, August 8, 1885.

SIR: We, the undersigned, bondsmen of W. B. Morgan, late disbursing agent of the United States Coast Survey, having full faith and confidence in his honesty, integrity, uprightness, and sobriety, beg to request that you will revoke the order dismissing him, and substitute one in lieu thereof suspending him until he has an opportunity of rendering his accounts to the accounting officers.

Very respectfully,

HARRISON DINGMAN.
CHAS. A. SHAFER.
WM. G. PALMER.
N. A. ROBBINS.
GEO. W. COCHRAN.
HENRY K. SIMPSON.
E. W. CLARK.

Hon. D. MANNING,
Secretary of the Treasury.

[Extract from a statement made by B. A. Colonna, assistant in charge of Coast and Geodetic Survey Office, and sworn to August 1, 1885.]

The disbursing office, under charge of Disbursing Agent W. B. Morgan, has been honestly and conscientiously administered according to customary interpretation of paragraph 39–43, inclusive:

"39. The disbursing agent shall, under the direction of the Superintendent, make all disbursements of money on account of the Survey, and shall render quarterly an account of all expenditures therefor to the First Auditor of the Treasury Department; and he shall report to the Superintendent quarterly the amount of requisitions made and of accounts transmitted by the several parties.

He shall also render such trial balances from time to time as may be required by the Superintendent."

40. An administrative examination of the accounts must be made by the Superintendent.

41. The disbursing agent will make his requisitions to the Secretary of the Treasury, in accordance with the prescribed rules of the Treasury Department.

42. The disbursing agent shall furnish such forms and give such information to the Superintendent and chiefs of parties as shall insure regularity and uniformity in accounts and promote responsibility and economy.

43. The disbursing agent must call the attention of the Superintendent, for his action, to any unusual item, or what may appear to be an excessive or unnecessary charge for any item of expense, however small, before passing the account to the Auditor.

Such vouchers as, first having received the approval of the Superintendent, have always been considered authorized to pass; and in passing them without further inquiry he only followed an established usage that has existed for over forty years. Of such vouchers as have come into his hands from the field I have never had the remotest suspicion of his giving other than the most particular scrutiny. I have known him to stop and finally reject a voucher in one case, which I particularly remember, because it was the voucher of a friend of his, for a camp flag for $17, and he thought it too expensive a flag for the purpose. I am so confident of Mr. Morgan's honesty that I am willing to relieve his bondsmen to the full extent to which I will be taken at any time, provided that his case can be fairly stated before judge or jury.

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman, there seems to be a disposition on the part of every one who has had any connection with the Government to bring in a claim for additional compensation in some form; and these claims are generally pretty large. I do not propose to discuss this particular amendment, but, availing myself of this occasion, which raises a question in regard to appropriating money for persons who have yet to be provided for, I desire to present half a dozen paragraphs from different daily newspapers of the country, giving the opinion of the public press in regard to the action by this House on last Saturday in allowing a month's extra pay to the annual and session employés of the House. Without occupying time in reading these extracts, I ask to have them printed with my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks to have printed with his remarks certain newspaper editorials. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The newspaper extracts submitted by Mr. REAGAN are as follows:

[From the New York Sun.]

EIGHTY THOUSAND DOLLARS IN TIPS—GRATUITIES VOTED OUT OF THE PEOPLE'S MONEY TO THE EMPLOYÉS OF CONGRESS.

WASHINGTON, July 4.

The Democrats in the House made a bad record for themselves on Saturday by voting away in gratuities to the employés of the House nearly $40,000. Several years ago some shrewd fellow holding a clerkship got a friendly member to offer an amendment to the general deficiency bill, giving him an extra month's pay for summer-vacation spending money. Friends of other clerks popped up with similar propositions for their favorites, and the result was that a log-rolling combination was soon formed which annually took a snug lump sum from the Treasury. The Senate employés were quick to learn the little game, and formed a like combination, which was equally successful.

Last year the Senate employés received gratuities to the amount of $35,298, and the House employés got $37,167 in excess of their salaries. Nearly all these persons are paid by the year. At the long session of Congress they have about seven months' work, and at the short session they are employed three months. In two years they perform just ten months' service.

The nature of the grab was presented in a nutshell by General WARNER, of Ohio, yesterday. He said:

"The proposition to increase in some way the pay of the officials of the House and Senate is not a new one. It comes here regularly at every recurring session of Congress. Every endeavor is made to get into a place in the first place, and then nothing is left undone to get the pay increased, so as to make it more than for like service outside of Government employ. It looks sometimes as though only those in office had representatives here.

"I think, Mr. Chairman, that we are bound to think sometimes of those who pay these things; of the men whose money, in the way of taxes, supplies these high salaries; of the laborers who plow and sow and reap, who work in mines, factories, and mills, and who in the end pay everything; for out of what labor annually creates all salaries and all expenses of Government come, and the more that is taken for Government the less there will be for those who create the whole wealth. If the pay of the employés of this House is not equal to pay for like services elsewhere, then it ought to be increased, but it ought to be increased directly and equitably and not by an allowance for no service."

Mr. REAGAN and Mr. HOLMAN made similar protests against the gift, but the Republican members of the House and a few weak-kneed or reckless Democrats combined and voted the extra month's pay all around. The Senate will double the amount, so as to give its own employés a slice of the pork, and the tax-payers of the country will have an additional burden of $80,000 put upon their shoulders in order, as Mr. REAGAN forcibly expressed it, "to give persons already receiving high salaries a month's pay for doing nothing, the money to come out of the pockets of people much poorer than themselves."

[From the Philadelphia Ledger.]

AN EXPENSIVE CUSTOM.

A custom has obtained for some years of voting at the end of each session of Congress one month's extra pay to the officers and employés of the two Houses. This movement is managed and directed by the officers themselves, usually by those highest on the salary list, and whose duties are at or about the Clerk's desk on the floors of the respective Houses. The practice has been to prevail upon some prominent member of the minority to offer an amendment to one of the appropriation bills providing for the payment of one month's extra salary, the officers and employés in the meantime having successfully worked upon a sufficient number of members to carry through the amendment. The House having voted this gratuity to its officers, furnishes the excuse for the Senate to make like provision for the officers and employés of that body. Comparatively few of the members stop to think of the sum of money taken from the Treasury by this annual raid; otherwise they would scarcely vote for an abuse that costs annually about $80,000. The officers of Congress are better paid than any other class of Government officials; their labors are performed in seven months of one year and three months of the second, making ten months of labor for twenty-four months' pay, exclusive of the two months' extra pay awarded for some years past. In the House yesterday Mr. HEPBURN, of Iowa, offered the customary amendment to the sundry civil bill allowing the one month's pay to the House officers and employés, and it was supported by Messrs. CANNON, of Illinois, and HISCOCK, of New York. These gentlemen, in reply to the opposition of Messrs. REAGAN and HOLMAN, said it was customary, and was offered from the minority side as an "act of courtesy." Messrs. REAGAN and HOLMAN earnestly resisted, but the amendment was finally adopted.

Last year this gratuity drew from the Treasury $72,465, which does not include the extra pay given the Capitol police and the Official Reporters. Of the amount stated, $35,298 was paid officers of the Senate, and $37,167 officers of the House. There is no justification for this act of extravagance, and a determined effort should be made in the House to strike the Hepburn amendment from the bill.

[From the Philadelphia Times.]

THE GIFT TO CONGRESSIONAL EMPLOYÉS.

The usual resolution to give the employés of the House and Senate a month's extra pay has been offered in the House, as is customary. The resolution comes from the minority side. On this occasion, Mr. HEPBURN, of Iowa, is made the instrument to forward one of the worst abuses of legislative power. This gift to employés costs the Government about $80,000 annually. If it was only to those clerks, doorkeepers, &c., whose pay stops with the end of the session, it would not be so objectionable, though they are well paid, as a rule, and the money thus voted is unearned, but it is for all alike. Those annual clerks who have nothing to do seven months out of the year, and whose salaries run on during vacation, come in with the rest. Some of the officials get $4,500 a year. They get the month's gratuity the same as the most insignificant messenger.

[From the New York Times.]

Eighty thousand dollars is not a great sum in the eyes of Congress to give away, notwithstanding the fact that it must all be raised by tax and comes out of the pockets of the people. Yet the House yesterday voted to give a month's extra pay to all the officers and employés of the House, and the Senate will, of course, follow the example when it gets a chance. It is a custom for which there is no law, and it is high time that there was a strong law against it. Last year the sum given away was $72,456, of which $35,298 went to the officers and employés of the Senate and $37,167 to employés of the House. In addition to these sums, there were other gratuities increasing the amount to $80,000. The persons for whom this annual gratuity is regularly voted are well paid. Some of them get more pay than they will ever command in any other positions. While some of them are industrious, many of them do next to nothing or less in the way of labor. In one session of Congress, lasting two years, they are on duty about ten months out of twenty-four. Yet the tax-payers are compelled by the vote of Congress, by men who are sent here to protect the public purse from robbery, and not to rob it themselves, to pay all the employés on the rolls for twenty-six months of labor done in ten months, or assumed to have been done. This thing is always managed in the same way year after year.

The men who seek clerkships work hard to get into places and then devote themselves to cultivating the House with a view to getting the members in shape for voting this species of robbery of the people. They will not vote to increase salaries, so as to bring the pay up to what the added gratuity amounts to. If they did the gratuity would still be expected as a perquisite of office. The proposition always comes from the minority side. Yesterday it was made by Mr. HEPBURN, of Iowa. Mr. HAMMOND, of Georgia, in the chair, left the question of order to be decided by the House, and it ruled that the amendment to the deficiency bill was in order and ruled it in by a large majority. Mr REAGAN protested against giving persons already receiving high salaries a month's pay for doing nothing, and Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, vainly appealed to the House to consider the tax-payers, the laborers, who sow and reap, who mine, and who sweat in factories to provide the money to be given away. He told his hearers that on the average the seventeen million laborers in this country receive only a little more than $300 a year for labor and capital combined. The average earnings per family of five is less than $1,000; probably not more than $800 now; and yet the laborer gets no extra month's pay, but must bear his share of the burden of increasing the salaries of officers and employés of the House. The indefensible proposition was too strong in the House, however, to be talked down by appeals to such matter-of-fact reasoning. The amendment ought to be brought to a separate vote in the House, and it goes without saying that it ought to be beaten, and will be beaten if the members of the House have any regard for their oaths or their hard-working constituents.

[New York Times, editorial.]

The officers and employés of the two Houses of Congress are well paid, and they are certainly not overworked. They are occupied with their duties less than half the time during the two years of a Congress, and are paid salaries which they probably could not earn in full time in any other occupation. If their pay were not sufficient it ought to be increased in a regular and legitimate manner, but nobody in Congress ventures to propose that. But a custom prevails of voting them a month's extra pay at the end of each session, and this custom, which would be more honored in the breach than the observance, has already been followed in the House in acting on the deficiency bill. It involves in the House and Senate the distribution of some $80,000 of the people's money in gratuities for the kind of attention and subserviency that is rewarded with "fees" in hotel waiters. It goes for no public service, but is simply a reckless appropriation of public money for the gratification of those who are amply paid for the performance of their easy duties.

[New York World.]

The Committee on Appropriations is determined to defeat the Hepburn and Hiscock amendment to the general deficiency bill, granting one month's extra pay to the House and Senate employés, when it comes to a vote in the House. While in the Committee of the Whole yesterday there was no yea-and-nay vote taken, but on the final vote there will be one. There are a few Democrats who voted for it yesterday, while the Republicans were unanimously in favor of it. The custom has long been in existence and was established by the Republicans. It costs the Government annually $72,465—$35,298 for the Senate and $37,167 for the House employés. Many of them have been working industriously with members, hoping to secure the adoption of the amendment which they knew would be offered. There seems but little doubt about the defeat of the amendment. Mr. BURNES, chairman of the committee, says that the infamous practice, as he calls it, has got to be broken up, and he believes in a Democratic Congress doing it.

Mr. REAGAN. I also submit a letter from the Clerk of the House in regard to the amount of expenditure which will be incurred under the amendment to which I have referred. From this statement, which is not entirely accurate, as it does not embrace all the employés who will be paid under the amendment, I believe the amount which will be paid to the employés of each House will be about $40,000, making $80,000 for the two Houses, because no doubt the same gratuity will be voted at the other end of the Capitol to the employés there, as has been done in years past.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, Washington, D. C., July 5, 1886.

DEAR SIR: We have not footed the June payments yet, but the amount paid during the month of April, 1886 (being same number of days as June), for salaries of officers and employés, 1886, was $83,615.54. June will be near that amount.

Very respectfully,

JNO. B. CLARK, JR.,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Hon. JOHN H. REAGAN.

Mr. Chairman, I repeat that the appropriation made by the amendment referred to is a pure gratuity; and, as is shown in the papers published with my remarks, it is, so far as regards the annual employés, the granting of additional pay to men who already receive very liberal pay for a period of twenty-four months, while actually employed only about ten. It is right that these things should go into the RECORD, so that the country may see the facts upon which this Congress proposes recklessly to give away the money of the tax-payers of the country to those who have to work less than half the time, for which they are paid, and who already receive high salaries—salaries much larger than they could get in the ordinary pursuits of life. And this gratuity is voted simply because these men are a favored class. It is one of the developments of officialism that is controlling to a dangerous extent the proceedings of Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order upon the amendment of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] is sustained.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fees of jurors, United States courts, 1883 and prior years, $87.70.

Mr. PERRY. I move in lines 163 and 164 to strike out "$87.70," and insert in lieu thereof "$10,000."

Mr. BURNES. I reserve the point of order.

Mr. PERRY. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that is a good point of order, but I will briefly give the reason why I think the amendment should be made. As stated in debate frequently on both sides of the House, it so happens that appropriations made for the expenses of the United States courts have been insufficient to meet those expenses, and the consequence is that during the term of court the marshal gets out of money and has no money with which to defray the expenses of jurors and witnesses. It then happens the jurors and witnesses are compelled from necessity to sell their claims to third parties. If the marshal gets no funds during that term of court these third parties have to wait, and when their claims are presented here they are met by the objection that under the Revised Statutes they are assignees of claimants, and therefore they can not be paid. The consequence is that thousands of dollars of these claims are now due to these third parties, but can not be paid because of that section of the Revised Statutes preventing the payment to assignees of such claims.

I introduced a resolution calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information on this point, and for the reason why the amount stated in this section was only $87.70 when these claims amount to many thousands of dollars. The reason assigned by him was that these claims when they passed into the hands of third parties are not audited at the Department; that no account is taken of them at all; that when the Secretary of the Treasury is called upon for the amount of these deficiences he only gives the items presented by parties holding the claim.

I hold in my hand a letter from the Comptroller of the Treasury, which was addressed to the Speaker of the House and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. Let me read a paragraph from Mr. Durham's letter:

Common fairness would seem to indicate that Congress should do what it could to enable witnesses and jurors to realize a hundred cents on the dollar for their demands against the Government.

As to the amount of fees of witnesses and jurors which have not been paid by the United States, and which accrued in 1883 and prior years, I can give no accurate information, there being no record of such fees; but I should suppose that $60,000 for witnesses and $20,000 for jurors would cover the amount of such fees.

It seems but right sufficient appropriation should be made to meet these deficiencies. They are acknowledged debts of the Government, although in the hands of third parties. If an appropriation is made under the law as it now stands, I presume all these claimants will have to reassign to the original parties, who will present them and be paid.

Mr. SPRINGER. I presume the accounting officers of the Treasury have certified the correct amount required to meet these deficiencies. But I desire to say a few words as to the expenditures for jurors and witnesses of the past year, referred to by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], and also on a previous occasion by the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS].

In debate a few days ago on this bill the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] called attention to these deficiencies for the fiscal year just closed on the 30th of June, 1886. He stated this deficiency for the payment of witnesses was "startling." That is the word he used. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] stated it was a great hardship to witnesses and jurors not to have appropriated sufficient money for that year. The gentleman from Maryland [Mr. MCCOMAS] refers to that matter as being an indication that the present administration was extravagant in the extreme. Let me explain the reason for the deficiency for the fiscal year just ended in the appropriation for the payment of fees of witnesses and jurors, as that deficiency over the previous year amounts to $130,000 for witness fees alone. I went to the Attorney-General's Office and asked whether any explanation could be given for that extraordinary increase in the matter of witness fees. He stated there was, and gave me a copy of a letter addressed to a Senator on the 15th of May last, and as it gives a full explanation of this matter I ask that it be published as a part of my remarks.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Let it be read now.

Mr. SPRINGER. Very well; let it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE, Washington, May 15, 1886.

SIR: Your letter of the 13th instant asks for "some statement of prior expenditures for the fiscal year" out of appropriations for fees of witnesses and jurors, 1886.

Please accept a statement of expenses during three prior years as in part explanatory of a statement in answer to your request:

	Appropriation.	Expenses.
Jurors:
1883	$450,000 00	$409,762 35
1884	510,000 00	449,701 83
1885	450,000 00	431,320 81
1886	500,000 00	500,000 00
Witnesses:
1883	601,000 00	590,870 76
1884	660,000 00	639,265 05
1885	600,000 00	589,455 40
1886	685,000 00	685,000 00

You observe that in the years 1883, 1884, and 1885 the appropriations (original and deficiency) exceeded the expenses, and that repayments of the differences were made to the Treasury by the marshals to whom the advances had been made. Advances naturally are in excess of expenses, as it is impossible to foresee what the actual expenses will be.

1. The large expenditure for jurors and witnesses in this fiscal year is due to the fact that in some judical districts, notably in the western district of Arkansas, the district court suspended proceedings for want of funds, and thus transferred the business of fiscal year 1885 to the fiscal year 1886.

An idea of what amount of business was thus transferred in this district may be derived from the fact that the marshal reqired for the May and June expenses, 1885, the sum of $58,760, and there could only be advanced before July 1, 1885, the sum of $15,700, for failure of appropriation, of which the larger part was for jurors and witnesses. Courts in other districts transferred similar expenses, in a less degree.

2. The expenses of witnesses have increased in this fiscal year, under the decision of United States Supreme Court in Ex parte Wilson (United States Reports, volume 114, page 417), to the effect that "no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury."

The effect of this decision (March 30, 1885) on the expenses of the courts began to be seriously felt near the close of the fiscal year 1885, and thus increased during all the fiscal year 1886, because it necessitates the appearance before grand juries of witnesses to secure an indictment for offenses which formerly were tried upon informations—the witnesses who appear before the grand juries being held by the court for an expected trial of the indictment during that term, perhaps for weeks; and possibly the court adjourns without the hearing, when the witnesses subpœnaed must again appear at the next term.

It may be estimated that the increase from this source alone will prove to be 20 per cent. above former expenses.

(3) Another increase comes from the large number of suits that have been instituted at the request of the Interior Department for depredations upon public lands. It is impossible to see how great the increase will be in another fiscal year, but it has grown largely in the present fiscal year.

(4) A further source of increased expense is the activity of the Territorial courts in the Mormon prosecutions under the Edmunds act, already great and constantly increasing. This is a material source and can hardly be appreciated at the present state of proceedings.

(5) Formerly certain offenders in the Indian Territory were amenable to the court at Fort Smith, Ark.; now they are also amenable to the courts at Wichita, Kans., and Graham, Tex., without any perceptible decrease of expenses in the court of Fort Smith and with a perceptible increase of expenses in the courts at other places.

After a careful examination of the causes mentioned it is thought that the deficiencies asked for are none too large, and perhaps will be found, after the expenses have been incurred and definitely ascertained, to be too small.

The failure of appropriations this year will carry much business into the next year, although some courts will hold their terms and leave the expenses to be provided for in the future.

These are the main facts that bear upon "the prior expenditures for the fiscal year." They are essential to an understanding of the comparative expenses of this year with former years expressed by the tables on the first page. Moneys have been advanced to marshals only upon the approval of the district-attorneys, district judges, circuit judges, and circuit justices, when possible to secure them.

Very respectfully,

A. H. GARLAND,
Attorney-General.

Hon. W. B. ALLISON,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, United States Senate.

During the reading of the letter Mr. SPRINGER's time expired.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I will take the floor and yield my time to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope unanimous consent will be given to finish the reading of the letter.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SPRINGER. I want to state, Mr. Chairman, briefly, that the causes which have been alleged for this increase, as will be seen by reference to this communication, are three in number; first, that owing to the failure of appropriations for the preceding year, ending June 30, 1885, a larger amount of business was necessarily carried over to the next fiscal year; that in the western district of Arkansas the difference from this source amounted to over $25,000 of increase, for which provision had to be made. There were also several other courts where a large amount of business was transacted as compared with the preceding year; for instance, at Graham, Tex., there was a very large increase of business, and at——

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ELY was recognized.

Mr. SPRINGER. I ask consent to proceed for a few minutes.

Mr. ELY. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will move a pro forma amendment, with the consent of the committee.

I was stating, Mr. Chairman, that there was a large increase of business, growing out of crimes in the Indian Territory, at Wichita, Kans., and Graham, Tex.; and that there had been no diminution of business in Western Arkansas on account of the same jurisdiction in the Indian Territory.

Also, the second cause assigned was the great increase of expenses by reason of the enforcement of the Edmunds law in Utah and Idaho. I have a statement here prepared at the Department showing the amount of that increase. In Utah, for instance in 1885, there were expended for jurors $10,600, while in 1886 this had increased to $16,300, being an increase of $5,700 for that one item in a single year. There was also an increase of $6,400 in the item of fees of witnesses; and in Idaho there was an increase of $2,900 in jurors' fees, and $4,100 in witness fees, being a total increase of $19,100 in Utah and Idaho for jurors and witnesses directly traceable to the number of prosecutions under the Edmunds law.

The number of prisoners sent to the penitentiary had increased in Utah from 100 to 149, showing a large increase of business in that direction.

The other cause shown for the deficiency is the largely increased judicial business in the Western Territories owing to prosecutions for infractions of the general land laws and for prosecutions against persons committing depredations on the public domain. The Interior Department has sent from sixty to one hundred letters to the Department of Justice, calling attention to the condition of affairs there and asking that the machinery of the courts be interposed to institute prosecutions against those who have been depredating upon the public domain. These prosecutions necessarily involve a considerably increased expenditure.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. What does my friend state touching the propriety of the amendment of the gentleman on his right?

Mr. SPRINGER. That does not relate to the same year.

The Department in making estimates for future years has taken a general view of the situation and has not confined it to the extraordinary matters to which I have called attention; so that these estimates are not so great as the expenditures of last year.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this administration is not guilty of and can not be chargeable with the increase of expenditures, as has been intimated by gentlemen on the other side; and they need not be alarmed by the seemingly anomalous condition of the increases for the year in question, which have necessarily arisen in the affairs of the Department of Justice from the causes to which I have just called attention. I hold in my hand a statement which I clipped from the New York Times, and which I will ask to have printed as a part of my remarks, which shows that the decrease of expenses in 1886, for ordinary purposes, amounts to some twenty-two and one-half millions of dollars below the preceding year of 1885. I ask to incorporate this with my remarks.

There was no objection.

The extract is as follows:

[New York Times.]

THE NATION'S BALANCE-SHEET—A GOOD SHOWING FOR CLEVELAND'S ADMINISTRATION AND REFORM.

The Government's book-keepers have footed up their accounts for the fiscal year that came to an end on June 30, and the figures are unexpectedly satisfactory. The receipts exceeded the expenditures by $90,528,546. If we regard the sinking-fund payments as an item in the expense account the clear surplus will be about $45,000,000, but as both the sinking-fund payments and the clear surplus are applied to cause a reduction of the public debt the separation of the two amounts is only a matter of form. The clear surplus in the preceding fiscal year was only $17,859,735, and for this year it is $45,000,000. This is the most prominent fact brought out by a comparison of the accounts.

It will be seen that the conservative estimates of the Treasury Department were much less favorable than the actual transactions have been. The Secretary estimated that the clear surplus for 1886 would be only $24,250,000, and it is almost twice that amount. His estimates were based upon the receipts and expenses of only the first three months of the year. Moreover, the clear surplus of the preceding year ending on June 30, 1885, had been only $17,859,000, and the accounts for the year had shown a notable decrease of receipts ($24,829,163), and a marked increase of expenditures ($16,100,690) as compared with those of 1884. He could not foresee that there was to be so great a change for the better in the last nine months of the year just ended.

The increase of the clear surplus from $17,859,000 in 1885 to about $45,000,000 in 1886 has been caused by an increase of receipts and a decrease of expenditures, but it is due in great measure to the latter. As compared with 1885 the revenue from customs is greater by $11,275,883, and the internal revenue has been enlarged by $4,535,798, while the miscellaneous receipts (bank taxes, sales of land, patent fees, profits on coinage, &c.), have fallen off nearly $3,500,000. On the other hand, the ordinary expenditures of the Government have been less by $22,405,799 than they were in 1885—a decrease of nearly 15 per cent. Owing to the redemption of bonds the interest on the debt was less by $805,000. The pension payments were, however, greater by $8,600,187, the total for the year having been $64,702,454. To an increase of $12,453,585 in the total receipts must be added a net decrease of $14,611,191 in expenditures, making $27,064,776, which is substantially the excess of clear surplus for 1886 over the clear surplus for 1885.

A statement in detail to be made by the Treasury Department hereafter will show in respect to what items of ordinary expenditure the reduction of nearly $22,500,000 has been made. The Secretary's estimate of customs receipts was too low by $18,000,000. Still his predictions seemed to be supported by the condition of trade and of the country, and by the accounts for the first quarter. That the growth of customs receipts could not be foreseen is shown by the fact that these receipts for June, 1886, exceeded those for June, 1885, by $4,000,000. The increase of pension expenses from $56,000,000 to $64,000,000 was due in part to the fact that the Pension Bureau issued during the year more certificates by nearly 10 per cent. than had been issued in any previous year.

In the last report of the Treasury Department it was estimated that instead of a clear surplus in 1887 there would be a deficit of $24,500,000. The balance sheet for 1866 makes that estimate untrustworthy. Unless Congress shall greatly increase expenses by unwise and extravagant legislation there will be no deficit in the year which we have now entered. Indeed it is probable, with that qualification, that the clear surplus will not be less than that which the accounts for 1886 have revealed.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the statement of the gentleman from Illinois defending an increase of appropriation for the expenses of the Federal courts I simply desire to state that the experience in almost every State of this Union justifies Congress in making the closest scrutiny and most careful investigation of the expenditures for this branch of the public service. It is well known that for years the judges of the Federal courts have arbitrarily stretched out their hands to take possession of almost every conceivable matter of litigation. They have not only done that, but it is well known that for years the Federal courts of the United States have been the most outrageous political machines in this country.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. They are worse now than ever before.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Now I want to state here and I want the House to understand it that within my own little State after investigating the matter in one single year the expenditures were cut down $28,000. They have cut down the fees of witnesses alone $6,000. Now, why is it with the same business going on that there is this change? And in the gentleman's own State who is advocating this proposition in one district we cut down the expenditures $23,000. I refer to the southern district. They now come here and ask that there shall be an additional appropriation allowing the same abuses to be carried on that have been carried on for a number of years. I am not willing, for one, that Democrats shall consent to carry out the same abuses that were being carried on for years by Republican administrations. I want to put a curb upon it. I want to put a stop to this arbitrary action of the Federal courts in the States; and I want to see returned to the local jurisdiction all of these various questions that have been taken to the Federal courts and which do not properly belong there.

Mr. Chairman, a very remarkable fact occurs that in almost all the States the time for the meeting of the Federal courts is a sort of a holiday. The worst elements in the community saddle their horses, go to the nearest depot, get on the cars, and go to the place where the Federal courts meet, and there they receive their mileage and their per diem. One farmer in my county near a railroad depot has for years during the session of the Federal court run the most profitable hotel in all that country, and it has been profitable by the patronage of witnesses and jurors who go to the Federal courts to make money, and to prosecute and persecute and bedevil the people of the country. There is too much jurisdiction in the Federal courts. They assume everything. Why, sir, in my State they undertake to assume the right of eminent domain and to confiscate lands for the purposes of railroads under State law. They not only do that, but they undertake to decide almost every question that comes up; so that you can not raise a question of $5,000 in our courts but it goes to the Federal courts, and the people and the witnesses are dragged there.

I protest against an increase of appropriations for these courts. On the contrary, I say let us cut down the appropriations and compel them to attend to nothing but national matters.

Mr. CANNON addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. HAMMOND). The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. There has been no recognition for some time on this side of the House.

The CHAIRMAN. The present occupant of the chair was informed by its former occupant, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN], that the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] was next entitled to the floor.

Mr. CANNON. About twenty minutes have been occupied by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SPRINGER], and then five minutes by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON].

Mr. BURNES. To cut the Gordian knot——

Mr. CANNON. I am willing to wait, however, until the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. ROGERS] shall have been heard.

Mr. BURNES. To cut the Gordian knot, I now call up the point of order reserved on this amendment.

Mr. ROGERS. It was the point of order I rose to discuss. It is an unfortunate thing that it is utterly impossible to discuss any question here relating to the Federal judiciary without its bringing up talk about some abuses to be found in some locality somewhere. We must have the worst set of men on earth on the bench if all the abuses that are paraded exist and exist everywhere.

I want to invite the attention of the Chair back to the point under discussion, which is simply a point of order; and when we have got rid of the point of order I want then to be heard on the merits of the proposition, which is to strike out, in lines 163 and 164, $87.70, and to insert in lieu thereof $10,000. Upon that the point of order is made.

Just how any point of order can be made on that proposition I can not understand. If my friend from Missouri desires to explain it I will yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. While the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. EDEN] was occupying the chair the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. PERRY] proved conclusively, I think, his amendment was subject to the point of order when he stated that this money could not be taken out of the Treasury under the law; that the law would have to be changed in order that it might be taken out.

Mr. ROGERS. I yielded to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] that he might state what he meant by his point of order.

Mr. BURNES. I call the attention of the Chair to the fact that by section 3477 of the Revised Statutes all assignments of these fees are declared to be absolutely void. The accounting officers of the Treasury sent in to us certain items aggregating $87.70, and say there are other amounts due to witnesses, but that the witnesses have assigned their claims, and that under this section of the statutes they have no power under the law to audit them and report them. This is an appropriation to pay claims sent down to us by the accounting officers of the Treasury enumerated in this document—Executive Document No. 70; and here comes in a proposition—to do what? To increase the amount from $87.70, to pay audited claims, to $10,000, when there are but $87.70 of the audited claims, and the law in the section to which I have alluded prohibits the paying of those which are stated to be barred.

The CHAIRMAN. How is the Chair to be informed as regards the point of order just how much is certified by the auditing officers?

Mr. ROGERS. The question just put by the Chair is as good an argument as I can make. If there are no claims to pay, the money will be paid back into the Treasury. There is no point of order involved. It makes no difference whether these claims have ever been audited or not. The simple proposition is to strike out one sum and insert another, for a purpose specified by the Department, in this bill. I say the amendment is entirely in order. The question is whether the committee will insert that proposition, and after the ruling of the Chair I want to be heard on that.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Can a larger sum be paid under existing law?

Mr. ROGERS. It does not make any difference to the point of order whether it can or can not. That is a question for the committee.

Mr. BURNES. This appropriation is covered by this provision of the second section, which I shall now read:

That for the payment of a portion of the claims certified to be due by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, and under appropriations heretofore treated as permanent, being for the service of the fiscal year 1883 and prior years, and which have been certified to Congress under section 2 of the act of July 7, 1884, as fully set forth in House Executive Document No. 70, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, there is appropriated as follows.

The CHAIRMAN. On a point of order the Chair does not know whether the claims amount to $87 or $10,000. The point of order is overruled.

Mr. BURNES. But here is the executive document showing what they do amount to.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I wish to say a word before we get further away from the statements of my colleague [Mr. SPRINGER], as well as the statements of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON], upon a paragraph of this bill that has been passed.

I do not wonder that my colleague, with all his astuteness, has required two days to incubate an apology for this deficiency. Everybody knows that my colleague can apologize for anything with as great facility as anybody in this country, and I do not wonder that he comes in now and tries to apologize for these deficiency appropriations for the Department of Justice. What are they, Mr. Chairman? Three hundred and forty thousand dollars deficiency appropriation for this Department more than was appropriated for 1885 or for 1886. I had occasion the other day to state, after an interview with an officer of the Comptroller's Office, that there was from $150,000 to $200,000 more of these deficiencies yet to come. Now, sir, what are the facts? My colleague says that the court in the western district of Arkansas had a large balance of business in 1886 coming over from 1885, and so with many of the other courts, for the reason that the appropriations for 1885 were short. That is true to some extent, but then the appropriations of 1886 were also short. The courts were closed as early in 1886 as in 1885.

I saw the judge of the western district of Arkansas weeks and weeks before the close of the fiscal year, and he was not holding court. Why? Because, notwithstanding the large deficiency appropriations, they were exhausted and there was no money to pay witnesses. My colleague's explanation does not explain the matter. It is fequently said that "a new broom sweeps clean," and I guess that is true in this case. In many of these cases the new marshals and other officials that have come in have proved to be fully as greedy as the old marshals, if not more so. I do not know just what the reason of it is; I will not say that it is because they are Democrats; it may be because they were more hungry when they came in; I suspect that is the reason. But, notwithstanding the $340,000 deficiency that has been already appropriated or recommended, there is from $150,000 to $200,000 more yet to come.

Now, that is all I desire to say about this. If my colleague is satisfied to let the matter stand upon his explanation, I am. I have never known a case concerning appropriations and expenditures so desperate but my colleague could apologize for it if his party friends were concerned. Accordingly, he rises here and apologizes for the expenditures of 1886, and in the same breath turns around and makes what is no doubt to himself a satisfactory apology for this $347,000 deficiency.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to reply briefly to my friend from Illinois [Mr. CANNON]. This is not by any means a desperate case, and it does not require any extraordinary effort to explain it. The Attorney-General has explained it to the satisfaction of everybody who is willing to accept a plain statement of fact. The Attorney-General says that the reasons for this increased expenditure are, that a large amount of business was brought over from the preceding year which had to be transacted; that the Mormon prosecutions have cost a great deal more than ever before, and that there has been a large increase in the territory covered, growing out of the prosecution of parties committing depredations upon the public lands. That is all. Now, there is not one of these items of expenditure that could be avoided. Will the gentleman say that we ought not to prosecute the depredators upon the public lands? Will he say that we ought not to enfore the Edmunds act, even though it cost ten times as much as it does cost?

The gentleman has quoted the old saying that "a new broom sweeps clean." That is just what it is doing now, and I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this new broom, the effect of which he derides and attempts to ridicule here, has caused a sweeping-out during the last fiscal year of twenty-two millions of the ordinary expenses of the Government, a reduction to that amount below the expenditures of 1885. That is the report made by the Treasury Department, and that result appears, too, in spite of the other fact that there has been at the same time an increase of about $8,000,000 in the expenditures for pensions, the present Commissioner of Pensions having issued during the year 15 per cent. more pension certificates than were ever issued in any one year by any of his predecessors. So that, Mr. Chairman, while we have had a largely increased expenditure for pensions, this administration presents, as the net result of its work for the year 1886, a reduction of $22,500,000 in the ordinary expenditures of the Department. I am glad the gentleman called attention to the fact that our new broom sweeps clean. It will sweep cleaner next year. We have not got thoroughly down to business yet. We will improve as we go along. Every year we will do better as we get control of all the offices of the Government, as we get control of the heads of the different bureaus, and get down to a careful, honest, economical administration of all the departments of the Government. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this proposition now close. We have certainly had enough of it.

Mr. SYMES. I object. I want to be heard for two or three minutes.

Mr. BURNES. Then I ask unanimous consent that the debate close, allowing five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SYMES].

Mr. ROGERS. If the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] will make it ten minutes and yield me five minutes I will not object.

Mr. BURNES. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the debate be limited to ten minutes.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. SYMES. Mr. Chairman, I hope that the Federal judicial system of this great nation, of which we feel so proud, will not be slandered and smirched upon this floor on account of the unfortunate abuses that seem to have arisen in some of the mountain districts of this country. I hope, sir, that because in the mountains of West Virginia, as it seems from the gentleman's statement, they may have had a corrupt marshal or a venal district attorney, or because some of the inhabitants there have been so filled with the spirit of persecution and the devil that they have abused the powers of the courts for persecution—I hope, I say, that those abuses will not be cited to discredit the Federal judicial system which extends all over this country, and that they will not be brought into this Hall and made a pretext for libeling and slandering the best judicial system that the history of nations has produced. Sir, whatever may have been said by the partisan newspapers of this country in denunciation of the legislative department of the Government and its alleged corruptions, whatever may have been said, either in this country or in Europe, in condemnation of the executive power of this country and the abuse of Federal patronage, I stand here to say, in behalf of the Federal judiciary, that not even the worst, the lowest, the most filthy partisan journalism that this continent has produced has ever undertaken to libel or slander it, or to say that its judges or its officers generally have not administered the laws of the land in their purity and vigor.

Sir, only a few years ago no less a personage than Lord Salisbury, then prime minister of England, said that he wished the British Empire had a tribunal as grand and as great as the Supreme Court of the United States. That is the only judicial tribunal on the face of the earth that has been invested with power to declare null and void an act of the highest legislative and executive authority of a nation. The people of this country rely upon the Federal judiciary as the great conservative branch of the Government. I take for granted, I am not here to dispute, the statements which have been made by the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON], for I know nothing of his particular locality. I only say that if in his district, and others where complaint exists, there are such local officers and such systems of corruption and persecution as have been described, I want to hold those communities responsible; and I do not like to hear the best branch of the Federal system of this Government abused on account of the corruptions and venality of a single mountain district. It is to the Federal judiciary that we look for the just, equitable, and non-partisan execution of the laws. When important litigation arises in local communities of a character to excite local prejudices and political passions it is always with great satisfaction that such litigation can be removed into the Federal courts, because the people feel that there impartial justice will be meted out.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote for this amendment; but I shall do so with very grave doubts whether, if voted into the bill, it will accomplish the purposes desired. The grievances we are now seeking to remedy grow out of the failure of Congress in past years to make proper appropriations for carrying on the United States courts, and were brought about in this way: In many places in the country the jails were filled with prisoners; the appropriations for the current year failed to meet the requirements of the court. In order to carry on business as economically as possible the court in some instances, where parties could be presented by information or where they had indicated their desire to plead guilty, and in some cases where indictments were to be brought upon pleas of guilty, organized their grand and petit juries and also summoned their witnesses; when these parties had attended as witnesses or jurors and performed service—attended upon compulsion of the Government and under penalty of contempt, having been forced from their homes, and there being no money with which to pay their fees, the marshals issued to them mere certificates of indebtedness on the part of the United States; and the parties were compelled either to make some assignment of these certificates or take them with them to their homes if they could get there without hypothecation of the certificates. Consequently many of these certificates have passed into the hands of assignees, who are now the holders of them.

In many cases the witnesses have been scattered to the four winds and can not be found. With the jurors, however, they being permanent citizens of the several districts, the case is different. The parties who rendered the service are the persons who now hold the legal title to the certificates of assignment. Why? Because by a statute which stared the parties in the face at the time the assignment was made that assignment was declared in the language of the statute itself null and void. Hence the legal title to the certificates remained in the hands of the parties who undertook to make the assignment. On the other hand, the equitable title is in the assignee, and he is the party to whom the money properly belongs.

What we now desire to accomplish is to make an appropriation which will enable either the legal holders or the equitable holders of these certificates of indebtedness issued by the Government to draw out of the Treasury the money to which they are entitled. For myself, I can not understand how it is possible for the Judiciary Committee of the House of Representatives, representing a great Government like ours, while admitting broadly that these parties have performed service for the Government under its process, in obedience to law, and under penalty of contempt, being compelled in thousands of instances to do so at great disadvantage to themselves and to the neglect of their business, can undertake to declare that because the Government made no provision for the payment of these parties we should stand up in the face of the country and say we will repudiate this debt unless the witnesses can be hunted up and brought back to receive the money.

As I said the other day, the operation of this system of failing to appropriate the money necessary for a proper, economical, and just administration of the law in the Federal courts is in the first place dishonest; in the second place, not economical; in the third place, in violation of the spirit of the Constitution, which gives every man confined in jail the right to a speedy trial; and in the fourth place, oppressive and unjust not only to those coming before the courts for trial, but to jurors and witnesses who are compelled to attend the court.

Under these circumstances I shall at a later period undertake to offer an amendment in this form:

To pay fees of jurors and witnesses of the United States courts in 1885 and prior years —— thousand dollars, whether the certificates be held by such witnesses and jurors or their assignees.

This will leave in full force and effect the general provision of the statute relative to these assignments. I believe that provision is wise. It was passed in former years to meet this condition of things: A corrupt marshal would sometimes, entering into collusion with an outside speculator, issue these certificates when he had money in his hands to pay for the service, the result being that this outside party bought the certificates at a discount and the two divided the profit. If we can provide for the payment of these people who have been deprived of their fees as jurors or witnesses by the dereliction of the Government, and can at the same time leave the general statute in force, I think we shall have done what is proper and honest and just.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted. The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. PERRY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend by striking out the last word; and I do so for the purpose of noticing a remark made by my colleague [Mr. SPRINGER]. In his great zeal to apologize for this wonderful deficiency in the Department of Justice he switched off on general principles and said, "The administration for the year 1886 is more economical than it was for the year 1885 by $20,000,000 or $22,000,000, as shown by the account of expenditures soon to be issued." Now, what did he intend to convey by that statement? Everybody who heard him understood him as intending to convey the impression that the expenditures of this Government for the year 1886 with its obligations met were $20,000,000 to $22,000,000 less than for the year 1885, without telling exactly how much, because the precise amounts were not yet ascertained. How fallacious and how unfair! Why, Mr. Chairman, here is a deficiency bill which we are now considering providing for expenditures of the year 1886, and it carries over $6,000,000.

How can the administration or any one else tell how much is to be appropriated for the deficiency? No knowledge whatever is ascertained of the amount. So I might go on from one end to the other. Many contracts were made in the year 1886, the obligation incurred in 1886, where the payments will be made in subsequent years. But my friend is so anxious to make an apology, right or wrong, he rushes in and makes that apology, which in fact, whether intended so or not, misleads the House and country. I fancy when my colleague dies and ascends the golden stairs and knocks at the gate, that when St. Peter opens it and lets him in, if anything is found against him he will come in with some garbled statement to offset it. [Laughter.] I presume he will be as successful there as he is here. [Renewed laughter.]

I am willing to give this administration credit for everything it does that is worthy of credit. I wish to God I could give it credit ten times where I am able only to give it credit once. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. SPRINGER. I move to strike out the last word, and I do so for the purpose of saying a word in reply to my colleague. He evidently misapprehends what I have said. I said that the expenditure for the year ending June 30, 1886, was $22,500,000 less than the expenditures of the Government for the preceding year.

Mr. CANNON. Not including deficiency bills?

Mr. SPRINGER. Wait a moment and I will explain. The expenditures of the Government are stated irrespective of appropriations. Appropriations are sometimes in excess and sometimes they are too small, but there is no mistaking expenditures.

That is the item I was talking about and not this deficiency or any other appropriation bill. You never know what the expenditures of the Government are until the year has closed and the Treasury Department has furnished the statement I have given. The ordinary expenses of the Government for last year were that much less than for the previous year.

But let me add that expenditure included deficiencies of previous years. I did not state it as in reference to appropriations, but I gave the expenditures for the year.

Mr. CANNON. Does my colleague claim that it is an indication of economy of this administration, especially when there was no river and harbor bill this year, and especially when these liabilities were not paid over the counter during the year?

Mr. SPRINGER. What the expenditures are are of record in the Department, and if the gentleman will examine he will find that statement I have made is true, as it was made up at the Treasury Department.

Mr. ROWELL. Is it not true that covers the cash paid out and not the accrued liabilities due?

Mr. SPRINGER. It covers precisely what it states, and that is the expenditures during the year. It includes river and harbor appropriations so far as expenditures were made under them.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. ROGERS. I move the following amendment, to come in at the end of that paragraph:

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay fees of jurors and witnesses United States courts, 1885, and prior years, where said claims are in the hands of said jurors and witnesses, $10,000.

Mr. ROGERS. I wish simply to make this remark. This amendment is intended only to cover that kind of claim not interdicted by virtue of the provisions of the statutes, which the report of the Comptroller tells us amount to nearly $100,000, but is designed to reach only those who have not assigned these claims.

The CHAIRMAN. Is the gentleman's amendment intended to strike out the paragraph?

Mr. ROGERS. No; I do not move to strike out the paragraph, but to insert what I have offered as an additional paragraph.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

Fees of witnesses, United States courts, 1883 and prior years, $387.45.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I move to strike out the last word in order to inquire what date this appropriation comes down to.

Mr. BURNES. To June 18 of the present year.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I withdraw my pro forma amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

For compensation of postmasters readjusted under act of March 3, 1883, payable from deficiency in postal revenue, 1883 and prior years, $392,394.44: Provided, That the readjustments of the salaries of postmasters heretofore made by the Postmaster-General pursuant to the act approved March 3, 1883, entitled "An act authorizing the Postmaster-General to readjust the salaries of certain postmasters in accordance with the provisions of section 8 of the act of June 12, 1866," as said act was construed by the Attorney-General, are hereby in all respects ratified and confirmed as a compliance with the requirements of said act. All claims of postmasters or late postmasters which have been disallowed pursuant to such construction, or are thereby precluded from allowance, are hereby declared properly disallowed and barred. All claims hereafter considered shall be readjusted in accordance with said act so construed; and no claim shall be considered which is not presented on or before January 1, 1887. No action or proceeding shall be had or maintained in any court against any Postmaster-General by reason of his action in reviewing and allowing or disallowing any application in accordance with said construction under said act.

Mr. BURNES. There is a verbal correction, Mr. Chairman, I desire to make in line 612. I move in this line to strike out the word "three," where it occurs the second time, and insert the word "two" in place of it. It is a mere typographical error.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. I make the point of order on the whole proviso, beginning with line 614 and down to the end of the paragraph, that it is new legislation.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman from Missouri if he desires to be heard upon the question of order.

Mr. BLOUNT. I did not catch the exact part of the paragraph against which the point of order was made.

Mr. BINGHAM. My point of order embraces the entire proviso, beginning with line 614 down to and including line 634.

Mr. BLOUNT. Mr. Chairman, this provision I do not regard as a change of existing law. It appears that the Postmaster-General and the Attorney-General have put exactly this construction on the law as to the adjustment of these salaries. It has been the practice of the Department in dealing with them, and this is, therefore, no change of the law.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. If my friend from Georgia will allow me, I wish to state to him that this same construction was put upon it by the former Postmaster-General, Judge Gresham, and also by the Attorney-General, who at that time decided the same way.

Mr. BLOUNT. Yes, sir; it is plainly in accordance with what has been the practice. I do not see wherein it changes existing law, and hope the point of order will not be sustained.

Mr. HOLMAN. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will not press that point of order, whether it be good or not. It is very important legislation. The gentleman is certainly aware of the fact that it is of the highest moment to incorporate that provision into the law.

This decision was made by Judge Gresham when he was Postmaster-General, and also the same construction was placed upon the law by the Attorney-General. The present Postmaster-General construes it in that way; and I think that is the view taken of it by the Department generally. Certainly no gentleman has ever held that position who was more competent to pronounce a reliable opinion upon such a question than Judge Gresham.

My friend from Pennsylvania certainly sees the importance of legislation for the purpose of settling a construction of this law and to avoid very serious embarrassments to the Government hereafter.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, in regard to the point of order——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair does not desire to hear further on the point of order.

Mr. BINGHAM. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks it certainly is a change of existing law to make the opinion of an officer of the Government, or a number of officers of the Government, statutory law. Besides that, this proviso contains two statutes of limitation, which are now out of order. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. BLOUNT. I ask the Chair to be kind enough to state the two provisions which are regarded as a change of existing law.

The CHAIRMAN. The first is that this is made statutory law, when there is no such law in existence. It may or may not be law. Certain officers of the Government have so held; but the courts may hold differently. There is no such law at present, whatever the construction may hereafter be; and hence this is a change of the existing law.

Mr. BLOUNT. But the courts may hold that it was law, as the Department and the Attorney-General have done.

The CHAIRMAN. Still this makes it the law in futuro, whether such may be the construction of the courts or not. In advance of this construction this provision would be a change of existing law.

Mr. BLOUNT. The Government has been operating under this provision for eight or ten years.

The CHAIRMAN. That may be; but the Chair is compelled to sustain the point of order when his attention is called to it.

Mr. BURNES. Before passing from this point, I desire to make a motion to strike out the appropriation.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is too late.

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman can move an amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. The Clerk had begun to read the next section.

The CHAIRMAN. This section has not yet been disposed of. There was an amendment made, one of the figures being changed; but the section is still open to amendment.

Mr. BINGHAM. But the Clerk had commenced to read the next section.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is mistaken in that. The Clerk can only read on the order of the Chair, and the Chair gave no such order.

Mr. BURNES. I move to strike out this appropriation, and I am actuated in making that motion by a sincere desire to save money to the Treasury of the United States, to save litigation and trouble, and to save vexation and annoyance in the future.

I desire to say that by the most active system known to the lobby rings of this city a prominent operator has secured the settlement of these accounts on this basis; and while I am not complaining of the settlement of these accounts on this basis, the Postmaster-General and others have satisfactory evidence that this settlement once concurred in, these appropriations once made, then these same parties who have successfully engineered this scheme through will come for a readjustment of the salaries upon a different basis after they have settled upon this one. Now, this proviso which has gone out on the point of order was inserted for the sole purpose of having the settlement when once made a final settlement. But the Committee on Appropriations have satisfactory evidence beyond question that as soon as this money is paid out and this action taken agitation for another settlement by a different system and upon a different basis will be urged by the same parties; and in this connection I ask to have a letter from the Postmaster-General read:

The Clerk read as follows:

POST-OFFICE DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL,
Washington, D. C., June 24, 1886.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge receipt of a certified copy of the following resolution adopted by the Senate on the 18th instant, namely—

"Resolved, That the Postmaster-General be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate of the amount of additional compensation ascertained to be due postmasters and late postmasters, under the act of March 3, 1883, for the payment of which no provision has been made"—

And in response thereto to state that the aggregate amount of additional compensation due postmasters and late postmasters of the third, fourth, and fifth classes, under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1883, which has been found due on readjustments of salary, made up to the 21st of June, 1886, is—

In total		$603,952 03
That there has been appropriated and disbursed in payment of these—
Under the act of July 7, 1884	$45,213 80
Under the act of March 3, 1884	178,481 23
		223,695 03
		380,258 00

And that the above balance has been transmitted to the Speaker of the House by the Secretary of the Treasury in three several certifications, under respective dates of February 10, 1886 (Executive Document No. 70, pages 148 to 271), May 6, 1886 (Executive Document No. 225, pages 71 to 92), and June 21, 1886 (Executive Document No. 277, pages 47 to 66).

I respectfully beg leave to add that the interpretation of the act of 1883 has been the subject of contention between this Department and a person claiming to represent as an agent or attorney some postmasters who have made claims for additional compensation under that act. This contention arose in 1883 under the administration of the Department by Postmaster-General Gresham. With the concurrence of the Attorney-General of the United States at that time, Postmaster-General Gresham determined that the duty of the Department was to make readjustments which, under the requirements of the act of June 12, 1866, might, or should have been made from time to time, and in the same manner in which they were required to have been made under the act of July 1, 1864.

Upon this theory the adjustments were made for which the two appropriations that have been disbursed were provided by Congress. It is contended, however, that the interpretation so given to the act is not in accordance with its true intention. If another construction shall be placed upon that act by the courts, or by the Congress, the readjustments which have been made are necessarily erroneous, and the amounts found due under this rule of construction do not correctly express the obligations of the United States, nor are they awarded to the proper persons, in very many instances at least. It is obvious, therefore, that no further appropriation can be made without incurring the risk of misdirecting the just expenditure of the money, unless the theory of administration of the act in question which has heretofore prevailed shall be ratified by the Congress.

In the last annual report of the Department, which the President laid before the Congress, the substance of this matter is briefly stated, and the obligation to continue the administration of the act according to the interpretation which had been previously put upon it in the Department declared. If that interpretation be not in accordance with the purpose of the Congress, it is respectfully submitted that the true intention should be explicitly settled before further appropriation shall be made.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

WM. F. VILAS, Postmaster-General.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore of the Senate.

Mr. BINGHAM. It is not my purpose to enter into any discussion as to what has been or may be the construction of the Post-Office Department or of Attorney-General Brewster touching the act of 1883. It is sufficient to say, as has been stated in the letter of the Postmaster-General, that upward of $200,000 have been appropriated by Congress for payment of these postmasters' accounts under adjudication of the Department as certified by the Sixth Auditor.

There comes to us in this bill duly approved under the same construction of the law upward of $300,000. The gentleman in charge of the bill incorporates it in the bill; and in incorporating it adds new legislation. The Chair has ruled on that, and has ruled it is new legislation. This proviso, word for word, from the word "provided" to the close of the paragraph which has been ruled out by the Chair, was a bill under discussion before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads; there is not the change of a word from that bill in this paragraph. It provoked broad, liberal discussion, and was brought into this House with a majority report and the views of the minority signed by six members of the committee.

Mr. LONG. Was the majority in favor?

Mr. BINGHAM. Yes, sir; the majority was in favor of the proposition. I pass no judgment on the action of the Postmaster-General in his construction, nor upon that of the Attorney-General, but if the Post-Office Department did desire to reach a judicial determination on this question, the Court of Claims under the statute was open to it.

On the same day that the act of March, 1883, passed this House readjusting the claims of postmasters under the acts of 1864 and 1866 the House passed this enactment:

That when a claim or matter is pending in any of the executive Departments which may involve controverted questions of fact or law the head of such Department may transmit the same with vouchers, papers, proofs, and documents appertaining thereto to said court, and the same shall be there proceeded in under such rules as the court may adopt. When the facts and conclusions of law shall have been found the court shall not enter judgment thereon, but shall return its findings and opinions to the Department by which it was transmitted for its guidance and its action.

I make the broad general statement that no application or no case has been submitted by the Postmaster-General in order that there might be a judicial determination of his construction of the act of 1883.

This proposition embodies the claims as reported by the Postmaster-General in a letter to the Senate of a few days ago. There have been 25,611 claims submitted up to this date, of which 9,684 have been adjudicated. They have been adjudicated upon the one ruling of the Department, and it is upon that ruling the Department makes recommendation to-day of the payment of the $300,000 that have been inserted in this appropriation bill. If these men are entitled to their money under the law of 1883 they have a vested right. The proviso which has been ruled out on a point of order, and to the ruling out of which the gentleman from Missouri takes exception, would take from these men that vested inherent right and determine that after the 1st day of January next no additional claim could be submitted.

To show you how carefully this law was guarded—and I may state I was on the committee that reported it, and Governor Knott, of Kentucky, made the argument before the House—to show you how carefully the law was guarded I will read this provision in it:

Every readjustment of salary under this act shall be on a written application signed by the postmaster or late postmaster or legal representative entitled to such readjustment, and that each payment shall be made by warrant or check on the Treasurer or some assistant treasurer of the United States made payable to the order of said applicant, and forwarded by mail to him at the post-office within whose delivery he resides, and which address shall be set forth in the application above provided for.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURNES was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. BINGHAM. The purpose of that provision was that the money should go to the party who was entitled to it; and, whatever might be his arrangement with his attorney, there could be and should be no power on the part of the attorney by holding the check or allowance in his possession to force settlement.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BLOUNT. I am in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] who has moved to strike out the sum appropriated in the bill for the purpose under discussion. One reason for this is stated in the communication of the Postmaster-General. It seems to me a practical reason and one which ought to be sufficient to satisfy this House.

I regret that the statutes in connection with which these opinions have been evolved require such a length of time in discussing the construction of them that it is impossible for me to present them to the House and make it appear how clear and correct have been the conclusions reached by Postmaster-General Gresham and Attorney-General Brewster, and by the present Postmaster-General as well as the Assistant Attorney-General for the Post-Office Department. The conclusion uniformly reached by the postal authorities of this country and by the Department of Justice has been that a construction claimed in regard to the readjustment of these salaries by a Mr. Spaulding, who is known to every member of this House and who is constantly pressing his views on the members of the House, is entirely unjustifiable.

So continuous have been the solicitations, so continuously, by application to our constituents who happen to be postmasters, have these grievances been thrust upon us, that we have not had an opportunity to examine the question, and members have been led into the belief that some great wrong has been perpetrated.

Mr. MCMILLIN. If the gentleman will permit me, I will ask him if it is not a fact that this man is charging the claimants one-half the amount of their claims for his services here?

Mr. BLOUNT. I think he charges them 25 per cent., and he has already realized a good round sum in that way. Now, Mr. Chairman, these adjustments have been going on under a construction of the law held by the authorities of the Post-Office Department for many years. Nevertheless, this agitation has been continued on the part of Mr. Spaulding, and I fear my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] has fallen into the error of thinking that his opinion is correct, and that the statute of 1883 settles it clearly in his favor.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have not fallen into that error. I have simply declared that the Postmaster-General under that statute could have gone to the Court of Claims and obtained a construction.

Mr. BLOUNT. That is a different question. I understood the gentleman to speak of the act of 1883 as clear and indisputable, and then to go on to present the other view; but if the gentleman desires to make the correction, of course he has a right to do so. Now, sir, as I have said, this agitation is still kept up. The Department, trusting that their own construction of the law, fortified by the opinion of the Attorney-General, would have been sufficient to quiet the agitation, has gone on adjusting these claims; but this man has continued to press the matter, and, fearing that the work of the Department in adjusting these claims might all go for nothing and that the matter might be left open to future dispute, the Postmaster-General says to us, in substance: "I think it is proper that this appropriation should not be made. I am going on with a corps of employés making these adjustments and intending to make payment upon that basis, but I find that this work may all go for naught, and, under the circumstances, I do not think that Congress ought to proceed one step farther, or that the Department ought not to be required to proceed one step farther in the adjustment of these salaries until we shall have ascertained the law by a constructive statute." The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads have reported a bill for that purpose, but have been unable to have it considered.

The Committee on Appropriations, willing to meet this issue, have placed a proviso in this bill, which has gone out on a point of order, properly I concede, although I should place the ruling not exactly on the same ground on which the Chair saw fit to place it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, was recognized, and yielded to Mr. BLOUNT.

Mr. BLOUNT. I thank my friend from Kentucky. Now, Mr. Chairman, the Post-Office Department has rightly, as I think, referred this matter here. We ought to dispose of it. There are gentlemen on this floor who understand it as well as the heads of the Department, and I think we ought to settle it by statute. There are no vested rights under the law, and we ought to declare what the true intent and meaning of that statute was. The statute under which these parties are claiming was passed long after the services were rendered. I believe we ought to act, and pending our action, or pending even what my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] suggests, an appeal to the court while the question is in suspense, while it is uncertain what is the true mode of ascertaining these claims, I believe the Department ought to stand still and the corps of clerks engaged in making these adjustments, and who are being paid their salaries for that service, ought to stop and go to some other work until this question is settled. This is the part of business prudence. I can see nothing but folly in any other course. I entirely concur in the view of the Committee on Appropriations and in the suggestion of the Postmaster-General, that we should appropriate nothing further, and require no further adjustments until Congress shall have determined what is the true mode of settlement.

Mr. ROWELL. Does the gentleman claim that by enacting a law to-day we can take away any accrued rights that these postmasters obtained under the former statute, or that we can change the interpretation which the courts would give to that statute, if the cases should ever reach a court?

Mr. BLOUNT. Perhaps not.

Mr. ROWELL. Then what good will it do to pass a law of the kind referred to?

Mr. BLOUNT. I do not concede the proposition of the gentleman that there are vested rights. In my opinion these parties have no vested rights. If the courts should construe that they had vested rights under the original statute, that would be a different question. But these claims are not based upon that.

Mr. ROWELL. Could we repeal the statute which was passed, so as to deprive these postmasters of the right to sue?

Mr. BLOUNT. The gentleman begs the point at issue by asking me whether we can take away rights already vested. I have not conceded that there are any vested rights belonging to these parties. The Department does not so regard the case; the Attorney-General does not so regard it. In view of the deliberate opinion of the Department and the Attorney-General, I am simply declining to give my extemporaneous opinion in antagonism to the view the gentleman himself has taken. I trust this House will exercise its rightful power, in spite of the clamor gotten up by a claim agent who has been for years denouncing your Cabinet officers—your Attorneys-General and your Postmasters-General—for improper conduct.

I regret that this matter came up in such a shape that we could not examine these opinions and these statutes so as to show how flimsy is the pretense about these salaries. I trust the House will see to it, as it is responsible for expenditures, that this investigation shall not go on under such circumstances.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the Chair will regard the pro forma amendment as withdrawn.

Mr. BLAND. I renew the amendment. Mr. Chairman, I believe this is an old matter; I have heard of it almost from the beginning of my service here as a member. As I understand, a construction of the Department under a statute passed many years ago was disagreed to by parties who claimed certain salaries; and the firm of Spaulding & Co., ascertaining from the books of the Department that probably a great many of these claims might be recovered, went to work and corresponded with all the claimants. As I understand, they obtained by means of transfers possession of nearly the whole of the claims. For years they were ding-donging at the doors of Congress for an appropriation to settle these claims. Finally, in 1883, Congress passed an act providing for their readjustment and settlement; but, as has been shown by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, Congress was aware at the time that many of these claims were in the hands of speculators, and that probably the money appropriated to pay the claims would go into the hands of this firm of Spaulding & Co. unless some protection were provided in the law.

For that reason the law which has been read provided that these claims should be paid to the claimants only, and not to the speculators. But I suppose they have evaded the law in some manner, and are still to get the percentages which they originally exacted.

Now we understand that Spaulding & Co., these claim agents, disagree with the construction of the Department upon the law. I say we have a right to repeal that law wholly and let the parties go back to their claims under the original law if they wish to do so. The passage of the act of 1883 was simply a readjustment on the part of Congress, the placing of a construction upon a former act in order to settle this matter, and we have a right to repeal the act of 1883 and let the parties seek payment of their claims under the old law and recover them if they can. I hope this House will not appropriate one dollar for the payment of those claim agents who are urging these claims upon Congress for the purpose of swindling the Government as well as the claimants.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BLAND] a question simply for information. In the readjustment of these claims did not the Department begin by taking the States alphabetically, and in this way have not the claims of States whose names were early in the alphabet been already settled, while claims from States later in the alphabet, like Virginia and West Virginia, remain unsettled.

Mr. BLAND. I know nothing about that.

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Chairman, the proposition now presented by the gentleman from Missouri is to strike from this bill the appropriation of $392,394.44—a deficiency appropriation placed in the bill for the purpose of satisfying certain claims which have been adjudicated by the Post-Office Department. It is claimed that this provision should be struck out because the construction placed upon the law of 1883 by the Post-Office Department may not be correct, and there may be a new construction placed upon it in the future, under which claims already adjudicated would not be regarded as claims properly to be paid. It seems to me that this is begging the question. In the first place, these claims have been adjudicated; they have been passed on by the Sixth Auditor; they have been held to be valid claims.

Mr. REAGAN. Not by the Post-Office Department.

Mr. PETERS. By the Sixth Auditor, who is the auditing officer for that Department.

Mr. REAGAN. During the last administration I went to the Postmaster-General to get some information about these claims; and he told me this demand was an effort on the part of claim agents to rob the Government of three or four hundred thousand dollars which the Department had always refused to pay.

Mr. PETERS. I know that the assertion has been made time and again, on this floor and elsewhere, that this is an organized effort on the part of a claim agent to rob this Government of a certain amount of money. The statement was also made that a large portion of these claims was going to some claim agent. I do not know anything about that personally. I know I have constituents who are interested in these claims, whose claims the Government owes for a certain amount of money under that law. I suppose it is immaterial to them whether they pay, and it should be immaterial to the Government whether they pay, to the men who are employed to collect their claims a certain percentage upon what is collected or not, and I do not believe in this system of claim attorneys. I have never had any sympathy with them. Yet, sir, my constituents have the right to pay those claim agents and to pay them what they wish. If it is not in violation of law it is neither my business nor the business of the United States. I know there are constituents of mine residing in my district who have claims allowed by the Sixth Auditor, and those men are entitled to have those claims paid when they are adjudicated; and this Government has no right to punish those men because of a suspicion some claim agent may have an interest in them. I protest against punishing my constituents to gratify the suspicion of any one member of this House that a claim agent may obtain some benefit if their claims are allowed.

I say, Mr. Chairman, these claims have been passed upon by the proper Department, have been adjudicated, and a certain amount due certain postmasters has been ascertained. The provision has been placed in this bill to pay them. Now because judicial construction can not be placed on that appropriation to govern the future the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES] in charge of the bill desires to strike it out.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. DOCKERY. Mr. Chairman, I have no desire to occupy much time in the discussion of this question. Coming into the Hall I regret to find the provision of law has gone out of the bill on a point of order. I had hoped that no point of order would be raised against this provision, because I am tired of these one-sided settlements. Until we can reach the point under this statute when both parties can be brought into settlement and that settlement shall be regarded as final, I agree heartily with the chairman of the Post-Office Committee no further action should be taken by Congress looking to the payment of claims already adjudicated.

My friend from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] knows nothing of the organization operating in reference to these claims. I have no doubt of the truth of his statement. But in that regard I have some advantage of him. I do know something of the organization back of these claims. The first knowledge I had of it was from printed circulars sent by Claim Agent Spaulding to postmasters all over my district, who, so far as I know, had no knowledge whatever of any claim against the Government due them. In connection with these claims he proposed in that circular he should receive 33⅓ per cent. for their collection.

Mr. BEACH. Was it not 25 per cent.?

Mr. DOCKERY. No; in the case I allude to it was 33⅓ per cent.

Mr. BEACH. I have a letter, just received, in which the percentage is put at 25 per cent.

Mr. BLAND. In some it was put as high as 50 per cent.

Mr. DOCKERY. In the one I saw it was 33⅓ per cent.

I desire to say this is not a spontaneous movement coming from postmasters who imagine they have claims against the Government, but a movement, like many others coming from this city, inaugurated by Lawyer Spaulding. I do not object to the proposition, although he presents it, if these postmasters have just claims against the Government; but what I do insist upon is that before any further settlements are made the Post-Office Department shall know whether they are making settlements pursuant to law. This claim agent insists the statement of Attorney-General Brewster and Postmaster-General Gresham and Postmaster-General Vilas and the other officials of the Departments is not a correct one; and if it be true that it is not correct, and it is established by the courts, all these accounts will have to be regulated. And until we settle this matter either by an affirmation of the construction of the Post-Office Department, or by a settlement in the Court of Claims, I for one shall oppose any further allowance for any of the claims under that head.

Mr. BOUTELLE. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BOUTELLE. In regard to these claims being filed entirely by claim agents, I wish to ask the gentleman if it is not true, as a matter of fact, that a large number of postmasters to whom these circulars were sent did subsequently apply to the Post-Office Department, and whether they have not been informed by a circular from that Department that if they would file their claims they would be adjusted. Further, I would ask the gentleman if in accordance with that circular these adjustments have not been and are not still going on.

Mr. DOCKERY. That is true, subject to the passage of the act of March 3, 1883.

Mr. BOUTELLE. So that it is true that there are large numbers of claims now pending before the Department for adjudication filed by the postmasters themselves?

Mr. DOCKERY. Yes, as I have said, subject to the act in question.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BURNES. I ask unanimous consent that the debate on this paragraph be now closed.

Mr. BINGHAM. I have four minutes of my time remaining which I would like to use.

Mr. BURNES. Then I will ask that five minutes be also granted to my colleague on the committee [Mr. CANNON].

I will ask unanimous consent of the committee that debate be closed in twelve minutes. This will be inclusive of the four minutes reserved by the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I object unless I can have three minutes.

Mr. BURNES. I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the general deficiency bill, had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BURNES. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the general deficiency bill; and pending that I move that all debate upon the pending paragraph now under consideration and all amendments thereto shall be confined to fourteen minutes—four minutes for the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], five minutes to my colleague from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and five minutes for my friend from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's motion to apportion the time would not be in order. That would be a matter of regulation in the committee. The motion to limit debate to fourteen minutes is, of course, in order.

Mr. BURNES. Then I make that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

The motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was then agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate on this paragraph and all amendments thereto is limited to fourteen minutes, four minutes of which belong to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM], who will now be recognized.

Mr. BINGHAM. I will reserve my time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Chairman, the question presented here is no new one. Away back, almost twenty years ago, it was alleged that the postmasters' salaries had not been properly adjusted, although the Department had adjusted them and paid them. For several years, under the lead of an attorney in Washington, Congress was besieged by petitions (in answer to circulars sent out from here, and sometimes we got the circulars) of postmasters, some in office and many out of office, asking action on this subject, and containing the information that money was due to our respective constituents who had been or were postmasters. Finally, after several years of faithful and hard work, an act was passed providing for the readjustment of the salaries of postmasters for a certain period of time, and the Department went to work, under a construction of that act by the late Postmaster-General, Judge Gresham, and the Attorney-General, and made the adjustments, and they have been paid to the extent of about $200,000 in accordance with it.

Now, here comes another batch to the extent of some $300,000 more. In the mean time the same attorney is sending circulars broadcast throughout the country that the adjustment has not been made in the proper way; and you are getting now more letters from more parties who are informed that they have such rights; and the same party has threatened suit in the Court of Claims so as to enforce another adjustment. The Postmaster-General now writes the communication which has just been read from the desk, that if the courts shall decide this to be not the proper way to adjust these claims, but that some other way is the proper one, it will then turn out that we have paid, if we make these payments, a large amount of money to the wrong persons. In other words, we will have paid it to persons to whom the money would not be due if another adjustment upon a different basis is demanded by the court.

Now, the Postmaster-General has failed to get a construction by the courts.

Mr. BINGHAM. He has not asked for it.

Mr. CANNON. Ah! My friend from Pennsylvania says the Postmaster-General has not asked for it. The courts have been open now to this industrious claims attorney and to each one of these postmasters.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But have not the postmasters been told by the Department in circulars that these claims were being adjusted? Why under those circumstances should they go into court?

Mr. CANNON. But some of them understand the claims are not being adjusted as they want them. The courts have been opened to the Postmaster-General and to these parties.

Mr. BOUTELLE. But they have been assured the accounts are being adjusted.

Mr. CANNON. Let that be as it may, one thing is certain. We have full information if we vote this $300,000 or $400,000 and the courts say this mode of adjustment is wrong, then we will have paid a large amount of this appropriation to people to whom it does not belong, and we will have to pay it to the others hereafter. Under that state of the law and in those circumstances I ask, can we afford until this question is settled to vote the money? For one I can not.

I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. How much time is yielded to me?

The CHAIRMAN. One minute.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I can not say what I want to say in one minute.

Mr. BINGHAM. I know nothing about the proceedings and circulars of Mr. Spaulding. I have received many communications from postmasters throughout the country, because I am a member of the committee having this subject under consideration, asking whether their claims should be placed in the hands of the attorney for adjustment or settlement. To every one of the gentlemen I have corresponded with I have quoted the section of the statute of 1883, which simply requires a postmaster to file his application for readjustment, and declares that when he has done so his claim would be duly readjusted by the Department. What agreement postmasters may have with Mr. Spaulding is not a question for this House. The statute is carefully guarded, and the money from the Treasury goes into the hands of no attorney, but goes directly into the hands of the postmaster. He can give it all to Mr. Spaulding or he can throw it into the street. It is his money.

Now, one fact more. I do not believe, recognizing all the legal and judicial knowledge which this House possesses—I do not believe there are ten men in it who know anything about the construction of this statute as given by the Postmaster's Department; and when you endeavor to incorporate into the law by the proviso which has been ruled out an interpretation given not by any court, but simply by the Postmaster-General and the Attorney-General of the United States, I say to you that you are forcing upon this House a vitally important legal judgment, which the intelligence of this House, not having discussed the issue or the question, could not rise up to and could not properly determine upon. It was for that reason I made the point of order on that paragraph in the bill.

Only this morning in debate the gentleman of the subcommittee in connection with the alien non-resident claims and the claims of the railroads stated he would accept the amendment if the names in detail would be given and if there was an assurance that the money would go into the proper hands. Of twenty-five thousand cases filed, ten thousand have been adjudicated, approved, and reported to Congress, covering upward of $500,000. In all these cases the name of every claimant, of every postmaster, is certified to. I ask the gentleman only to be consistent.

Another matter I wish to advert to in connection with the communication of the Postmaster-General. He begs the question when he says to this House if his construction of the law is not accepted then there should be no appropriation on the part of Congress. Why was it not certified in the same way in the last appropriation bill, when upward of $200,000 were appropriated?

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] says postmasters can go to the Court of Claims. These claimants receive but a limited allowance under this adjustment. The Postmaster-General can go there, and it is his duty under the statute of 1883, whenever there is a question in his mind as to the construction of a statute, to follow that course. He has not done so; but he comes to this House and makes the declaration that if his construction of the statute of 1883 is not approved or protected from all future operations of law then there should be no appropriation under the act of 1883.

Mr. BLOUNT. There is nothing unusual about the head of a Department asking a construction of statutes for his guidance. It is a common practice, and the Postmaster-General is doing what his predecessors have done time and again. That is a sufficient answer to that part of the argument of the gentleman from Pennsylvania. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS] says he has constituents interested. He says they have had their claims audited and have a right to a hearing. I concede so much. But the Government has its rights. We are here charged with taking care of its interests as well as the interests of the claimants, and it is but judicious for us in the midst of this controversy to stand still until Congress shall have declared what is the true intent and meaning of this act; and that is all there is in it. I have constituents interested in these claims; but however honest and earnest they may be, they can not impede me in the discharge of what I regard to be my duty. The gentleman says that he does not know anything about a claim agent having to do with this matter.

Mr. PETERS. I beg the gentleman's pardon. I said I knew nothing about an organized effort.

Mr. BLOUNT. Well, put it in that shape. Now, Mr. Chairman, it may be true that the gentleman does not know of that; it is true, because he has said so. Nevertheless, it is likewise true, it is notorious, that this man has organized these postmasters all over the country, and has prepared circulars which have been sent to the members of this House from every part of the country, presenting the peculiar views of this attorney. I do not wonder at his activity in keeping up this agitation, for he gets his 25 per cent., and he would get nearly a round hundred thousand dollars out of this appropriation, as he has got it out of other appropriations. What this will aggregate no man can tell, and we ought to let even our constituents understand that it is not in this hurried way that the Congress of the United States will determine these questions.

Now, sir, the Postmaster-General, as I have said, is adopting a wise course. He asks Congress to put in this appropriation with the construction of the law which has been uniformly held by the officers of the Government who have given attention to the subject. If that construction be put upon the law, he asks that these adjusted claims shall be provided for accordingly. But the Postmaster-General is for the time being responsible for the administration of the postal service of the United States, and he likewise tells you that if you continue to pay out this money, and if hereafter a different construction of the law obtains, the work of his clerks for all these years in adjusting these claims may go for nothing, and he asks you not to require any further investigation of these claims by the Department unless you accompany your appropriation with this construction of the law. My own judgment is that there should be a standstill until this question is settled. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BINGHAM] referred to the act of 1883. In 1883, when the bill was passed by the House under a suspension of the rules when there was no chance to debate it, the House with no light upon the subject except such as came from Spaulding circulars and other claim agents, I endeavored to counteract those influences and to read the statute, but had not time enough to do so.

The CHAIRMAN. The time for debate upon this proposition has expired.

The question is on the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BURNES].

The amendment was agreed to—ayes 83, noes 54.

The Clerk read as follows:

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE FIRST COMPTROLLER.

Department of State:

Foreign intercourse: For salaries consular officers not citizens, 1882 and prior years, $150.

For salaries of ministers, 1882 and prior years, $445.40.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I move to strike out the last word. Mr. Chairman, some time ago, when the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was under consideration, the names of certain employés of the House which had been inserted in the bill by the committee were stricken out upon a point of order. It is reported that the Senate has, by the request of the Committee on Appropriations, reinserted those names, thus undertaking to reappoint certain employés of this House. I should like to know, in vindication of the dignity of the House, which of the members of the Committee on Appropriations has requested the Senate to make appointments of employés for this body. Can the gentleman in charge of this bill tell me?

Mr. BURNES. In answer to the gentleman from West Virginia, I need only say that the Appropriations Committee has taken no such action, has given no such notice, and, so far as I know, no member of that committee has taken any such action or given any such notice.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I am informed that two members of the Appropriations Committee of the House have gone to the Senate committeee and requested that these names be reinserted in the bill, and that upon the action of those gentlemen the Senate committee has undertaken to make three appointments of employés of this House, inserting their names in the sundry civil bill after the deliberate action of the House in striking them out.

Mr. CANNON. What does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I refer, if I am not misinformed, to the two gentlemen from Illinois [Mr. CANNON and Mr. TOWNSHEND].

Mr. CANNON. What action does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I refer to the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], as I have been informed, made to the Senate for the insertion of the names of three employés of this House in the sundry civil bill.

Mr. RYAN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order. What relevancy has this to the subject under consideration? The right of a member of this House to go the Senate and ask to have anything inserted in a bill is, I suppose, unquestionable.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from West Virginia will please confine himself to the question.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have a right, I believe, to talk about almost anything here. [Laughter.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, I did not understand until now that I was alluded to by the gentleman from West Virginia, and I should like to be informed how my name was brought into the matter.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I have been informed, Mr. Chairman, that two gentlemen, members of this House and of the Committee on Appropriations, after the action of this House striking out the names of appointees from the legislative bill, went to the Senate and requested and procured the reinsertion of those names by the action of the Senate. I want to know whether that is the fact.

Several MEMBERS. What of it?

Mr. CANNON. I will answer the gentleman. In the first place, this is the deficiency appropriation bill. In the second place, the sundry civil bill does not carry appropriations for the employés of the House. I suspect, however, that I know to what the gentleman refers; and I will say to him that I understand my duty as a member of Congress and appreciate what comports with the dignity of this House. I suspect that what he refers to is the fact that when the legislative appropriation bill was under consideration in this House——

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The gentleman can reply to me after a while. I do not want my time taken up.

Mr. CANNON. I thought you wanted an answer.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. You will have time for an answer.

Mr. CANNON. I will yield you time hereafter.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Very well, then go ahead now.

Mr. CANNON. In reporting to this House the legislative appropriation bill the Committee on Appropriations, in pursuance of a custom which had been established, embraced in the bill the names of certain employés whose services were valuable. Upon the provisions inserting these names one member of this House made a point of order, which was sustained, rightfully or wrongfully, and upon that point of order of one member they went out, and thereby the majority of this House was prevented from manifesting its sense touching those matters.

I will say further that as an individual I did go, not in company with anybody, or after consultation, but upon my own motion——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] has expired.

Mr. CANNON. I ask to be recognized that I may finish my statement.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois is recognized.

Mr. CANNON. I went alone, upon my own motion, to one member of the Senate, and did ask that two employés of this House—Pickens and Lyle, a couple of valuable pages—should have their names inserted in the bill, as one of them was inserted heretofore; and I am gratified to see that it has been done. If that be an offense, it is all the offending of which I am guilty. I think I understand my duty as a member; I have nothing to apologize for, and am ready to proclaim, wherever it may be challenged, my action in that matter, that under the same circumstances I would do it again.

In conclusion, before yielding the residue of my time to the gentleman from West Virginia, I will say his action reminds me of that old fable: When a wolf was passing through the street a lamb upon the house-top railed at him. The wolf replied, "Not thou, but the roof rails at me." [Laughter.]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to say about the gentleman's sense of propriety or his sense of the dignity of the body of which he is a member. I have this to say, however, in the expression of my opinion upon this subject, and I think this House ought to take some action upon it——

Mr. CANNON (to Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia). Move your action.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. That it is in contempt of the action of this House for any member to go to the other body and ask them to undo the action of this House in regard to the appointment of its employés. The Senate has been under the impression that this was the action of the Appropriations Committee. Senators have told me that members of that committee represented to them that it was the action of the committee. I want the Senate now and here to understand that it was neither the action of the Appropriations Committee nor the desire of this House, but was simply the action of two members wanting to force their employés upon this House through the action of another body.

Mr. CANNON. Now, I have a little of my time left, and I flatly contradict the gentleman's statement. Neither of these employés is an appointee of mine. I had nothing to do with their appointment by the Doorkeeper beyond commending one of them as a valuable page, and made no statement as to the desire of the Appropriations Committee. So far as I know, one lives in the District of Columbia, and always has. I do not know where the other lives. I was interested in the one of whom I particularly speak, because, among all this crowd of pages about us, most of them are not as competent as they might be and no doubt would be if they were older. The page I speak of has been employed for a long time, and is almost indispensable to us here. I had the right to make the suggestion I have stated, which was the only suggestion I did make, and I will ask this House when the legislative bill is again taken up to ratify that suggestion if it meets with the approval of the majority.

Mr. DOCKERY and several other members. They will do it.

Mr. RYAN. They will do it ten to one.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on the amendment is exhausted.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Mr. Chairman, how this discussion is pertinent to any amendment which can be offered to the general deficiency bill is something which I am unable to understand; and by what authority the gentleman from West Virginia constitutes himself the censor of my conduct here or elsewhere is something beyond my comprehension. But as he has brought this question up, I will say to him, as I am ready to say to any one, that when the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill was in course of preparation in the Committee on Appropriations that committee by a unanimous vote, so far as my knowledge goes, did just what we did in the last Congress and just what we have done in several Congresses past—inserted in the bill the names of certain officers of this House whose services, by reason of their long experience, have become not only valuable but almost indispensable for the proper conduct of business here.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. And the House struck out those provisions.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Those names were inserted in accordance with the action of previous Congresses, in accordance with the best judgment of the Committee on Appropriations, and in accordance, as I believe, with the wish of a vast majority on this floor who have more regard for efficiency of service than the mere dispensing of patronage to help some member in his district.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Will the gentleman answer me a question?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Do not interrupt me now. You have sought to arraign me, and I want to be heard.

Now, when those names went out of that bill on points of order, there were two names that I was earnestly desirous should be retained. One of them is an old man who has served this House for thirty years or more.

Several MEMBERS. His name?

Mr. TOWNSHEND. John T. Chancey. I remember a few days before Alexander H. Stephens left this Hall never to return he sent a page to me, and when I went to him he asked me to grant him one request, and that request was to seek to retain John T. Chancey in the employment of the House as long as he was faithful and efficient. [Applause.]

Upon the gentleman's point of order, or that of some one else, his name was stricken out of the bill, and I determined I would try and have that old man's name restored to that bill [applause]; and there was another name I took interest in. In the Forty-seventh Congress, when we were in the minority, there was left not one employé here whom we as Democrats might rely upon at caucus meetings to guard the doors for us. All the employés being Republicans, the Republican majority through my colleague [Mr. HENDERSON] brought forward the name of Colonel Bacon, a distinguished and gallant soldier, who led a brigade at Corinth, but who was then and always has been as good a Democrat as the gentleman dare be or as I am myself, and he was put on the rolls. This was in the Forty-seventh Congress, and he has become almost indispensable as the superintendent of the document-room.

He was not from my district, but from a county lately thrown into my district. He went out with the Democrats in the Forty-seventh Congress, but, as I have stated, on the motion of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. HENDERSON] his name was restored as an act of grace to the Democratic majority. [Applause, and cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. RYAN. His name was inserted in the law.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. Yes, as stated by the honorable gentleman from Kansas, Colonel Bacon's name was inserted in the law and he has been there ever since, and no Republican member has ever sought to strike it out, but it has remained there until in this Congress a Democrat attempted to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I hope the gentleman will permit me to conclude what I have to say.

Mr. BURNES. I must insist on closing this debate, which has no relevancy to the pending bill.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I ask as a question of privilege for one or two minutes.

Mr. LONG. You have got it all out. [Applause.]

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I only ask for a word or two on another point. I went to some members of the Senate and asked them to restore those names. I am glad to see they did it. [Applause.]

Mr. BURNES. I ask by unanimous consent this debate be now closed.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that I be allowed a few minutes. [Cries of "Vote!"] If the gentleman will give me two or three minutes it will save time.

Mr. BURNES. I can not do so. If I yield to the gentleman, then I must yield to others.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I expect you had better yield to me. [Cries of "Vote!"]

Mr. BOUTELLE. What is the question before the House?

The CHAIRMAN. That debate be closed by unanimous consent.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I object.

Mr. BURNES. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee according rose; and Mr. MCCREARY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HAMMOND reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 9726) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, and for prior years, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BURNES. I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the general deficiency appropriation bill, and pending that motion I move that all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto be closed in three minutes; which time shall be given to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON].

The latter motion was agreed to.

The question recurred on the motion that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole, and it was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. HAMMOND in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. By order of the House all debate on the pending paragraph and all amendments thereto has been limited to three minutes.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. In answer to the gentleman from Illinois, who made allusion to members of Congress seeking to build themselves up by appointments in this House and elsewhere, I wish simply to say now that I know of no member of this House who has used his position for his personal patronage.

Now, in answer to the other statement that the Democratic side desired to put out Republican officials and not restore their perquisites, I want to say that I have now in my possession a resolution, which to-morrow morning I will offer, with the consent of the House, placing Mr. Chancey on the roll of the House as an officer of the House. I want to say further that before I made this question in the House I went to the gentleman from Maine and told him that if he would prepare a resolution and either offer it himself or give it to me to offer I would see that every one of these Republican officials was restored to the rolls of the House; and what I desired simply to do was to retain in the hands of the House the appointment of its own officials, and not allow the Committee on Appropriations to usurp that power.

Now, after teaching them that lesson, we find that the members of that committee, not willing to have that power stricken down or to be deprived of that privilege, have gone to another body and have asked them to appoint the officers of the House by name. It has come to a pretty pass, Mr. Chairman, when in the employment of the officials of the House we must look to the Senate. We have never undertaken to interfere with their appointments. By what right, I would ask, do they interfere with the appointments of the House? Is there no time when the House shall assert its dignity and privileges and proclaim itself a co-ordinate and equal branch of the Government with the Senate? Perhaps the time will come when they will appoint our Speaker, our Sergeant-at-Arms, and everybody else, and then they may want to determine who may have been legally elected and qualified as members of the House.

Now, I want to say to members of the House that I will on to-morrow, if the House will give me its consent, introduce a resolution restoring these men who have been put there by the courtesy of the House. I appreciate their courtesy to me, and will reciprocate in every way that I can.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will assume that the pro forma amendments are withdrawn, and the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

For refunding taxes illegally collected, prior to July 1, 1883, except the claims Nos. 48191, 48281, and 48282, contained in said Executive Document No. 70, $2,996.84.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to line 39, to strike out "seventy" and insert "two hundred and twenty-five." It is a mistake in the number of the executive document therein specified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BURNES. There is a further amendment to line 38 which I offer, to strike out "eighty-two" and insert "forty-two."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CANNON. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 98 strike out all after the words "eighty-three," in line 35, down to and including line 40, and insert "the sum of $10,735.53: Provided, That said corporations respectively shall give satisfactory security to the Secretary of the Treasury that the said amount shall be paid to the several alien bondholders or stockholders or their representatives out of whose money said corporations paid the said taxes."

Mr. CANNON. I will state that this is an amendment precisely similar to the one offered this morning.

Mr. BURNES. I make the point of order against that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentlemen on the point of order.

Mr. BURNES. A proposition to pay out money from the Treasury upon the bonds of a railroad company, or whatever may be the security, or the bond of anybody else, or anything else, for that matter, is certainly in the nature of legislation, and ought not to be incorporated in this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. This seems to be the same proposition upon which the Chair ruled a while ago. The Chair overrules the point of order.

Mr. CANNON. I suggest to my friend from Missouri, this being the same class of question as was settled by the committee an hour or two ago, I will suggest to him that it be concurred in, as the other amendment was adopted.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. Let it be again read.

The amendment was again reported.

Mr. BURNES This is precisely the same question in every respect that was presented a while ago, when the committee incorporated an amendment upon a similar proposition for the payment of alien bondholders and stockholders whose money had been paid into the Treasury for taxes by the railroad companies. I have no objection to saying now, for the purpose of expediting business, that I will accept this amendment, if concurred in, with the understanding, of course, that we are to have a yea-and-nay vote in the House on this and the other.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

For pay of two and three year volunteers, 1871 and prior years, $95, 885.79.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. I offer the amendment I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to line 117:

"To pay the claim of Cornelius O'Connell for amount found due him on settlement No. 56442, $53.31."

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, this claim has been allowed by the Treasury Department, but the Comptroller says payment can not be made till Congress makes the appropriation. There is no objection on the part of the committee.

Mr. SPRINGER. How much is it?

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri. Only $53.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let it go.

The amendment was adopted.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For reimbursement to certain States and Territories for expenses incurred in repelling invasions and suppressing Indian hostilities, act June 27, 1882, $18,081.23.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 176 strike out the words "certain States and Territories" and insert "the State of Nebraska."

Mr. BURNES. That amendment is wholly unnecessary, and does not conform with the recommendations of the accounting officers of the Treasury. It would cause a discrepancy between one and the other. The appropriation is precisely for the purpose the gentleman from Nebraska desires.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I see by his document, No. 225, that it is for Nebraska.

Mr. BURNES. Certainly; it includes the State of Nebraska.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I withdraw the amendment.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For compensation of postmasters readjusted under act of March 3, 1883, payable from deficiency in postal revenue, 1883 and prior years, $48,140.95.

Mr. BURNES. This is another provision precisely like that we struck out a while ago. I move to strike out this paragraph.

The motion to strike out was agreed to.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

Public land service: For 5, 3, and 2 per cent. fund to States, prior to July 1, 1882, $3,272.50.

Mr. WEAVER, of Nebraska. I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri a question. I see this amount corresponds with the amount stated on page 2 of the Executive Document 210, which amount there is shown to be due the State of Nebraska. I ask if this item is intended to cover that?

Mr. BURNES. It is intended for the State of Nebraska as a matter of course.

The Clerk read the following paragraph:

For the payment of the claims on account of transportation of the Army and its supplies certified as due by the Second Comptroller in Schedule A, pages 21 and 22 of said Executive Document No. 210, except the claims numbered 4377, 5245, and 1308 enumerated therein, $48,655.81.

Mr. CRAIN. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 110, line 42, strike out "5245," and in lieu of the sum proposed by the paragraph insert "$59,405.81."

Mr. CRAIN. The object of the amendment is to provide payment of the claim of the representatives of T. J. League for the use and occupation of a wharf, coal-yard, and warehouse at Galveston, Tex., from December 1, 1865, to March 3, 1866. This claim was certified as correct by the quartermaster at Galveston, Tex., and was approved by the chief quartermaster, department of Texas. It arises from a contract which was made by the duly authorized officers of the United States with the ancestor of these heirs. A portion of the contract was paid prior to this time, and another portion for the occupation subsequent to that time.

The vouchers were filed about fifteen years ago with the Department. The case has been submitted to the Second Comptroller, and the Second Comptroller in a letter states the reasons why he had decided in favor of the payment of this claim. His predecessor, the former Second Comptroller, certified that it was correct, that it was a claim originating from a contract, and that it ought to be paid. The present Second Comptroller reiterates that assertion. It is not covered either by the act of 4th July, 1864, or by the act of February, 1867, both of which provided that no claim shall be paid which originates in an insurrectionary State.

The Court of Claims, in the case of Green (18 Reports Court of Claims), declares that cases which originate in insurrectionary States, if based upon contract, are not covered by the provisions of these laws. Attorney-General Evarts, in reply to a communication from Secretary of War Schofield, asserts the same principle. And the Second Comptroller, in response to a communication from me asking for information in regard to this claim, sent me a letter which, with the permission of the House, I will read:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, SECOND COMPTROLLER'S OFFICE,
Washington, D. C., June 29, 1886.

SIR: Referring to the claim of T. J. League, deceased, I have to say that this claim, made by the legal representatives of T. J. League, late of Galveston, Tex., deceased, is for the use and occupation of a coal-yard and wharf from December 1, 1865, to March 3, 1866, four months, at $2,500 per month, $10,000; and for use of coal-yard from April 1 to June 30, 1866, three months, at $250 per month, $750; total, $10,750.

The claim was allowed upon re-examination by the Comptroller for the reasons that the use and occupation were shown, that the claim covers a period after actual hostilities had ceased, and that the Government had ratified the contract for the rent of this property by payment of rent accruing before and after the period covered by the vouchers in this claim.

The payment of claims having their origin in contract is not prohibited by the act of July 4, 1864, and its supplement, the act of February 21, 1867. See opinion of Attorney-General Evarts in case of Rollins (12 Opin., 439) and case of Green (18 Ct. of Clms., 93). The occupation was continuous from date of contract.

Very respectfully,

RICHD. R. MCMAHON,
Acting Comptroller.

Hon. W. H. CRAIN,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

I ask that the amendment be adopted.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Is the claim certified as correct?

Mr. CRAIN. Does the gentleman mean by the Comptroller or by the quartermaster? It is certified as correct by the quartermaster, approved by the chief quartermaster, and is certified as correct not only by the present Second Comptroller, but by his predecessor.

Mr. BURNES. The Committee on Appropriations left out this item, not knowing precisely the facts with regard to it. It looked a little as if it were a war claim, although the war had ceased. I understand it was judicially determined as ended in December, 1865.

As I understand the law, if this claim, whether by contract or seizure, had occurred in one of the States named in the proclamation of Mr. Lincoln as a State in insurrection—and Texas was so declared—then it would come within the provision of the law. As to when the war closed in Texas, I do not know. The gentlemen on either side of this Chamber can tell that as well as any member of the committee.

Mr. OATES. The official termination of the war was the 20th of August, 1866. I am inclined to believe that if the war was terminated judicially in Texas in 1866 this claim can not be maintained.

Mr. CRAIN. Will the gentleman give me any reason why he thinks this amendment should not be inserted?

Mr. BURNES. I have already indicated the reason. I will say further to my friend from Texas that there was some question raised in regard to the bona fides of the claim, but that made very little impression upon my mind. However, the fact that the Government had paid for a part of the service at the commencement of the term or lease and had paid for a part at the close or in the after part of the term, and had left a part in the middle unprovided for, seemed to throw some doubt upon the matter.

Mr. CRAIN. Mr. Chairman, in response to the last proposition of the gentleman in charge of this bill, I have to say that the only objection which was raised to the payment of this claim was made by Quartermaster-General Meigs, on the ground that it had originated in an insurrectionary State. The second proposition of the gentleman is that if the war was not over in Texas at the time this claim originated it ought not to be paid. I suppose the gentleman relies upon the acts of 1864 and 1867.

Now, Attorney-General Evarts held in a case which originated in Virginia during 1863, when certainly there were actual hostilities going on in that State, that, as the claim originated in contract, it was not covered by the law of 1864 or the law of 1867; and in the case of Green, which was a claim for the rent of the Mansion House in Alexandria, commencing in 1861, after hostilities had actually begun in Virginia and running for several years—in that case the Court of Claims decided that those two laws were not applicable because the claim had originated in contract; and that, Mr. Chairman, is actually the status of this case.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio. I desire to ask the gentleman from Texas if this case is not pending before the Committee on Claims of the House? I ask the question because I thought I recognized it as a claim which was considered by the Committee on Claims in the last Congress, and reported favorably, though I do not remember whether any such bill passed or not. At all events, it seems to me to be rather a claim than a deficiency.

Mr. CRAIN. No; it is a deficiency, because the contract covered the entire term of years, and the Government paid for a portion of it only. Consequently there is a deficiency.

So far as this matter having been before the Committee on Claims is concerned, I think the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WARNER] is mistaken. There was a bill introduced some years ago in the Senate which was favorably reported, but I do not think it ever passed.

The Committee divided; and the amendment of Mr. CRAIN was agreed to—ayes 51, noes 18.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment, to come in at the end of line 45, page 110.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

To pay to the Magnolia Fire and Marine Insurance Company, of Cincinnati Ohio, $5,333.33; to the City Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, $3,000; to the American Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, $5,744.52; to the National Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, $3,000; to the Central Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, $3,000; to the Eureka Fire and Marine Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, $4,574.19; to the Citizens' Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, $1,744.52; to the American Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, $1,744.52; to the Magnolia Fire and Marine Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, $2,287.10; to the City Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, $2,-$87.10; to the American Insurance Company, of Cincinnati, Ohio, $4,667.

Mr. BRAGG. I reserve all points of order on that outfit. [Laughter.]

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the point of order against that amendment, and pending that I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HAMMOND, from the Committee of the Whole on the the state of the Union, reported that they had had under consideration the sundry civil appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

Mr. BURNES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend the time of the session this evening.

Several MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. BURNES. Gentlemen present have been so faithful in their labors to-day that I shall not insist.

THE ENGLISH ARMY IN INDIA.

Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina, offered a resolution requesting the Secretary of War to furnish to the House the report of Col. H. M. Lazell on the maneuvers of the English army in India; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

The House then, on motion of Mr. BLAND (at 4 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.), adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. J. M. ALLEN: Papers relating to the claim of Thomas N. Cheves and of Zachariah Belue, of Tishomingo County, Mississippi—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HEPBURN: Petition of B. F. Raiff, asking that his war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

Also, petition of citizens of the eighth district of Iowa, asking for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HILL: Petition of Mrs. A. M. Falconer, of New Texas, La., asking that her war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. JACKSON: Evidence in the claim of William P. Withrow, of Company A, Thirty-second Ohio Volunteers, for amendment of record—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MORGAN: Papers relating to the claims of Marriet Langston and of A. Parker, of Union County; of Thomas Nunnery, of James Manison, of William T. Lamb, of Drury Couch, of Drury Robertson, of John A. Browning, of William M. Rowles, and of John W. Jones, of La Fayette County; of D. A. Broder, of John S. Bell, of James H. Leih, of Panola County; of Jacob Surratt, of Tippah County; and of Christopher Burtin, of Tallahatchie County, Mississippi—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. RYAN: Petition of Eskridge Post, No. 75, for the passage of certain pension bills—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of citizens of Woodson County, Kansas, for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the same committee.

Also, petition of Grand Army of the Republic post of Cottonwood Falls, Kans., for the same—to the same committee.

By Mr. SINGLETON: Papers relating to the claim of Charles Kramer and of Frederick W. Volkins, of Clark County, Mississippi—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. J. M. TAYLOR: Petition of William Anderson, to be mustered in service and enrolled, and for other purposes—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. THROCKMORTON: Petition of members of Nathaniel Lyon Post, No. 5, Grand Army of the Republic, in favor of Senate bill 1886—to the same committee.

The following petitions, asking for the passage of House bill 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts; of House bill 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants; of bill forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with; of House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma; of Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement; of bill prohibiting aliens from holding land in the United States; of bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery; and of bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired, were severally referred to the Committee on the Public Lands:

By Mr. BAYNE: Petition of L. A. Lambert and 18 others, of T. Davies and 38 others, of J. Bokevill and 140 others, William Snyder and 112 others, of Orvil Ily and 48 others, of H. H. Day and 22 others, J. M. Drumm and 110 others, of Ed. Haven and 53 others, of William Conway and 47 others, of James Cox and 161 others, and of William Smith and 100 others, citizens of the twenty-third district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. W. W. BROWN: Petition of Fred. A. Pierce and 260 others and of J. D. Thompson and 88 others, citizens of the sixteenth district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: Petition of Frank Goetz and 75 others, of O. C. Allen and 31 others, of John H. O'Neal and 35 others, of George L. Brown and 40 others, of John Mulligan and 43 others, of J. L. Marsden and 76 others, of J. R. Mansion and 51 others, of James Hiscock and 341 others, of D. Kenney and 70 others, and of John Weatheropt and others, citizens of the eighteenth district of New York.

By Mr. COLLINS: Petition of John F. Donavan and 37 others, of W. H. Daveys and 70 others, of R. A. Martin and 325 others, of Thomas Murphy and 27 others, and of Murdock Innis and 20 others, citizens of the ninth district of Massachusetts.

By Mr. CONGER: Petition of W. D. Bennett and 75 others, and of R. G. McNutt and others, citizens of the seventh district of Iowa.

By Mr. CALDWELL: Petition of H. J. Allen and others, citizens of the sixth district of Tennessee.

By Mr. J. M. CAMPBELL: Petition of James P. Herring and 208 others, citizens of the seventeenth district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. COOPER: Petition of David Lewis and 52 others and of George W. Morgan and 149 others, citizens of the ninth district of Ohio.

By Mr. DINGLEY: Petition of P. J. Carver and 125 others, citizens of the second district of Maine.

By Mr. FREDERICK: Petition of Moses Sterne and 468 others, citizens of the fifth district of Iowa.

By Mr. FULLER: Petition of Francis M. Addison and 17 others, citizens of the fourth district of Iowa.

By Mr. GALLINGER: Petition of F. McNamee and 200 others and of Michael Hart and 319 others, citizens of the second district of New Hampshire.

Also, petition of E. S. Knight and 67 others, citizens of the second district of New Hampshire.

By Mr. HALE: Petition of Robert Hogg and 79 others, of John Weikmann and 171 others, and of W. B. Watts and 110 others, citizens of the second district of Missouri.

By Mr. HARMER: Petition of C. H. Smith and 48 others, of T. G. Conlan and 74 others, and of John McCann and 27 others, citizens of the fifth district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. HAYNES: Petition of E. H. Meades and 19 others, of Robert Boolt and 77 others, of C. F. Davis and 110 others, of Charles F. Noyes and 25 others, of E. S. Carroll and 71 others, of John Bynum and 160 others, and of W. J. Bell and 22 others, citizens of the first district of New Hampshire.

By Mr. HEWITT: Petition of J. H. Casserly and 115 others, of F. W. Clark and 57 others, of Henry Burt and 86 others, of James J. O'Leary and 24 others, of Charles Wayson and 23 others, and of M. O'Rourke and 32 others, citizens of the ninth and tenth districts of New York.

By Mr. HIESTAND: Petition of C. P. Diemer and 237 others and of J. G. Ran and 207 others, citizens of the ninth district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. HILL: Petition of W. H. Jackson and 126 others and of Frank Gillespie and others, citizens of the sixth district of Ohio.

By Mr. JACKSON: Petition of W. W. Shields and 130 others and of G. J. Burnes and 75 others, citizens of the twenty-fourth district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. JAMES: Petition of George Brewster and 125 others, of P. J. Murphy and 28 others, of James B. Toomey and 59 others, of Thomas Reynolds and 43 others, and of Stephen P. Ellsworth and 294 others, citizens of the third district of New York.

By Mr. KETCHAM: Petition of W. N. Martin and 125 others and of John McManus and 25 others, citizens of the sixteenth district of New York.

By Mr. LONG: Petition of V. H. Arnold and 96 others, of C. Burke and 398 others, of C. L. Dickson and 165 others, of John C. Fack and 54 others, of J. H. Jones and 190 others, of William E. Hill and 39 others, of Henry Young and 35 others, of C. W. Peckman and 305 others, of T. C. Tipp and 16 others, and of E. A. Lathrop and 305 others, citizens of the second district of Massachusetts.

By Mr. McKINLEY: Petition of M. Miller and 115 others, of H. Ewald and 75 others, and of A. McLaughlin and 190 others, citizens of the twentieth district of Ohio.

Also, petition of W. S. McCarmish and 96 others, citizens of the twentieth district of Ohio.

By Mr. MARTIN: Petition of James Edwards and 98 others, of John Smith and 62 others, and of Edward Johnson and 33 others, citizens of the sixth district of Alabama.

By Mr. MILLIKEN: Petition of John Maxwell and 24 others, of Varus Stearns and 23 others, of F. B. Avery and 26 others, of Ed. Doyle and 38 others, and of J. W. Sullivan and 37 others, citizens of the third district of Maine.

By Mr. MURPHY: Petition of S. C. G. Brant and 97 others, citizens of the second district of Iowa.

By Mr. NEAL: Petition of Owen O. Hear and 100 others and of Edward Smith and 25 others, citizens of the third district of Tennessee.

By Mr. CHARLES O'NEILL: Four petitions of citizens of the second district of Pennsylvania.

By Mr. PERKINS: Petition of E. Davis and 23 others, of E. Harris and 209 others, of L. Wilson and 103 others, of J. F. Griffith and 126 others, and of John Halliday and 158 others, citizens of the third district of Kansas.

By Mr. RANNEY: Petition of William E. Mills and 106 others, of John Douglass and 180 others, of J. D. Leary and 35 others, of P. Hugher and 40 others, of J. G. Nolan and 35 others, of Charles W. Peckham and 305 others, and of Gottleib Kramer and 96 others, citizens of the third district of Massachusetts.

By Mr. RICE: Petition of S. C. Hall and 173 others, of F. M. Tillotsom and 10 others, of A. H. Rowe and 29 others, of P. G. Quinn and 130 others, and of J. A. Bonner and 100 others, citizens of the tenth district of Massachusetts.

By Mr. ROCKWELL: Petition of J. E. Ready and 27 others, of A.

J. McGuire and 22 others, of John Crosby and 246 others, and of James D. Sullivan and 45 others, citizens of the twelfth district of Massachusetts.

By Mr. NORWOOD: Petition of Ed. Hoffman and 50 others, of Charles B. Herb and 70 others, and of Julius Barth and 60 others, citizens of the first district of Georgia.

By Mr. ST. MARTIN: Petition of L. J. Punkett and 78 others, of the first district of Louisiana.

By Mr. W. J. STONE, of Missouri: Petition of D. B. Watts and 60 others, of H. E. Norris and 95 others, of S. W. Patterson and 12 others, of M. D. Salle and 155 others, M. A. Gunther and 121 others, of William Bule and 119 others, and of L. P. Miller and 87 others, citizens of the twelfth district of Missouri.

By Mr. J. H. TAYLOR: Petition of C. E. Kennedy and 90 others, citizens of the eighteenth district of Ohio.

By Mr. VAN EATON: Petition of James C. Lamkin and 90 others, of W. G. Martin and 160 others, of Charles McManus and 78 others, of James C. Lampkin and 90 others, and of Hillery Green and 80 others, citizens of the sixth district of Mississippi.

By Mr. WALLACE: Petition of J. E. Porter and 51 others, and of John Roehm and 140 others, citizens of the second district of Louisiana.

By Mr. WILLIAM WARNER: Petition of W. H. Vigus and 213 others and of Philip Vetter and 63 others, citizens of the fifth district of Missouri.

By Mr. WEST: Petition of E. J. O'Conner and 16 others, of T. P. Brown and 171 others, and of John McFeedries and 91 others, citizens of the twentieth district of New York.

By Mr. WHITING: Petition of H. L. Holcomb and 44 others, and of W. E. Shannon and 34 others, citizens of the eleventh district of Massachusetts.

By Mr. WILSON: Petition of Thomas McMahan and 45 others, of W. McDonald and 40 others, of William Middleton and 50 others, and of William Armstrong and 332 others, citizens of the second district of West Virginia.

By Mr. WISE: Petition of George C. Tucker and 69 others and of A. C. Gibbs and 103 others, citizens of the third district of Virginia.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, July 6, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

MARTIN L. BUNDY—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I hereby return without approval Senate bill No. 365, entitled "An act for the relief of Martin L. Bundy."

By this bill it is proposed to allow in the settlement by the United States with Mr. Bundy, who was lately a paymaster in the Army, the sum of $719.47 for the forage of two horses to which he claims he was entitled while in the service, and which has never been drawn by him. The time during which it is alleged this forage was due is stated to be between July 17, 1862, and April 15, 1866.

This claimant was mustered out as paymaster on the last-mentioned date, and in 1872 a certificate was issued that his accounts having been adjusted, they exhibited no indebtedness on his part to the United States.

Subsequently, however, and in or about the year 1879, it was discovered that by reason of a duplicate credit, which had been allowed him by mistake, he was actually indebted to the Government in the sum of $528.72.

After the fact had been made known to him the claim embodied in this bill was suggested to or invented by him, which, if allowed, will not only extinguish his indebtedness to the Government, but leave a balance due to him.

By the law and the Army regulations the forage upon which this claim is based is or should be only allowed to those in the service who actually have and use horses in the performance of their duties.

And when thus entitled to forage it was necessary to draw it in kind or in the specific articles permitted every month, and if not thus drawn it could not afterward be claimed. There seems to be no such thing as commutation of forage in such cases.

There is no suggestion that the claimant named in this bill had or used any horses while in the service. If he did and paid for their maintenance and at the time of the settlement of his accounts made no claim for reimbursement, he presents a case of incredible ignorance of his rights or a wonderful lack of that disposition to gain every possible advantage which is usually found among those who deal with the Government.

It is quite apparent that the claim is not valid, and the fact that it is made long after the discovery of his deficit leads to the suspicion that it is insisted on merely for the purpose of paying his debt.

Though in this particular case it would do but little more than to extinguish an indebtedness to the Government, the allowance of this claim would set a precedent which could hardly be ignored, and which, if followed, would furnish another means of attack upon the public Treasury quite as effective as many which are now in active operation.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, July 3, 1886.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the 2d instant, a copy of a letter addressed to the Attorney-General of the United States, of date 19th March, 1886, relative to the privilege of the bonded warehouse system in regard to imported goods under section 2500 of the Revised Statutes; which, with the accompanying letter, was referred to the Committee on Finance, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter of the Light-House Board requesting an appropriation of $150 for the purchase of additional land at the Dutch Gap Canal, James River, Virginia, light station; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, submitting an estimate of appropriation from the Secretary of the Interior for pay of employés at the Navajo agency in New Mexico; which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore presented the petition of William Gilbrath and 50 others, citizens of Ohio; the petition of Louis J. Gorman and 180 others, citizens of the tenth Congressional district of Ohio; the petition of John Tyler and 23 others, citizens of the eighth Congressional district of Ohio; the petition of P. L. Duncan and 169 others, citizens of the thirteenth Congressional district of Ohio; the petition of Victor Coble and 80 others, citizens of the eighth Congressional district of Ohio; the petition of H. S. Matthews and 212 others, citizens of the seventh Congressional district of Ohio; the petition of Frank Gillespie and 122 others, citizens of the sixth Congressional district of Ohio; the petition of W. H. Jackson and 129 others, citizens of the sixth Congressional district of Ohio; the petition of W. H. Meiser and 252 others, citizens of the fifth Congressional district of Ohio; the petition of J. H. Root and 69 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Ohio; the petition of E. H. Coninger and 65 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Ohio, and the petition of John A. Licthtenfels and 75 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Ohio, praying for the passage of the following measures at the present session of Congress:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding land in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and prohibiting bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursements of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituing Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CULLOM presented a memorial of 182 residents of Chicago, Ill., who are consumers of butterine, remonstrating against the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of 559 citizens of Quincy, in the twelfth Congressional district of Illinois, praying for the passage at the present session of Congress of the following measures:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding lands in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa, presented the petition of M. E. Fisher and 28 other citizens of Montgomery County, Iowa, praying for the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented a petition of the Board of Trade of Santa Fé, N. Mex., praying for the passage of the House bill "for ascertaining and settling private land claims in the Territories of New Mexico and Arizona, and the State of Colorado;" which was ordered to lie on the table.

He also presented the petition of H. J. Nickle and 25 other citizens of Polk County, Iowa, praying for the passage at the present session of the following measures:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;

4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding lands in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursements of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petition was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HALE presented the petition of John Maxwell and 24 others, of the third Congressional district of Maine; the petition of Varus Stearns and 23 others, of the third Congressional district of Maine; the petition of B. D. Babcock and 115 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Maine; the petition of C. W. Knight and 98 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Maine; the petition of S. D. Edwards and 23 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Maine, and the petition of Arthur W. Patterson and 86 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Maine, praying for the passage of the following measures at the present session of Congress:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding land in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and prohibiting bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursements of least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CAMERON. I present the petition of John S. Bell and other dairymen and butter-makers, citizens of Long's Stand, Pa., praying for the adoption of the bill of the American Agricultural and Dairy Association, placing the manufacture and sale of all imitations of butter under the control of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue of the United States and taxing it 10 cents per pound. I move that the petition lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. I present the petition of John Stern and 4,732 other citizens of Allegheny County, Pennsylvania, respectfully petitioning the Senate to defeat the bill now pending, placing a tax upon oleomargarine butter and a heavy license for its manufacture and sale, believing that all should have the privilege of purchasing this article under its proper name free of tax. They also denounce this bill as one designed to tax the consumer for the benefit of the dairymen, and ask their Senators to use every effort for its defeat. I move that the petition lie on the table, the bill on that subject having been reported.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON presented the petition of L. R. Cronkrite and 180 other citizens of the sixteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of J. W. Tebo and 42 other citizens of the sixteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of P. M. Miller and 52 other citizens of the sixteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of A. B. Green and 38 other citizens of the sixteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of S. W. Kitchen and 89 other citizens of the sixteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of G. W. Koouse and 36 other citizens of the sixteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of W. J. Ireland and 37 other citizens of the fifteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of N. J. Roberts and 45 other citizens of the fifteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Ed. New and 15 other citizens of Philadelphia, Pa.; the petition of H. W. Seaver and 19 other citizens of the fourteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Joseph M. Morrow and 124 other citizens of the fourteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Henry Germon and 155 other citizens of the fourteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Dennis McGill and 40 other citizens of the fourteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of E. B. Hoffman and 56 other citizens of the fourteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Thomas Edwards and 96 other citizens of the thirteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of A. W. Brown and 130 other citizens of the thirteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of M. J. O'Brien and 115 other citizens of the thirteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of George S. Thompson and 132 other citizens of the thirteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Jerry O'Brien and 107 other citizens of the thirteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of E. E. Kuder and 99 other citizens of the thirteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of John E. Ames and 100 other citizens of the eleventh Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of J. M. Schneider and 46 other citizens of the tenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of W. L. Carpenter and 52 other citizens of the ninth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of P. Hannigan and 62 other citizens of the twelfth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Condy Timony and 50 other citizens of the twelfth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of G. A. Schnell and 19 other citizens of the twelfth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of S. G. Harney and 25 other citizens of the twelfth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Edward Johnson and 110 other citizens of the twelfth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of L. R. Johnson and 53 other citizens of the sixth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of John J. Haedele and 200 other citizens of the eighth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of J. McKinney and 50 other citizens of the eighth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of M. Fitzgerald and 95 other citizens of the fifth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of William Blake and 79 other citizens of the fifth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, tho petition of A. E. English and 22 other citizens of the fifth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Hugh Coyle and 40 other citizens of the fifth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Julius Koernke and 40 other citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of James O'Brien and 150 other citizens of the third Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of George Frank and 400 other citizens of the third Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of George W. Simpler and 39 other citizens of the third Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Frederick Moller and 102 other citizens of the third Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Daniel Harrity and 50 other citizens of the twentieth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Frederick Hartung and 85 other citizens of the second Congressional district of Pennsylvania; a petition of citizens of Leighton, Pa.; a petition of citizens of Carbon County, Pennsylvania; the petition of John G. Reese and 248 other citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of James McDonald and 129 other citizens of the fourteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of J. J. Gallagher and 139 other citizens of the eleventh Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Frederick A. Pierce and 260 other citizens of the sixteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of J. D. Thompson and 88 other citizens of the sixteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of W. Scott Stevens and 49 other citizens of the nineteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Peter M. Demus and 282 other citizens of the nineteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of David Jeffers and 165 other citizens of the twenty-sixth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of G. M. Larimer and 34 other citizens of the twenty-seventh Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Charles A. Wayson and 23 other citizens of the ninth Congressional district of New York, the petition of Henry H. Day and 22 other citizens of the twenty-third Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Samuel F. Patterson and 86 other citizens of the twenty-second Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Mordecai James and 192 other citizens of the thirteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Thomas Conway and 98 other citizens of the thirteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Daniel Disch and 30 other citizens of the twenty-second Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of T. P. Bell and 84 other citizens of the twenty-seventh Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Patrick Murphy and 84 other citizens of the twenty-fourth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of William E. Wilson and 45 other citizens of the twenty-first Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Harry C. Hawley and 110 other citizens of the fourteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of W. H. Fortney and 220 other citizens of the fourteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of James Reagan and 170 other citizens of the thirteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Patrick P. Brannon and 282 other citizens of the thirteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of W. H. Evans and 220 other citizens of the thirteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of J. F. Buck and 97 others of the thirteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of John Kealy and 107 others of the twelfth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Edwin M. Jordan and 28 others of the twelfth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of D. E. Fellows and 84 other citizens of the fifteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Spencer H. Smith and 332 others, citizens of the eighth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Spencer H. Smith and 332 others, citizens of the eighth Congressional district of Pennsylvania; the petition of James D. Haslett and 405 others, citizens of the eighth Congressional district of Pennsylvania; the petition of John J. Eddy and 83 others, citizens of the twentieth Congressional district of Pennsylvania; the petition of Charles B. Wells and 90 others, citizens of the eighth Congressional district of Pennsylvania; the petition of Charles S. Bellam and 35 others, citizens of the eighth Congressional district of Pennsylvania; the petition of Allen S. Beck and 37 others, citizens of the eighth Congressional district of Pennsylvania; the petition of James P. Herring and 208 others, citizens of the seventeenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania; the petition of C. E. Springer and 127 others, citizens of the seventeenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania; the petition of John A. Martin and 22 others, citizens of the sixteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania; the petition of G. L. Latimer and 55 others, citizens of the sixteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania; the petition of Norris Plumley and 285 others, citizens of the sixth Congressional district of Pennsylvania; the petition of Thomas T. Conlan and 74 other citizens of the fifth Congressional district, Pennsylvania; the petition of B. F. Townley and 126 other citizens of the third Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of William Byrne and 133 other citizens of the third Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of George W. Zemmier and 57 others, of the third Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of William Hamilton and 85 others, of the first Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Hugh McCrudden and 21 other citizens of the second Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of W. H. Parkes and 25 other citizens of the second Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Robert Thiel and 79 other citizens of the second Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Joseph Smidt and 28 other citizens of the second Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of W. H. Davy and 74 other citizens of the third Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of James J. Graf and 198 other citizens of the eleventh Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of Joseph J. McGinty and 27 other citizens of the eleventh Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of J. C. Conaghan and 85 other citizens of the eleventh Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of S. H. Hollinger and 135 other citizens of the eleventh Congressional district of Pennsylvania, the petition of J. H. Steel and 170 other citizens of the eleventh Congressional district of Pennsylvania, and the petition of James T. Jones and 203 other citizens of the eleventh Congressional district of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of the following bills at the present session of Congress:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding lands in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MANDERSON presented the petition of H. G. Armitage and 29 other citizens of the second Congressional district of Nebraska, the petion of J. E. Roberts and 69 others of the third Congressional district of Nebraska, the petition of D. E. Ryden and 85 others of the first Congressional district of Nebraska, the petition of Horace Bucknell and 96 others of the first Congressional district of Nebraska, the petition of Jacob Billings and 78 others of the first Congressional district of Nebraska, and the petition of Miles Fiers and 74 others of the second Congressional district of Nebraska, praying for the passage at the present session of the following measures:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding lands in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. DAWES presented the petition of Henry W. Moorhouse and 16 others, citizens of the first Congressional district of Massachusetts; the petition of Frank Sheppard and 85 others, citizens of the first Congressional district of Massachusetts; the petition of E. A. Lathrop and 305 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Massachusetts; the petition of G. H. Jones and 60 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Massachusetts; the petition of V. H. Arnold and 96 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Massachusetts; the petition of Henry Young and 35 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Massachusetts; the petition of William E. Hill and 39 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Massachusetts; the petition of C. Burke and 297 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Massachusetts; the petition of J. J. Nolan and 35 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of Massachusetts; the petition of John Douglas and 180 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of Massachusetts; the petition of R. A. Martin and 325 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Massachusetts; the petition of W. H. Davy and 70 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Massachusetts; and the petition of James Clegg and 26 others, citizens of the eighth Congressional district of Massachusetts, praying for the passage of the following measures at the present session:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding lands in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MCPHERSON presented the petition of A. Flanagan and 75 others of the tenth Congressional district, New Jersey; the petition of Anthony Riley and 145 others of the seventh Congressional district, New Jersey; the petition of J. V. Hough and 50 others of the sixth Congressional district, New Jersey; the petition of E. J. Brucker and 48 others of the sixth Congressional district, the petition of Thomas E. Gorman and 90 others of the sixth Congressional district, New Jersey; the petition of W. J. Loftus and 47 others of the sixth Congressional district, New Jersey; the petition of George J. Byram and 19 others of the sixth Congressional district, New Jersey; the petition of Michael Deed and 78 others of the fifth Congressional district, New Jersey; the petition of Theodore Orton and 35 others of the fifth Congressional district, New Jersey; the petition of William Pritchard and 200 others of the fifth Congressional district, New Jersey; the petition of Max Bear and 45 others of the fifth Congressional district, New Jersey; the petition of Louis Matt and 50 others of the fifth Congressional district, New Jersey; the petition of Henry G. Nadle and 75 others of the fifth Congressional district, New Jersey; the petition of Thomas S. Ball and 34 others of the fifth Congressional district, New Jersey; the petition of C. L. S. Walker and 76 others of the sixth Congressional district, New Jersey; the petition of Robert Spiers and 45 others of the fifth Congressional district, New Jersey; the petition of M. Harris and 55 others of the third Congressional district, New Jersey; the petition of John S. Wilkinson and 84 others of the second Congressional district, New Jersey; the petition of Charles Hensel and 17 others of the first Congressional district, New Jersey; the petition of James Lutts and 99 others of the first Congressional district, New Jersey; the petition of W. P. Cully and 24 others of the sixth Congressional district, New Jersey; and the petition of Gottlieb Helf and 42 others of the sixth Congressional district, New Jersey, praying for the passage of the following measures at the present session of Congress:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding land in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and prohibiting bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursements of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also presented the petition of Mary Ann Dougherty, of Washington, D. C., praying to be allowed a pension; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GIBSON presented the petition of John Roehm and 140 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Louisiana; the petition of W. A. Chambers and 55 others, citizens of the sixth Congressional district of Louisiana; the petition of S. G. Punkett and 78 others, citizens of the first Congressional district of Louisiana; and the petition of G. E. Porter and 51 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Louisiana, praying for the passage at the present session of Congress of the following measures:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;

3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding land in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and prohibiting bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursements of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. VEST presented the petition of Thomas E. Sabin and 35 others of the eighth Congressional district of Missouri, the petition of Riley Biggs and 155 others of the eighth Congressional district of Missouri, the petition of John C. Egley and 52 others of the seventh Congressional district of Missouri, the petition of J. E. Bennett and 68 others of the sixth Congressional district of Missouri, the petition of W. H. Vigus and 213 others of the fifth Congressional district of Missouri, the petition of Philip Vetter and 63 others of the fifth Congressional district of Missouri, the petition of A. Schiel and 137 others of the fourth Congressional district of Missouri, the petition of John Wild and 240 others of the third Congressional district of Missouri, the petition of John Weikmann and 171 others of the second Congressional district of Missouri, William Cunningham and 50 others of the second Congressional district of Missouri, the petition of J. G. Foss and 107 others of the first Congressional district of Missouri, and the petition of William Beal and 280 others of the first Congressional district of Missouri, praying for the passage of the following measures at the present session of Congress:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding land in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and prohibiting bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursements of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. PAYNE presented the petition of John M. Haner and 90 other citizens of the eighth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of Henry Knarr and 26 others of the tenth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of E. C. Caylar and 127 other citizens of the thirteenth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of P. W. Sampell and 200 other citizens of the fourteenth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of O. L. Sayre and 37 other citizens of the seventeenth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of Henry Mott and 21 other citizens of the thirteenth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of J. F. Hubbard and 47 other citizens of the tenth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of A. McLaughlin and 190 other citizens of the twentieth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of Samuel Smith and 96 other citizens of the twentieth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of J. W. Grow and 135 other citizens of the twentieth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of William McNeal and 84 other citizens of the twentieth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of M. Dennis and 29 other citizens of the twenty-first Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of Charles M. Frick and 285 other citizens of the twenty-first Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of James Been and 102 other citizens of the twenty-first Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of Albert E. Strong and 60 other citizens of the twenty-first Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of W. S. McCormick and 96 other citizens of the eighteenth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of C. E. Kennedy and 86 other citizens of the eighteenth Congressional district of Ohio, the petition of J. H. McWilliams and 86 other citizens of the eighteenth Congressional district of Ohio, and the petition of Richard McCready and 152 other citizens of the eighteenth Congressional district of Ohio, praying for the passage at the present session of Congress of the following measures:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding lands in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. GORMAN presented the petition of George W. Stoner and 78 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of G. S. Sellers and 32 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of S. C. Leonard and 77 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of John H. Hawkins and 16 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of Charles Erch and 93 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of John H. Keating and 154 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of David L. McGlenan and 160 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of William Grimes and 24 others, citizens of the sixth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of A. K. Syester and 187 others, citizens of the sixth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of James S. Cassidy and 66 others, citizens of the fifth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of Charles M. Metz and 176 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of George Bowers and 43 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of C. M. Fowler and 43 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of James H. Rukle and 40 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of Martin Worst and 83 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of Gustav Englehardt and 95 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of Robert H. Allen and 43 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of C. B. Townsend and 88 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of John A. Seward and 103 others, citizens of the fourth and fifth Congressional districts of Maryland; the petition of Frank K. Smith and 105 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of George Sinclair and 119 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of Fred. F. Meyers and 16 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of James H. Crouch and 152 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of Charles G. Ross and 55 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of Samuel B. Hasson and 75 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of C. Wilson and 91 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of August Vogt and 74 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of Henry Michael and 250 others, citizens of Baltimore, Md.; the petition of Theodore Michael and 40 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of Thomas N. Overcash and 384 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland; the petition of E. H. Poole and 68 others of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland, and the petition of James E. Cumming and 156 others of the fourth Congressional district of Maryland, praying for the passage of the following bills at the present session of Congress:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding lands in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. HARRIS. I received yesterday from one Joseph Beaumont, chairman of the national legislative committee of the Knights of Labor, dated in this city, six stereotyped printed petitions of the character referred to by other Senators, purporting to come from citizens of several of the Congressional districts of Tennessee. I ask their reference to the Committee on Public Lands.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands, as follows:

A petition of William Bradley and 92 other citizens of the second Congressional district of Tennessee;

A petition of Patrick Thomas and 94 other citizens of the second Congressional district of Tennessee;

A petition of Thomas J. Baker and 74 other citizens of the second Congressional district of Tennessee;

A petition of Edward Smith and 25 other citizens of the third Congressional district of Tennessee;

A petition of Watson Solomon and 40 others of the fourth Congressional district of Tennessee; and

A petition of William Detrick and 20 others of the sixth Congressional district of Tennessee.

Mr. WALTHALL presented the petition of P. B. Taylor and 134 others of the fourth Congressional district of Mississippi, the petition of Hillery Green and 80 others of the sixth Congressional district of Mississippi, the petition of W. G. Martin and 160 others of the sixth Congressional district of Mississippi, the petition of Charles McManus and 78 other citizens of the sixth Congressional district of Mississippi, and the petition of J. D. Compton and 110 others of the seventh Congressional district of Mississippi, praying for the passage at the present session of Congress of the following measures:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing the timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding lands in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

Mr. MCMILLAN presented the petition of E. S. Burns and 55 others, of the first Congressional district, Minnesota; the petition of Frank M. Morgan and 48 others, of the fourth Congressional district, Minnesota; the petition of A. H. Murdock and 75 others, of the third Congressional district, Minnesota; the petition of Thomas Coleman and 76 others, of the second Congressional district, Minnesota; the petition of Joseph Schuka and 304 others, of the third Congressional district, Minnesota; the petition of George Y. Pringle and 200 others, from the third Congressional district, Minnesota; and the petition of William Todd and 49 others, of the second Congressional district, Minnesota, praying for the passage of the following measures at the present session:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding lands in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MCMILLAN presented a resolution adopted by the Home Guards and United States Reserve Corps at Saint Louis, Mo., favoring the passage of what is known as the equalization of bounty bill; which was ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. MILLER. I present a petition numerously signed by citizens of Schoharie County, New York, and a petition signed by a large number of citizens of Rome, N. Y., praying for the passage of the bill taxing all imitations of butter. I move that the petitions lie on the table.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MILLER presented the petition of Alfred Whittleton and 22 other citizens of the thirty-first Congressional district of New York, the petition of Henry Hanover and 28 other citizens of the twenty-sixth Congressional district of New York, the petition of James Cooley and 71 other citizens of the eighteenth Congressional district of New York, the petition of W. M. Martin and 125 other citizens of the sixteenth Congressional district of New York, the petition of E. J. Nolan and 23 other citizens of the ninth Congressional district of New York, the petition of William Hobbins and 148 other citizens of the ninth Congressional district of New York, the petition of Fremont Parks and 55 other citizens of the twenty-fifth Congressional district of New York, the petition of W. E. F. Hess and 233 other citizens of the twenty-fourth Congressional district of New York, the petition of T. P. Brown and 78 other citizens of the twentieth Congressional district of New York, the petition of E. J. O'Conner and 10 other citizens of the twentieth Congressional district of New York, the petition of John M. Fedries and 91 other citizens of the twentieth Congressional district of New York, the petition of John Pierce and 430 other citizens of the nineteenth Congressional district of New York, the petition of Dyer D. Leam and 75 other citizens of the thirteenth Congressional district of New York, the petition of J. A. Kelly and 160 other citizens of New York, the petition of John Ryne and 130 other citizens of the eighth Congressional district of New York, the petition of William Hartman and 45 other citizens of the eighth Congressional district of New York, the petition of Daniel Ely and 51 other citizens of the eighth Congressional district of New York, the petition of John Roach and 61 other citizens of the fifth Congressional district of New York, the petition of C. R. Lockwood and 230 other citizens of the fourth Congressional district of New York, and the petition of Alexander Muir and 290 other citizens of the third Congressional district of New York, praying for the passage at the present session of Congress of the following measures:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the Great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding lands in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. COCKRELL. I present a petition signed by citizens of Saint Louis of the ninth Congressional district, praying Congress in view of the existing condition of public affairs in this country as set forth in the petition, for the passage of House bill 7887, House bill 7021, House bill 7217, Senate bill 52, the passage of a bill prohibiting aliens from acquiring title to lands in the United States, the passage of a bill punishing the bribe-taker and the bribe-giver at all Congressional and Presidential elections, a bill making the days on which President, Vice-President, and members of Congress are elected legal holidays, and a bill opposing the policy of hoarding in the Treasury any surplus money, and providing that at least $200,000,000 in the Treasury shall be taken out and disposed of in the payment of the public debt bearing interest.

I also present similar petitions from citizens of the tenth, eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth Congressional districts of Missouri. As the Committee on Public Lands has about disposed of all the measures referred to in these petitions which were pending before that committee, I move that the petitions be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL. I have received a copy of proceedings in the form of resolutions of the Board of Trade of the city of Santa Fé in the Territory of New Mexico, under date of June 24, 1886, in which they petition Congress for the passage of the bill for the adjustment of the titles of private land claims in the Territory, as introduced in the House by Hon. Mr. JOSEPH, the Delegate from that Territory, providing for a commission. As the Committee on Private Land Claims has already made a report on that question, I ask that this paper be received and laid upon the table.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That order will be made.

Mr. EVARTS presented the petition of Thomas O'Neill and 24 others of the twentieth Congressional district of New York, the petition of William Smith and 285 others of the twenty-sixth Congressional district of New York, the petition of C. E. Strong and 189 others of the twenty-sixth Congressional district of New York, the petition of Philip Eckle and 73 others of the twenty-fifth Congressional district of New York, the petition of Charles W. Sharkey and 64 others of the nineteenth Congressional district of New York, the petition of John McManus and 25 others of the sixteenth Congressional district of New York, the petition of William H. Young and 20 others of the eighteenth Congressional district of New York, the petition of William L. Golden and 27 others of the tenth Congressional district of New York, the petition of Thomas Fitzsimons and 64 others of the ninth Congressional district of New York, and the petition of Albert B. Hutchins and 67 others of the ninth Congressional district of New York, praying for the passage at the present session of Congress of the following measures:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding land in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and prohibiting bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursements of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. CALL. I present a petition purporting to be signed by five hundred citizens of Pensacola, Fla., which states as follows:

That an universal business depression now exists throughout the country, and that great suffering and want prevail among millions of the laboring people; that not less than one million of men, able and willing to work, are now practically idle; that a large proportion of the surplus and unemployed laborers of the country could find speedy relief by making their homes on the public lands now unjustly withheld from settlement by railroad corporations and syndicates; that the failure of Congress to restore the lands to the people to whom they rightfully belong is working great wrong everywhere; that according to the report of the Commissioner of the General Land Office, "the amount of unpatented lands embraced in all the grants, subject to declaration of forfeiture, is estimated at 100,000,000 acres, an area equal to that of the combined States of New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland and Virginia. The restoration to public settlement and entry of this great body of lands is a subject of the first magnitude and of profound national importance. The question presented is strictly one of legal rights. The rights of corporations have been upheld for twenty or thirty years. The Government has not been in laches. The lands have been kept in reservations, material for building the roads has been freely supplied from the public domain, and extensions of time for construction have been allowed. The default of the companies has been voluntary. The rights of the public are now to be considered—the right of the people to repossess themselves of their own. The case is not one calling for sympathy to the corporations; it is one calling for justice to the people of the country." That, in view of these indisputable facts, the highest considerations of justice and statesmanship demand that these lands should be forfeited, and measures to relieve the people should be adopted by the Congress of the United States before the close of the present session.

Being the eight bills referred to in previous petitions. I move that this petition, with an accompanying petition from laboring people of Pensacola, Fla., which I also present, be referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. SEWELL presented the petition of H. Egar and 70 others, citizens of the first Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of Owen Benson and 14 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of George J. Robinson and 19 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of Samuel Tomlinson and 145 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of Albert M. Smith and 26 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of John Maguire and 98 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of S. C. Cook and 175 others, citizens of the second Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of John W. Moses and 90 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of M. J. Hannigan and 9 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of G. W. Kiemeyer and 102 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of Walter Pilrington and 38 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of A. M. Missick and 20 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of James J. Welsh and 80 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of James Cobb and 26 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of Manuel Mayer and 101 others, citizens of the third Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of J. H. Chamberlain and 96 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of New Jersey; the petition of F. Bouvet and 110 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of New Jersey, and the petition of J. E. Hayne and 57 others, citizens of the fourth Congressional district of New Jersey, praying for the passage of the following measures at the present session of Congress:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding lands in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and punishing bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursement of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. INGALLS presented a petition of the Social Purity Alliance of the District of Columbia praying for the passage of legislation for the suppression of certain evils; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. BLAIR presented the petition of Charles F. Noyes and 25 others of the first Congressional district, New Hampshire; the petition of E. S. Carroll and 71 others of the first Congressional district, New Hampshire; the petition of Michael Hart and 319 others of the second Congressional district, New Hampshire; the petition of W. P. Hastings and 103 others of the first Congressional district, New Hampshire; the petition of Robert Booth and 77 others of the first Congressional district, New Hampshire; the petition of E. S. Knight and 69 others of the second Congressional district, New Hampshire; the petition of E. H. Meades and 19 others of the first Congressional district, New Hampshire, and the petition of W. J. Bell and 22 others of the first Congressional district, New Hampshire, praying for the passage of the following measures at the present session of Congress:

1. House bill No. 7887, repealing timber-culture, pre-emption, and desert-land acts;
2. House bill No. 7021, for adjustment of railroad and other land grants;
3. Bills forfeiting all railroad land grants the conditions of which have not been strictly complied with;
4. House bill organizing the Territory of Oklahoma;
5. Senate bill opening a portion of the great Sioux reservation to settlement;
6. Bill prohibiting aliens from holding land in the United States;
7. Bill making Presidential and Congressional election days holidays, and prohibiting bribery;
8. Bill directing disbursements of at least $200,000,000 Treasury surplus, and substituting Treasury notes for bank notes retired.

The petitions were referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. BLAIR presented a petition of the New York committee for the prevention of State regulation of vice, officially signed, praying for an official inquiry into and appropriate legislation concerning the alleged international traffic in young girls for immoral purposes; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a resolution requesting the President to return to the House the bill (H. R. 3501) granting a pension to Daniel J. Bingman; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House requested the Senate to transmit to the House an engrossed copy of the bill (S. 1526) amending sections 4756 and 4757 of the Revised Statutes, relating to pensions to certain disabled persons who have served in the Navy or Marine Corps, the original having been mislaid in the House.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (H. R. 41) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River at or near the city of Saint Joseph, in the State of Missouri, and to establish it as a post-road;

A bill (H. R. 3463) granting a pension to Mrs. Hannah Babb Hutchins;

A bill (H. R. 1462) granting a pension to Addie L. Macomber;

A bill (H. R. 4544) granting a pension to Ann E. Cooney;

A bill (H. R. 6311) for the relief of Mrs. Maria Walker;

A bill (H. R. 6397) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; and

A bill (H. R. 7165) to increase the pension of Manhattan Pickett.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4616) for the relief of Maj. Michael P. Small, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 515) for the relief of Maj. Michael P. Small, commissary of subsistence, United States Army, moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

Mr. COCKRELL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2806) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to cause to be examined certain vouchers filed, or to be filed, by the State of Missouri, or her agent or agents, for the sum claimed to be due from the Government of the United States on account of payments made by said States since April 22, 1882, to the officers and enlisted men of her militia forces, for military services rendered to the United States in the suppression of the rebellion, as evidenced by the proper pay-rolls heretofore filed with, examined, and accepted by the Government of the United States, and to report to Congress, reported it without amendment and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2627) to regulate the pay of officers of the Army and Navy who refuse or neglect to provide for support of their families, reported it without amendment.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2013) for the relief of Myron E. Dunlap, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 2176) for the relief of Alexander Goble, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6337) for the relief of James D. Wood, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. TELLER. The Committee on Public Lands directed the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], to report an original bill to quiet title to public lands heretofore erroneously conveyed by the Government, and for other purposes. The chairman is away, and in his behalf I submit the report.

The bill (S. 2807) to quiet titles to public lands heretofore erroneously conveyed by the Government, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted a report thereon:

A bill (S. 2797) granting a pension to Lizzie Wright Owen;

A bill (S. 2587) granting a pension to Elizabeth Ward;
A bill (H. R. 6606) granting a pension to Sallie B. Bent;
A bill (H. R. 2027(granting a pension to Joshua Armstrong; and
A bill (S. 2708) for the relief of Maria L. Strong.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them each with an amendment and submitted a report thereon:

A bill (H. R. 1630) to increase the pension of the widow of the late Capt. Dominick Lynch, United States Navy; and A bill (S. 368) for the relief of Susan E. Alger.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1473) for the relief of Susan E. Alger, moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 803) granting increase of pension to James D. Verney, late of the Eleventh Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. PALMER. I am directed by the Committee on Fisheries to report an amendment to the bill (H. R. 9478) making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes. The amendment proposes an appropriation of $10,000 for a fish-hatchery at Duluth. I move that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. PALMER. I am also directed by the Committee on Fisheries to report to the same bill an amendment making an appropriation for a fish-hatchery on the Columbia River and its branches; which I move be referred to the Committee on Appropriations and printed.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Jesse M. Tate, of Carroll County, Tennessee, praying to be allowed a pension, submitted an adverse report thereon, which was agreed to; and the committee were discharged from the further consideration of the petition.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I am also directed by the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of James W. Bowman, praying to be allowed a pension, to report it with a recommendation that it be indefinitely postponed without prejudice, and that the prayer be not granted.

The report was agreed to.

Mr. WHITTHORNE, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2311) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Berkley, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. HAMPTON. I am directed by the Committee on Military Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1294) providing for the auditing and payment of claims of soldiers who served in the several Indian wars in Florida, to report it adversely. In deference to the wish of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] I ask that the bill be placed upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar, with the adverse report of the committee.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to whom were referred the bill (H. R. 4849) to punish robbery in the Indian Territory, and the bill (H. R. 5188) prescribing the punishment of horse-stealing in the Indian Territory, moved their indefinite postponement, which was agreed to; and he reported a bill (S. 2808) to punish robbery and horse-stealing in the Indian Territory; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. CAMERON, from the Committee on Commerce, reported an amendment intended to be proposed to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION REPORT.

Mr. GORMAN. I am instructed by the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred a concurrent resolution for printing the third annual report of the Civil Service Commission, to report it with an amendment; and I ask for its present consideration.

By unanimous consent, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution; which was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the third annual report of the United States Civil Service Commission be printed, and that 26,000 additional copies be printed, of which 2,000 shall be for the use of the Senate, 4,000 for the use of the House, and 20,000 copies for distribution by the commission.

The amendment reported by the Committee on Printing was to add to the resolution the following proviso:

Provided, That appendices 8 and 9 of the report as published by the House of Representatives, Executive Document No. 140, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, be omitted by the Public Printer in printing this edition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the Committee on Printing.

Mr. GORMAN. I desire to say that in the publication of the report of the Civil Service Commission, as printed by the House of Representatives, appendices 8 and 9 consist of extracts from the New York civil-service act, an extract from the annual message of Governor Hill, of New York, and certain resolutions passed by the Legislature of South Carolina December 22, 1884, which the Committee on Printing think it is improper to include in the report. Therefore the resolution is reported with an amendment striking out the appendices containing that matter.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

THE MACKEREL FISHERY.

Mr. PALMER. I present the notes of hearings before the Senate Committee on Fisheries of parties interested in the bill (H. R. 5538) relating to the importing and landing of mackerel caught during the spawning season. I move that 2,000 copies of the hearings be printed for the use of Senators and their constituents.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be received, and the motion to print will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. INGALLS. At the request of the managers of the Social Purity Alliance of this District I introduce three bills, which I ask may be read twice and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, as follows:

A bill (S. 2809) for the protection of women and children in the District of Columbia;
A bill (S. 2810) to protect children in the District of Columbia; and
A bill (S. 2811) for the further protection of children in the District of Columbia.

Mr. INGALLS. At the request of the chairman of the board of commissioners for the District of Columbia I introduce a bill.

The bill (S. 2812) to authorize the sale of certain property for the benefit of the public schools of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. PALMER (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2813) for the relief of David L. Garver; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Patents.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. BERRY, it was Ordered, That E. J. Woolum be allowed to withdraw the papers on file in relation to his claim against the United States, upon leaving copies with the Secretary, as required by the rules.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, Mr. MCPHERSON, and Mr. TELLER submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. GIBSON and Mr. GORMAN submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them respectively to the naval appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the general deficiency appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the river and harbor bill.

Mr. INGALLS. I ask the Senator from Minnesota if he would not consent that the business upon the Calendar might be considered for half an hour. There are some matters of very considerable importance that must necessarily be delayed from day to day if the entire time is consumed in the consideration of the appropriation bills. There are two or three matters which really need attention, and unless they can get to the other House within a day or two, of course they must pass over for the session.

If it would not be disagreeable to the Senator from Minnesota I am sure it would be convenient to the public business if we could have, say, until half past 1 o'clock, to consider matters on the Calendar of general business.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I should be glad to yield to the Senator's request if I felt at all at liberty to do so, in view of the present condition of the business of Congress, and particularly of the appropriation bills in the Senate.

Mr. INGALLS. Among other things, I made a motion the other day to reconsider the vote by which Senate bill 1800 was passed. The Committee on Indian Affairs desire to submit an amendment in the nature of a substitute for that bill. It is a measure of very considerable importance, and it is unjust to the interests involved that the motion to reconsider should remain indefinitely unacted upon.

Mr. MCMILLAN. What is the bill?

Mr. INGALLS. It is a bill to secure to Cherokee freedmen and others their proportion of certain proceeds of lands under the act of March 3, 1883.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think we shall be able to finish the consideration of the river and harbor bill to-day, or at farthest to-morrow, and

I understand there is a general desire in the Senate to have a day set apart for the consideration of Calendar business.

Mr. INGALLS. Then immediately upon the completion of the river and harbor bill the naval appropriation bill is to be pressed for consideration.

Mr. MCMILLAN. That bill will occupy but a very brief time, I have understood.

Mr. INGALLS. Whatever time it occupies of course is to be exclusive of everything else. Then we are told that the bill providing for the taxing of imitation butter is to come up; and as soon as that is concluded, of course the sundry civil appropriation bill will be urged upon us. Thus day by day passes away and matters of real importance, but of not such great importance as the appropriation bills, pass beyond consideration.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Can the motion to reconsider be determined without debate?

Mr. INGALLS. I have not an idea that it will cause any debate. The committee are unanimous in agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. MCMILLAN. If the river and harbor bill is brought before the Senate I will yield.

Mr. INGALLS. It will not take five minutes to read the amendment we propose.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I will yield for that purpose.

Mr. INGALLS. Then let the river and harbor bill be taken up and I will ask unanimous consent to consider Senate bill 1800.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I will ask unanimous consent that the river and harbor bill be taken up and that it then be laid aside informally for the purpose indicated by the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Minnesota [Mr. MCMILLAN] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. Res. 199) providing for printing eulogies delivered in Congress upon the late Michael Hahn; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 209) for the relief of the legal representatives of John M. Robeson, deceased.

CHEROKEE FUNDS.

Mr. INGALLS. Now, if the Senator will permit me, I will ask unanimous consent that the motion I made to reconsider the vote by which the Senate passed Senate bill 1800 may be taken up, and if the vote shall be reconsidered I will add that the Committee on Indian Affairs have agreed upon an amendment unanimously that they propose to that bill, which I shall then ask may be considered. I think it will take no more time than will be consumed in the reading of the amendment, which may be five minutes.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I will yield very willingly for that purpose if there is no debate. The Senator will understand that if debate springs up I must insist on the regular order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill called up by the Senator from Kansas will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1800) to secure to the Cherokee freedmen and others their proportion of certain proceeds of lands under the act of March 3, 1883.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading and was passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. I submit now, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, an amendment in the nature of a substitute, and move that all after the enacting clause be stricken out and what I send to the desk be inserted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That there be, and hereby is, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $75,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act; and the amount actually expended shall be charged against any money now or hereafter due the Cherokee Nation and deducted therefrom. The said sum, or so much thereof as may be necessary, shall be by the Secretary of the Interior distributed per capita, first, among such freedmen and their descendants as are mentioned in the ninth article of the treaty of July 19, 1866, between the United States and the Cherokee Nation of Indians; second, among the Delaware tribe of Indians incorporated into the Cherokee Nation by the terms of a certain agreement entered into between said Cherokee Nation and Delaware Indians, under the provisions of the fifteenth article of the aforesaid treaty, on the 8th day of April, 1867, and approved, respectively, by the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Interior, on the 11th day of April, 1867; and, third, among the Shawnee tribe of Indians incorporated into the Cherokee Nation by the terms of a certain agreement entered into between the said Cherokee Nation and Shawnee Indians, under the provisions of the aforesaid article and treaty, on the 7th day of June, 1869, and approved, respectively, by the President of the United States and the Secretary of the Interior, on the 9th day of June, 1869, in such manner and in such amount or amounts as will equalize the per capita payment made to Cherokees by blood, in accordance with the act of the Cherokee Legislature aforesaid, out of the sum of $300,000 appropriated by the act of March 3, 1883, aforesaid.

SEC. 2. That the district court for the western district of Arkansas shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine any suit in law or equity that shall be brought by the Cherokee Nation through its proper officers, and which is authorized to sue by that name, to test the question of law and fact as to whether the aforesaid adopted citizens of the Cherokee Nation, to-wit, the freedmen who are lawful citizens of the Cherokee Nation under the ninth article of the treaty between the Cherokee Nation and the United States of July 19, A. D. 1866, and the adopted Delawares and Shawnees, under the provisions of the fifteenth article of said treaty, are entitled under law, treaty, and equity to a distributive share of said $300,000; and the said Cherokee Nation, by its proper officers, shall, within three months of the passage of this act, file its petition in said court, setting forth its reasons and the causes in law, treaty, and equity why said amounts should not be adjudged or paid to said adopted citizens, or so taken from the funds of the Cherokee Nation; and the said western district court shall proceed to consider and adjudicate such case, under such rules and orders in relation to answers, replications, or arguments as it shall direct. The Secretary of the Interior shall transmit to said court copies, duly authenticated of all records, reports, papers, and other documents on file in the Departments which he may deem necessary to said cause or which may be requested by either party to this suit; and the said adopted citizens of the Cherokee Nation, and their legal representatives, are made party defendant to this suit; and either party may submit to said court such additional competent testimony as they may desire, and the said cause shall proceed to final judgment. When the interest, if any, of said adopted citizens in said fund or payment shall have been determined by said court, the said court shall send a certified copy of such decision to the Secretary of the Interior, and also to the principal chief of the Cherokee Nation; and if any sum shall be adjudged to be due said adopted citizens of said Cherokee Nation, upon such certificate of said court that any sum is due, the Secretary of the Interior shall make requisition upon the Secretary of the Treasury for said amount, which shall be charged against any sums due said nation, as provided in the first section of this act, and paid per capita to said adopted citizens of the Cherokee Nation, under such rules as the Secretary of the Interior may prescribe; and if the judgment of said court shall be that no sum shall be due any of such adopted citizens then this act shall be of no effect.

SEC. 3. That if no such suit is brought within three months after the passage of this act, the same shall be in full force from and after said date. If such suit is brought within said period, proceedings under it shall be suspended until the same is finally determined. Either party to said suit shall have the right of appeal from any decision made in the same to the Supreme Court of the United States, in the same manner and under the same conditions as are applicable to appeals in equity causes; and the cause shall be advanced for hearing on the docket of the Supreme Court so that the same may be finally decided with all convenient speed; and the Attorney-General shall, in person or by some suitable attorney by him appointed for that purpose, and at the expense of the United States, appear for the said defendants in any such suit, for the protection and enforcement of all the rights of such defendants therein.

SEC. 4. That the Cherokee Nation shall, in that name, have authority to bring suit under the provisions of this act by the direction of the chief of said nation or by direction of its legislative council.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to ask the Senator who has the bill in charge if this $75,000 shall be paid out why is it charged against any fund? Why is it not charged against the same fund that the $300,000 was supposed to be charged against, if there is to be a charge against any fund?

Mr. INGALLS. The $300,000 consists of what is known as the lease-money, and that has been distributed. This proposes if it has been distributed in violation of the law that the refund shall be made from the other resources of the Cherokee people.

Mr. TELLER. What I wanted to suggest—I could not quite catch the import of the amendment——

Mr. INGALLS. Let me explain the amendment to the Senator. We passed an act once for the repayment of a certain amount that was supposed to have been improperly appropriated to the Cherokee full-bloods out of the lease-money, instead of being distributed among the Cherokee full-bloods and the freedmen and the affiliated Indians of the Shawnee and Delaware blood. There was discontent with that measure, the allegation being that the distribution under the treaty was right. This amendment merely provides that the question shall be judicially ascertained whether the distribution was right or wrong under the treaty, and if it was right, then it shall stand; and if wrong, that the fund shall be reimbursed out of the resources of the Cherokee people. That is all the change there is in it.

Mr. TELLER. I did not quite understand what the $300,000 referred to.

Mr. INGALLS. The lease-money.

Mr. DAWES. The land-money; not the money derived from leases, but the $300,000 which was paid in on account of land purchased by the United States.

Mr. INGALLS. Yes; on account of the sale of land.

Mr. TELLER. That is what I understood. Three hundred thousand dollars was paid to the Cherokee Nation by an act of Congress to compensate them in part at least for land taken for certain Indian tribes, and it was required before the payment should be made that they should execute a deed to the United States in trust for the several tribes specified in the act. This was charged against the money due them for land taken. There is an unsettled account between the Government and these Indians, and it seemed to me this money should be taken out of the same thing. It is an unsettled running account between the United States and these Indians for land taken under the treaty which we are to pay for at a fixed price.

I do not know that it is very material, but I think it will meet with much less opposition from the Indians themselves if it is charged against that fund than against a fund that they have now in the Treasury.

Mr. DAWES. The Indians are satisfied with the bill as it is now, provided they can go to court for a judicial decision. They are satisfied with this form in every way. They prefer the charge against the general fund rather than the original form of charging it against their land-money.

Mr. TELLER. I have no objection if the Indians are satisfied.

Mr. DAWES. They express their satisfaction.

Mr. TELLER. But from the hasty reading I am uncertain now who is to represent the defendants. Is the Attorney-General of the United States to represent them?

Mr. DAWES. The Attorney-General is required to represent them in court.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. INGALLS. Now, I wish to have the preamble stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the preamble.

The preamble was rejected.

DANIEL J. BINGMAN.

Mr. BLAIR. A resolution has come from the House requesting the President to return a pension bill. It ought to be acted on at once, as to-day is the last one, and it will otherwise become a law.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will lay before the Senate a resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, July 6, 1886.

"Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be respectfully requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 3501) granting a pension to Daniel J. Bingman.

The resolution was concurred in.

NAVY AND MARINE CORPS PENSIONS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate another resolution from the House of Representatives, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

IN THE HOUSE, July 5, 1886.

Resolved, That the Senate be requested to transmit to the House an engrossed copy of the bill (S. 1526) "amending sections 4756 and 4757 of the Revised Statutes, relating to pensions to certain disabled persons who have served in the Navy or Marine Corps," the original having been mislaid in the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In accordance with the request from the House, an engrossed copy of the bill will be transmitted, if there be no objection. The Chair hears none.

RIVER AND HARBOR BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7480) making appropriations for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors, and for other purposes.

Mr. MILLER. The bill has been read through once. I supposed the Secretary was only to read the amendments of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is all. The Secretary will only read the amendments of the Committee on Commerce not heretofore disposed of.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 1, line 272, to increase the appropriation for "improving harbor at Ashtabula, Ohio: Continuing improvement," from $25,000 to $40,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McMILLAN. In line 286 the word "thirty," before "thousand," should be "fifty;" so as to read:

Improving ice-harbor at the mouth of Muskingum River, Ohio: Continuing improvement, $50,000.

The engineer in charge of that improvement, Colonel Merrill, represented to the committee that it would be useless to attempt to do anything with the appropriation as contained in the House bill, and it was so in the last river and harbor bill; we considered it then and increased the amount to what he desired, $50,000, instead of $30,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment moved by the Senator from Minnesota.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the Committee on Commerce was, in section 1, after line 289, to insert:

For the purpose of acquiring the title to the land adjoining the inner end of the west pier built by the United States for the improvement of the harbor at Port Clinton, Ohio, the Secretary of War shall negotiate with the owner or owners of the land for the purchase thereof at a reasonable price, to be approved by Congress; and if an agreement as to price can not be made with the owner, then the value of the same shall be ascertained in the mode provided by the laws of Ohio for the condemnation of lands for public uses in that State, the result of said proceedings of condemnation, if taken, to be reported to the next Congress for its approval.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 308, after the words "Maumee River," to strike out "or Straight Channel" and insert "by a straight channel along such line as may be approved by the Secretary of War;" and, in line 311, before "$25,000," to insert "balance of the;" so as to read:

Improving harbor at Toledo, Ohio: Continuing improvement of the Maumee River by a straight channel along such line as may be approved by the Secretary of War, $150,000; and the balance of the $25,000 heretofore appropriated are hereby made available for clearing the old channel.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 317, before the word "thousand," to strike out "forty-five" and insert "seventy-five;" so as to read:

Improving harbor at Michigan City, Ind.: Continuing improvement, $75,000; of which sum $2,500 are to be used on the inner harbor.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, line 344, after the word "Michigan," to strike out "continuing improvement" and insert "by repairs;" so as to read:

Improving harbor at Monroe, Mich.: By repairs $2,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 1, after line 408, to insert:

For the purchase of the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan ship-canal and harbor of refuge, connecting the waters of Green Bay with Lake Michigan, in the State of Wisconsin, $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary: Provided, That before said moneys shall be expended the Secretary of War shall cause an examination to be made by a board of three United States engineers to ascertain and report upon the importance and value of the free use of said ship-canals and harbor of refuge to commerce and navigation and the reasonableness of the price therefor, and shall have received from said board a report favorable to such purchase by the United States; and also upon full and absolute conveyance to the United States of said harbor of refuge, canals, easement, rights of way, piers, docks, and appurtenances, of every nature, belonging to and connected with said works, or either of them.

Mr. INGALLS. I hope before we are called on to vote upon an amendment as important and leading to such important consequences in the future, that we shall be enabled first to have the opinion of the presiding officer whether this is in order on this bill, and if it shall be decided to be in order, that then some explanation will be furnished us by the chairman of the committee as to the propriety of the proposed purchase and the reason why we are to enter upon this system of purchasing canals.

I raise in the first place the point of order and ask the Chair to decide whether under the rules of the Senate this amendment is admissible.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under what rule does the Senator raise his point of order?

Mr. INGALLS. That it is new legislation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not see what clause of the rule would exclude this as a new item of appropriation. The Chair would like to have the Senator point out the clause which he thinks excludes the appropriation. The sixteenth rule the Chair supposes is the one he refers to. This amendment being reported by a committee of the Senate and made in pursuance of estimates as the Chair supposes——

Mr. INGALLS. In pursuance of an estimate from the head of a Department?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ask the Senator from Minnesota if there is an estimate from the head of the Department?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, sir; this is in accordance with the report from the Secretary of War.

Mr. INGALLS. Is there any estimate? We all know what estimates are. Is there any provision or item of the Book of Estimates sent down here from the Secretary of War or the head of any Department calling upon Congress to give appropriations for this object?

Mr. McMILLAN. Yes, sir; the same recommendation in that as in all the other items in the report of the Secretary of War transmitting the report of the Chief of Engineers.

Mr. INGALLS. I should like to hear the estimate read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that if this amendment is moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate it is in order, even if there is not an estimate from the head of the Department, because that clause is in the alternative.

Mr. MILLER. Not desiring to discuss the parliamentary question, I wish to ask for information whether a committee in preparing an appropriation bill can not put into it an appropriation for anything that the committee itself thinks fit? There certainly can be no rule against that. If there is, this whole bill would go by the board.

Mr. INGALLS. This is not a bill to buy canals. This is new legislation. It is a bill for the improvement of the rivers and harbors. The amendment is in no sense whatever germane to the subject of this bill; and whether there is an estimate for it or not, it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill that is in no manner whatever connected with the subject of the bill. If there is anything that can be open to the interposition of a point of order, this certainly must be. This is not a river nor a harbor; it is a proposition for general legislation upon an appropriation bill that is to buy a canal.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator is mistaken in regard to the assertion that this is not germane to the subject, and is not embraced specifically within the title of this bill. The Sturgeon Bay Canal coming through the channel at the upper end of Green Bay, connecting it with Lake Michigan, is a work that was undertaken by citizens of Wisconsin, and makes a level side water communication from Lake Michigan to Green Bay by a short cut through a sand strip. The Government of the United States, thinking the matter of so much importance, has appropriated several thousand dollars to make that a harbor of refuge by building a breakwater across the entrance to it from the lake side; so that it is as well a canal as a breakwater and a harbor of refuge.

It comes strictly within the very title of the bill itself. It is a harbor of refuge, and it is for the purpose of making a harbor of refuge and insuring it as such that an appropriation has been made by Congress for building a breakwater for safety across the front of the entrance to this canal, and it is now used for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion, after examining the amendment, that this is clearly in order under the first clause of the sixteenth rule. It is moved by direction of a standing committee, and it is also made in pursuance of an estimate of the War Department. The Chair therefore thinks it is in order.

Mr. HARRIS. Does the Chair hold that this amendment is not a legislative provision? That is the point of order I understand the Senator from Kansas makes. There is no question about the estimate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that it is not general legislation within the sense of the third clause of the rule. Certainly it is legislation, but it is conditional, it is a particular item of appropriation with special qualifications and limitations as to the mode of expending the money appropriated. The Chair therefore thinks it does not fall within the inhibition of the third clause of the sixteenth rule, which says:

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill.

The legislation found in this proviso is not general legislation, but limited and defined to the mode and manner of disbursing and paying out the money appropriated in this particular clause. It is special and limited legislation. The Chair is of opinion that many cases of the kind have occurred, probably almost every year, in the passage of appropriation bills where legislation does limit to some extent the particular item of appropriation.

Mr. INGALLS. Of course if the Chair has decided the proposition, any observations at this time would be in the nature of an autopsy; but I ask permission to say that I do not understand that the Committee on Commerce have any right under the rules to report amendments of this description and ask the consent of the Senate to them without previous consideration of another committee of this body. Now let me read:

All amendments to general appropriation bills—

And I assume that this is a general appropriation bill and that the provision to which attention is called is an amendment—moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate—

I assume that this is moved by the Committee on Commerce—proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation—

This is to add a new item of appropriation—shall, at least one day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and when actually proposed to the bill, no amendment proposing to increase the amount stated in such amendment shall be received; in like manner amendments proposing new items of appropriation to river and harbor bills shall, before being considered, be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Now, I ask the chair to consider the language of that rule, and then say whether or not the Committee on Commerce have a right under that language to report amendments to this bill and ask our consideration, without their having been previously referred by direction of a standing or select committee of the body.

As I said, I do not want to hold any post mortem, and if this matter is decided, well and good; but my impression is that the Chair did not pass upon that aspect of this question, and I respectfully submit that the Committee on Commerce have no more right than any other committee to report a new item of amendment to an appropriation bill without its having been previously referred and one day considered by that committee under the rules of the Senate.

Mr. McPHERSON. What rule does the Senator read from?

Mr. INGALLS. From the second paragraph of Rule XVI, page 142 of the Manual.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of the opinion, and made his decision upon the assumption that this matter had already been referred to the Committee on Commerce in the ordinary way. All the estimates made by the Secretary of War and by the Corps of Engineers have been, in the ordinary course, referred to the Committee on Commerce, and this subject-matter was probably referred.

Mr. INGALLS. There never has been any estimate of an appropriation for this item contained in this bill. Let the Senator from Minnesota refer to it in the Book of Estimates. It is idle to talk about it.

Mr. HARRIS. Will the Senator from Minnesota read that item in the Book of Estimates?

Mr. INGALLS. This idea of calling a letter or a communication from the Secretary of War or the Chief of Engineers an estimate of appropriations is a misnomer. These descriptions have a certain fixed and definite meaning. What an estimate of appropriation is the Senator from Ohio, occupying the Chair, having been at one time the head of a Department, knows very well. It does not do to say because there has been some recommendation by some Secretary of War or Chief of Engineers that that is an estimate of appropriations, and therefore this item in this bill proposing a new appropriation, not having been offered and referred one day previously by order of a standing or select committee, is plainly not in order under the rule.

Mr. MILLER. I do not desire to continue this post mortem. The decision has been made. Rule XVI refers, if I understand it correctly, entirely to amendments offered in the Senate to a bill under consideration after it has been reported by the committee to the Senate. It has no bearing whatever upon the action of the committee when considering the original bill. The Committee on Appropriations bring in all the great appropriation bills—the legislative, executive, and judicial, the sundry civil—and they put into them just as many amendments as the committee see fit to put in, and the question as to their being in order is never raised and never can be raised. But when the bill is once reported from the Appropriations Committee or from the Commerce Committee, no ammendment is in order to be offered in the Senate when the bill is under consideration unless it has complied with this provision contained in Rule XVI. It has and can have nothing to do with the bill as reported from the committee.

Mr. KENNA. I wish to suggest to the Senator from New York that the provision in the second clause of Rule XVI, "in like manner amendments proposing new items of appropriation to river and harbor bills shall, before being considered, be referred to the Committee on Commerce," is fully and completely met by the fact that the amendments originating in the committee are considered by that committee. That is the only object of this clause. Why should a Senator be required to offer here and have printed and referred to the Committee on Commerce a proposition to amend the river and harbor bill as to any matter which that committee as a committee originates itself? The whole spirit and object of the rule is thoroughly met by the fact that the committee as a committee reported the proposition. The rule never contemplated cutting off any such privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is of opinion that the amendment is in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I make a new point of order, which I think it may require a little more ingenuity to get over. Under the third paragraph of Rule XVI—

No amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill, nor shall any amendment not germane or relevant to the subject-matter contained in the bill be received; nor shall any amendment to any item or clause of such bill be received which does not directly relate thereto.

Now, I submit with confidence to the Chair that this commercial transaction, buying out a lot of private property, without saying whether it is a good plan or a bad plan at present, has nothing to do with the general scope of this bill of improving the rivers and harbors of the United States, public property in public places, general highways of commerce. I make that point of order for the consideration of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair, under the rule, has nothing to do except to submit this question of order to the Senate. The same clause of Rule XVI provides: "and all questions of relevancy of amendments under this rule, when raised, shall be submitted to the Senate and be decided without debate."

Therefore the Chair submits the question to the Senate.

Mr. KENNA. As there has been some debate, I hope the Senate will indulge me for a minute.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I only stated my point of order. I do not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not in order unless by unanimous consent.

Mr. KENNA. I think there is no objection. ["Consent!" "Consent!"] The second clause of Rule XVI makes clearly a discrimination as between general appropriation bills and river and harbor bills. If you will look at that clause you will find that provision is made to affect all general appropriation bills. Then when the clause comes to the river and harbor bill it speaks of it separately, so that the provision in the third clause of that rule that "no amendment which proposes general legislation shall be received to any general appropriation bill" has no application to the river and harbor bill. That stands here as distinct from general appropriation bills.

Mr. INGALLS. Will the Senator allow me to call his attention to one other clause of the rule as elucidating his view?

Mr. KENNA. Certainly.

Mr. INGALLS. Will he be good enough to look at the beginning of Rule XVI.

All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors, which shall be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Plainly by irresistible implication under the rules declaring that the river and harbor bill is a general appropriation bill and differs from the others only in being referred to the Committee on Commerce instead of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. KENNA. Will the Senator be kind enough to point me to that clause in any rule which declares that the river and harbor bill is a general appropriation bill.

Mr. INGALLS. The first clause of Rule XVI.

Mr. KENNA. Where?

Mr. EDMUNDS. The third line from the top.

Mr. KENNA. That reads:

All general appropriation bills shall be referred to the Committee on Appropriations except bills making appropriations for rivers and harbors.

I presume the theory is because that is an exception in that clause, it is declared a general appropriation bill; but when you read on down through the same clause you find that it is dealt with specifically and separately.

Mr. EDMUNDS. In order to make it clear beyond doubt that the amendments to that general appropriation bill should be referred, not to the Committee on Appropriations, but to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. KENNA. My friends differ in their construction of the rule. The Senator from Kansas said a moment ago that amendments should be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, where they would have to go if this construction of this rule is correct.

Mr. INGALLS. If I said "the Committee on Appropriations" it was a lapsus linguæ.

Mr. KENNA. The rule says that.

Mr. INGALLS. Says what?

Mr. KENNA. That—

All amendments to general appropriation bills moved by direction of a standing or select committee of the Senate, proposing to increase an appropriation already contained in the bill, or to add new items of appropriation, shall, at least one day before they are considered, be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. INGALLS. Now the Senator from West Virginia has jumped before——

Mr. KENNA. So under the construction of this rule as urged by the Senator from Kansas amendments to the river and harbor bill adding new items or changing existing law, instead of going to the Committee on Commerce, which has jurisdiction and control of the bill, should go to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. INGALLS. The Senator from West Virginia has jumped before he got to the stile. If he had gone down three lines farther he would have found:

In like manner amendments proposing new items of appropriation to the river and harbor bills, shall, before being considered, be referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. MILLER. That has been done in this case.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. This question is not debatable. The question is, Is the amendment relevant to this bill?

Mr. MCMILLAN. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to say just one word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? ["No!" "No!"] The Chair hears none. The Senator from Minnesota will proceed.

Mr. MCMILLAN. This improvement is a canal connecting Green Bay, a harbor of refuge, with Lake Michigan, which is already constructed and completed. The purpose is now, after an examination to be made by the Secretary of War, to pass upon the propriety of connecting those lakes by the purchase of this canal, certainly a water way there connecting these two great bodies of water.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is whether the amendment is relevant to this bill. Those who so think will say "ay;" of the contrary opinion "no." [Putting the question.] The ayes appear to have it.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us have the yeas and nays. I want a record of this.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNA. There is some misunderstanding in this part of the Chamber as to the question on which we are voting. Will the Chair please state the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the amendment proposed by the Committee on Commerce relevant to this bill?

Mr. PUGH (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. COCKRELL. I am paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR]. Not knowing how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], but I vote "yea" to make a quorum.

The result was announced—yeas 31, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—31.

Blair,	Evarts,	Miller,	Spooner,
Brown,	George,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Stanford,
Call,	Gibson,	Palmer,	Teller,
Cameron,	Gorman,	Payne,	Vest,
Coke,	Gray,	Ransom,	Walthall,
Conger,	Jones of Arkansas,	Sawyer,	Wilson of Iowa,
Cullom,	Kenna,	Sewell,	Wilson of Md.
Dolph,	McMillan,	Sherman,

NAYS—9.

Berry,	Edmunds,	Hawley,	Platt,
Butler,	Harris,	Ingalls,	Whitthorne.
Colquitt,

ABSENT—36.

Aldrich,	Eustis,	Jones of Nevada,	Pike,
Allison,	Fair,	Logan,	Plumb,
Beck,	Frye,	McPherson,	Pugh,
Blackburn,	Hale,	Mahone,	Riddleberger,
Bowen,	Hampton,	Manderson,	Sabin,
Camden,	Harrison,	Maxey,	Saulsbury,
Chace,	Hearst,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Vance,
Cockrell,	Hoar,	Morgan,	Van Wyck,
Dawes,	Jones of Florida,	Morrill,	Voorhees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is held to be relevant. The question now is on the adoption of the amendment.

Mr. EDMUNDS. This is now relevant I suppose, and my inquiry about it will be relevant also. I should be glad to find out a little more about this performance than appears in this amendment or in the report of the committee.

I was under the impression that the committee had been directed to make a full report in regard to each item; but the report is silent about the fact that the United States granted to the State of Wisconsin, years ago, at least 200,000 acres of land in that rich region, and I do not know how much more—I have not had time to get at it—to build this canal. The State got the land and assigned it to a company; and now we are asked to buy the property that the Treasury has already paid for, for the reason, as I suppose, that it will put money into the pockets of the stockholders—no, I misstate that—for the reason that it will be a refuge to mariners first, and a profit to the stockholders second. I will put it that way to be polite.

We are not informed in this report how much this canal has cost or what the amount of tolls that have been collected is, or how much it pays on the investment, or whether any money at all except what was got from the lands has been expended in it. All that is left to be found out after we are committed to pay $150,000, in addition to the 200,000 acres of land that have already been given to these people for that purpose.

On the 10th of April, 1886, Congress granted to the State of Wisconsin, and Wisconsin afterward granted to a private company, as I understand, 200,000 acres of land "to aid in the construction of a breakwater and harbor and ship-canal at the head of Sturgeon Bay, in the county of Door, in said State, to connect the waters of Green Bay with Lake Michigan, in said State." These lands were—

To be selected in subdivisions agreeably to the United States survey, by an agent or agents appointed by the governor of said State, subject to the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, from lands subject to private entry: Provided, That said selections shall all be made from alternate and odd-numbered sections of land nearest the location of said harbor and canal in said State not otherwise appropriated, and not from lands designated by the United States as "mineral" before the passage of this act, nor from lands to which the rights of pre-emption or homestead have attached.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted, That the said lands hereby granted shall be subject to the disposal of the Legislature of said State, or, if the Legislature thereof shall not be in session, or shall adjourn within ten days after the passage and approval of this act, then said lands shall be subject to the disposal of the governor and board of commissioners of school, university, and swamp lands of said State, for the purposes aforesaid, and for no other; and the said canal shall be and remain a public highway for the use of the Government of the United States, free from toll or charge upon the vessels of said Government, or upon vessels employed by said Government in the transportation of any property or troops of the United States.

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That before it shall be competent for said State to dispose of any of said lands, to be selected as aforesaid, the plan of said breakwater and harbor and the route of said canal shall be established, and a plat or plats thereof shall be filed in the office of the War Department, and a duplicate thereof filed in the office of the Commissioner of the General Land Office.

SEC. 4. And be it further enacted, That if the said breakwater, harbor, and canal shall not be completed within three years from the passage of this act, the lands hereby granted and remaining unsold shall revert to the United States.

SEC. 5. And be it further enacted, That the Legislature of said State shall cause to be kept an accurate account of the sales and net proceeds of the lands hereby granted, and of all expenditures in the construction, repairs, and operating of said canal, and the earnings thereof, and shall return a statement of the same annually to the Secretary of the Interior. And whenever said State shall be fully reimbursed for all advances made for the construction, repairs, and operating of said canal, with legal interest on all advances until the reimbursement of the same, or upon payment by the United States of any balance of such advances over such receipts from said lands and canal, with such interest, the said State shall be allowed to tax for the use of said canal only such tolls as shall be sufficient to pay all necessary expenses for the care, charge, and repair of the same.

SEC. 6. And be it further enacted, That said ship-canal shall be at least 100 feet in width, with a depth of water not less than 13 feet.

That act lapsed and was revived, my friend from Minnesota says, in the year 1871.

Mr. BUTLER. May I inquire of the Senator from Vermont if he knows to whom this canal belongs, whether a private corporation or the State?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know. The chief merit, so far as I can observe, in this amendment is the plentiful lack of information that we have about it. That is the ground upon which it stands, apparently. All that I have been able to get at in these five minutes is to find that 200,000 acres of valuable land right along the line, alternate and odd-numbered sections, worth at a minimum price a dollar and a quarter an acre, making $250,000, were granted, and according to the value of land in that region (with my general information about the nature of it, it must be a low region, not mountainous, for the reason that otherwise the canal could not have gone through) it was worth probably two, or three, or four, or five dollars an acre, so that here was a very valuable grant.

The next want of information which we have is the circumstance that we have not got from the committee any of the information which the act of Congress required the State of Wisconsin to submit annually; that is, a statement of what had become of the lands, what they had got for them, whether they had sold them, and how they had applied the proceeds, what had been the tolls and income of the canal, what rates had been fixed, &c., and so on.

Mr. BUTLER. Is any reason assigned in the report why the owners of the canal want to sell it to the Government and why they should sell it? I should like to know that. What is the object?

Mr. EDMUNDS. You will find that the report on page 106 goes on to speak of how the canal was built with brush, &c., on either side piles of brush, and that "3,300 feet of canal up to the Sturgeon Bay is unprotected." And—

The canal, for a width of 50 feet, has a general depth of 13 feet, except for a short distance near the middle of the canal, where it has shoaled up to 11 feet, both depths being measured from the low water of 1847.

The following letter of the agent of the Wisconsin State canal inspector, which was inserted as Appendix B in the report of the Chief of Engineers to the Secretary of War, which was by him transmitted to the Senate January 8, 1883, in response to a resolution of the Senate March 9, 1882, calling for information relative to these works, clearly sets forth the importance of these canals:

FINAL REPORT OF THE STATE INSPECTOR ON THE STURGEON BAY AND LAKE MICHIGAN SHIP-CANAL.

MADISON, WIS., December 1, 1881.

GOVERNOR: I have the honor to inform your excellency that I have, in obedience with your instructions dated November 18, 1881, visited the "Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship Canal," and, having examined and inspected the same, beg leave to submit the following statements and report:

The canal is completed in accordance with the acts of Congress and of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin, which require a canal of 100 feet width at the water surface and of 13 feet depth, without any special reference to details or mode of construction. The State having this matter in trust has presumed to construe the action of Congress and of the Legislature as requiring a canal of the above dimensions constructed on such plan and in such manner as would promise to give a work of reasonable permanence.

It was at first supposed that the canal cut would stand without revetment of the banks, but as the work progressed it was found that nearly one-half the length of the dry cutting (the whole length is 7,300 feet), where the banks were high and the subsoil of pure sand, required revetment. The company has put in this revetment in the most substantial manner. The length of this revetment in the canal is 3,200 feet on each side of the Lake Michigan end.

They have also put in a revetment outside. That of course would lead to the presumption that there was some kind of a company that had got the 200,000 acres of land for building a canal 7,300 feet long, which is just about a mile and a half, and apparently through no rock cutting whatever, and that having built it in such a way that it does not seem to be convenient to answer the purposes for which it was intended and does not turn out to be a speculation in respect of profits in running it after they have got the land and built the canal, it is now proposed that the United States shall give $150,000 in cash in addition to the 200,000 acres of land it has already given to the State and this company for this work.

You will notice that the act which grants the land requires the State of Wisconsin to keep up the canal, authorizes her to take tolls, to make it an actual accommodation to whatever commerce there is, if there is any there, to the extent of a water way 100 feet wide and 13 feet deep; and the State of Wisconsin has got her pay for it and has assumed the obligation. Now, it is proposed, she having put it into the hands of a company, that we shall put out $150,000 more in cash for this mile and a half cut.

I think what I have said, Mr. President, is relevant to the amendment if the amendment is to the bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. Now, Mr. President, I should like to add to the inquiry for information a little. The report of the State agent is dated December 1, 1881. I should like to know what is the history of the canal since, whether it has been kept up and continues to be used as it appears to have been used during that year quite largely? I call attention, on page 108 of the committee's report, near the top of the page, to a remark of this agent of the State inspector of canals, wherein he says:

I venture these rather lengthy remarks to explain what I have seen from actual observation, that is, that there is no harbor of refuge in the true sense of the word. It is important that there should be one.

The work is entitled in the amendment as a harbor of refuge and ship canal, and so in previous bills. The agent suggests that that end of the canal which is expected to be the harbor of refuge is merely an ordinary channel running down to the shallow waters of the lake and subject to the beating of heavy waves, and is in no sense fitted for a harbor of refuge, but a great channel up which vessels if they are careful can get into the canal.

Mr. MCMILLAN. At Green Bay.

Mr. HAWLEY. But in case of storm the canal is well filled up with vessels that run in there from the lake. The canal itself is not entitled to the name of a harbor of refuge. If they get through the few miles of canal into Green Bay they are probably in a harbor of refuge, but he says there is not a harbor of refuge coming from the lake. I want to know whether the work has been made any more effectual within these five years. This is an old report, considering the circumstances.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President, this appears, from the casual examination I have been able to make of it, about as impudent and shameless a private speculation as my attention has yet been called to.

The Senator from Vermont read from the final report of the State inspector of the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship Canal, dated Madison, Wis., December 1, 1881, which appears on page 106 of the committee's report, as to the condition of the work and the statistics of the commerce thereon. Upon page 108 will be found some additional suggestions, which are quite full of meat, I think in this connection. The State inspector of canals goes on to say—

I venture these rather lengthy remarks to explain what I have seen from actual observation, that is, that there is no harbor of refuge in the true sense of the word. It is important that there should be one. The canal can be operated and maintained, but since the canal company have fulfilled their obligations this will have to be done from the tolls collected—and it is a question if these will be sufficient to settle damages in addition to making repairs if the canal is used as a refuge as it has been.

Mark this—

To construct an outer harbor would involve great expense, and should the Government dredge out a basin at the inner end there would still be the difficulty about canal tolls, which could only be settled by action of Congress.

It would, in my opinion, be to the interest of commerce if the United States would assume control of this important work as early as possible, in fact at once, for there is no doubt that it will have to come to this sooner or later, and the sooner the better in every respect. It may, in fact, have been a mistake in the first place for the Government to have let this work go out of its hands, and the best it can do is to get it back while it is yet new and in good condition. There is no doubt—it has, in fact, already been sufficiently demonstrated that this canal is destined to be a great commercial highway, and if in the control of the General Government, the tolls can be removed from vessels seeking refuge and a suitable safe harbor can be constructed at the head of Sturgeon Bay at a very moderate cost.

I feel safe in saying that with the increasing commerce in this highway, the Government could in a few years at furthest reduce the tolls to a minimum, making the canal virtually free, a great desideratum to lake commerce and the development of our natural resources.

And he continues:

The canal company can have no serious, or in fact any, objection to the change suggested above, for having completed the work according to law, it has no further pecuniary interest.

If it "has no further pecuniary interest" I should like to know on what theory of morals we can be called upon to pay it $150,000. If the work has been completed in accordance with the contract and there is no burden whatever upon the persons who constructed this canal, and the revenues are ample to maintain it, so that the company is entirely willing that the Government should take possession of it, having no further pecuniary interest therein, why should the Government of the United States be called upon to pay $150,000 for it?

This is the declaration of the State inspector of canals to his excellency William E. Smith, governor of Wisconsin, dated as has been said on the 1st of December, 1881; and it continues, after what I have read, as follows:

The tolls collected must be accounted for and be paid to the Government until the same is reimbursed the value of the grant.

In conclusion, I will state that my survey, examination, and observations, in accordance with instructions for final inspection, show that the canal is now completed in such a manner that the company is lawfully entitled to all the benefits provided by the acts of Congress and of the Legislature.

Respectfully submitted.

JOHN NADER,
Agent for the State Inspector of Canals.

Mr. President, it appears from the official record and from the statement of the officials having charge of this transaction that this company has no objection whatever to permitting the Government of the United States to take possession of this work, because, as is admitted, they have no pecuniary interest whatever in it.

Mr. BUTLER. To whom does it belong? I should like to know.

Mr. INGALLS. It belongs to this canal company, I suppose. I will read a little further from some other documents after I get through with this.

And yet, after that statement being made authentically in 1881, the Committee on Commerce report an amendment providing that we shall pay the company $150,000; but, as I shall be able to show from official documents, they received a very considerable profit on the construction of it in the first place.

Thrift, thrift, Horatio.

If you can get a report from the Committee on Commerce with regard to these appropriations, upon any work that is in a State which is represented on the committee, whether the company wants any pay for the work or not, whether there is any demand for compensation or not, I have no doubt a majority of the Senate will feel called upon to say that, notwithstanding this work was constructed in the first place at a profit, and notwithstanding the company say that they do not want any further compensation for it, we shall be able by means of the combinations that have been formed to make a gratuity, a donation of $150,000 to these people.

This is an old customer, Mr. President; it is an ancient and venerable comrade. I hold in my hand Senate Executive Document No. 34, being a letter from the Secretary of War "transmitting in response to a Senate resolution of March 9, 1882, a letter of the 6th instant from the Chief of Engineers submitting copy of the report, with accompanying map, of the board of engineer officers constituted to consider and report the cost of constructing the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship Canal." This document was published during the second session of the Forty-seventh Congress, during the incumbency of Robert T. Lincoln as Secretary of War. It contains in the first place "An act granting to the State of Wisconsin a donation of public lands to aid in the construction of a breakwater and harbor and ship-canal at the head of Sturgeon Bay, in the county of Door, in said State, to connect the waters of Green Bay with Lake Michigan, in said State."

The Senator from Vermont has already referred to that, and shown the grant that was made and the stipulations under which it was to be accepted. Upon page 3 of this report will be found an extract from the General Laws of Wisconsin, chapter 105, published March 10, 1868, being an act as follows:

An act to accept a grant of lands made to the State of Wisconsin by act of Congress to aid in the construction of the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship-canal and Harbor, in the county of Door, to connect the waters of Green Bay with Lake Michigan, and to provide for the construction of the same.

To carry out the object of this act the 200,000 acres granted were "conferred upon the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship Canal and Harbor Company, a company organized in the city of Milwaukee on the 4th day of October, 1866, under and by virtue of chapter 365 of the laws of Wisconsin of 1864, approved April 24, 1864, subject to all the conditions, restrictions, and obligations herein mentioned." Then follows the direction as to the constuction of this canal, endowing this company with the land, providing how the canal shall be constructed, how the lands shall be selected, certified, and sold; and this act was approved on the 5th day of March, 1868.

Upon page 11 of this report will be found an official statement of the receipts and disbursements of the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship Canal and Harbor Company, from May 7, 1872, to October 10, 1882, showing the cash receipts from capital stock, from cash loans paid with stock at par, both of which items amount to $61,648.34. Then "from trespasses on land grant and sales of dead and down timber, being collections by timber clerks and assistants," an aggregate of $48,121.20. "From lands prior to patents from State," another item, making the aggregate from these sources $53,042.95. Then "realized from sales of lands patented to canal company, $324,922.27." Another item is "from first-mortgage bonds issued and paid to Green, Fox & Howard, contractors, $8,000." "Realized from canal tolls and towing, collections from vessels for toll and towing, from March, 1882, to September 30, 1882, six months, $14,016.76." "From miscellaneous sources, $351.03," making a grand total of receipts to this company from the franchise that they received and from the proceeds of the lands with which they were endowed of $461,981.35, or very nearly half a million dollars.

Then follows a statement of the disbursements from May 7, 1872, to October 10, 1882, being the canal construction account, the dredging, clearing, grubbing, and draining the route, the docking Lake Michigan entrance, the revetment from Lake Michigan, the brush revetment from Station 41, west, repairs, damages by storms, &c., overseeing and incidental expenses; total construction account $342,762.99, or as between the receipts from the sales of the land and from the other items necessarily incidental thereto an excess over and above the construction account of nearly $125,000.

Then they have a general expense account which of course is a fluctuating quality; it was the salaries paid to the officials; it was traveling, and incidental expenses, the account of clerks, payment for investigating trespasses, paid to Joseph Harris for expenses in organizing the company $4,110, paid to various agents in New York for providing for the sales of the bonds $6,559.25.

Then comes the first-mortgage bond account, interest account, operating expense account, salaries, &c., United States light-house department, and advances on land contracts sold, being a total of disbursements including all these items of salaries, compensation to agents, to lawyers, to persons engaged in working up the organization, of $439,819.49, leaving still, after admitting all these items that no other company would ever think of charging, a balance of $22,161.86 remaining in the hands of the company after all these expenses had been paid.

In addition to that, as the resources of the canal company, on the 1st day of October, I suppose, 1882, showing that besides the cash on hand which I have mentioned there were other items, swelling the grand total up to $23,494.70 which was certified to as being correct to the best of the knowledge and belief of Jesse Spalding, the president, and William E. Strong, the treasurer and assistant secretary.

Mr. President, after having shown these facts, after it has been made to appear by the official statements of the officers of this corporation themselves that they are nearly $25,000 in pocket over and above all expenses on the assets that they received from the Government of the United States for constructing this work, it seems to me that I characterize properly the action of the Committee on Commerce in giving these people $150,000 after the company had expressed their willingness to surrender the work and say that they had no further pecuniary interest in it, as being, to say the least, extraordinary, and requiring some explanation.

Mr. CONGER. Will the Senator read in that same connection statement F, a part of the same report, that he may be perfectly fair in his statement, if the Senator pleases? It is part of the same report, statement F, in which the entire cost of this canal is set out by the same officer from whose report he has already read.

Mr. McMILLAN. Mr. President, I think the discussion here to-day upon this question is an admirable illustration of the basis upon which opinions in regard to the river and harbor bill are formed. It is evident that very limited knowledge is possessed in regard to the proposed purchase of this canal. It is treated here by Senators who have spoken on this subject as if the canal company were here beseeching Congress to relieve them of some burden, to take from their hands some unprofitable speculation, as if there were some private interest to be subserved in this appropriation. It is very evident that in the discussion of this bill but little knowledge is possessed in regard to the location even of this canal or the relations that it sustains to the commerce of the country. There is as little information in regard to that, perhaps, as in regard to the constitution of the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, because it is said that any State having a representative upon the Committee on Commerce can secure an appropriation for such an object as this. This improvement is entirely within the State of Wisconsin; it relates entirely to one of the great northern lakes of this country, the great water ways of the continent, and there is no member of the Committee on Commerce who represents Wisconsin. This appropriation is inserted in the interest of the commerce of the country, and it is not inserted here at the request of any canal company.

These people are not here asking you to purchase this canal. It is the great commercial interests of Lake Michigan and of the great line of water communication of the northern lakes that ask for relief by the purchase of this canal. Here is a burden upon commerce in the shape of tolls collected by this canal company, and here is a burden placed upon the commerce of this country if we assume even to afford a harbor of refuge.

This canal is north of Milwaukee, one of the great manufacturing cities of the country, one of the great ports of commerce of the lakes. It communicates from Lake Michigan to Sturgeon Bay and through Sturgeon Bay into Green Bay, which penetrates far into the State of Wisconsin, and is intended ultimately, perhaps, if the system of improvement is carried out which has been entered upon by Congress, through the Fox River and through the Wisconsin River to afford a communication with the great Mississippi River. That, however, has nothing to do with this appropriation. The fact that this canal affords a harbor of refuge is one reason why the Government of the United States should possess it and free it from this burden of tolls. The officer of the State of Wisconsin, upon accepting this improvement from the company who have received the lands granted to the State of Wisconsin through the Legislature of that State, in his report says (this was in 1881, upon the completion of the canal):

The total tonnage of vessels passing was 350,000 tons; 306 vessels carried 84,000,000 feet of lumber; 2,500,000 was passed in rafts, and 2,188,000 on scows; 2,265 tons of building stone passed the canal by sail. The number of logs, ties, shingles, and other merchandise could not readily be ascertained. Among some of the larger vessels passing are the following: Schooner George Murray, 790 tons register; steamer Oconto, 505 tons register; United States steamer Andrew Johnson, 499 tons register.

The steamer Mantenee passed through on November 12, drawing 13 feet 2 inches. Many of the larger vessels passing draw from 10 to 13 feet.

Of vessels now trading in the canal, 55 have run in for refuge from Lake Michigan, 16 in September, 25 in October, and 14 in November. There is no doubt but some of these would have been lost had they not had this refuge at hand. The total number of vessels which passed through the canal in 1880, while yet in an unfinished condition, was 533, with a tonnage of 113,497 tons.

On the 25th of this month the steam barge Bismarck, with three large lumber barges in tow, parted her tow-line on Lake Michigan, only a few miles from the canal; the sea was so great that she was unable to pick them up again, neither was there a tug at hand to give assistance; the barges set sail, made the harbor, and succeeded in running into the canal. The foregoing will show that the canal is completed and in successful operation, and there is no doubt that traffic will increase in a short time.

As the subsequent reports show, it has increased largely. Then in regard to the character of this improvement we have official and authentic information. The Senate, on the 9th of March, 1882, passed a resolution as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War be, and he hereby is, instructed to ascertain and report to Congress at its next session, the cost of constructing the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship Canal, in the State of Wisconsin, and by whom said ship-canal was constructed; also, to ascertain the amount of money realized from the sale of the lands granted by Congress to the State of Wisconsin to aid in the construction of said ship-canal; said information being required for the purpose of considering the question of opening said ship-canal free to the commerce of the lakes.

That was the purpose of the inquiry, and that is the purpose of this appropriation, to open this ship-canal free to the commerce of the lakes.

Under the direction of the Secretary of War and immediately under the direction of the Chief of Engineers of the United States Army this resolution was carried into effect and the examination made, and a report was made to Congress, which is found in Senate Executive Document No. 34, Forty-seventh Congress, second session. The whole history of the canal is there given.

It appears that in 1866 the United States granted to the State of Wisconsin 200,000 acres of land to aid in the construction of a break water and harbor and ship-canal to connect the waters of Green Bay with the waters of Lake Michigan. This grant was accepted by the State of Wisconsin and turned over to the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship Canal and Harbor Company by an act of the Legislature of the State of Wisconsin approved March 5, 1868. The canal was not completed within the time limited by the original act of Congress, and by an act of Congress the time for the completion of the canal was extended, and it was completed within the additional time allowed by the act of Congress.

Section 5 of the act of Congress making the grant required the Legislature of Wisconsin to cause to be kept an accurate account of the sales and net proceeds of the land granted; and a report is made embracing all the information called for under the resolution under which the examination was undertaken. It appears from the report that—

The receipts for canal tolls and towing for the portion of the season of 1882 to September 30 amounted to $14,016.76, from which, deducting the operating expenses as per statement referred to, amounting to $8,542.30, there is left a net profit of $5,474.46 from these sources.

That is, receipts of canal tolls. This was in the year 1882.

Previous to 1882 the canal had not been accepted by the State, so the tolls are not reported as received by the company.

It appears from this report that this canal company is not an insolvent institution. They are not here asking you to purchase it, but it is proposed to tender to them $150,000 by the Government of the United States for the purpose of securing this canal free to the commerce of the country, not at their instance, but in the general interest of the public and the commerce of the country. However profitable this may have been to the stockholders, however much they may have made upon the construction of the canal, whether they may have realized from the original grant for the construction of the canal or not, is not the question which affects us here. We are not looking to the interest of this corporation; we do not seek to bestow upon them any benefit; it is to secure to the interests of navigation and the commerce of the lakes the benefit of this canal without the burden of tolls which rests upon it constantly and continually, to have a channel of this kind, short as it is, but essential to all the interests of the safety of navigation and to the successful conduct of the commerce of the lakes free from this continual burden.

This question has been treated as if we were endeavoring to bestow on this company some advantage. Instead of that, this appropriation has been carefully guarded in every way. We have not only submitted to the Senate this information which shows the propriety and I think the necessity of vesting this canal in the General Government and relieving commerce from the burden of tolls here, but the appropriation is not an absolute one as to price, but it is qualified to this extent, that before this money shall be expended "the Secretary of war shall cause an examination to be made by a board of three United States engineers to ascertain and report upon the importance and value of the free use of said ship-canals and harbor of refuge to commerce and navigation and the reasonableness of the price therefor, and shall have received from said board a report favorable to such purchase by the United States; and also upon full and absolute conveyance to the United States of said harbor of refuge, canals, easements, rights of way, piers, docks, and appurtenances of every nature belonging to and connected with said works, or either of them."

The whole purpose is to secure the public interest. The information is to be obtained through three of the engineers of the Army, and their report is to be favorable to the purchase and the reasonableness of the price of the purchase of this canal before the Secretary of War can act.

Now, Mr. President, it seems to me that there can be no reasonable doubt about the propriety of this purchase. True it might be upon a separate bill; it might be considered as a separate measure; but that is no objection to its being inserted also in the river and harbor bill, because it is certainly relevant, it is certainly a matter of great interest to the commerce and the navigation of these lakes.

Mr. BUTLER. If it will not disturb the Senator, I should be glad to get some information that I have been trying to get from other sources. To whom does this canal belong?

Mr. MCMILLAN. It belongs to the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Canal and Harbor Company.

Mr. BUTLER. A private corporation?

Mr. MCMILLAN. In brief the history of the canal is this: The Government granted to the State of Wisconsin 200,000 acres of land for the construction of this canal on terms specified in the act. The State of Wisconsin accepted that, and under the act of their Legislature turned the grant over to this canal company to construct the canal, which is a private corporation to that extent.

Mr. BUTLER. It belongs now to these individuals chartered under the laws of the State of Wisconsin?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Yes, sir; the Sturgeon Bay and Lake Michigan Ship Canal and Harbor Company. That is the history of it. Now the object is to relieve the commerce of the country from the burden imposed upon commerce by passing through that canal by this canal company.

Mr. BUTLER. Why should we pay them $150,000?

Mr. MCMILLAN. If their improvement is as profitable as the Senator from Kansas has shown it to be, if it is yielding them an income, they would probably be unwilling to part with it without receiving a sufficient consideration; and if the argument of the Senator from Kansas is correct, this is an improvement which is worth fully that sum. But the amendment itself does not make an absolute appropriation of that amount, but in the proviso enacts that a further examination shall be made by a board of engineers of the Army, who shall examine the matter, its necessity for commerce, the reasonableness of this price, and report favorably to the United States before it can be purchased.

Mr. BUTLER. Then I understand, if this appropriation of $150,000 is made, the repairs and the expenses will have to be kept up by the Government.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Of course. That is the purpose of taking charge of this improvement.

Mr. BUTLER. Is there any estimate of what that expense will be likely to be?

Mr. MCMILLAN. There has been no estimate returned except the statement contained in the report.

Mr. INGALLS. The statement in the report is that the tolls which are exacted of passing vessels pay the expense of maintenance and repair.

Mr. MCMILLAN. It will be seen from Executive Document No. 34, Forty-seventh Congress, second session, as I have already read, that—

The receipts for canal tolls and towing for the portion of the season of 1882 to September 30 amounted to $14,016.76, from which, deducting the operating expenses as per statement referred to, amounting to $8,542.30, there is left a net profit of $5,474.46 from these sources.

Mr. BUTLER. So that if the canal is made free the money to pay the expenses of keeping up the canal is to be taken from the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MCMILLAN. That will rest entirely with Congress. Of course Congress will have entire dominion over the subject. If Congress desires to levy tolls of course it can do it, but so far as I am concerned I should not feel disposed to insist on Congress levying tolls on an improvement of that kind involving the shipping of the great lakes.

Mr. BUTLER. Why not?

Mr. SAWYER. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that the company make out that they ought to have $178,000. They never have asked the Government to take the canal. Not one of the company ever asked for that in any manner, and I never knew an offer to come from the company in any manner.

Mr. BUTLER. I never heard that intimated.

Mr. SAWYER. It seems to me it would free commerce for the Government to have the canal. We have an exposed lake coast which is very dangerous. There is no harbor of refuge there. If there is a harbor outside built by the Government, vessels can get through and go into Sturgeon Bay in time of great storms and be landlocked.

Mr. BUTLER. From the best information I can get, then, it seems we are going rather blindly into this operation. If it could be demonstrated that it would aid the general commerce of the country, I do not know that I should object so much to paying the $150,000 for the canal; but to buy it blindly in this way, and as the Senator from Wisconsin has said——

Mr. SAWYER. Under this bill you may not have to pay more than that. It will depend upon the engineers' report to the War Department. The company claim more.

Mr. BUTLER. It seems to be a voluntary proceeding on the part of Congress to pay $150,000.

Mr. MCMILLAN. This investigation has been instituted at the instance of the commercial people of the lakes.

Mr. BUTLER. The canal company then do not desire to sell. Are we to understand that that is the fact?

Mr. MCMILLAN. So far as we are informed, that is so.

Mr. BUTLER. They do not desire to sell the canal at all. Then I do not think it ought to be taken against their will.

Mr. MCMILLAN. We can take it against their will if we desire so to do. That is very frequently done. You are now taking land for a Library here against the consent of the owners. So, for any great public purpose of a national character, you take private property.

Mr. BUTLER. I am aware of that.

Mr. MCMILLAN. There is no proposition here to condemn property. If this company will not sell, then it will be time enough to propose some other method.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Has the Senator from Minnesota any statistical information to give us an idea of the cost of building this canal?

Mr. MCMILLAN. The statement in Senate Executive Document No. 34, of the Forty-seventh Congress, second session, is very full.

Mr. MCPHERSON. Will the Senator please give me the sum total?

Mr. MCMILLAN. I will endeavor to do so.

The construction of the canal, including engineering, superintendence, and the expenses of the officers in Wisconsin, and repairs, was $342,762.99.

That is the conclusion stated by the board in this executive document.

Mr. MCPHERSON. And they have received a large benefit since the construction of the canal by reason of tolls. I understood the Senator to say that the Government gave them 200,000 acres of land.

Mr. MCMILLAN. There was an original grant of that amount.

Mr. MCPHERSON At the average price of Government land, a dollar and a quarter an acre, that would be equal to $250,000 already paid.

Mr. INGALLS. They obtained from the sales of the lands $344,687.17, being $2,000 more than the cost of the entire canal.